Collated Oral Submissions Presented at Level 9, Suvavou House

(In-person and Virtual Presentations)

Prepared by the Legal and Policy Secretariat Team

18 July 2026

Summary

This document contains a compilation of all oral submissions presented at Level 9, Suvavou House, either in person or virtually. The compilation comprises transcripts and written submissions. Due to the volume of the material, it has been divided into six volumes.

The information contained in this document has been compiled from submissions received from government ministries, departments, agencies, statutory bodies, other stakeholders and members of the public, together with the records available at the time of preparation. While every reasonable effort has been made to ensure the accuracy and completeness of this compilation, there may be instances where a submission has been omitted or where the record does not fully reflect all submissions received.

Should any omissions or discrepancies be identified, a supplementary list may be prepared, where necessary, to ensure that the record is as complete and accurate as practicable.

Great Council of Chiefs (GCC) – Opening

GCC PRESENTATION

Mr. Valenitabua: We acknowledge your presence this morning in accepting our invitation this morning. We welcome you today and thank you for kindly accepting our invitation. Your group is a paramount group to the iTaukei and we're happy that you can join us. The Constitution Review Commission is an independent commission appointed by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji in accordance with Cabinet's decision of 6 March 2026. And we were appointed under Section 2 of the Commissions of the Inquiry Act 1946. I have introduced the members of the commission and as a commission we are tasked to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into the 2013 Constitution. We are to consult with people of Fiji and we are to ensure that the Constitution reflects their values, their needs and aspirations. And we are to submit our findings and recommendations to His Excellency the President of Fiji. The timeline given to us is 6 months, which will expire on the 31st of August 2026. In accordance with our terms of reference, we are embarking on nationwide advocacy and consultation. We will be embarking on that. We will be consulting members of the public. We will also invite members of the public to make written and oral submissions, of which you are the first today. And I thank the Chairman of the Great Council of Chiefs for having forwarded your written submissions, which I have also forwarded to the members of the CRC. Gentlemen, we are interested to hear, relating to the 2013 Constitution, what you would like preserved or maintained, what you would like to change, and what your aspirations are for the constitution of Fiji. We hope that we will be able to discuss under those headings this morning. We will be available, or we can give one hour for this consultation. However, if time demands, or if circumstances demand, then we might have to extend the Constitution, which should be a paramount law or foundation, and it is important that we spend time on it. So that we can come up with a good and an acceptable Constitution for the members of our nation. With those three words of introduction, I now open the discussions in relation to this consultation this morning. We will hear from you first, and then we will just exchange questions and answers. Or we will discuss in general. There was a point which we were discussing yesterday. I see here a delegate from the Great Council of Chiefs. I note, or we know, that the Great Council of Chiefs is a council which comprises chiefs from our 14 provinces and from the various vanua. Could we be enlightened this morning whether the submission which you have prepared and which we have received reflects the views of the whole council? That is important to us because of the numbers. We will need to state numbers in our report. Since we are in a democracy, numbers matter. However, I leave that to us. I leave that to you, gentlemen. And that can be clarified as we start with the discussions this morning. With those few words, I won't hold you much longer. I can, or I now pass on the, and I open the consultation, and I pass it to you, gentlemen, to start with your submissions. Just a matter of housekeeping, please. The mics, we can only use four mics at one time. So, I suggest that once a mic is not in use, has been used and is not in use, that we turn off on the right of the mic. Now I'm going to turn off the mic, and we will listen to maybe the chairman of the GCC. Thank you.

GCC Chair: The chairperson of the Constitution Review Committee Mr. Valenitabua. Ladies and gentlemen, members of the committee. Very good morning to you all. If I may introduce the members of the council and the group this morning. Sitting on my immediate right is one of the Deputy Chairman of the Great Council of Chiefs Gone Turaga Bale na Tui Namosi Ratu Suliano Matanitobua. To my far left is the Deputy na Gone Turaga Bale na Tui Nayau Ratu Tevita Uluilakeba Mara. To my far right is the Vunivalu of Rewa he is also the member of the Great Council of Chiefs Ro Naulutoa Mataitini. To my left to the rear is the Gone Turaga Bale na Tui Levuka Ratu Etonia Seru member of the Great Council of Chiefs. And to my immediate back is the Gone Turaga na Roko Sau member of the Great Council of Chiefs. We are here supported by our two legal advisors who have assisted the council in the preparation to the outcome that we are here to produce this morning. If I may, Mr. Chairperson, the process in preparation of the submission that we share that we will present to you this morning is the product of a series of meetings, a concern that was raised at the first meeting since the re-establishment of the Great Council of Chiefs on February 28th in Deuba, where the members of the council first raised their concerns about the constitution that was put together in 2013. In three other consecutive meetings since then, the constitution or the concerns with regards to the constitution was discussed at length in all those meetings.

At the last two meetings in February 2025, November of last year, the council started to go into detail and the task was passed on to the subcommittee to go and put together a submission based on the views of the members of the council as raised throughout the years since the re-establishment of the Great Council of Chiefs. The work that we have before you today, that we shall present to you today, is the product of what was put together by the subcommittee in November, presented to the entire council on the February 28th this year, and then that was endorsed and recorded in the minutes of the proceedings of that particular meeting. The approval or the endorsement of the members of the council for this submission to be presented to the Constitution Review Committee once it's in place. We have endorsed that before the swearing in of the committee we already had together, the views of the council, and that's what we have before you. That's in brief, Mr. Chairperson, the process that was followed in preparation for this submission. If I may, the members of the council, contrary to what has been the views of some members of the public, and it's an unelected group or council, members of the council were appointed from within the provincial councils.

The provincial councils where all the tribal leaders of the respective provinces sit and they appoint the three members they believe will best represent the interests of the provinces in the Great Council of Chiefs. And that is the discussion on the Constitution went down to the provincial council of the Bose Vanua of the councils, back up to the Great Council of Chiefs, to the subcommittee, to the document that we shall be giving you today. Mr. Chairperson, the Bose Levu Vakaturaga, I think last year we made it very clear our views on this constitution, to be known as, our view as representatives of the iTaukei people that it does not like the 2013 constitution.

And the reason is simple, because in our belief it has taken our principle provisions of the protection of the iTaukei interests and rights. The net effect is that the document marginalizes the iTaukei in their own country, where we have been welcoming migrant races, welcoming hosts, since the governance under the colonial rule, some 152 years ago. The document that we shall present to you this morning signifies the principle areas where the chiefs of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga, what changes to want, changes to be done.

And this may be summarized as follows. The deed of session to be included to import our unique history into the constitution, whether through a preamble or by a separate new section. As 2013 constitution is written, this country has no history, only the recording, the immigrants into this country, refugees leave.

Protection in alteration laws affecting the iTaukei proprietary rights, these needs to be entrenched by the inclusion of the senate in the parliament akin to that found in the 1997 constitution. Customary laws and customary rights. It is the belief of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga that this protection is to be re-included into the 2013 constitution amendment.

Fijian Land tenure and entitlement to chiefly titles are dictated by customs. Fijian communal system is progressed by customs, and yet customary laws are ignored in our supreme rule. The Bose Levu Vakaturaga ladies and gentlemen, is to be included in the constitution. This was done in the past constitutions, but excluded in the 2013. In section 4, the secular state in 2013, the view of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga that the session be repealed.

Section 26, sub-paragraph 3, sub-paragraph alpha, the right to equality and freedom from discrimination based. The words sexual orientation and gender identity and expression are to be deleted from these expressions. All major religions in this country, rather, frown upon this immoral behavior. In section 28, to amend the section as prescribed re-rights of ownership and protection of iTaukei, Rotuma, and Banaban lands.

The new section 28 alpha states to recognize and protect iTaukei proprietary and economic rights. The new section 28 bravo, development involving extraction affecting ITaukei land and water resources.

Section 41, sub-paragraph 1, sub-paragraph delta, the rights of children. Protection from punishment needs to be amended to be made discretion, discretion of parents and teachers. Section 84, to amend, to be amended to make the Bose Levu Vakaturaga the appointing authority of president and vice-president. The text of the submission, Mr. Chairperson, ladies and gentlemen, put forth the areas of concern of the chiefs and members of the great council of chiefs. Here this morning, members of the sub-committee to present to you our views on the review of the 2013 constitution. Mr. Chairperson, thank you, sir. If I may add here with us, we will be happy to take any questions since you've had the chance to have a look at the documents. And I'll open the floor to our colleagues, members of the council, and our legal board this morning to respond to any questions that you may have for us.

Mr. Valenitabua: Gentlemen, we will ask questions later since our term of reference is to hear from the members of the public. We note that this is a summary, what has been given to us this morning is a summary of your submissions, of the GCC's submissions. We would appreciate if there is any other, if there's any other matter which the GCC might want to raise at this point in time. Or is this a closed document that you have sent us?

GCC Chair: Mr. Chairperson, thank you for that. We request to reserve the right to make further submissions as we proceed with your review. This is an initial submission from the great council of chiefs.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. Honorable Chairman and members of the GCC, first let me extend on behalf of our members here our sincere appreciation to you for being with us this morning for your presentation. I realize that you all realize that we have terms of references. And under those terms of references, the 12 presented ones, I think if they haven't been made public, they will be made public. I want to assure you that four of these terms of references of the 12 that we have been given relate specifically to Fijian and Rotuman indigenous rights. I think that should be pointed out immediately. Because addressing the, what we call the democratic deficits of the 2013 constitution, this was asked in the media in our first press conference. And the overriding one was the lack of consultation. I think amongst ourselves after discussions we recognized, I won't say the illegitimacy, but the method of decreeing a constitution, making consultations after the constitution has been drafted, is not in keeping with what we would normally consider the way that a constitution is produced. Where in fact you reach out to the people, you get their rights, their ideas, their input, and then you draft the constitution. These democratic deficits are the reason we have been asked to review the constitution. I won't say that our hands are tied in so far as I think if we're asked to review it, we can't obviously just throw it out. Because we are bound by the terms of reference that are very specific to us reviewing the current document. That's not to say that we can't go through every single line, other than section 10, which we have been directed, we understand, to the supreme court. Chapter 10, which the supreme court has not permitted us to review. But essentially everything, I think there was 12D as well, but every other single line in the 23rd constitution can be reviewed. And our chair has pointed out that that means it can be revoked, repealed, amended, it essentially can be changed. And I guess that's where we're coming from. We can't start off by obliterating it, by virtue of the fact that we have been given very specific guidelines to review the constitution. But I want to assure you that every line of it, other than the standard chapters, chapter 10 pertaining to humility, and chapter 12D pertaining to the president, are all areas of the constitution that can be reviewed, and in so doing can be repealed, dispensed with, amended accordingly. I would also like to stress, in addition to the four terms of references of the 12, that specifically ask us to look at Fijian and indigenous rights, that by implication indicates the importance that the government has placed upon us in asking us to review the 23rd constitution. I think your presence today, you are our first people we are hearing from. No one else has made a presentation to this committee. Our chair and the rest of the members felt that before we listen to anybody else, we would listen to yours. I make these in general comments without any specific questions. I have a list of questions. I thank the chairman for his summary. I have no doubt that my colleagues have, amongst ourselves, discussed the various aspects. You will realize that we are in the very early stages of the review. I think this is week two, week three. What we have done is try and familiarize ourselves intimately with the 2013 constitution, line by line. In addition to that, we have, in our deliberations, looked at the 1970, the 1990, the 1997 constitutions and tried to compare them, as has been pointed out by the chair, in respect of various aspects of it that have been taken out.

I have a number of questions that I think may not have been covered in your submission. I tend, for those colleagues that know me, I tend to be very blunt and ask very straight questions. I will ask them as representatives of the Fijian iTaukei people.

The term Fijian, used for all races in Fiji, as a generic term, was input into the 2013 constitution. It did not exist before that. All people in Fiji, prior to the 2013 constitution, were known under different ethnicities. There were Fijians, there were Indians, there were Rotuman's, Chinese. In the 2013 constitution, we were deemed to all be Fijians. My question is, how do you, members of the great council of chiefs, view the use of the word Fijian as a generic term for every person in Fiji? And if you are not supportive of such a name, what would you suggest that be used for all people who are citizens of Fiji? Thank you.

GCC Chair: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, thank you for your question. Something that we have discussed at length within the great council of chiefs, as well as the sub-committee. In fact, as late as yesterday, we were still discussing it. And the reason why it went wrong for such a long time is because we were trying to see if we can come to some sort of consensus on the use of the term. The majority of the members of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga would like the term Fijian to be reserved. For what is currently known as the ITaukei, as it was in the past, and not as written in the 2013 constitution. I think up until 1987, if we think about it, it was a term that everybody growing up knew what it was. If those of us who have travelled overseas and who have worked overseas would understand that. Anyone who was a foreigner asking us where you're from, you would say you're from Fiji, and you're Fijian. And that was well understood. If you said the term iTaukei, you would have to explain yourself. If you said the term Indo-Fijian, or Chinese Fijian, or Rotuman, they would understand. And it is not something that we're trying to introduce as new. It is something that, as I've said in the past, you cannot legislate something like what you're called. It has to be here. And so, that's a wrong way of answering your question, Dr. Fatiaki. I think the consensus amongst the majority of the members, members of the Great Council of Chiefs, is that the term should be reserved for what we now know as the iTaukei. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Moving on, from the question asked by Dr. Fatiaki, the constitution as it is, the 2013 constitution, I believe that most of you gentlemen have read it, have looked through it. How do you say its setup, its format? What I mean is, there is a section in the constitution, and then we have subsections, and then we have paragraphs in one section, which makes the contents so extended, or so stretched, with particular constitutional laws set out in the constitution. Yesterday, we were discussing section 31 of the constitution. And this is the right. The right to life is a one-liner. The right to education, it specifies education at preschool. Education means education at preschool, education at the primary level, and education at the tertiary level. In your view, should we have only a one-liner which says right to education, and we exclude all those other details? Like the right to life, the right to life is just a one-liner. Every person has a right to life, full stop.

GCC: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the one-liner attributed to the species of rights is what we do in section 3[182. I think the intention is that they will be supported by regulations in the various acts that come after. But the fact that it's mentioned, I think for the purposes of architectural coverage, that is, I think, a consensus by the GCC. That's enough, because it's not limiting anything. It allows us to expand on it, because time and values in society over time change. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Gentlemen, my second point to for the answer, I apologize. I haven't had the opportunity to read your submission. I understand it appeared in our computers as I walked in this morning. And I understand that there was an answer to the question of the use of the term Fijian. And I thank you for the explanation and the answer. I have a number of other questions. I'm very clear about the secular state statement, about the removal of the secular state. I want to add on to that and ask beyond that. My review of other constitutions in the preamble is a very obvious inclusion of a belief in God, in the role of God in guiding our decision making, and in the role of God in whom we place our trust in bestowing upon ourselves the 1997 Constitution. This is well stated in the preamble.

I noticed that is also alluded to in the 1970 Constitution, in the earliest part of it. And I guess what I'm asking is, how do the members of the Council feel, in addition to your stated request that the Constitution repeal the secular state section, how do you feel about the inclusion of God directly, as has been the case in the 1970 and the 1997 Constitution in the preambles, as an acknowledgment that government is not a thing of man, but that there is a divine influence. And I say that because the removal of the secular state paragraph does not actually necessarily include the inclusion of an acknowledgment of God. How do you feel about that? And I'll take it a step further. If the acknowledgment of God is part and partial of what the members of the Great Council of Chiefs would wish us to include.

The second question is, what are your feelings about the use of the term Christianity? I understand that in some of the previous Constitutions, there have been references to Christianity specifically. And your feelings about its inclusion in our amendments to the Constitution. Thank you.

GCC: I think the start point to that is that when we talk about secular state, we look at our code of arms right there in front of us it says ' Rerevaka na kalou ka doka na Tui'. So, if we fear have God, we have it on our code of arms, you never do something else.

GCC: Thank you, Chair. You've answered my question. Just for the record, that was brought up in our conversations over the last two weeks.

Mr. Kohli: I think regarding the first one about reference to Almighty God, you already have in your preamble, at the beginning of the poem as well, and that was missing from 2013 when we had the discussion yesterday. So, I think that is well covered. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: The Bill of Rights. Is there anything in the Bill of Rights you would want to comment on, in addition to what we have here, the sexual orientation one? You have the sexual orientation provision, and the right of equality and freedom from discrimination, and then the rights of children. Is there anything you would like to comment in relation to that, please?

Mr. Bukarau: Chair Ni bula vinaka, bula vinaka colleague, and the rest of the committee, I thank you sincerely for allowing us to come this morning, and just to add to the question of Dr. Fatiaki, in relation to the inclusion of God, there is history in this country, through the Deed of Session, where Christianity has been expressly written, but because it is absent in the Constitution, the issue becomes alive for constitutional reviewing personalities. When the Constitution says what the chiefs, they fear is Christianity, that should ring a bell. But at the same time, whilst Christianity has been given our precedence over other religions, it does not stop us opening the door for all other religions to freely express themselves in the way they want. But just to answer the question, that is why the Council of Chiefs is actually saying you should include the GCC, the Deed of Session, in the Constitution. The reason is, is a few folds. The creation of the Council, who are before you this morning, was created by their deed. The chiefs who handed Fiji to Great Britain are the predecessors of this particular Council. So, it is important for members of this country to acknowledge their beginnings. Hence, some of the important pillars, constitutional pillars, which drafters should actually have mindful in the back of their mind, is what has transpired in history. What we are here before you to do is an extension of that, basically to advise government in relation to its governance. There are issues, as you will hear the chair this morning, he said, we reserve the right, because there is a principal issue that we will need to also raise before you. And we will leave that to come out from the provinces, because you will see where we are coming from through that process. And I'm very happy that you are going to open your doors so that they can be useful to you in your deliberations and also fact-finding to base your decision. But in relation to the rights of this country, as mentioned by the chair, we've already highlighted the portions which we feel should really be zeroed on by the Commission. But there are others which only in relation to the children. In fact, you will hear from the provinces that they do not like being stopped from disciplining the children. What is that tied to? That is tied to their belief system, because their scripture actually expresses that the only way to discipline a child is to smack them. And when the law comes to say, don't do that, you actually are stopping them from what they want to do, they have been doing since birth. But that's why we've just opened it a bit so that you can make it discretionary to the teachers and to parents to discipline their children to that extent if they need to. But in relation to other rights, the only other one is the sexual orientation which you will find already submitted before you. The reason why we specifically object to this is because the major religions in this country frown upon this particular behavior. For instance, if you live in a community and it's happening next door to you, how would the community feel? It brings dissension. It's the practice. So, that is why the chiefs discussed now before you in relation to those findings. But whether we do come across other rights issues when we hear the provinces speak, that will come back to you soon. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Mr. Bukarau. One question. What is the view of the GCC as you are here today on the counting system for the elections? Should that be changed or retained? We know that this is a de-honk or whatever system. What is the view of the GCC on this?

GCC: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the view of the GCC is that the de-honk system, as you are aware, is a practical application. It's not about voting for a person. It's about voting for a party. And when you disperse the numbers according to an entire state as a whole, I think the view of the GCC is that it disempowers the provinces in inventing who they think is best. And therefore, I think the problem of the GCC is that the system will be changed.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you, Chair. Gentlemen of the Council, I reiterate my colleagues' appreciation for your presence and contribution this morning. I am of the generation that is one of the last to remember what it was like to have a Senate as part of our governing architecture. And many young Fijians have likely never lived under such an arrangement, which makes your contribution about the role of chiefs in the Senate a very pertinent one. And I would really be interested to hear you expand on what you see as the role of chiefs and what the role of the Senate is in securing the proprietary and collective rights of Indigenous Fijians. Thank you.

Mr. Bukarau: Thank you, Chair. Specifically on the role of the Senate, it was noted in the last get-together meeting of the Council that what if we sit and we think that we need to veto a legislation, which do not rhyme well with the aspirations of the talking or runs cross-brain in relation to the issues that touch us. And when we consulted with the Solicitor General's Office in relation to the way they're acting on the radio, basically he said, I think it would be better that you would recommend that it not be exercised, because it's not normal that an institution within an act has veto rights in relation to certain issues. But there are life-wide issues before the Council where they say they should not legislate on this, but there is no way of stopping it. So, the only way is to bring back the 1979 format, which was taken out by the 2013, and that is for the GCC to sit, for the Senate to sit, but within the Senate there is a number of chiefs from the GCC who are members of the Senate who will speak specifically, and they will either pass or not pass legislations in relation to talking interests and rights. So, that is why that's the only way a veto may be exercised, and because it's slanted that way, it's factually that way, we see that the only way a veto can be exercised is through the Senate. And so, we are also asking that the Senate come back to maintain that ability to be able to change legislations at that level of law-making. Thank you, Chair.

GCC: If I can just add something to what Mr. Bukarau has just said. One of the things we've been discussing within the big conferences, and I'm glad that Ms. Nailatikau mentioned being one of the generations that remembers the Senate, is that the difference between the previous Great Council of Chiefs and the re-established Great Council of Chiefs is that we realized that to sell, if that's the right word, the Great Council of Chiefs- Bose Levu Vakaturaga, the new generation of Fijians, anybody who's 40 years old and below right now in Fiji, which is the majority of the population, have no idea about the Great Council of Chiefs. And so, the way we're looking at it from the Great Council of Chiefs' perspective, is that when we talk about the Senate coming back and there being representation from Great Council of Chiefs in the Senate, we're not talking about ourselves. We're looking at ourselves being outside. And that we need to pick those Fijians, if that's okay, who have the attributes that we think will contribute to indigenous populations sitting in the Great Council of Chiefs. And so, when I look at you, for example, I see four people that could be members nominated by the Great Council of Chiefs sitting in the Senate. And those that are younger, that will bring what we think is a new generation to understand what is required in terms of meeting the iTaukei aspirations.

GCC: if I add, just to explain on the role of the Senate, my understanding and I think the intention going back to the colonial phase, when you transport law into a new colony, there's only two ways to do it. Either you do it by reception or adoption. And I think it goes to the crux of the context of the people that have been colonized. And because in Fiji we have a plurality of system in existence, democracy cannot handle that. And that will go to the lower house, and therefore I think the upper house or the Senate was designed specifically for that purpose, to see what is wrong and specify the matter so that it goes to the context of the people who are making the decisions in the Senate. That's all I have to add on that. Thank you, Chairman.

Mr. Valenitabua: Now we have Dr. Gounder, who wishes to ask a question to the GCC members.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you very much for your presence this morning. We respect the knowledge and the wisdom of the great Council of Chiefs. Many of the non-iTaukei people that I interact with and I know have a lot of respect for the great Council of Chiefs and the wisdom of the great Council of Chiefs for the future of our country. My question is related to the electoral system. If you have any comments at this stage, as you are fully aware that there is a single constituency in the 2013 constitution, do you have any comment at this stage on the mechanics of the way our elected representatives should be elected, and any other comments in relation to that? Thank you.

Mr. Bukarau: Thank you, Dr. Gounder. Mr. Chair, through you, there are some great reservations within the Council on the way the current and existing electoral system, which does not really represent the wishes of all members of the community, in the sense that those elected for government cannot be held accountable to any part of the society because they do not have to leave any part of the provinces or the electorates. I thank you for that, and I offer my word to the rest of the committee group to share their views with you in response to your question. Thank you, Dr. Gounder.

GCC: Thank you, Dr. Gounder. If I may add, the constituency as it is designed now, I think it pays not enough respect to the level of what is democratic, because I think the GCC is of the view that every single vote is a property that ought to be respected. So, if someone goes through with 300 votes and then gets to represent the entire of Fiji, then there are some questions underpinning that process to the level where it is at. Thank you.

GCC: Vinaka, Dr. Gounder. I think when we look at the constitution, the term constitution is normal. It was meant for two people, and it was made for two people. It is a strong man's constitution. It wasn't meant for anybody else. I asked, we had a meeting with Justice Fatiaki and the team last year during one of our meetings of the great Council of Chiefs, and I think it was, and I hope now when you think about it, even if there were five constituencies, not just one, even if it was five, it would dilute the power of the one person that it was meant for. And so, when it's meant for one person, it is not a democratic constitution. The term constitution hides the fact that it is an autocratic make-up with a lipstick called constitution. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you through you chair, I think this discussion about the electoral system is probably driven as probably one of the members of the senate sitting here alive I probably make some comments. I was the youngest. would have been the next in terms of our age. I was definitely in the 40s at that date. And I could say when I sat there, I think at that time the constitution had, the Senate had something like eight members from the GCC. I think there were seven or six from the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. And the one thing I noticed was every minority community was represented. If not in the House of Representatives, it was certainly in Senate. So, we had the Chinese, we had the Kai Loma in the Senate, and obviously I was there too. So, there was that representation I saw in the Senate. In addition to that, as the youngest, I would listen to the chiefs that were from the different provinces. I know many of them would have passed by now. But let me say, in all the deliberations we had in Senate, I thought I was a smart fella when I walked in there. I actually learned so much. I won't say knowledge, but I learned a lot of wisdom just listening to older people. There was something about Senate that was not political. I know that there were members from the, appointed by the different parties under the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. But the general consensus every time we said this, even those people didn't speak on behalf of their party. Most conversations in relation to bills were really just individuals representing the well-good. I can't say that they were elder peers because obviously I wasn't an elder peer to the members of the House of Representatives. I'm relatively young. But the general feeling was that the Senate was almost removed from politics. And having that as a, I wouldn't say necessarily a veto mechanism, but I think certainly as far back as the initial Senate from the 1970 Constitution, it reflected that role of a body that would be, would have the ability to review. I'm not sure whether they actually had veto powers, but that they would be able to influence greatly in returning legislation that was being proposed back to the House of Representatives. That was my experience. Toned down, very disrespectful, very non-partisan and with a sense that everybody just had the well-being of the country at heart. And so for what it's worth, I think your proposition for a return to the senate is something that certainly our committee will be considering and discussing further. Just a few reflections on members of the GCC. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Dr. Fatiaki. To members of the GCC present here this morning, we'd like, there's a question that has been passed to me. We need confirmation. Does the GCC want the senate to be back in the constitution? We know that you have said it. We want a confirmation.

GCC Chair: Mr. Chair, it is the unanimous belief of the great council of chiefs that the senate will be returned to carry out its functions as it was in previous constitutions. But the very reason, Dr. Fatiaki, I like it. There's wisdom in the group of, of the members of that, of this house. And we believe it is, we all know they care for all races, very equally. When they come, when they put together, when they come up with their decisions, their views is always full of wisdom. And that's what we believe. It's very, very important. It is fundamental that we bring back the senate. It's more than I used to bring our community together.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Chairperson of the GCC. We have one more question from Professor Baba.

Dr. Baba: Kind of not a question, but interested again in the senate and your, your, your profound influence over it and other leaders of other societies as well. For those of us, Chair, who've lived a few decades, a few of us who are here, it's, it's the essence of dignity that we don't always see in the lower house, if you like. Children today, I think, as an educator, I would say that the senate role, if you like, are full of lords. They are not everyday persons who feel free to use language and hum the population more than anything. And that's what I'm afraid of today. Because children are only looking at one house, if you like, and that's not leadership necessarily. So, from an educator point of view sitting here, Chair, and a mother, it was the senate that kind of, as Dr. Fatiaki is saying, kind of gave us the wisdom we need to live together. You know, one house is hot, the other house brings temperament, brings wisdom. So, I think it's in the way we would probably write it, now that you've said you were all for it, the kind of the lords, if you like, who care for everybody. I think that's what's coming through. And some of us also have been worried about the lack of that wisdom that is distributed, because when children look at the parliament house, they are assuming that it's the best of us. Whereas those of us who are a little bit older, we know when the hot house is hot, the upper house, if you like, the house of lords, temper. Because we still have to live together, no matter the differences. So, thank you. I'd like to then say that Dr. Fatiaki and your extensions of the senate probably is what's strong, coming through strong today. The only other question, Chair, that I have, maybe when we read your submission today, I know it's only 11 pages. You've intimated that we might receive a lot more, and maybe in different ways, towards maybe middle and end, while the provinces speak. You've intimated that you want to see in the preamble, or a separate chapter. That's the deed of session. Is that what you're saying today, Chair? You want a separate section, yeah? After the preamble, or what will be the preamble? The preamble kind of holds all our values, yes? So that's chapter one. I want to hear a little bit more of your suggestion. You've done two things. Either we have that as part of the preamble, might be too long, but then you said we could also have it as a separate section. Where? In the beginning? Thank you, Chair. Thank you.

GCC: Thank you very much Doctor Baba. GCC, the reason why we want it at least expressed in the preamble is because, like I said, as you see now, the preamble only mentions about those who came in and those who accepted as being part of the country. It does not say anything else. So, because it is minus that history, we seem to have this, but we need to record that we had started at some place without governance, and we are going somewhere in the preamble. But in relation to whether it's a separate section, it had been a separate section in the 1997, although it was mentioned also in the preamble. And in relation to Mr. Gounder's point on representation of one constituency, that that is indeed a problem, because we cannot hold the members of the house accountable to that specifically, because we represent iTaukei, we connect with the provinces, and there is no link within parliament that represents the province. Everybody does. So, from that point of view, in relation to representation, which we heard a bit Dr. John say, is that the representation becomes an issue. And when the, when we finish Bose ni Yasana and we want government to be part of it, the first thing we do is mention it to the member of the province who sits in parliament. So those are some of the facilities that are now not there. Just to answer the question, sir. Vinaka Saka Vakalevu.

Ro Naulu: Mr. Chair, just to ass to what Mr. Bukarau said. I think if we look at, we tend to forget that the deed of session, I think of it was actually the first constitution we ever had. But when it was signed, sealed, delivered, they were only the, it okayed that way. And if you look carefully into what is written into the legal session, it's part of the problem that we are now faced with. All the instability stems out of what was written into the legal session, not having been returned to the iTaukei. This is going to be part of an ongoing discussion. But to go back to what Dr. Fatiaki, Dr. Baba said, we see that 'na yalo vagonegonea' that we see in parliament has permeated our society. Last month, we had a couple of senior civil servants, including Minister for Tourism, who came with his team to talk to us in the Kuma Bill, the PS for Mineral Resources, and Lance come to talk to us about the Mining Act, Fijian Affairs, iTaukei Affairs, talk to us about release by laws. One thing that was shocking to us, we knew the subject matter, but there was a lack of wisdom in the way it was delivered to us. And this is something that we're beginning to see across the civil service. Now, if we have only one house, and we see it because now it's on TV whenever they sitting, and if that is the standard by which we're going to judge leadership by, we have a serious problem in Fiji. Hence the reason for the constitution for the senate, and why we are off with it, because what we begin, well what we've seen in the civil servants that we deal with, I think that the Tui Nayau and the people of Lau have a saying for it 'a vuli ga a ta sukulu', they've all been educated, but there's a lack of wisdom there. And if this is the leadership we see at the senior civil servants, we have an issue that I think collectively we will need to deal with. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Just in the way of background, honorable members of the GCC, I'm speaking a lot more than my colleagues, I'm sure that at later sessions they will be speaking a lot more, because we have just started our review of the constitutions, and in this process I have been allocated the first three sections, which is a preamble, the first part to do is state, and because of that, obviously a lot of our questions and discussion this morning has been related to that, because I'm supposed to be the one in this panel who has reviewed it, and discussed it, compared it to the previous ones. It's along those lines that I've been talking so much, and I apologize for that. Let me just allude to, when we talked about the democratic deficit, which was the initial basis on which we were asked to review the constitution, I mentioned to the lack of consultation before the drafting of it, the lack of formal recognition to our parliamentary process, and acceptance of this constitution, because it says we forgive ourselves this. And the third part that I didn't state as part of that democratic deficit was what I think alluded to, which was the consolidation of power in the two people. For those who also remember, when the 2013 constitution was agreed, and I think there were two ministers who were responsible for three quarters of government, I admit, I'm serious, you know, and there was concerns about whether they would be paid seven salaries, or that sort of thing. That consolidation of power in the hands of two people was what I think, you are alluding to, and we recognize that in terms of one of the deficits that became rise to the need for us to look seriously at the 2013 constitution. I have two other areas that I would like you to, maybe not necessarily answer now, but to take back from the area that I have addressed with my colleagues over the last two weeks in discussing the 2013 constitution. One is the 1997 constitution has a thing called a compact. It's an entire chapter, chapter two. It comes after the preamble and the initial part. I'd like you, honorable members, please go back and read that compact, because in three of the 11 provisions of this compact, and the compact was basically a saying that we, the people of Fiji, in making laws and in going forwards, had this agreement amongst ourselves, but basically, we all shook hands and agreed that this is how we wanted this constitution to be. I will read to you three of them, specifically in respect of the indigenous people of this country, because I think it may have relevance for your discussions as representatives of the iTaukei. Compact B says the ownership of Fijian land according to Fijian custom, the ownership of freehold land and the rights of land, is the issue of the ownership of Fijian land according to Fijian custom. That's a compact that everyone who's writing this constitution recognizes and accepts. The second one is the rights of the Fijian and Rotuman people include their right to governance through their separate administrative systems. Everything, law and everything after this, compact, we do on the basis that this is an understanding that binds it before we do anything further. That the rights of the Fijian and Rotuman people include their right to governance through their separate administrative systems. I think part of your submission relates to provincial laws. I think that compact is a statement of that at the very beginning of the 1997 constitution that I think is to encapsulate that. J says in these negotiations, you obviously need to read it all, but it says in these negotiations the paramount you see of Fijian interests as a protective principle continues to apply. So, as to ensure that the interests of the Fijian community are not subordinated to the interests of other communities. When this constitution was written that was an agreement, a compact, a solemn, I won't say vowed, a solemn undertaking that in accepting this constitution these general understandings that undergird it are things that, I mean they're not a law, they're a principle on which every discussion that we have subsequent to this, whether it's the Bill of Rights, whether it's the Construct of the Parliament, should be underpinned by these. And I refer you to these because we discussed this at length. And I hear in what you're saying and the need to incorporate into the preamble for instance very solid statements that recognizes what Naidu attributed to in terms of the deed of cession of the history in the first 1987 constitution. And I wanted to point this out as an area that I notice you don't allude to it, whether you think that's useful, whether it should be included, whether we should consider something like that, and I'd like you to look at that.

The third and my last question this morning relates to the issue of multiple citizenship, multiple nationalities. This is something that was introduced in the last constitution that did not exist in the three previous ones. Whether you answer it now, whether you answer it later in a later submission, I'd like the GCC to think about that because the issue of granting people multiple citizenship does have implications upon the sovereignty of this country, the voting rights I guess of this country, because by definition if you're a citizen you can vote whether you live in China, India, wherever, and its impact upon I guess the country. So, I'd like to refer these matters to you as not necessarily questions, but areas that maybe if they're not addressed in your submission at a later time you might address. Thank you. Chair, thank you.

Dr. Baba: Chair, if I may, just going back to Ro Naulu, I'm Una, just like John is saying, Dr. Fatiaki, I would like to just pick up on what you're saying, just in terms of forward moving from today, because you are our first through the chair. You made a mention of something I've always worried about, and that is the point you've talked about here, but very briefly. Chair, this is the point of the deed of session. If we were to look at the New Zealand equivalent, the Treaty of Waitangi, and the Treaty of Waitangi, so if we did through the Council of Chiefs get a revisit to them before we include it further, could we revisit that very important point, please? Because when we translate the Tiriti and it became Treaty, this is what the Māori are bothering about today. Could the GCC, the August Party, please look at that? When you re-look at the deed of session, and if we did translate it, could we make sure the lawyers are very powerful on your side? Could you look at that particular point? Because today, I think it makes a lot of difference the way things are translated. A lot of loss and lots of gains that were not meant to be. That is one. The only number two was when I think the chair of GCC, when you made the references to your, when we were looking now at the preamble, maybe you could do a bit more than that. I'm asking, you know, if 65% of the population you play oversight of, I would ask that you deal with what John is saying, because this is John's homework, by the way. That's why John has to be only one, really. We should be talking today about the beginnings, because it's how we really look at the people. We start with the preamble, and if you just touch on that a little bit more, I'd like that, if it could be done by you.Thank you, Chair.

Ro Naulu: Thank you. Thank you, Dr. Baba. On that, we've had long discussions in the Great Council of Chiefs on this, and for us, it has to be a foundational document, the legal session. You will have noticed that in the last 18 months, almost two years, the Chair and colleagues from the Secretariat and iTaukei Affairs have been travelling down and meeting with Māori leaders, and I let the Chair elaborate a little bit on that, but it is part of it. Just going to what John has said, I think, you know, part of the constitutions we've had, the courts have played a negative term, you know, constitution, because rather than amending the constitutions, we've come up with new constitutions. But it's how we look at constitutions that I think is part of the problem. It is a living document. We've never looked at it, in my view, as a living document that can be amended as we go along. From the 1970 constitution, it's like, now you have it, it's like the Bible, it's there. And whether you like it or not, there's been no discussions about amending any of the constitutions. We've come up with new constitutions, and so if you look at the US Constitution, I don't know how many amendments they have, but you know, for a document that began all the way back then, they've come up with amendments, after amendments, after amendments, and perhaps by changing our mindset to look at constitutions as a living document that can be amended to suit the times we're in, rather than to think of it as the Old Testament, will bring that mindset change to see how we respect and reveal a constitution, because it is there to guide the country as we mature. We evolve, and so should the constitution make it suitable for the generation that it's living with. And so, I think, I don't know how well you're going to be able to pass this message on, but I think it's important that the government and every Fijian look at it as a living document. We don't like it, we want it out, but the Supreme Court have adjudicated on it. We're now going to test how to amend it, but that is part of, I think, the growth of Fiji, and we should be looking at it as a living document, and I think that's something that's missing in the discussions amongst Fijians in general. But I'll pass on to the Chair to talk about the Maori portion a little bit more. Vinaka.

GCC Chair: Vinaka, Dr. Baba. We will thank the Chair and the members of the committee for giving us the opportunity to make further submissions, and we will look into that in the future.

GCC: Chair, just to add on to my colleague, the point raised by Dr. Fatiaki regarding the compact, I think it highlights what afflict the constitutions that followed after 1997. What we have in Fiji, and I think this goes to the 40 OR that you specifically mentioned addressing customary property rights and interests, what we have is not the lack of recognition in the constitution passed, but the lack of clarity in the how. Why is it very clear, the why part is very clear, but the how. So, if you look at all the constitutions of Fiji, this is something that's afflicted every constitution since 1970, and I think the biggest challenge is to try and come up with something that can balance and identify the existence of a very unique application of democracy in Fiji, given the plurality of the registers that we deal with every day. Whether it's mining, or it's property, or it's timber, or it's election, everything is burdened with this plurality. So, the challenge for us is to come up with a balance that needs to address this clearly. And just a point on Dr.Baba raised about the treaty, I think that's an issue that is very central to the discussions that we have at the GCC. Every country has a different context, and we can certainly learn and contextualize that in the application of Fiji's case.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. I think we have just one more question from Mr. Conway Beg.

Mr. Conway: Thank you Chair, Chairman of the Board of Council of Chiefs and Honorable Members. I wanted to have me in your presence here today, thank you. I just have one question to Ro Mataitini. Thank you for your comment about public service. I've been tasked with chapter, so I'm glad you brought some points out. My only comment is, are we going to hear back from you further on this in your discussions, in your further submissions? But yeah, I look forward to it.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Mr Begg, the last question, that is if you allow us to ask the last question. We have a task to look at the possibility of amending the constitution, the 2013 constitution. There is a sensitive issue which you have not raised, and that deals with the amendment to chapter 10 of the constitution and part D of chapter 12. This addresses immunity. What is the Great Council of Chiefs stance on the immunity provisions? If you can answer now, you may answer. If you want to think about it and then contact us later, you may do so.

GCC chair: Mr. Chairman, the Great Council of Chiefs have discussed the clause, I believe it's immunity clause that we're talking about here. It is a great belief that we shouldn't have such a clause in a constitution. But of course, the High Court has made its decision, it's passed its judgment and that's where we are. But to answer your question, as a Great Council of Chiefs, we don't believe there should be such a clause in any constitution. If a person commits a crime, the person does the time. Simple as that. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Chairman. That is all from us, ladies and gentlemen Vinaka saka Vakalevu for our consultation this morning, we have read, we have heard the GCC and we've heard and read from the submissions delivered to us this morning by this honored or Honorable delegation. The door is open. If you need to make further submissions, we are open. Here or at your office, we are open to that. If you wish to convene a special meeting for the GCC so that we can discuss things there, we are open to that. But it's up to you.

GCC Chair: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, members of the Constitution Review Committee-Vinaka Saka Vakalevu, thank you so much for giving us the opportunity to come and present, give you our presentation, our initial submission, should I say, this morning. On behalf of all members of the Great Council of Chiefs, our colleagues who have joined us this morning, please accept our sincere appreciation for giving us an opportunity. In summary, Mr. Chair, you asked a question about the Constitution, what we think of it, and the wording, the way it's written. To be brutally honest, I have two copies of this Constitution on my dressing table at home, and they smell brand new as they came out of the printing press, because I've never opened them, nor paid attention to the details of the Constitution. Now, let me qualify that statement. It may sound silly, but I'm joined here this morning with six members, five members of the Great Council of Chiefs, and Mr. Bukarau, but we were members of the Defense of the Military, the Republic of Fijian Military Forces, we all joined before 1987. We all took an oath to defend the rights of every citizen of this country, regardless of race, ethnicity, religion, or gender, and we believe in that oath. The reason I didn't like to go any further than reading past the first two pages of the Constitution, because I can't find deep in my soul to defend something that's indefensible, something that did not represent the rights of the citizens of this country, regardless of ethnicity or race. They did not choose, so it's hard for me to believe in such a document. The task before you, ladies and gentlemen, is to say important is an understatement. It's crucial. We wish you well in the charge as you go through the review, but we will continue to pray that at the end of it all, you'll come up with a document that this nation can look up to, so that when our sons and daughters take the oath either to teach or to stand by the doctor's table with somebody's life in their hands, or when we send our children to the battlefields, that the oath they will take is something they believe in, because it's linked to a document that represents their wishes. We wish you well.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Saka Vakalevu. I would kindly request that we present our sevusevu this morning. Vinaka Saka. [Presentation of Sevusevu till ends]

PROPOSED ALTERATIONS/AMENDMENTS/REPEALS

Constitution 2013 Silent

1. Deed of Cession to be included to import our unique History into the Constitution (Whether through Preamble or by a separate new section)

   a. Unique place of the Deed of cession in Fiji's constitutional history needs to be recognised in any Constitution of this country.

   b. Secondly, the relevance of this Legal Instrument in reflecting the dealing of the proprietary interest of the iTaukei is a prominent live issue.

      1) The Deed explains the gift of iTaukei proprietary interest to the Queen to assist governance.
      2) The history of whom it was given to, & what was given.
      3) How it was dealt with by the Colonial Government
      4) History of Independence explains where gift is at. i.e. to whom it was returned to,
      5) Where gift are currently held;
      6) How are they are dealt with between independence and now.
      7) The live issue of its return of what was gifted to the original owners - the iTaukei is a matter for this house to deliberate upon at appropriate time.

   c. In respect of iTaukei proprietary rights, the Deed of Cession of 1874, is the legal instrument that keeps these issues alive and preserves the original intent that mirrors the goodwill of the chiefs to the(colonial) government in the governance of their country.

   d. Because the Bose Levu Vakaturaga (BLV) was undone during the term of the former administration, the entity's existence was also deleted in the 2013 Constitution. It is felt that we should use the principal wording in the 1970, 1990 and 1997 Constitution as a basis for a draft to inclusion in this proposed amendment to the 2013 Constitution. A draft may read as follows:

"PREAMBLE

WE, THE PEOPLE OF THE FIJI ISLANDS,

SEEKING the blessing of God who has always watched over these islands:

RECALLING the events in our history that have made us what we are, especially the settlement of these islands by the ancestors of the indigenous Fijian and Rotuman people; the arrival of forebears of subsequent settlers, including Pacific Islanders, Europeans, Indians, Chinese and other races*; the conversion of the indigenous inhabitants of these islands from heathenism to Christianity through the power of the name of Jesus Christ; the enduring influence of Christianity in these islands and its contribution, along with that of other faiths, to the spiritual life of Fiji:*

ACKNOWLEDGING our unique constitutional history:

(a) Colonial governance began with the Deed of Cession of 10 October 1874 when Ratu Seru Cakobau, styled Tui Viti and Vunivalu, together with other High Chiefs, signifying their loyalty and devotion to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and their acceptance of the divine guidance of God and the rule of law, ceded Fiji to Great Britain, which cession was followed in November 1879 by the cession to Great Britain of Rotuma by the Chiefs of Rotuma;

(b) Fiji became an independent sovereign state when Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II promulgated the Fiji Independence Order of 1970 under which the Fiji Constitution of 1970 came into being;

(c) That political turmoil in Fiji deteriorated culminating in the following events:

(1) the abrogation of the 1970 Constitution on 1987 by the Constitution Abrogation Decree 1987;

(2) the giving to Fiji of the 1990 Constitution by then President, Ratu Sir Penaia Ganilau, with the blessings and approval of the Great Council of Chiefs;

(3) the review of 1990 Constitution undertaken by the Reeves Commission under its provisions; whereupon the High Chiefs of Fiji in their abundant wisdom and blessings, approved 1997 Constitution;

(4) the latest Constitution of Fiji was promulgated in 2013, when it was signed into law by President, Ratu Epeli Nailatikau.

RECOGNISING that the descendants of all those who chose to make their homes in these islands form our multicultural society:

RECOGNIZING the rights of iTaukei and Rotumans to their inalienable rights to the property in these islands; and further recognizing the rights of others to own property in Fiji.

AFFIRMING the contributions of all communities to the well-being of the Fijian society, and the rich variety of their faiths, traditions, languages and cultures:

TAKING PRIDE in our common citizenship and in the development of our economy and political institutions:

COMMITTING ourselves anew to living in harmony and unity, promoting social justice and the economic and social advancement of all communities, respecting their rights and interests and strengthening our institutions of government:

REAFFIRMING our recognition of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals and groups, safeguarded by adherence to the rule of law, and our respect for human dignity and for the importance of the family,

WITH GOD AS OUR WITNESS, WE GIVE OURSELVES THIS CONSTITUTION

1(a) New Interpretation Section.

Interpretation and Definition

In this Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires—

"Fijian" means the native, indigenous people of Fiji, who possess inalienable customary ownership rights and interests to land and seas as recorded under the book of living descendants(VKB) for the respective ownership units, and may be also referred to as Kai Viti and these terms may be used interchangeably.

Rotuman means the native indigenous people of Rotuma who possess inalienable customary ownership rights and interests to land and seas as recognized and recorded on the island of Rotuma in accordance with Rotuman culture

"Fiji" may also be expressed as "Viti", and both terms shall be understood as referring to the sovereign State of Fiji.

Section 5 -Citizenship -Proposed amendment

*"Citizen of Fiji" means any person who holds citizenship of Fij, including the island of Rotuma in accordance with the law.*

All persons who are citizens of Fiji but who are not encompassed within the definition of "Fijian and "Rotuman" shall be recognised as non-native citizens of Fiji and shall enjoy full and equal rights, privileges, and protections under this Constitution, without discrimination, and subject only to such distinctions as may be expressly provided for under this Constitution or any written law.

2. Protection in Alteration of Laws Affecting iTaukei Proprietary Rights.

Alteration of certain Acts

F.--- (1) A Bill that alters any of the following Acts, namely:

(a) Native Lands Act 1905, Cap 133;
(b) Rotuma Act 1927, Cap 122;
(c) Native Land Trust Act 1940, Cap 134;
(d) Fisheries Act 1942, sections 14 – 20, Cap 158
(e) Fijian Affairs Act 1945, Cap 120;
(f) Rotuman Lands Act 1959, Cap 138;
(g) Banaban Lands Act 1965, Cap 124;
(h) Fijian Development Fund Act 1966 Cap 121;
(i) Agricultural Landlord & Tenants Act 1967, Cap 270
(j) Banaban Settlement Act 1970, Cap 123;
(k) ITaukei Trust Funds Act 2004;
(l) Indigenous Rights Act 2025; and
(m) Bose Levu Vakaturaga Act 1925

including a Bill prepared in consequence of the enactment of this Constitution:

(n) must be expressed as a Bill for an Act to alter the Act concerned:

(o) must not be presented for the President's assent unless it has been read three times the House and motions for the second and third readings are carried in the House of Representative; and

(p) is deemed not to have been passed at its third reading in the House of Representative-

(2) A Bill that alters the Agricultural Landlord and Tenant Act:

(a) must be expressed as a Bill for an Act to alter that Act; and

(b) must not be presented for the President's assent unless:
- i it has been read three times in House of Representatives and motions for the second and third readings are carried in the House of Representative; and
- ii at its third reading it is supported by the votes of at least two-thirds of the members of the House of Representatives.

(1) The President must not assent to a Bill referred to in this section unless it is accompanied by a certificate of the Speaker to Parliament certifying that, in relation to the House of Representatives, the approval required by this section has been given.

3. Customary Laws and Customary Rights.

All references to Customary Laws and Customary Rights were taken out by the 2013 Constitution, this proposal recommends that section 186 of the 1997 constitution be reinstated as a BLV proposal because the iTaukei and all other communities in Fiji are cultured and governed by customs of old that have formed the basis for conduct within these communities.

Customary laws and customary rights

G.-(1) The Parliament must make provision for the application of customary laws and for dispute resolution in accordance with traditional Fijian processes.*

(2) In doing so, the Parliament must have regard to the customs, traditions, usages, values and aspirations of the Fijian and Rotuman and other communities that forms Fiji's populace.

(3) The Parliament must make provision granting to the owners of land or of registered customary fishing rights an equitable share of royalties or other moneys paid to the State in respect of the grant by the State of rights to extract minerals from the land or the seabed.

(4) A law fixing amounts under subsection (3) must require that account be taken of:

(a) any benefits that the owners are likely to receive as a result of the mineral exploitation;

(b) the risk of environmental damage;

(c) any legal obligation of the State to contribute to a fund to meet the cost of preventing, repairing or compensating for any environmental damage;

(d) the cost to the State of administering exploitation rights; and

(e) the appropriate contribution to the general revenue of the State to be made by the person granted exploitation rights.

4. Bose Levu Vakaturaga to be included in the 2013 Constitutional Amendments.

a. The Bose Levu Vakaturaga (BLV), as the most senior of all leadership institutions in Fiji, somehow still finds its place in the Regulations of the iTaukei Affairs Act 1945, Cap 120.

b. It did get constitutional recognition when elevated in the 1997 Constitution. It was soon replaced and relegated back to its former position after the promulgation of the 2013 Constitution.

c. The entity having suffered suspension and disestablishment during the former administrations, it is now the desire of the Chiefs to have this forum reside in the Superior Law of this country so that its seniority is not only acknowledged but also its contribution to the welfare and well being of the State & its component peoples.

d. Further and more importantly, its pendency will not be tampered with by successive governments.

e. Having regard to wording of section 166 of the 1997 Constitution 1997 proposed as amendments as follows:

Bose Levu Vakaturaga

116.-(1) The Bose Levu Vakaturaga continues in existence and its membership, functions, operations and procedures are as prescribed from time to time by or under that Act.

(2) The Bose Levu Vakaturaga has, in addition to the functions set out in the Fijian Affairs Act, in addition to functions conferred on it by this Act or under this Constitution.

5. Section 4 - Secular State in 2013 to be repealed

a. The inclusion of secular state in the Constitution is an intrusion to the right that individuals possess to voluntarily practise a religion of ones own choice. It is also a denial of hardship that the country has become since formal governance began; and the immense contribution of church elders of this country in maintaining the faith in God over and during our trying times. Further, it is hence the desire of chiefs want to restore back to our individual and communities their faith in God and the conduct of religion in Fiji.

b. Section to be deleted as Bill of Rights aptly mentions the practice to be adopted.

6. Section 26(3)(a) – Right to equality and freedom from discrimination based "sexual orientation" and "gender identity and expression" to be deleted.

7. Section 28 - To Amend Section as prescribed re Rights of ownership and Protection of iTaukei, Rotuman and Banaban Lands

a. Discrimination on the grounds of "sexual orientation" or "gender identity and expression" is a misguided theory of biology that leads to transgenderism, and it needs to be deleted from the Constitution. This trend gives birth to use of pronoun issues, sex changes & medical operations, definition of a woman problems, male competing in female sports and vice versa, confusion in males wanting to use female latrines, transgender toilets in the workplace and schools etc. Fiji and its communities are not ready for these archaic changes. The reason for this is not only because it is an immoral practice even, if practiced by consenting adults are engaged in this practice, it is counter-productive to the order of nature; and it impairs or stunts reproductive system in concerned individuals. The reproductive system is what the chiefs want to protect from this invasion because the stunting of this system will have a potential ill-effect on the steady increase and continued existence of Fijian race.

b. The explanatory notes on the reasons for deletions are explained in sub-para a above.

c. In respect of this provision, we firstly say that:

(1) The 2nd line of sub-section 26 (3)(a) below has the words; "sex" and "gender". We submit that these two terms mean one and the same thing. Either one of them can be deleted. I have deleted "gender" and included "sex" in the above draft.

(2) The second and more important amendment is to delete the terms that form the basis of this this purported discriminating grounds of "sexual orientation" or "gender identity and expression"

> "Right to equality and freedom from discrimination
> D.—(1) Every person is equal before the law and has the right to equal protection, treatment and benefit of the law.
> (2) Equality includes the full and equal enjoyment of all rights and freedoms recognised in this Chapter or any other written law;
>
> (2) A person must not be unfairly discriminated against, directly or indirectly on the grounds of his or her—
>
> (a) actual or supposed personal characteristics or circumstances, including race, culture, ethnic or social origin, colour, place of origin, sex, birth, primary language, economic or social or health status, disability, age, religion, conscience, marital status or pregnancy; or
> (b) opinions or beliefs, except to the extent that those opinions or beliefs involve harm to others or the diminution of the rights or freedoms of others, or on any other ground

(c) prohibited by this Constitution.

8. New Section 28A - State to Recognize and Protects iTaukei Proprietary and Economic Rights

a. This section protects the proprietary and economic rights of the iTaukei people over their lands, waters, and natural resources

State to Recognize and Protects iTaukei Proprietary and Economic Rights

"28A (1) The State recognizes and protects the proprietary and economic rights of the iTaukei people over their lands, waters, and natural resources.

(2) The use of iTaukei resources for commercial, governmental, or industrial purposes shall be conducted at current market rates, ensuring equitable benefit-sharing with the iTaukei landowners.

(3) The State shall enact laws to ensure the preservation, promotion, and protection of iTaukei cultural heritage, traditional knowledge, and intellectual property, including folklore, traditional designs, and practices."

9. New Section 28B - Development Involving Extraction Affecting iTaukei Land and Water Resources

a. Firstly section 41 prescribes – "Rights of children". See section below to note the impact of sections 41(1)(d) -" On disciplining of children in schools. Trite iTaukei teaching that is consistent with scripture is ":O koya e lomana na luvena me kuita taka". This trite old iTaukei cliche which reflects the conduct of custom is reinforced in the advent of Christianity by scripture[1] - Prov 13:24: "He who spares the rod hates his son but He who loves him disciplines him diligently". The bulk of the iTaukei supports this position. Some fathers have been imprisoned because this matter has intervened their exercising their customary rights over his children. Chiefs through the BLV will lend their weight to support this amendment to allow iTaukei to discipline their children in a way that is in keeping with their culture.

[1] Prov 13:24. "He who spares the rod hates his son but He who loves him disciplines him diligently".

b. A majority of the iTaukei supports this position. BLV submissions in this Review is for an amendment to remove the repugnant portions that will allow parents and teachers to punish our children or students for better behaviour. This is consistent with our duty to look after the Welfare or well being of the iTaukei people in an area so crucial as family discipline.

c. Some trite scripture that reinforces the iTaukei culture of disciplining children are below:

(1) Prov 3:11-12: "My son, do not despise the Lord's discipline, and do not recent his rebuke, because the Lord disciplines those he loves, as a father the son he loves".

(2) Heb 12:8 "If you do not experience discipline like everyone else, then you are illegitimate children and are not true sons".

(3) Heb 12:6: "The Lord disciplines him whom He loves".

Rights of children

E.—(1) Every child has the right—

(a) to be registered at or soon after birth, and to have a name and nationality;

(b) to basic nutrition, clothing, shelter, sanitation and health care;

(c) to family care, protection and guidance, which includes the equal responsibility of the child's parents to provide for the child—

i whether or not the parents are, or have ever been, married to each other; and ii whether or not the parents are living together, have lived together, or are separated;

(d) to be protected from abuse, neglect, harmful cultural practices, any form of violence, inhumane treatment; and

(e) not to be detained, except as a measure of last resort, and when detained, to be held—

i only for such period of time as is necessary; and ii separate from adults, and in conditions that take account of the child's sex and age.

(3) The best interests of a child are the primary consideration in every matter concerning the child.

11. Section 84 – Amend to make BLV the Appointing Authority of President and Vice President.

a. This brief acknowledges that all 4 past constitutions nominated different authorities that was responsible for appointing the Head of State:

(1) 1970 Constitution – Appointment of Head of State (Governor General) made by the Queen of Fiji being a dominion.

(2) 1990 Constitution –prescribes that a President and Commander-in-Chief of Fiji who shall be appointed by the Bose Levu Vakaturaga and who shall hold office for a period of five years.

(3) 1997 Constitution – prescribes that a The President and Vice-President are appointed by the Bose Levu Vakaturaga after consultation by the Bose Levu Vakaturaga with the Prime Minister.

(4) 2013 Constitution – prescribes that the President shall be appointed by Parliament in accordance with the prescribed section.

b. In reading the above provision there is merit in the provisions of the 1990 & 1997 Constitutions because it takes the appointment of the Head of State out of political influence and vests it with BLV. With the appointment put in the hands of an apolitical entity like the BLV it will avoid the situation akin to the one involving the stalemate between the changeover of the last governments where the election results were close.

c. We have considered the wordings in all the 4 constitutions since 1970 until to date. We favour 1990 and 1997 versions as suitable to the posture currently adopted the BLV in it dealings with government and other principal authorities. The proposed draft provision is stipulated below:

Appointment of President and Vice-President

B (1). There shall be a President and Commander-in-Chief of Fiji and his Vice-President who shall be appointed by the Bose Levu Vakaturaga after consultation with the Prime Minister:

(2) The persons who hold these offices shall be for a period of five years.

BLV

JUDICIAL PRESENTATION
Date: 09/04/26

Mr. Valenitabua: And just housekeeping matters, the mics that we have in front of us, only four can work at the same time. So, it would be best that once we use the mic, we turn it off. The switches appear in front, the white tab. Just press on that, it will go off. Press on it again, it will come on. With due respect, My Lords, this is a consultation. Mr. Kholi and I are barristers and solicitors, as you know. The remaining Commissioners would have to address you this morning, in case they want to say something, or they would want to ask questions. If you may, we will be addressing you, My Lords, as Sirs this morning, instead of My Lords. I hope you don't mind. Now we will hear your submissions. I will not introduce the Commissioners; the name tags are there in front of you. I'm sure you know most of us, if not all. So, I will now hand over, so that we can hear your submissions. Thank you.

Justice Temo: Thank you, Chairperson. Mr. Valenitabua, members of the Constitution Review Commission? We have here a written proposal for the amendment to Section 110 of the 2013 Constitution. That is the section on which the terms of the employment of the judges. Now, 110 of the 2013 Constitution, the heading is titled, Terms of Office. 110, Subjection 1 says, a person who is not a citizen of Fiji, and who is appointed to be a judge in Fiji, serves for a period not exceeding three years. Determined in this case by the Judicial Service Commission, at the time of the appointment, and may be eligible for appointments.

110, Subjection 2 reads, any other appointment as a judge continues until the judge reaches retirement age, which is Subjection 8. For the Chief Justice, President of the Court of Appeal, Judges of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Appeal, the age of 75. And Subjection B, for the Judges of the High Court, the age of 70. Subjection 3, a person who retired as a judge of the High Court, but has not reached the age of 75, is eligible for appointment as a judge of the Supreme Court or as a Justice of Appeal.

That is the section that governs the appointments to the High Court, Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court, the superior courts of Fiji. And they possess the judicial power of the state. Now this, the operation of this section since 2013, when the Constitution came into effect, somewhat worked against local judges. You see, as of now, prior to my taking office as Acting Chief Justice and Chief Justice, the superior courts of Fiji, that is the Court of Appeal, starting with the High Court, Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court, were dominated by Sri Lankan judges. When I came into office, I made sure that we revert back to what we are used to, getting our superior court judges from New Zealand, Australia, and Britain. At the moment, our superior courts are staffed by New Zealanders, Australians, and English judges.

Now, I think early in May 2023, I wrote to the Chief Justice of New Zealand, and she was kind enough to suggest some retired Supreme Court judges of New Zealand and Court of Appeal judges, which they have given to us to work as Court of Appeal judges and Supreme Court judges. And also, I wrote to the Chief Justice of Australia, of the High Court of Australia, asking them to provide judges to us, and they have provided two judges for the Supreme Court. That ongoing relationship is in train, as of now.

However, the problem with Section 110, Subsection 1, especially with the phrase, a person who is not a citizen of Fiji, works against local judges when they reach 75. The only profession where reaching the age of 75, or more than 75, which is valued in the judiciary, as in our culture, age is supposed to bring to you wisdom. You can be smart academically, with so much degrees, but you haven't attained wisdom for the benefit of society.

Now, right now, we are extending contracts for judges from New Zealand and Australia who have gone above 75, because of the effect of Section 110, Subsection 1. However, when it comes to a citizen of Fiji, we have to tell them, at 75, you have to go, by virtue of Section 110, Subsection 2. Case in point is the former President of the Court of Appeal, Mr. Filimoni Jitoko, the current Speaker of Parliament, and one we just lost last week, Justice Alipate Qetaki. And it's working against local judges. Now, we tend to see that as a discrimination against us, pursuant to Section 26 of the Constitution, which forbids discrimination on the grounds of age.

In the case of Justice Jitoko and Justice Qetaki, when they reach 75, their health seems to have improved. I don't know why. You know, in my view, it's not just because they've turned 75 to terminate their contract, when they still have the capability to act as judges. And that's why we are suggesting an amendment that was drafted by the President of the Court of Appeal that I will submit to the Commission. And our proposed amendment is that to add another Subsection 4 to Section 110. And the terms of that is, I'll read it to you.

Consistent with the spirit of Subsection 1, and not withstanding Subsection 2 of this section, a person who has attained the retirement age under Subsection 2 may, subject to ability to perform the function of the office, may be eligible for re-appointment. Now, I have judges now in the Supreme Court, capable, all experts who have gone above 75. These are judges from New Zealand and judges from Australia and New Zealand, and from England. Amazingly, at that age, they still have got their maples. They've still got it, even though they've aged. So, I sit with them when we sit in the Supreme Court, and I read the files, and I read their judgments. In my view, they're still very capable. The Lord Justice Deming passed on when he was 100. So, I don't see why locals should be unnecessarily forbidden from occupying judicial office beyond 75.

So, I'm asking for our proposed amendment to be given to you as a commission for onward submission. Can I give a copy of this to the commission? Is there a secretary? That's our main one. At the moment, I am pleading with High Court judges. Young, local High Court judges are coming up. If you want to go to the Court of Appeal, prove yourself. Prove yourself by your ability to dispose of cases within a reasonable time. I tell them the public are crying out for faster judgments. Don't take time when you deliver judgments. We're trying to impose a two-year record from start to finish.

Unfortunately, Fiji, we tend to, and Mr. Kohli knows it very well, and you, Mr. Valenitabua, knows it very well, the technique of milking the cow, prolonging cases. We're trying to discourage that. Right at the moment, we are in the middle of reforming, trying to reform the High Court rules, the Magistrate Court rules, and bringing in mediation to fasten the disposition of cases. That's on the constitutional amendment on the tenure of the offices of the Superior Court judges.

I move on to the role of the Judicial Service Commission. All of us in Fiji have been subjected, in the case of the FICAC Commissioner, and in the case of the DPP's issue that is before the Judicial Service Commission, and ramblings from the role of the Judicial Service Commission.

In our experience, when you look back at Section 104, Subsection 1, which states the Judicial Service Commission, established under the Administration of Justice Decree 2009, continues in existence and shall consist of;

A] the Chief Justice, who shall be the chairperson.
B] the President of the Court of Appeal.
C] the Permanent Secretary of Justice, responsible for justice.
D] a legal practitioner to be appointed by the President on the advice of the Chief Justice, following consultation by the Chief Justice with the Attorney General.

One, has not less than 15 years post-admission practice. And B, has not been found guilty of any disciplinary proceedings involving legal practitioners, whether in Fiji or abroad. Blah, blah, blah. And E, a person not being a legal practitioner, appointed by the President on the advice of the Chief Justice, following consultation by the Chief Justice with the Attorney General. The problem for us, given our experience with the COI, the DPP, is the involvement of the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal in the JSC.

These are the two most senior legal officers in the judiciary. However, by virtue of this membership of the JSC, they are automatically disqualified from sitting in any court matter that proceeds to the High Court, to the Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court on challenges to the decision of the Judicial Service Commission, involving appointments in the offices which are laid out in the Constitution. Now we see this as a bit unfair.

Not unfair, the public doesn't benefit from the participation of these two most senior legal officers in the judiciary to participate in the determination of the challenging issues that come to the court. For example, in the dispute over the Malimali case, etc. I'm disqualified from sitting on any issue that goes to the Supreme Court, while at the same time I understand the legal issues under challenge.

I understand the legal debate concerning this, and I understand the difficulties coming from this within the confines of Fiji. Likewise, my brother Judge, the President of the Court of Appeal, we both understand the issues that are being challenged in court. We both understand the problems, and we both understand the possible resolution of the issues in furtherance of the public interest. However, because of our ex-official status in the JSC, we are automatically disqualified from presiding on court matters on an issue regarding JSC decisions. We propose an amendment to the composition of the JSC. And it's just the 104, Subjection 1A. We are suggesting the Chief Justice or his or her nominee who is to be the chairperson.

So that gives the Chief Justice, for example, the opportunity to see that issues are coming for the JSC, for him or her to stand away from JSC decision-making and appoint a nominee who may be a Supreme Court judge, who may be a Justice of Appeal, who may be a High Court judge, to stand in for him as chairperson of the JSC, freeing him or her from presiding in the High Court or Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court when a matter comes to court. You see, you can see this happen in the case of Rabuka, when he was taken to a commission of inquiry that was chaired by Justice Kamou in the 1990s. Most of you who were around at that time, you may have heard about the famous four who went to the newly Prime Minister Rabuka at the time and tried to persuade him to advance, to guarantee some large loans from the National Bank of Egypt.

Tony Stevens was, those of you who remember that, and Rabuka at that time, been from the military and straight into being the Prime Minister, hasn't got that experience as Prime Minister, and as a result he delegated the function of their request to the AG at that time. An official commission of inquiry was done on them, and it reached the stage where it came before the Chief Justice Tuivaga at that time, and he managed to knock it on the head, because Justice Kamou made some very negative comments against the Prime Minister at the time, and Rabuka challenged his decision on the grounds of breach of natural justice and exceeding his jurisdiction. And the Chief Justice Tuivanga at the time agreed with that, and ordered that the negative comments blah, blah, blah be taken out.

So, what I'm saying is this, had we been out of the, had this amendment that we are proposing, we could have avoided this COI inquiry at the High Court stage, alternatively at the Supreme Court level. So that's why we are proposing for you that the Chief Justice, including the President of the Court of Appeal, be given an opportunity to voluntarily get out of the JSC to preserve their status to preside over cases that come into the JSC, to the courts. So, with the President of the Court of Appeal, it's the same, 104 Subjection 1B, the President of the Court of Appeal or his or her nominee.

So, the nominee gives the two officers the opportunity to get out of it and leave it to another judge to preside on their behalf. So, preserving their right to sit in the Court of Appeal in the Supreme Court when the matter comes before those courts. That's on 104. Maybe, President of the Court of Appeal, you may want to touch upon this one, number two. Members of the Commission, I'll pass on to my brother judge, the Honorable President of the Court of Appeal. Thank you.

Justice Mataitoga: Members of the Commission, it's very important for you to understand something and that is the schematics of entire Constitution. In particular with regard to the judiciary, the way whoever drafted this thing was so controlling in the manner in which they managed the various commissions. Now it is clear from Section 104 that the Justice, the FJC or the Judicial Service Commission are to look after the independent commissions. Those are commissions that does not deal with political or semi-political issues. The only two that are not referred to their jurisdictions were the Legal Aid Commission and the FICAC.

Why? Because before the enactment of the 2013 Constitution, they had pre-existed in the form of legislations. So, when you go from Section 114 to 121, the seven commissions that should have come under the JSC was specifically mandated in the provisions of the Constitution. The only one that was left out was those two because they already came in and they were in existence much earlier. Now the point I'm trying to say is that when you look at the way some people are commenting about those provisions out of context, it looks sensible. The reason you protect the independent commission is to take it out of political influence and not to put it in the Constitutional Officers Commission. Now, if you are not careful about the background to this, you will see that the vast majority of the provisions that needs to be amended in this Constitution, everything is reversed, is what I call a reversed Westminster model.

It starts off Westminster, it ends up by, at the back end, they actually change the whole thing to two people, two portfolios, Attorney General and the Prime Minister. And then the way they allocate portfolios right throughout the period is very interesting. So, you can see that in terms of the Constitution being the guide for political governance, there is something wrong somewhere. I'm not qualified to comment in this context, but there is some issues here. And therefore, it is very important for us to understand why even the JSC were constrained in the manner it is constrained right now. That's the reason why the Honorable Chief Justice is saying that you need to look at this and please give us a little bit more flexibility. The first one is simply in your colonial attitude. No one should be discriminated on the basis of their citizenship. In this country, we are the only one discriminated against local judges. Welcome Fiji. My point, so you have to understand, you have to understand why some of this needs to change. And I know I'm way out.

An example you see in the Bill of Rights. Bill of Rights at the front, Westminster is very nice. Except in the provisions where there are provisions for where they can't do it. They want to take off all the rights that existed before. So, I mean, I'm telling you that when you look at it, don't look at it in the provisions that exist before you. Look at where they come from and see why the whole mechanism, the mechanism to control political power and shift it at convenience. I don't think that's what we're really trying to do for this country. We've got to be looking, going forward. We need to be a bit more strong about those kind of issues. That's why we are saying that when people, this is one of the reasons why I find interesting opinions being relied upon. They come from people who don't live in this country. I remember when we were writing the recent Supreme Court, I said to all the judges who were sitting around the table, remember, Martin Tomlin is the only judge, only lawyer that was here from 87 till today. When people come before me and they say this, I say, that's true. And if they say this, not true. People sing music according to the melodies they hear on the day. But when you see the continuum of constitutionalism, it's changed in a very interesting way that worried me. Because it's an area, of course, where people get their studies in. It's very interesting to see how people just manipulate the word according to the political weather.

So, it's very important for us to please have a look at, when you look at those provisions, the only one that I said that has not come up to me was 1, 2, 3, 1, which is the accountability group and transparency commission. If that one had come in, a lot of the issues that you are facing today won't be there. Because a lot of the things we are alleging as abuse of office is actually an issue that should be banned. That will be under the commission and not under the FICAC. And I say this because when we were looking at whether we should have a FICAC or not, there were very specific issues we limited to the work of the FICAC. Now there seems to be, here there's general policeman for everything. And then when you are in politics, they play games. So, they issue an interesting claim against Mataitoga just before election because he's a candidate. And then the whole thing disqualifies him. Then comes back and the whole thing is taken out once he cannot stand. It's contrived. The whole process is contrived. This is why I'm trying to alert you to this, to understand why we are pushing for some of these interesting provisions. Because remember, we were talking about separation of powers. Is there really separation of powers? When you want the powers of the judiciary, when you manipulate it in a very interesting way, I find it interesting because as someone who studied constitutionalism, I find this very creative. But it's not what we want. I say that just to appetize yourself on why it's very important for you to understand what we are saying to you this morning. The point is simply flexibility within the JSC. If we alternate, we can stay away. A classic example, the current stated amendment that has been appealed to the court of appeal by the Prime Minister. Since that thing was named, I have actually stopped sitting in the JSC. Because it comes to me first and foremost. You will never see me appearing in any JSC meeting that discusses that case. And more, I take it further, I don't meet anyone who is a friend of the Prime Minister. Because of that, we need to maintain independence, the integrity and accountability provisions. But the lack of flexibility, it means that if you go and look at the JSC record, Mataitoga is absent, Mataitoga is absent. Yes, I am absent for the prime reason of doing my own job, and that is to win the case. Not sitting in a committee. If you give us that flexibility, we might do a job better. Vinaka.

Justice Temo: Members of the Constitutional Review Commission, as you understand, we give you the opportunity to cross-examine us. Thank you.

Mr. Kohli: Honorable Chief Justice and President of the Supreme Court, I've got a few questions only. First and foremost, I would like to know, is there a, for the magistrates and judges, are they on contract? I know the magistrates were, so are they on contract or not?

Justice Temo: To answer that question, the magistrates are on contract. The reason is this. When I first started in 1994, coming to take on as a resident magistrate, the system at the time is that you are given probation for the first 12 months. And once you complete that probation period of 12 months, you are made permanent. I was made permanent as a resident magistrate in 1995. The problem that we had with permanent appointments is this. The case of Mohammed Shah. You know Mohammed Shah. There was an allegation of corruption against him. Yeah, in the magistrates. It wasn't proven, but the allegation was there.

And I understand at the time, the JSC was trying to remove him as a resident magistrate. But it was difficult. Because he was also, the way I was appointed, he was a permanent resident magistrate. And not only that, he was a highly qualified magistrate with a master's of law. Any allegation that was thrown at him, he was smart enough to, like a boxer, bury it this way. We missed him. Missed him. We couldn't get him off. Despite the evidence that was coming to us, the allegation, the complaints that he was allegedly corrupt. That's why they brought in the contract method of controlling the magistracy. In terms of, if we suspect that they are corrupt or not performing, they are not up to par. The contract gives us a mechanism to terminate their contract at the end of their contract period. That is still in train now. Right now, for resident magistrate, if they are not up to par with their performance, their contract is terminated. Alternatively, they are given one year extension with a warning. Produce the goods. Alternatively, we give them three years extension. For the ones that we judge competent, we give them five years. For the judges, it becomes problematic. Because for the judges, you've got to be very careful that you appoint people who come to the post and do their job when they're in the post. Some of them, the utmost respect, there comes a time when they know as judges, when you appoint you to the judges, if you're a local, your retirement age comes at 70. You can't be removed as a judge unless you activate the tribunal procedure in the constitution where allegation of misbehavior is leveled at you. So far, no judicial officer has been taken through that. Only Christopher Pryde has been taken through that. But we cant terminate them. The problem is that some of them, as the years grind on, remember, some of them were appointed to the bench in their 30s, 40s. As the years go by, they become very experienced good judges. But then the Malua fever crops in. Malua fever, as we understand in Fiji, just does affect some of us. So, we can't remove them unless allegation of misbehavior comes in. But that is very difficult to prove. Because you're dealing with officers who are, their bread and butter is knowing how to defend themselves. Yeah.

Justice Mataitoga: In our effort, the JSC effort to try and mitigate the non-production, people sleeping on the job sort of thing. We are now looking seriously at introducing a periodic review mechanism. This is because of the very difficulty of disciplining, particularly high court judge and I, that every so often we will review your performance. Not only because of how many case disposals you're having, but other areas, including your performance in public when you are not a judge. And I have to be blunt, we want to see people, we want to bring back the standards I was brought up in. That's correctly, even if you're going to buy the bread, you can't expose half of your body. That's not what it's there for. That's the old tradition of the bar. And through periodic performance review, we have to identify the criteria we will use, so that we are not subject to judicial review. So, we will say to Justice XYZ, look, you were a very good producer before you became a judge. Once you became a judge, it went downhill. Because you knew you were guaranteed to stay there for the next 30 years. It's not going to happen, my friend. You get a bad review, you're going home. Yeah. Because that becomes then a disciplinary issue, which we can deal with in appropriate provision. The idea is, at the moment, we lack this mechanism. And the only way we seem to be monitoring people is the, how many cases are disposed? When they put in the thing for review of the appointment. We stick, one appointment. Ah, what is he done? All the cases are done where they're projected from. I don't want to receive that. I say, look, I'm reading judgments that you come. I can't see the connectivity of things, the technical issues of law. Are they being discussed or not? How did you find XYZ guilty of this offense when you didn't address this issue? Those are the kind of things, for me personally, when I'm looking at things that come before me, I want to look at those issues.

Mr. Kohli: But say you have practice overseas as well, a graduate of New Zealand. How does New Zealand manage this? Because their appointment there is for a lifetime.

Justice Mataitoga: They do this. This is taken, this suggestion is from them. We look at their system, the periodic review thing. Because then it becomes a matter that can be taken up to a disciplinary tribunal. Otherwise, it's very difficult. And that's one of the reasons we were trying to also at some stage, if it's not part of the, if to put in this constitution the idea of a code of conduct with judicial officers. That one is even more stricter. Because it sets the standard. And if you go somewhere and say something stupid about sitting judges, hello? You're going to be in for a glance. And people will say, but aren't you? Yeah, but if you're not going to be a judge, the judge appointment, you're not paid only for 8 hours. You're paid 24 hours, 24 hours a day. So, the way you perform is that even when you're asleep, perform like one. I don't know how that happens, I try it every now and then.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, Chief Justice and President of the Court of Appeal. Deputy Registrar. Chapter 5 of the 2013 Constitution. Section 106. Section 106, subsection 1 and subsection 2. If I may read, subsection 1, the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal are appointed by the President at the advice of the Prime Minister following consultation by the Prime Minister with the Attorney General. If I read subsection 2, the judges of the Supreme Court, the Justices of Appeal, and the judges of the High Court are appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Judicial Services Commission following consultation by it with the Attorney General. Again, the Attorney General. Please permit me to take us back to the 1997 Constitution. Section 132.1. Section 132, subsection 1. Sub section 1 states, the Chief Justice is appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister following consultation by him or her with the Leader of Opposition. Subsection 2, the judges of the Supreme Court, the Justices of Appeal, including the President of the Court of Appeal, and the puny judges of the High Court are appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Judicial Services Commission following consultation by it with the Minister and the Sector Standing Committee of the House of Representatives responsible for matters relating to the administration of justice. My question, sirs, from that we can see that there has been a change. In the 2013 Constitution, consultation is to the Attorney General. My question is, is that provision all right, considering the separation of powers? Judges to be appointed in consultation with the Attorney General.

Justice Mataitoga: Neither provision supports separation of powers.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, can I say that that would need to be amended?

Justice Mataitoga: If you're going to do that, then under the 2013, you need to take out the reference of going to the Attorney General. You either trust the JSC and make sure you get the right people to be in those positions, or you don't. I'm against having any politician telling me who my judges are going to be. Really derogate that. So, if you want to really go Westminster for that separation of powers, yes. It's enough for the President, the Prime Minister and the President to get the man in to be Chief Red. But I don't believe that you can't go half way in this matter. You either have to trust the Justice, the Judicial Service Commission, after they have appointed the President of the Court of Appeal and the Chief Justice and the man has stated in their provision to be Chief Red, and let them run their show. Hold them accountable. After all, they have to actually move resolution against them if they misbehave, or they can't do their job. You can't start the trouble with this here, is that not only did they provide the Constitution as a framework, it has to be subsidiary legislation that itemize the various provisions with it. A lot of these, the JSC has no stake in legislation. It has loaded it with 21 provisions. This is usually the case when you want to control power. I mean, I study of course the Constitution on these issues. When they want to control power, they create nice-sounding good things but don't give them any realness. As a result, they keep on going around in circles. So, I suggest you either go the floor or leave it as it is. Because at least it's just going to the Attorney General, I hope they know enough floor for us to be able to exchange on ideas. But otherwise, you just remove as JSC. And then maybe increase the members of the JSC to reflect a lot more about the society in which you live in. I'm willing to go with it. But the idea of separation of powers, either we're serious or we're not. Because otherwise, we're going to start having people who we know, like I went to church with, appointed because he's always appointed me. We are human beings. Those kind of influence exist in the community in which we live, particularly this community. So that's the reason why the separation of powers was introduced when the English were thinking about it. But we are now manipulating it to suit political agendas, and that's the problem. It's going to be the problem.

Justice Temo: You can see where you're coming at, Chairperson. The difference between the 2013 constitution and the 1997 constitution. As to the choice of who becomes the Chief Justice. The 2013, as you rightly say, that decision belongs to the Prime Minister after consulting the Attorney General. With the 1997 constitution, that decision belongs to the Prime Minister after consulting the Leader of the Opposition. So, there's a presumption that the people choose their Chief Justice through the office of those two offices. But the Prime Minister is always there. If you look back at New Zealand, I think they do the same thing too. The Prime Minister is involved in the choosing of the Chief Justice as representative of the people through Parliament. As you can see, in New Zealand, ladies were appointed as the first Chief Justice when female Prime Ministers came into New Zealand. And that was during the time of Helen Clark, and the last one. You see, that's when female Prime Ministers made it into the Chief Justice position in New Zealand. For me, yes, both systems are, I can say, I leave it to the people. The people has the right to choose the mechanism in which they choose their Chief Justice. But I think, if you look at President, the Prime Minister is always involved. Whether it's the Attorney General who has to be consulted or the Leader of the Opposition, I leave that debate to the people. As to the Standing Committee, this one, the 1997 Constitution, instead of consulting the Attorney General in the 2013 Constitution, this one you have to consult the Sector Committee in Parliament. There is a problem with the Sector Committee. And the case in point is, and I've looked through the files when they gave me this job as Acting Chief Justice and Chief Justice. I've looked through the file because to find out what is the precedent regarding the appointment of judges or the choosing of judges. And I looked through the files how my predecessors have used to choose these offices. And I found out in the case of Justice Gates, when he was recommended to be a High Court Judge, at that particular time, the Sector Committee in Parliament has to be consulted. But they took a long time to come up with the decision. Whereas the Attorney General, you give them the advice, tomorrow the reply comes in. Executive Committee, they were, politics always go that way, time. And as I understand, in those days, the file, Sir Tim went directly to the President, with the Executive Committee not making up its mind. And the President, the late President Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara, made the appointment. That was it. In terms of efficiency, time-wise, the present system works. But whether, on how, which one to go with the 2013 criteria, or the Sector Committee criteria in the 1997 Constitution. Again, I leave it to the people to decide then. Thank you. Thank you, gentlemen.

Dr. Fatiaki: My questions are just small modifications, just general, very small. The issue of the age that you asked to be altered by the insertion of the fourth paragraph in your first amendment. If the issue of the age, as in the Bill of Rights, specifying that one should not discriminate on the basis of age for employment, why don't we just remove the defined ages of 70 and 75 to make it easier, and work on the basis that if you are capable for the job, medically, and able to perform the function, then there isn't an age, and then you don't have to address the issue of it conflicting with the Bill of Rights requirement that you do not discriminate on the basis of age. That's just a generic question that I ask you, rather than we add on that you can do beyond, why don't we just remove those ages and rephrase it, otherwise we just add an extra paragraph.

Justice Mataitoga: The reason why the subsection 4 is provided is because it takes into consideration the manner in which it is currently provided for in the 2013 constitution. If at the end of the day what you're suggesting would achieve that, all I'm against is discrimination in any form or shape. When I found out I was even discriminated in my own country, I don't know why I'm still doing it. It's very important, you've got to remove discrimination all along, even against women. No, even procedural discrimination which is often not written law, that needs to be dealt with as well.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. My second comment again is just a very generic one. Your second amendment, the Chief Justice or his or her nominee, I presume that's from the bench.

Justice Mataitoga: Yes.

Dr. Fatiaki: So that it's set up that way because obviously we want at least the seniority of judicial officers as your nominees. The third one is a very general comment and I thank Justice Sikeli for bringing it. In terms of a general approach to looking at a constitution, not just paragraph by paragraph, about the whole setting up of this constitution. I think we alluded to it in our earlier discussions with the GCC in terms of the identified, in our terms of reference, what we call the democratic deficit. In addition to the lack of consultation, one of the ones was what I think you alluded to, which is the consolidation of power into the hands of particular individuals. I think that's a critical part because as we, our members of this commission have gone, it's too big a task so we've divided ourselves chapters and each of us in each chapter recognize facets that might be the areas of democratic deficit in terms of the consolidation of power. Unreasonable consolidation of power. So, I thank you for that in terms of just reminding us about the set up of the constitution in terms of our task of looking at amending it in the context of how it came about and its purpose. My question in respect of that is, I mean, and again I leave this to you, but because you are the judiciary and I think it was alluded to that the issue of FICAC and the possible weaponization, which I think is very topical in social media, in the media, over the last 5, 6, 7 years. I wonder if the judiciary or yourselves have an opinion or recommendation in respect of, for instance, the need for FICAC. I mean, if it's going to come from anybody, we'd like to hear probably from the judiciary. If you might have an opinion, I'm not suggesting you make an amendment now, but, you know, we are open for the next 4 months to taking submissions.

Justice Mataitoga: May I suggest that we don't address that particular issue because who knows, someone might challenge one of their decisions and then this thing is very public that we made this view at this hearing. We are gone. We can't see it. But I think a few of us are going to make a submission which is much wider than this, which covers the issue to try and make it a lot more palatable in the constitution that we must have. But going back to the earlier issue, you know, this problem started way back in 1974, I think, when the DPP then challenged the power of the Attorney General in dictating to him what to do at the policy level. When there was a conflict of the separation of powers, it went so far to the Privy Council and, yes, the Attorney General won on that occasion. But in deciding the issues, the Privy Council was very clear as to what must take place before they can claim it. And that's very important for us to keep in mind that we do have, and I'm beginning to see these things coming through when, for example, in the recent context, there was some statement that, oh, if that is good, we just move this decision. No, it's not. The things that are granted under the constitution, you see, is not a political portfolio. It can't be moved to Jack. It stays there. When I see people making that kind of statement, I say, what is this? It shows that a lot of people are very, they don't understand why the constitution is structured the way it is. The things that are already granted by the constitution for the JSC, it's for them. You can't just wake up one morning, I don't like these guys, I'm going to move it so that I can control. You can't do that. You can do it because you think you have the powers, but you'll come back to the Court of Appeal or to the Supreme Court, they'll tell you, you shouldn't have done that. Those are the things you need to watch because creeping in during the last several years is nonsensical. Once I'm in a political position, I can do this. No. That's the reason why I said in one of my earlier comments, be careful that we talk about what the law says, that procedurally the fairness issue is maintained. Otherwise, you'll be jacking up issues. Let me give you a good example. I want him to be my next judge. Go in the court, tell him all the things he needs to do, and remember this is discriminatory action. The other two who applied for it didn't have the same advantage. But on the face of it, it looks good. They all applied, they were given the same opportunity. No, someone had more. It was a very recent case in the Supreme Court of South Africa. They actually addressed this issue. So, I'm saying to you, make it more palatable. When the young people of Fiji look, it's what they're looking for.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Justice Mataitoga.

Justice Temo: To answer your question, Mr. Fatiaki, I think for a start, the mandate of the Review Commission is far reaching. You're looking at the Constitution, the foundation of the law of this country. And I don't think subjudice matters can affect your jurisdiction to look at the whole Constitution. The task given to you is very important for the people of Fiji. The question you said about FICAC. Yeah. I'd like to address that. The Constitution says, regarding the service of the Judicial Service Commission, 104, 104 subsection 8. Yeah. It says, in the performance of the function or the exercise of its authority and powers, the Commission shall be independent and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority, except by a court of law or otherwise prescribed by written law. When, Commissioner Aston Lewis came to see me on a greet and meet. I emphasized to them this action. Emphasized to them the need to respect the Constitution. That our decision on our appointment, our independence, has to be protected. He completely ignored it. You see. And then I looked at the Constitution again. The Constitution at the beginning says, every branch of government, this is the supreme law and you comply with it. But it threw it away. It moored it and continued with our judicial function. And I'm saying the choosing of the FICAC was given to JSC because we assess people's capability as a lawyer. Not as politicians. Now, I understand there's moves now to put it to COC. In my view, that will be the biggest disaster because politicians will be choosing who comes in to be the fight in force. And that will be worsening the situation. Because politicians, they haven't sat in a courtroom to assess lawyers as they argue cases in the courtroom on how they prove themselves as lawyers in the courtroom. We are the only ones who assess that. Not them. And the move now is to give it to them. And if the decision is given to them, that it won't be based on the ability of a person to prove themselves in the courtroom. For us, when I made my decision, I spent 31 years in the courtroom. I've seen lawyers come in and go. My working life, five days a week, is looking at lawyers. How they argue in the courtroom. How they survive in the courtroom. It's a battleground. And on the basis of that, we choose who becomes the commissioner. And when we made our decision, the commission came in and totally disregarded it. Aston Lewis hasn't spent 31 years in the judiciary. He has only spent three years as a judge in the high court. In Lautoka. He hasn't been a judge in Australia. Hasn't been a judge anywhere else. Only three years in Lautoka. Are you going to leave someone to judge us with three years of experience? So, this is why I'm saying it's a matter for the politicians to look at their FICAC act. The problem with the FICAC act is they don't have an objective. What is their statutory objective? What are they supposed to combat? It's not specified in the legislation, like say for example the Police Act. Police Act, they have a specific objective there.

Commanding the commission of police and all the police on what to do. So that's why any act by the commission of police or any police officer that is inconsistent with the objective laid down in the Police Act, they're committing an unlawful act. Which otherwise FICAC. So, for me, the resolution of that problem, I leave it to the people. Through the legislation. To answer your question on age for the judiciary. Why should we leave age limit? If someone is capable, leave them in. Part of me agrees with you and part of me disagrees with you. But we agree with you, yes, merit. If a person shows merit, let him continue. It's good for everybody. Merit includes good health. Good health, yes. Merit. But I believe in cutting off at 70, 75. There comes a time for me, already when they gave this position to me, I'm already looking at the exit time. When your time is up, leave it to the new one coming. The institution must survive, irrespective of you. So that's the way I see things. But in Fiji, president says, the oldest judge who has served in Fiji reached the age of 92. That was during the colonial era. There was a judge from New Zealand. He reached the age of 92 and was contributing. As of now, two judges of the Supreme Court have reached 80 and are going on. But they are on their last extension of their contract. One judge of the Court of Appeal has reached 80. And when we grant them extension, we see how well they are still going on. Some of these judges, as they age, their judgment becomes better. In our culture, wisdom is rewarded in the village. The oldest person, when there is a crisis in the village, we go to the oldest person to seek advice. I think that's still maintained in the judiciary. But when we see that the standard of work is going down, we politely tell them to go. Thank you for your questions. Thank you.

Justice Mataitoga: Background to FICAC and why FiCAC. When we were looking at specialized area of law enforcement, the problem affecting Fiji at the time was economic crime. Basically, money laundering. So, I was then in this building. We were tasked with the responsibility of finding a way in which we could deal with it. So, we sent a team to Auckland and to Sydney, New South Wales, to look at the way. Because in those days, the only FICAC that was existing outside of Hong Kong is the one in New South Wales. And the Serious Fraud Office in Auckland. Team came back, looked at their recommendation, taking the political environment into consideration, recommended that Fiji should have a similar office like the Serious Fraud Office. Went up to people who make decisions, FICAC. Why did we not support FICAC? Because what became the characteristic of FICAC-Fiji was what we saw in New South Wales. It became weaponized. And every guy who was going to beat you, they just report him to the FICAC. It's not serious. We need to be very careful. And that's really roughly the background. And the next thing, we are now in this interesting situation. But now, I remember when the former DPP came, when I first came into this position, he was already looking at how we can tone down their powers. I said, that's not for me. Mine is to look at the constitution. I'm the guy that looks after the constitution. That's my area of academic interest. I don't really want to get involved with the other parts of it.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, CJ. Thank you, CJ and Justice Mataitoga Thank you for your candid comments, CJ, about FICAC. And I think we realize that these are the kind of questions that are going to come from the floor, from the general public when we go out. And I think in asking the question to you, it wasn't to get you to commit yourselves to a stance. It was really for the purposes of what it achieved. It was for you to clarify for us, in public, the roles that we have, the roles that FICAC has in the constitution, and how it might be addressed by virtue of the people seeking it, and obviously through political means. And I guess that was the counsel that I heard from you, and I think the purpose behind the question was to allow that to be part of our answer when it's raised from the floor.

Justice Mataitoga: I hope that when we make a written submission as individuals, I will try to do this to the issue of one, two, three, section one, two, three. Because too many work that they are doing should be covered up. If that commission was right, then it should be dealing with a lot of those. So, we have now got the situation where a lot of the things that are unearthed by the audit reporters are not being taken into consideration because they are tied up doing other things that should have been done by somebody else. So, that's what's going to happen. And it's very interesting to see why it is developing the way it is.

Justice Temo: I'd like to add another important note. I've served under the 1990 constitution, 1997 constitution, and 2013 constitution. One thing I admire about the 1990 constitution is that in one of their sections they have a review after seven years. And when I saw the 1997 constitution, they took out the power of review. I said, my God, a mistake has been done. They can't amend the 1997 constitution. Why didn't they retain the power for the people of Fiji to review their constitution, say, after 10 years? When I saw that, I said, geez, we're setting the trap for another coup be done. That was before the 2000 coup because they've taken away the review powers of the constitution. So, I'm submitting to the review commission that part and parcel of this 2013 constitution is to give the people of Fiji the power to review their constitution, say, after 10 years, whatever time that you feel appropriate. To give the people of Fiji the power to revise it, if they see fit to do so, rather than prevent it from being amended because you know the people of Fiji. We've gone through coup d'etats and we want to stop that. To give the people the power to review the constitution. Like what you're doing now. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: I have one question to update them. I just want to honor all Chief Justices and My Lords. Thank you for your presence here today. I was very fascinated in Justice Mataitoga's comment about the front end of the constitution and the back end and the creativity in between. Are we likely to see examples of that or perhaps a submission to that effect? Because I'm beginning to see that as well, that sort of trend through my dissection. I'm not a subject matter expert in law, but I'm not blindsided, to put it that way. So, I was quite interested in those comments.

Justice Mataitoga: When are you people going to finish with your work? Because I have to tell you that next month I'll be away sitting in the Court of Appeal and all that kind of thing. I intend to address a lot more as a person. It's my right as a citizen before it's discriminated against me. But the other issue, I wanted to really come to the example of why I didn't want to comment widely. At the recent Supreme Court sitting on reference, there was objection on my sitting on the bench because of articles, academic articles I've written way back then. I was actually taken by surprise. I thought we encouraged people to do a little bit more thinking beyond what I see. In that sense, this is not serious. Are they objecting me? It's a very subject matter that is the subject of this commission. But that's the reason why I have to hide a lot of the things I've written somewhere else in the world. And it's funny because other people are using it. Because I go to international conferences and they're using it. Only in Fiji I can't content. Because I'm from Gau they don't want me to see it.

Mr. Kohli: Well, I'll ask one question. If I hear you correctly, you wanted to make an amendment by adding subsection 4 to section 110. Basically, you said that you want to add, say, subject to eligibility to perform. Might increase the age. After hearing Honorable Chief Justice and his background as a sportsman, and seeing Mr. Qetaki's health get better after 75, and Lord Denning almost hitting the age of 80, there should be a provision. Do you still want that provision? Eligibility to perform? Or would you see them perform and if they're ineligible, then pull them out? That's my question.

Justice Mataitoga: I think when we... I obviously would love to see that in there. But let's be overall balanced. One of the reasons people don't admit openly and not being honest when we talk about the judiciary, we're not a very easy people to deal with. And by nature, that's the way it should be. But the calamity in which we exist is now changed. It's demanding a lot more accountability. We had a meeting of the commission yesterday and I said to them, look, from now on, anyone who comes in must demonstrate the following capacities. Why? Because there are people outside, apart from the politicians, important as they are, the more important ones are the voters. We need to show them that we are marching according to time. If we start locking these things too and not die on the job, it shows that we are being selfish. So, balance it out slowly. And then again, if you put an inter-sectional review provision and it's adopted, then you can look at it at that stage. It's always best to be driven by actual examples, rather than academically accentuating what you might expect. And a lot of the things we're sharing this morning is actually from personal experience. And that's one of the reasons when I say that a lot of people can't say no because they don't know what they're talking about. I know what I'm talking about. You can send us home if there's nothing else.

Mr. Beg: I suppose I have one juicy question. Sorry. In the Supreme Court ruling on Chapter 10, again, you said early on that we're looking at the overall constitution. We can't just ignore that. We've got to address the monkey in the house. But I think our chair has given us a good direction on that. I don't know if you can't say much about that, but I guess we have to look at that in terms of, as you said earlier on, a holistic approach to this, because it's something that's personally bothered me for a while. But I guess it's something that we will have to address. Thank you.

Justice Temo: It's about immunity, is it? Yeah. I totally agree with you. I'm surprised the challenge was to move Fiji forward. We have to look at practicalities to move Fiji forward. Yes, a lot of our citizens have suffered because of all the unlawful actions that have taken place since 1987. And for us to disturb that could create problems. And you have to look at two choices. You want to move forward or you want to create problems. The people of Fiji want to move forward. Sometimes in our personal life you are hurt. Unnecessarily victimized. But you've got to move forward. Forgive and forget and move forward. If you want to disturb it, then the chances of moving forward may be compromised. And you end up not moving forward. So, it's like choosing between two wheels. So, for us, moving forward was the determining factor. We have to give the people of Fiji a mechanism to allow them to move. Disturbing, chapter 10, could be a move backwards. But moving forward. The coup that happened in 1987-2000, which is in the nature of iTaukei culture. Coup d'etats. If you look at our history, the 1987-2000 coup, are peanuts. If you look at our history. In our history, sons have killed their fathers to take chiefly positions. If you look at our history. Families fight each other, live over each other to get positions. This is part and parcel of Fijian culture. So, while we recognize the positive aspects of our culture, we also recognize the negative side of our culture. So, the challenge is to move forward. And that's why we did not touch chapter 10. But there's nothing to stop the commission from venturing into that. And you'll have to make a decision about it. I'm not here to tell you how to do it. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much, Honorable Chief Justice. It was how we would frame the question in the consultation process. Those questions will be coming back to us. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Kohli: I have a question for the Supreme Court ruling. Maybe you'll be able to guide us in our future consultations. If I remember correctly, the provisions were, in order to amend the Constitution, require three quarters majority in the House of Reps and three quarters in the referendum.

Justice Mataitoga: Fifty-one? Fifty plus one?

Mr. Kohli: No, no, before the Supreme Court ruling.

Justice Temo: Before? Before the ruling. Seventy-five, seventy-five.

Mr. Kohli: Sometimes they have double entrenchment as well. So, when I look at it, the whole idea was that people do not just come in by simple majority and change the Constitution. That's why they have a provision for review, like Honorable Chief Justice has said. There should be a provision for review. One of the questions that has been asked in the media, I've noticed that, and it will be asked is this. Three quarters, you reduce that to two-thirds. That is not an issue. That is fine. It's been moving forward in practice. However, when it comes to a referendum, you're asking for a simple majority. Was it meaning it not? Like if 2,000 people go and vote in a referendum and 1,001 say yes, but we say we don't want it, we can't move forward. So, what is the rationale of having only a simple majority in a referendum? That's my question.

Justice Mataitoga: Again, go to the schematic of the Constitution. The Constitution is not only a document that lays out the power points and the people who will control those power points. Always remember that there is a voter group that is much bigger and more powerful than any of us. We insist, I personally insist on that provision thing, in that decision. Otherwise, I was willing to write a minority decision, a judgment. The reason was to respect the right. Otherwise, we won't be able to bring it in. They will cut, they use their power, they dominate what they want. The pressure was not to have a referendum at all. If you go back to the submissions that were before us, the main submission was said no need for referendum. We said no, we will put it in. Again, to give the people of this nation an opportunity to say aye or nay to what has been proposed to be the final thing that will become their Constitution. If you take that out, we are no different to those that didn't consult others when they brought the other one in. How do you justify it when you don't have that mechanism? I know it's going to take a little bit more time. It must take a lot of people who can think carefully on what to do, timetable it. The trouble is, in Fiji we seem to think tomorrow morning, he just said, if you don't plan for it, it won't turn up. So that's really the issue behind whether we should have a referendum or not. The vast majority of the, including all the principal participants, they didn't want a referendum. But those are people who hang in the structure of society, they are in the rarefied era of the world we live in. But, you know, when you go to the ordinary people, they want to say, what will be the final bill that comes, bring it to us, we want to have a say too. Because that's what the referendum is doing. Before you go to the third, bring it here.

Mr. Kohli: I think your line of thinking is more in line with the modern thinking around the world. They say that why should you have a constitution made today, which can't be changed by a simple majority and ruling future people's life, who have their right to decide what they want, say 50 years ago.

Mr. Valenitabua: My Lords, thank you very much. We have come to the end of this consultation session. Again, we thank you very much for attending this morning. We have been briefed, I should say, on some of the matters that we need to consider. And we will just take it from here. Thank you very much. There is some tea prepared at the back, at the other hall. We would invite you to please partake in the tea before you leave for your various offices this morning. Thank you very much.

Justice Temo: Thank you Chairperson. Members of the Commission for giving us the opportunity.

Mr. Valenitabua: Members of the press, thank you very much for your attendance.

Ministry of Immigration (MOI)

Date: [09/04/26] [2PM-4.PM]

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Permanent Secretary and your team for availing yourself this afternoon, we await you presentation that you will address us this afternoon.

PS Immigration: Thank you sir. Ni sa bula saka.

We acknowledge your presence this afternoon. We are also thankful to the committee for allowing us to come forward this afternoon to present areas that the Ministry of Immigration needs to address in terms of the Constitution. And this afternoon, we acknowledge the invitation vinaka valevu sir, and also we came in numbers. That shows our interest, that shows our commitment, that shows our dedication in recognizing the Constitution as the highest law of the land. And areas that we enforce, areas that we look after in terms of our functions, our address in the Constitution, in the sections 741 and the Bill of Rights. Some of these areas we want to seek your understanding and probably guidance for us to address areas that are maybe not clear or grey in nature, that limits our authority and powers invested to us under the Immigration Act, the Passport Act, and the Citizenship Act. We continue to face challenges as we try to protect Fiji at the border. Our understanding from immigration that we are making such decisions, and they are sovereign decisions.

We are the first line of defense in terms of travelers and passenger clearing, and we are also the last line of defense in terms of the same nature. This afternoon, we can see we've got Acting Director Immigration, Deputy Director Immigration, and our senior staff who are here to provide some substance on areas that they look after from permits and visas, citizenship, and border security and enforcement. I'm sure we had an earlier discussion prior to the meeting on a suggestion for us to come together as a unit. We are not alone at the border. We have other agencies, immigration, FRCS, we've got border security, we've got health, we've got customs as well, part of FRCS. And our decision to make clearance at the border, we are not alone.

So, I requested earlier if we can retreat, go back, come back as a unit, because our laws are dovetailing in that nature. But I just got to receive an advice that there was no MOU in terms of us taking the lead in terms of clearance at the border. So, we are happy to present our case to the committee. So, for executive summary, sir, the Ministry of Immigration welcomes the opportunity to contribute to the review of the 2013 Constitution. As the lead agency responsible for border management, citizenship, and migration control, the Ministry seeks a constitutional framework that clearly supports national security, border integrity, lawful migration, and fundamental rights. Key observations from the Ministry of Immigration, the Constitution, and existing immigration laws are generally aligned, providing legal authority for offices and protection of rights. Practical challenges remain in real-time decision-making, detention, removal, and consistency of discretionary powers. Immigration authority implied, rather than explicit, recognized as a sovereign function, creating legal uncertainty and operational hesitation. Critical gaps that we may have identified under sovereign authority.

Immigration control is not explicitly defined as a constitutional power. Courts often default to right-based analysis rather than recognizing state sovereignty. On citizenship by birth, current automatic birth rights, citizenship may not reflect a genuine connection to Fiji. Delegated authority, powers exercised by offices, director, deputy director, and permanent secretary need clear constitutional support. On border control and rights balance, some section on personal liberty and freedom of movement create tension in operational enforcement.

We came up with some recommendations on sovereign authority.

Constitution should clearly recognize immigration control as a core state function, including entry, stay, detention, and removal of non-citizens. Under the citizenship framework, birth rights, citizenship should require at least one parent to be a Fiji citizen, aligning with overseas citizenship rules. Delegation and accountability, the authority to act should be clearly extended to designated offices, director of immigration, deputy director of immigration, and permanent secretary, with accountability mechanisms. Operational flexibility, laws should allow timely evidence-based decisions at the border while respecting constitutional safeguards. Victim protection and traffic in person, constitution should support identification, non-penalization, and protection of traffic victims. In terms of border security and intelligence, it helps us to enable inter-agency intelligence sharing, risk-based screening, and compliance with international obligations.

In conclusion, strengthening constitutional clarity on immigration authority will first improve legal certainty for offices, courts, and policy makers. It will enhance our operational effectiveness and efficiency at the border. It will support consistency, accountability, and decision-making. It provides a better position for Fiji to respond to emerging migration trends and threats.

The Ministry remains committed to supporting a constitution that protects national sovereignty, strengthens border management, and upholds the rule of law while balancing with the rights of individuals. The Ministry is the lead agency responsible for border management and migration control.

The Ministry's submission is guided by the need for a constitutional framework that effectively supports national security, border integrity, and lawful migration while upholding fundamental rights. In our experience during our enforcement, we've been challenged from time to time. There are cases at the moment where our power has been challenged. The Ministry fully respects the constitution as the supreme law of the land. However, with the growing number of immigration-related decisions being subject to legal challenge, it is increasingly important that the role, authority, and functions of immigration are clearly and expressly recognized within our constitution. Immigration has evolved significantly over the years as Fiji continues to position itself as a central hub in the Pacific. The scale, complexity, and risk profiles of cross-border movement have greatly increased. At the same time, migration-related crimes, including document frauds, trafficking in persons, and organized irregular migration have become more sophisticated and traditional in nature. Fiji's borders are increasingly being targeted due to existing legal and operational gaps. Immigration officers are required to make immediate, high-stakes decisions at the border, often under pressure, with a number of flights coming in and a number of passengers. At the moment, on average, we're receiving about 28 to 32 flights a day, full flights. And for us to make quick decisions, decisive and correct, we need to have an empowerment.

In such an environment, any legal ambiguity, particularly at the constitutional level, can impact the consistency and confidence of our staff to make decisive decisions and effectiveness on our enforcement. This highlights the need for a stronger constitutional foundation that clearly recognizes immigration control as a function of state sovereignty, provides explicit authority for the regulation of entry, stay, and removal of non-citizens, supports timely and decisive operational decision-making, and maintains an appropriate balance between enforcement powers and fundamental rights. A clearer and more enabling constitutional framework will reduce legal uncertainty, strengthen border governance, and ensure that Fiji is better equipped to respond to evolving migration challenges while continuing to uphold the rule of law.

Mandates and legal framework, the Ministry's functions are exercised while the framework of the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji, in particular, Section 2 on the Supremacy of the Constitution, Chapter 2, Sections 6 to 45, covers the Bill of Rights, Sections 5 to 8 on Citizenship and relevant legislation that are included. As I mentioned before, the Immigration Act 2003 and regulations, Immigration Amendment Act 2020, Act No. 34 of 2020, Citizenship of Fiji Act 2009 and regulations, Travel Document Act and its regulations, as well as applicable international treaties and conventions, including UN Conventions relating to the status of refugees, UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its protocols, including traffic in prison, ILO Framework on Labor Mobility and IKO Standards on Passports and Travel Document.

Under the IKO, Annexes 9 and 17, the Ministry of Immigration is responsible for facilitation and security at the border. These constitutional provisions, together with the legislation and international obligation, provides the legal and operational foundation for Fiji's immigration system. In particular, Sections 5 to 8 establishes who is a citizen of Fiji, Section 21, Freedom of Movement and Residence, and Section 9 on Rights to Personal Liberty.

These sections directly impact immigration decision-making, and Section 26, that covers Rights to Administrative Justice, governs the fairness of immigration decision. While these provisions are fundamental, they primarily operate from the rights-based perspective and do not expressly recognize immigration control as a core, sovereign function of the state. As a result, immigration authority is largely exercised through legislation rather than being clearly entered in the constitution.

This creates gaps between the constitutional protection of rights and the state's responsibility to control each border and regulate non-citizens. In practice, immigration officers are required to make immediate and high-risk decisions relating to entry, detention, and removal, often in time-sensitive and complex situations involving fraud, trafficking, and treasonous national crime. The absence of explicit constitutional recognition of immigration powers can lead to legal uncertainty and increase court challenges.

It results in over-reliance on rights-based interpretation, particularly in relation to non-citizens, creating operational hesitation and inconsistency in enforcing action. Given these challenges, this is a clear need for the constitution to go beyond general provisions. We seek recognitions for immigration control as an exercise of state sovereignty.

Affirming the state's authority over the entry, stay, and removal of non-citizens provides a stronger constitutional foundation to support existing legislation and operational practice. Strengthening these linkages will ensure that Fiji's immigration framework is constitutionally grounded, legally certain, and operationally effective, while maintaining appropriate safeguards for fundamental rights. Some key constitutional areas relevant to immigration are citizenship.

Section 528 of the constitution establishes a clear and consistent pathway for citizenship through birth, registration, and naturalization, ensuring legal certainty and protecting the rights of citizens. These provisions are operationalized through our Immigration Act 2003 under Section 8, Evidence of Citizenship and Identity under Section 9, Determination of Status. Under the Citizenship Act 2009 under Section 5 to 7 on Citizenship Provisions and Section 19 on Evidence of Citizenship, our operational functions are defined by these areas on who is a citizen.

Proposed amendment - under Section 5, all citizens of Fiji should be known as Fijians or Fiji nationals. Under Section 5, on citizenship by birth, (current position under the existing constitution, any person born in Fiji automatically acquires citizenship, regardless of their parent's citizenship or immigration status, except where a parent holds diplomatic immunity, and neither the parent is a citizen). In the constitution, it gives a vague understanding and open to interpretation.

Even though under our Act it is quite clear, but the constitution is the supreme law of the land, that people, or they resort to it as their right.

Proposed changes - to amend (5 3) to limit citizenship by birth to children who are born in Fiji and have at least one parent who is a Fiji citizen at the time of birth and through the permanent residency pathway and not through any form of permits. Currently, Fiji is probably the most lenient nation in the world to give citizenship.

After 5 years under a permit, you have the right to apply for citizenship. Our laws are now being revised. We are going to introduce permanent residency as a pathway to become a citizen, not through any permits.

The rationale and implications, this will strengthen the link to the nation when citizenship will reflect a genuine, documented, connected to Fiji. It ensures birthright citizenship aligns with active familial and society ties. It will align with existing frameworks that mirrors the more rigorous criteria of the 1990 constitution.

It will harmonize this with rules of children born abroad who acquired citizenship if a parent is a citizen. Under constitutional supremacy, ensuring this rule in the constitution overrides any conflicting provision in the Act, under Citizenship Act of 2009, it will establish the constitution as the primary source for determining citizenship by birth. On national interests and resources protection, it protects the rights, benefits, and resources of an established Fijian citizen. It strengthens the definition of Fijian identity. It ensures citizenship carries meaningful national and social cohesion. It provides clear, unambiguous rules for birthright for citizenship. It reduces legal disputes over citizenship. It reinforces integrity of the Fijian citizenship register. It strengthens sovereign authority over national ID, borders, and citizenship.

The proposed amendment will ensure citizenship is tied to a genuine connection to Fiji, protected established citizens, and strengthen the rule of law, national ID, and the operational integrity of immigration control. Under Bill of Rights, Chapter 2, some key provisions impacting immigration work. Under Section 9 on the Rights to Personal Liberty, under Section 21, Freedom of Movement, under Section 26, the Rights to Administrative Justice, the application in migration context, particularly at the border, that creates operational challenges to us. The Immigration Act provides lawful mechanism to regulate these rights. Under Section 13, Refusal of Entry, Section 16 on Detention, Section 37 on Removal, and Section 50 on Deportation. Officers must make immediate decisions while ensuring legality, fairness, and accountability. Greater constitutional clarity is needed in these areas that will provide guidance on the application of the Immigration Act. On executive authority and delegation, effective migration control depends on the clear exercise of executive authority, support the structure chain of leadership, oversight, and delegation. At the national level, the minister provides policy direction and political oversight for immigration and border management.

The permanent secretary is established under the constitution, served as the chief administrative officer of the ministry, responsible for implementation of government policies, oversight of departmental performance and staff management, and ensures all functions are carried out lawfully and in accordance with the constitution. The director of immigration manages day-to-day operations and enforcement, including strategic coordination across ports, compliance functions, and reporting to the permanent secretary. The deputy director of immigration supports the director, providing operational leadership, supporting of senior officers, and acting as the second-in-command in decision-making, particularly in high-risk, urgent cases.

Immigration officers exercise powers through lawful delegation, particularly at the front line, to ensure timely and decisive action at the bottom of it. We want to cover some of the areas we can say is working today. The ministry notes that the current constitution and the legal framework provides strong protection of fundamental rights that ensures all individuals are treated fairly and in accordance to law. It provides a clear and consistent citizenship framework that supports verification, naturalization, and registration process. It aligns with the international standard, reflecting Fiji's commitment under conventions such as the UN Refugee Convention, Trafficking Persons Protocols, and AKO Travel Documents Standards. It recognizes rules of law and accountability. These strengths provide a solid foundation for governance, border management, and upholding the rights of citizens and non-citizens alike.

Areas that require strengthening. While the framework is generally strong, operations normally experience several areas that need reinforcement.

One, the balance between rights and border control. Sections relating to personal liberty, movement, and equality, e.g. Section 9, 21, and 26, create operational tension at the border, particularly when applied to non-citizens. There is a need for clear constitutional recognition that will assist us at the border for national security and the lawful exercise of our sovereign function. Immigration decisions, including refusal of entry or removal, are sovereign functions, not a privilege. Non-citizens do not whole inherit constitutional rights to enter or remain in Fiji outside the law. Explicit constitutional recognition will reduce judiciary uncertainty and support officers in making lawful, defensible, and timely decisions.

On detention and removal powers, current provision under Section 16,17 of the Immigration Act requires greater clarity to distinguish administrative detention from criminal detention. To ensure immigration detention is clearly an administrative sovereign function and not a criminal penalty. Prevention of claims of arbitrary detention, safeguarding the ministry from legal challenges.

Efficient and lawful removal of prohibited immigrants will strengthen our border integrity. Such clarity will support both operational effectiveness and compliance with human rights standards. On administration efficiency, immigration decisions frequently require urgency. That includes immediate refusal at the border on high-risk persons. Rapid, risk-based assessment at the port of entry. The constitutional and legislative framework must provide flexibility for officers to act decisively while maintaining fairness.

Procedural safeguards and accountability. On decision-making authority, clarity on the role and delegation of authority, including the Permanent Secretary, Director and Deputy Director, and delegated officers is critical to ensure consistency in operational decisions across all ports and offices. It will strengthen accountability for high-risk or high-profile cases. It improves confidence among officers and the public in the integrity of lawful decisions. On overall note, strengthening of these areas will protect national security and border integrity. It will support timely, lawful and transparent operational decisions, maintaining the balance between fundamental rights and the sovereign authority of the State. It will ensure that Fiji's immigration framework is both rights-respecting and operationally enabled. Constitutional gaps under sovereign authority over immigration. A key issue identified is the absence of explicit constitutional recognition that immigration control is a core sovereign function of the State. So, the current position, immigration authority is exercised by implication, not expressly recognized in the Constitution. Courts frequently apply a right-based analysis when reviewing immigration matters. Sovereign authority over borders, entry and removal is not clearly articulated, creating ambiguity in decision-making.

Some implications. This constitutional silence has significantly affected the operational and legal effectiveness of our functions. Due to legal uncertainty, it makes immigration decisions more challenging in court, creating risk of inconsistency in ruling. It affects our operational in terms of our hesitation. Officers may delay critical enforcement action due to unclear legal authority. Immigration environment of over-reliance on human rights interpretation. Courts may prioritize individual rights over sovereign authority, undermining the effectiveness of our border security and enforcement. Some proposed constitutional clarifications to strengthen Fiji's immigration governance and operational effectiveness. The Constitution, we may request to be explicit that provides the State a sovereign authority to regulate its border. Immigration control includes clear authority over entry, stay, residence, detention and removal of non-citizens. We also request clarity on non-citizens that do not hold an inherent constitutional right to enter or remain in the country. We also seek clarity on immigration control over our constitutional function, not merely on administrative or discretionary process. We also seek clarity on immigration decision to drive sovereign authority, not welfare or humanitarian. We also seek clarity on detention and removal of non-citizens as an administrative action, not a criminal punishment. We also seek clarity on courts. Court system should review immigration matters as an exercise of sovereign authority, rather than primarily through a right-based lens. On the right to personal liberty under Section 9, the current issue at the moment, we have limitations on the ability to detain non-citizens for operational purposes.

Recommendations.

We need explicit recognition on immigration detention as a lawful administration action and not a criminal one. Permits detention for legitimate purpose should include verification of ID and citizenship, prevention of abscondment and the protection of national security and border integrity. This ensures officers can act decisively while respecting constitutional safeguards.

Rights of detaining a person under Section 13, the current issue at the moment, there is no formal distinction existing between criminal detention and immigration detention, creating ambiguity. Recommendations introduce a separate classification for immigration detention, clarifying its administrative nature. Request to provide operational flexibility at ports of entry and border checkpoints to manage high-risk and non-compliant persons.

On access to courts under Section 15, the current issue at the moment, judicial access may delay urgent operational decisions. Some recommendations that will enable immigration post-decision judicial review for immigration enforcement action to move forward. Request to disallow stay order as part of a judicial review proceedings. Currently, we've got cases on review that comes with stay order and they are prohibited immigration. So, the stay order is limiting us from exercising sovereign functions. This will balance efficiency and accountability. On search and seizure under Section 16, issue at the moment, general constitutional provision on search and seizure may conflict with border control powers.

Some recommendations there. Recognition of border exceptions for search and seizures. Permits warrantless search for persons, goods and documents at ports of entry under clearly defined legal authority. This provides practical tools for border enforcement while remaining constitutionally sound. Under freedom of movement, Section 31, movement of people on entry, stay and removal, including constitutional provisions. Under Chapter 2, Section 31, [5] [8]. Some recommendations and the rewarding of that section. Every person who is not a citizen and is unlawful has no right to remain in the country. Or has any right to challenge the minister responsible for immigration decisions under the prescribed law.

At the moment, the minister's decision has been challenged. Limiting us from exercising and the provision of our role. Under Chapter 2, also on Section 31[5] [B]. Some recommendation and suggestion for judiciary to observe the minister responsible for immigration decision as final. And cannot be challenged in any court of law in Fiji. Chapter 2, Section 21[6]. And additional to the list under that section, under G, we recommend and suggest to provide for the removal from Fiji of a person who is not a citizen of Fiji in compliance with the Interpol notice. Or a formulation through diplomatic channels on a person required for criminal investigation from the country of the person citizenship. Some issues;

1. Misaligned with immigration authority.

The current provisions are respected and do not fully recognize the operational authority of immigration to control entry, stay and removal. Our act, when it challenges, they go to the area of the constitutions that have some cover on human rights that limit us from exercising our function. Restrictive delegation, it limits us on the powers that are given to us under the act. Some recommendations sir, affirm state authority to refuse entry, regulate stay and deport non-citizen who are under the additional recommendations. Allow delegation of powers beyond the minister including PS, Director and Deputy director and the front offices. It will clearly define national security and encompasses border integrity, transnational organized crime, trafficking person, immigration fraud and document forgery. This ensures constitutional clarity and operational flexibility. Under trafficking, labor and criminal networks under section 10, 11, 19 and 20, some recommendations Sir- request strengthening of constitutional and legislative provisions to ensure protective enforcement against traffickers and criminal networks. Support intelligent led operations, prevent exploitation of victims, protects vulnerable population while remaining a sovereign authority at the border.

Under immigration tribunal, section 102, some recommendations sir – it can establish a constitutional basis for an immigration tribunal to handle appeals against immigration decisions, review of deportation and removal orders and oversight of detention and administrative actions. Sir, the recommendation and suggestion for establishment of immigration tribunal. This will improve transparency, accountability and procedural fairness while maintaining operational efficiency.

Some key recommendations under sovereign authority and enforcement. Under sovereignty authority, the state possesses sovereign authority to regulate the entry, stay, reside, detention and removal of non-citizen. It also covers immigration control as a core function of the state and not merely an administrative task. For rights of non-citizens, non-citizens do not hold an inherent constitutional right to enter or remain in the country unlawfully. To enter, reside and to stay are entirely subject to law. National security and border integrity is paramount.

On the Bill of Rights applications, fundamental rights apply subject to lawful limitations in our immigration context. Particularly for national security, public order, border protection and the rights should act as a safeguard, not as a source of immigration burden. Under enforcement powers, the state may lawfully refuse entry, detain, remove or deport a non-citizen in accordance to the law. Immigration detention and removal are administrative actions and not criminal punishment. Some of our international obligations. Immigration powers shall be exercised with respect for international treaties and conventions. To name a few, the UN Refugee Convention, UN Protocol on Transnational Organized Crime, TIP, the ILO Labor Mobility Convention and the ILO.

On the movement of people, meaning entry, stay and removal. The movement of people into, within or out of Fiji is a core exercise of sovereign authority and a critical function of the Ministry of Immigration. Current constitutional provisions provide a framework, but they require explicit clarity to support operational efficiency and legal certainty.

Current constitutional provisions, sir some of the recommendation and suggestion and request for clarity be put forward for the committee's consideration. Immigration needs clarity on enforcement powers. While we are performing our functions under the Act, we've been challenged on higher power from the constitution. And I'm sure some have resorted to that level to undermine our immigration act, or take advantage of as a source that they can stay, prolong the decision. Immigration requests that the powers is demarcated, solid for the Ministry of Immigration to make decisive decision in terms of stay, in terms of residence, in terms of removal.

In conclusion, sir, the Ministry strongly supports a constitutional framework that is clear, practical and operationally enabled, ensuring that immigration functions are effectively encrypted in law while upholding fundamental rights. Such a framework must be clear and legally demarcated for enforcement purposes. And we have any legal... This only holds for the border security and enforcement.

Some key benefits of constitutional clarity to us, to the Ministry, give us legal clarity, give us operational effectiveness, provides consistency and accountability, enhance the national preparedness, strengthen our border security and enforcement. The Ministry remains steadfast in its commitment to a constitutional framework that strengthens good governance across our functions, by enabling immigration authority with clearly some recommendations and suggestions, and as we have highlighted, we stay ready and available to provide further clarification. Vinaka Vakalevu Sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu. Your submission have been held and thought-provoking. We have two lawyers here. We have had some cases in relation to prohibited immigrants. And we understand where you are coming from. Regarding the state provisions and what you said about prohibiting the state, challenging the decision of the minister or the immigration officer for deportation. So, we understand where you are coming from and the need to include some provisions in the constitution which covers the immigration department. It's a tough job. I understand that. Everywhere. Had to deal with some of the cases of illegal immigrants in the Solomon Islands. And it's everywhere. I don't know whether we have a lot of refugees here. Had a number of refugees in the Solomon Islands who challenged the decision to be not classified as refugees. And it's a tough job. In any event, we thank you very much for the submission that we have heard. We request that we be provided with a soft copy. If it could be sent to an email which Lia will give you, they can then distribute it to the commissioners. Distribute the submission to the commissioners. Lia is the girl name. She will give you the email address to which your submission can be sent. If there is any other submission you want to add, you can do so. We are open to that. This is our constitution we are looking at and we need to deal with it properly. Having said that, I see that my fellow commissioners have been noting down some letters. And I will now open the floor to them to seek clarification from you and your offices. Thank you very much. That was a very enlightening presentation.

Mr. Beg: It was good to hear what's happening in our border control. I think you're right. There is a wider holistic framework that you mentioned. How they function. I looked at chapter 6 in the public service. The military services, police and correctional services are very defined in their functions. But I hear today that there is a very defined function that's happening in the border. But it also involves all the different departments. But I also hear your voice about how entrenched the constitution finds a way to give leverage to those entering the country somewhere. So, I hear that voice ringing quite loudly. I respect the work and performance of our women and men in the border control. It's a difficult thing. And it's been some of the cases that have been reported. So, I guess the question is that you're saying you want some amendments. Where do you see these amendments appearing in the constitution? I think that's a valid point. I threw it up because I feel that the Bill of Rights is protecting the human condition. If someone can seek asylum, it's going to be under the international convention on human rights. That's another point. So, I just ask the question, where do you see that? I don't mind you asking. Where do you see that in the constitution? Where do you think that should be placed?

PS Immigration: Vinaka Valevu Sir. My team is ready to provide some clarification. I will take your questions. Thank you, Chair. I would like to report some of the areas. Fiji is a signatory to UNHCR, where we have to receive asylum seekers. So, when they come at the border, they look for an immigration officer. And get an asylum seeker. And from there, because we are a signatory, we start to accommodate. They have to go through the documentation process with UNHCR. And for UNHCR to give us some form of documents and reporting. And for Fiji immigration to provide permitting for them to stay. During the process of their case. But that's for asylum seekers, who are a signatory. But for some of the amendments we mentioned, that we want to put forward Sir.

Chapter 1 on citizenship. I think that word is becoming... Section 5. Section 5, yes. We don't want to... It's a bit of a sensitive word that everybody is discussing. We from us, because we look after citizenship, Fiji nationals. The way that... Section 5, Section 5. Number 3. We are hoping to put some rewarding on that one. It's a bit open and unclear. Because on the constitution it says... sub section 3, Apparently it says, it reads... Citizenship of Fiji shall only be acquired by birth. Registration or naturalization. So, we got a bit of a challenge when it says by birth. It opens the area... If a child is born in Fiji, neither of the parents are citizens. They resort to this way. So, we suggest if you can read... Citizenship of Fiji shall only be acquired by birth. Registration or naturalization. Either of the parents is a citizen.

Mr. Valenitabua: Provided.....

PS Immigration: Yes provided....

Mr. Valenitabua: If One of the parents is a citizen.

PS Immigration: it will take away the openness. People are using it.

Mr. Kohli: I'm just interested to know... First of all, I acknowledge the difficulty you've faced. I've done some immigration training. I'm aware of it. What you are asking here is for clarity. Because sometimes you have to make a spot on decision. Unfortunately, the constitution cannot lay out all those rules. Otherwise, you are a constitutional persona. In New Zealand, they provide it in immigration. All provisions are there. For your interest, New Zealand does not even have a constitution. They don't have a constitution. But everything is provided. So much so, that if a person is taken in... Here you are saying that Bill of Rights is inhibiting the provision. It's inhibiting it to some extent. You are trying to balance the rights of the individual as to your protection of the border and the country. This is a challenge faced by most countries. But what happens is that... For your information, in New Zealand if a person is detained, questioned, and if the minister says, here you go. The decision is there. You have official information that you have a right to obtain information from immigration as to why he was detained. Over here, we say we protect the whistleblower. We can't tell you who has told you that... But here, in New Zealand, they are asking. They are asking to provide this information. I want the person to be named? Unless it's top secret. They will tell you it was on this particular day. We were dealing and that person went by the radar. And therefore, this is what has happened. So, you see that it's more difficult in New Zealand to deal with it. The other issue is that, you see, under Section 9, the right of personal liberty for purpose of preventing the unlawful entry of a person into Fiji or of effecting the expulsion, extradition or other lawful removal of the person from Fiji. Right? Over here. So, basically it says, a person must not be deprived of personal liberty except for the purpose of preventing unlawful entry of the person into Fiji or of effecting the expulsion, extradition or other lawful removal of the person from Fiji. So, if you are doing it for those purposes, you are entitled to do so. But, you cannot give, if you can't just give a discretion as to, I've decided to remove you and therefore it's lawful because it becomes lawful. You have to justify why you're removing. And, every person has got a right. Every person has got the right to know why am I being removed. And if you leave it to the decision of one single person like the minister, and suppose the minister, government changes, minister doesn't like something. There's no, my decision is final. You can't appeal. Where does it go? So, when you make a decision like this, it's very similar to a decision made by a police officer to detain you, to deprive your freedom, detain you, put you in the cell for 48 hours and put you in court. They are also doing a function similar to yours. But then people are given a right when they come to court to question the decision. So, I acknowledge the difficulty. But what I'm saying to you is that, I think, I totally agree with you, totally agree with you, you require clarity. If you go to some of the jurisdictions, very, very clear, A is this, B is this, C is this, they tick the boxes. Have I done all of those? Goes to tribunal, tribunal says they have taken into consideration the decision is right, goes to court, the court says yes, they have taken into consideration the material facts, they come and say that they have taken into consideration relevant matters, they have not taken into consideration irrelevant matters, and therefore we are quite happy with the decision, we should go. But the process is different. My worry is that Fiji is a friendly country. We are open to tourism. Yes. Yes, so, you know, we want to, not to be seen as a place where you go is very difficult. But on the same token, you have your issues, which I agree with, and I think, this even was more challenging before, we have some help from Australia and New Zealand now, but still the challenge is there. I would request you to get this legislated. Not in the constitution, but in the Immigration Act, all those areas you have to have clarity, clarity. That is, it. I think from us we totally agree.

Mr. Valenitabua: Any comments from Immigration.

PS Immigration: I think from us we totally agree. Thank you, sir. Because of the challenges, we suggest for the tribunal, to take over that pathway, if its refused, but minister they were challenges, both the tribunal, I think it happens in Australia, they go through a tribunal, a pathway, we receive your comments sir.

Mr. Kohli: We are also taking into consideration what you have said, and see how we can have certain sections that don't contradict the your operations. There is no contradiction. For example, those are things I don't know.

Immigration Officer: Just in addition to what our permanent secretary has mentioned, you were asking Mr. Beg, where do you see this amendment in the constitution? Sir, section 21, subsection 5, there is that word lawfully. So, what happens when the person becomes an unlawful person in the country? And that is where the challenges we are facing in the ministry, because we have been challenged of saying you are a prohibited immigrant, and they have all this, you know how the court works, it just prolongs the process. So ideally, if you are unlawful in the country, we would like you to leave. That is where we come in as keeping the sovereignty of our country, and being able to say you are being unlawfully in country, so you need to go, or you need to depart, or you need to leave. So maybe that is the section, the lawful. When you become unlawful in the country, that is probably where the sovereignty steps in and say because you have breached the conditions of being here, therefore you are no longer entitled to be in Fiji. You were asking where we could probably have a more explicit in wording when you are unlawfully in Fiji, then you need to, that person is no longer warranted in country. And that is, as Mr. Kohli said, there are ticks in the box, so we would have all the ticks maybe legislated, but in terms of where it would be our constitutional right to remove a person, that is what I am saying. That is what we are trying probably, what our PS is saying, is that we would have that constitutional right to remove someone who is unlawful in the country and have ticked all the boxes as Mr. Kholi has mentioned.

Mr. Kohli: Look at 21, subsection 3. Every citizen and every other person lawfully in Fiji has a right to move freely throughout Fiji and the right to leave Fiji. Right, if you are lawfully here. He doesn't say if you are unlawfully here, then you don't have the right to leave Fiji too because you can be arrested and put in the prison. He says every citizen and every other person lawfully in Fiji has the right to move freely. If you are unlawfully in Fiji you don't have the right to move freely because immigration or police can arrest you. And the right to leave Fiji, if you are unlawfully in Fiji you can't leave Fiji because you can be arrested in immigration. There can be a deportation order because you are unlawful. So, when I am saying constitutional rights, you can't write everything. Now what is that? Can I just ask you a question? You are talking about somebody who is unlawfully in Fiji.

Immigration Officer: I think sir that the key word there would be who is not a citizen.

Mr. Kohli: Every citizen. Section 5. Every person who is not a citizen so I think it contradicts probably to section 3 because every other person. So, that's where we are coming in. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: That's what I was trying to say because I hear you loud and clear. I myself am jumping from one section to another. This is supposed to be the supreme law and guidance and then we have the Immigration Act. So that's kind of almost continuing some of the items or like Madam said it pushes that person to tick all the boxes and then we find another loophole here. I hear you loud and clear and that's one of the things we've been discussing as commissioners but I am really grateful. I know it's hard work out there and I wouldn't trade my place with yours but I hear you and I think it's a very strong point. Thank you.

PS Immigration: And I can say I think one of the suggestions from us is well on the on the Interpol notice. We've been questioned from time to time that we become sensitive to people that are from the Interpol notice. Because there is a probability that there is a notice.

Mr. Kohli: Your point is completely I totally agree with you but I don't want to disagree with you because if there is already an order from our court or from Interpol then they should not use a country which is relaxed more relaxed or uses the court procedure to get at us. So I'm in agreement with that. I'll note that down to see how that can be addressed. You have another leave of say?

Mr. Valenitabua: The citizenship section 5 of section 3 in relation to citizenship in Fiji that we acquired by the birth for the use of lawyers and the court. Maybe like we have said we have to add there to provide one of the parents with a citizenship. We do not have anyone a husband and wife to pry in. None of them is a citizen and then the child is born there and then they become citizens. And then that is how we can remedy that. In relation to the right of movement the freedom of movement and residence section 21. I concur with the lady in relation to section 5. Every person who is not a citizen but is locally in Fiji has the right not to be expelled. Locally not to be expelled. Now that might be a contradiction in rights. Bureaucrats might be but it depends on how that can be argued. If someone is here unlocally then he shouldn't be there or she shouldn't be there. She shouldn't be there. Unfortunately, like you said sometimes it works against the immigration department. People are here unlocally but judiciary are there to take action and there is an application for stay and then things just take off from there. I know that extradition or removing people out of the country is difficult but you want or the immigration department wants clarity in operation and clarity in decision making and you wish to have this constitutional text which I know you have to be filling expressly not in writing. I understand that is your main your main submission today. And we have to look at that. We have to look at the immigration department so the immigration act we look at the citizens act the passport act, now when a foreigner comes into the country this is a question do you entertain them entering the country and then initiating the visa?

PS Immigration: Currently Fiji have some form of visa agreements with other countries that have visa exemptions visa on a regular basis. When they come in at the border because of that arrangement with the country they are staying on a regular basis.

Immigration Officer: Good afternoon chair reference to section 21 subsection 7 the problem that we face in terms of the Interpol that has been shared to the foreign the fact is the definition of national security because of this Interpol notice having pinched national security that is why they have been brought to the attention of the court and we have been issued a stay order from them till now can we have explicit definition clearly for immigration purposes in terms of the removal process determining that some POI having pinched national security-

Mr. Kohli: Can I just add if a person is not a citizen and is unlawful in Fiji cant the minister....

Immigration officer: Sorry I can't hear you.

Mr. Kohli: Sorry, mic is a bit far away. If I may add, even for section 5, it says every person is lawfully in Fiji who is not a citizen but is lawful in Fiji has the right not to be expelled or removed from Fiji except pursuant to an order of court or the decision of the minister.

Immigration Officer: Sir, this is was the decision of the minister. Under section 13 sub section 2G immigration Act when the minister receives any official information from any diplomatic channel from any other information that is reliable minister may deem this person as a prohibited immigrants and any decision cannot be challenge in any other courtroom in the jurisdiction of fiji

Mr. Kohli: Right so he has a right.

Immigration Officer: But still we are being challenged in the court of law.

Mr. Kohli: Yes because the immigration act saying that but the constitution provides the right to be heard.

Immigration Officer: Right to be heard and the clear definition of National Security was challenged.

PS Immigration: If I may add given to section 5, it says every person who is not a citizen but is lawful in Fiji has the right not be expelled from Fiji except. That condition gave some leverage. Except court order. So, they resort to the court to say stay order and all this. Because the order of the court or the decision of the minister. So, the precedents are who takes. Both the minister and the court are given a mandate to expel them.

Mr. Gounder: So, what were the conditions of the challenge that you mentioned? You mentioned two conditions for the challenge.

Immigration Officer: They are challenging the removal order, firstly. And secondly, in classification of national security. We've classified the person, the impeached national security, due to the fact of the criminal elements that was defined from the country that the person had committed offences to.

Mr. Beg: So, the dilemma you're faced with is your action says this and then...

Immigration Officer: Constitution says this.

Mr. Beg: when the posture and the framework is in tension with each other, right? So therefore, you're in this position, a very tangible position.

PS Immigration: Yeah.

Mr. Beg: I hear you.

PS Immigration: Just for an example, when he says through an order of the court or the minister. So, when the court order comes in, we push back.

Even though the minister has given the decision. So, we tend to be in a authority who is correct in that area.

Mr. Kohli: I think the dilemma is this. If the court makes an order for expulsion, only other thing you can do is take it on a bill. Unless it says somewhere, there's no further appeal. But if a minister makes a decision, they can still go to the court. By way of judiciary.

PS Immigration: Because it's oath.

Mr. Kohli: Because it's the oath, that's right, exactly.

PS Immigration: The order that gives us... Yes.

Mr. Kohli: So, the safer thing to do would probably be to run to the court and get an order to expel that person. Because if the court makes an order, they don't have the hurdle of minister meeting and then going to court to override them.

Mr. Beg: Mr. Kholi, I see these are legal frameworks. But what I hear from the group in front of us is a clear direction. We shouldn't be going through layers. And then they end up sitting back there. And their work is diluted. So that's the kind of song that I'm hearing. Or the music that's come in. That's resonating. Why do we have to go through all these different layers? This is what the constitution and the acts are putting them through.

PS Immigration: Because when we exercise the act, we go to the constitution. It says they have the rights to be heard. And limits are there.

Mr. Kohli: Exactly the same thing is suffered by every citizen in a police arrest. The only difference I sympathize with you is that police are living here. Those people are living here. When you make a decision at that time, on the spur of the moment, what shall we do? Especially those people who have been wanted by another jurisdiction. You're not supposed to be caught by me. You know they have committed a crime. They are required there. Your hands are tied. So, I appreciate that. The rest of it, like if you look at police powers too, everything is there. The limitations are there.

PS Immigration: One of the suggestions we want to put forward was on section 21.5. Section 21.5 doesn't have any A and B in it. So, we are thinking just for clarity on our part. And for us to read, like for section 5 it reads, non-citizen, for every person who is not a citizen, but lawfully. So, under 5A we want to put every person who is not a citizen and is unlawful, has no right to remain in the country or has any legal rights to challenge the minister's decision.

Mr. Kohli: I see.

PS Immigration: And the B that we want to add is judiciary to observe the minister's responsibility of immigration. That is the final decision.

Mr. Kohli: Will have to look at it again. I sympathize.

Mr. Valenitabua: National Security. Look at the case Metuisela Rainima vs Commander RFMF. Or, I'm a bit mixed up here, because I did this case in 2004. But it's in that case. Let me say it very nicely. This is the commonality between the two cases. It explains, that Interpol, which I believe is the explains what the national security is. It defines the national security. It's about the CRW case and explains the threat to National Security.

Immigration Officer: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the information. Just a question across the forum. Is there any possibility to have an independent immigration court, due to the fact that the cases that we deal with, when it's been challenged, it takes years. And the people are still remaining here. And the criminal level is way too high for the sovereignty of Fiji. Why we're requesting this for consideration is because of the fact of we're trying to prioritize national security and protect the integrity of our border. Is there any possibility?

Mr. Valenitabua: The Constitution has got the Supreme Court, which is the highest court of the land, and then the Court of Appeal, then the High Court, and the Magistrates Court, and other courts and tribunals. So that is in the Constitution. Establishment of an immigration court might have to be taken through the judiciary. Look at the Permanent Secretary for Justice and discuss with her.

Mr. Kohli: The other thing is that you've got a very good point, I must say that. People use the system for delaying, and it's costing our country money in maintaining and looking after. What we need to do is probably have a legislation where, say, if a minister makes a decision regarding certain issues, it cannot be challenged. If that becomes a law, that's the end of the matter. A minister's discretion cannot be challenged. Or, basically, you could have a system that it can only appeal to, not right up to the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court, but only goes to the High Court, and the High Court's decision is final. That's it. And then what the Chair has said, perhaps you take it up with Attorney General and say, give priority to these cases, and maybe have a judge who specializes in that area. Sometimes, you know, it's a specialized area, and somebody does that all the time, you point his finger at them. What to do?

Immigration Officer: Yes sir, currently, let me just enlighten the forum. In some instance, when a judicial decision is called upon to be made for this particular case, so we issue a surveillance operation, and a huge amount of money goes, like it's $50,000 to $60,000 to deploy our intelligence on the ground, because of this person of interest. And when the day of decision comes, and we receive there is another day of the decision that will be deliberated from court. So that is where we stand, and why we are requesting.

Mr. Beg: Is that budgetary restraints that incurred, and if you can't do it, then the person will suffer?

PS Immigration: Just a point of interest, when we go to Section 44, Section 44, the Bill of Rights, on Enforcement, I'm just, sorry, Section 44, Bill of Rights, under Subsection 7, is there a possibility we can resort to that section in terms of some of the limitations we have?

Mr. Kohli: That can be mentioned to the Attorney General. That who can sue, and who can be sued, and therefore, whenever we do a decision that's fit, it's in the interest of the State, the proceedings of the court, we can ask them to do it consistently. So, that's what it is. That is it.

PS Immigration: Just a point of interest, when we go to Section 44, Section 44, the Bill of Rights, on Enforcement, I'm just, sorry, Section 44, Bill of Rights, under Subsection 7, is there a possibility we can resort to that section in terms of some of the limitations we have?

Mr. Beg: So, in your submissions, would it be difficult to ask, if you can put samples of precedence's that relate to this, because I think that would be more believable. If you don't mind, Chair. I know.

Mr. Valenitabua: I know, because I usually apply for duties in Fiji. As for applying for a stay , I understand. It's a private practice.

Mr. Beg: You don't have to worry about the Chair. It's a commission.

PS Immigration: We will provide some cases or scenarios, for example?

Mr. Valenitabua: Do you have any other comments? I think we have come to the end of our consultation for today. And thank you very much for your submission. I do not envy you. I do not envy you, the job you do. Particularly when you have people who are unlawfully here. There's been an order for deportation. And then the court is... An order is sought from the court to stop the deportation. So, we have heard your submissions. As read out by the peers. We request again that the submission be sent by email. So that we can print them out and consider them during our deliberations.

After the consultations. We are collecting all submissions. And then we will deal with them after the consultations. Once again, thank you very much for your time, for coming up here. And we'll just move on from here and try to review this constitution.

PS Immigration: Thank you. On behalf of the Minister and staff of the Ministry of Immigration, we want to say thank you for the opportunity.

----------End of Session [09/04/2026]----------

Ministry of Education (MOE)

Ministry of Education

Time: 2.30pm-5.20pm

Mr. Fatiaki: Thank you. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I'm just going through a few housekeeping rules. Just in front of you there are mics, so you'll just tap on the right side of the mic to turn it on, and the same to turn it off. All mics can be on at one time, so please, after you've spoken, you can just tap it off. Also, when you speak, if you can also introduce yourselves, not just your name. This is for transcribing purposes, because this is being recorded as well. I'll now hand over to Chair, and also, I'll just bring across the attendance sheet. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: The Permanent Secretary for Education and officers from the Ministry of Education. It is a pleasure meeting you here this afternoon. Greetings to you all, and Ni sa bula vinaka. As chairperson of the Constitution Review Commission, I thank you kindly for accepting our invitation to appear before the CRC today. The commissioners of the CRC welcome you warmly. The CRC is an independent commission tasked with reviewing the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji. The commission was established, and my fellow commissioners and I were appointed by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, in accordance with a decision made by Cabinet on the 6th of March, 2026, and pursuant to Section 2 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act, 1946. That is the legal basis of the forum which we now call the Constitution Review Commission. By way of introduction, there are seven of us commissioners. I am the chairman. With the name tags, you can notice that on my right is Mr. Conway Beg. Next to him is Miss Mere Nailatikau. My immediate left is Labasa lawyer Mr. Ami Kohli. Next to him is USP Dr. Neelesh Gounder. And on the far left is FNU's professor, Unaisi Baba. And the next and closest to me is Dr. John Fatiaki.

As a commission, we are tasked to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into the 2013 Constitution. We are asked to consult widely with the people of Fiji while undertaking that task.

The resulting objective is the preparation of a draft amended constitution based on submissions from the people of Fiji which reflects the people's values, their needs, and their aspirations. At the end of our commission, we are required to submit our findings and recommendations derived from the submissions made to us by the people of Fiji to His Excellency the President. In accordance with our term of reference, your commissioners have embarked on and are undertaking a nationwide consultation process.

In the process, members of the public, I am invited to make written and oral submissions to the CRC. You are here today to present such submissions before us, your commissioners. We are interested in and wish to hear submissions from the people of Fiji about their views on the 2013 Constitution. We look forward to hearing submissions on what provisions you want to be preserved or maintained in the amended Constitution for Fiji, what provisions you want to be changed or amended, what your aspirations are for an amended Constitution for Fiji.

We need to consult widely with our people. We rely on the media to provide wide coverage of the consultations and we thank them for their attendance so far. And the contents of the submissions made during the consultations, we are engaging closely with the media in the belief that they play a vital role in publicity, in promoting transparency, and in fostering open dialogue among the people of Fiji regarding how they wish to be governed under the Constitution.

The CRC encourages everyone to express their views openly, with civility, and with mutual respect, in support of meaningful and constructive dialogue. Vinaka Vakalevu, with those opening remarks, we now hand over to you to present your submissions this afternoon. Thank you.

PS Education: Vinaka Vakalevu, Chair. Thank you again, Commissioners, Members, familiar faces around the table and in the room. We are very pleased to be here and we appreciate the invitation that has been sent to us. As you know, the Ministry is quite a big Ministry. We have a number of facets and departments that are involved in our working Ministry. However, we have been represented by our team, maybe just for knowing purposes, so that you are aware of who is in the team. May I request the team members just to quickly introduce themselves to the Commissioners and the Chair, please? We will start with our Deputy Secretary on my far left.

Mr. Bure: Good evening, Chair and Members of the Commissioners. My name is Timoci Bure, Deputy Permanent Secretary, Primary and Secondary in the Ministry of Education.

Mr. Metui: Good evening, Mr. Chair and Commissioners, My name is Metui, looking after planning, policy and research for the Ministry. Vinaka Vakalevu.

Ms. Lewaqai: A very good afternoon, Mr. Chair and Commission Members. I'm Ana Lewaqai, and I'm the Head of the Executive Support Unit for the Ministry of Education.

Mr. Toribau: Good evening, Mr. Chair and Commission Members. I am Isoa Toribau, from Mokani Bau Tailevu, Vasu Dravulevu, Kadavu. And I'm the Director of TVET. Vinaka Vakalevu.

PS Education: Members, thank you again. Good evening, Chair.

PS Education: My name is Naveen Raj. I'm the Permanent Secretary for Education. Chair and Members, maybe a clarity for the objective purpose of this discussion. Me and the team, we have been meeting and discussing things that surrounds Ministry of Education that we would like to have sort of aligned into the review and the work that you are doing. Like I mentioned, the ministry is a very large ministry that holds a lot of operational matters. Looking after more than, say, 50% of the civil service, we're looking at around 13,500 to 14,000 staff that are involved, teaching and non-teaching, and with various departments that is looking after the teachers and the children of the country. So, we thought for this forum, we would start with a few discussions that we would like things to be embedded into the review for your consideration. And maybe for clarity purpose, if you have further questions, then we can continue. As for a formal, proper submission, if I can respectfully ask the Chair and your members if you can give us time to formally submit a written document for the sake of this discussion. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: That is fine, Permanent Secretary.

PS Education: Vinaka Vakalevu.

Mr. Valenitabua: We can hear you this afternoon. All right. And then finish off your written submissions and then email it to our staff here. We'll give you the email address. Great. Thank you.

PS Education: Vinaka Vakalevu. Maybe to begin with, so we had a number of it. What is our time allocation? Yeah, so we have a number of it.I would like to summaries it just for this purpose of our first discussion, and then maybe we can continue from here.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may.

PS Education: Yes, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may, you are the only ministry which is giving these submissions this afternoon. So, we earmark you for one hour and 30 minutes, but we can go on to two hours if you want.

PS Education: Thank you, Chair. Much appreciated. Chair, as you can see, as they have introduced, we have three Deputy Secretaries in our ministry, and a very important one is Deputy Secretary, Primary, Secondary, which is Timoci Bure. He is basically in charge or looks after the school, the around 13,000 or so teachers and around about a quarter million of students. So, with those in charge in schools and students, as you can see, there are many pertaining issues. So, it sorts of falls under the Deputy Secretary, Primary, Secondary, Mr. Timoci Bure. So, he is here with us.

Maybe we'll start with maybe our first issue that we would like to discuss is around schooling and teaching and learning within the ministry where the schools and students are involved. Chair, firstly, let me begin with saying the right to educate, the right of education, if I can commence with that first. Chair, particularly I would like to touch on the provision where there is no provision for homeschooling, digital access, inclusive education, learning and management system within our teaching and learning and limited access in rural and maritime areas, just to begin our discussion.

With our 800 or 600 plus and around 200 secondary schools and 600 plus primary schools, around 900 schools in totality, majority of our schools, they fall under maritime and rural sort of areas or divisions where accessibility is a challenge. How we can sort of consolidate, how we can improve our constitution so that we can cater for all these students and all these teachers in this geographical location. That's the first area of discussion that I would like to commence with. Team you are welcome to add on. Deputy Secretary, maybe you can take a lead and then we can pitch in with our comments.

Mr. Bure: Thank you, Chair. I think one of the major challenges that we face with the current constitution is that we saw that there was a wide gap between the legal framework and the government initiatives and program that is run by the ministry. And that has been an occurring problem ever since the constitution came into place. We saw the need to align our programs and initiatives to the 2013 constitution because we did not see the legal framework and the programs and initiatives talking to each other. I can give a few examples. One is the provision of free education grant which comes under the right to education. That is a program by the government. But in the context of the schools in Fiji, we saw the challenge in trying to fulfill this right because there were schools, there were communities that were disadvantagely located to access those education services. A good number of our early childhood students are unable to access early childhood education because the provision for that is not available in the system. This was the reason why the previous government established what we call infant schools because they saw the struggles parents were facing to send their five-year-old, six-year-old to the closest primary school which required them to stay as boarding students.

And this included early childhood education students. So, for us in the ministry, this is quite challenging. Quite challenging because at this age, these children are supposed to be with their parents. But unfortunately, they have to be moved to the closest education institution or early childhood education center. In many cases, they had to travel across seas. A few in Vanua Levu, a few in Bua Macuata, a few in Yasawa. So that was the challenge. I'm just giving one example. So, when you talk about the right to education, I know the constitution says that where government is unable to provide the resources and the means to, it must explain itself. The constitution says that. But we are talking, we are experiencing a situation which is not going to give us satisfaction if it's going to be just an explanation. Because those children need to go to school. So, what we actually did was establish infant schools, ECE year one, year two, year three, and four, in some small community and villages. That is not clearly reflected in the constitution. And now we are going to the idea of homeschooling. Because there are some communities where we just can't establish a school. Because it would be uneconomical to establish a school in those contexts. So probably

I'm talking about the worst scenarios in the system. That's what I wish to bring to the commissioners here this afternoon.

A couple of other programs in the system, but probably the team can contribute, and I will later speak about this. There was one of the reasons too why we could not review the constitution with the last government, because it was, we saw the challenge that was there, the gaps in the education act and the constitution. So, we put in place policies just as a form of quick address to these issues, one of which I've just shared.

PS Education: Vinaka, DSPS. Just to add on to it, with this challenge that was highlighted by our deputy secretary, the other angle that I'm looking at is also the special trained teachers for these students, which is another part of an item of discussion where we'll be discussing on teacher gaps around the country. For students who are challenged, SIE [special inclusive education], there's a need for special trained teachers to educate these children. Normal teachers that go through the system of primary and secondary education do not have that specific skill, the specific skills to address those challenges. So, somehow in our constitution, if we can give equal opportunity and accessibility in terms of education, in terms of the training, in terms of the allocation, then only we'll be able to educate all the children around the country. For instance, students who are autistically challenged, say disability, and there's a special training that comes with it, a special teacher that is able to educate such students.

Mr. Toribau: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to add on to what my two colleagues have shared this afternoon in light of the right to education. This is very important for our students to have. Speaking on this topic, the right to education, accessibility for our students to access to education in all around our divisions, despite geographical challenges that we are facing. In one of our gaps that we already discussed is the need to have LMS, the learning management system.

You're all aware of the learning management system. It's a tool that is now, it's a contemporary tool that is widely used overseas in mostly the secondary schools. And in overseas, in Fiji, we are trying to promote that because right now there's a huge disparity in what we are providing to the students in the classroom against the students' expectations. When they come to the classroom, they do not have that interest, that enthusiasm is no longer there because the disparity of learning is quite a very huge gap. That is why the need for LMS, the need for e-learning is very important. I know that most of you agree to this. If you look at our students, our children at home, the first thing when they come home, they will look for gadgets. So therefore, there's a great need for us to focus, to be futuristic, provide this platform for our students so that they are shared equally with this platform when we talk about a right to education.

So, there are a few challenges that come with it. One is connectivity, but we are happy that we have Elon Musk here with us who can provide us with a very good connectivity, but we don't have the funding. And we also have, we need to have the devices so that our students can use the devices. We have gadgets at home, we can use that. They are available with parents. We can also use that. So, the ministry is moving towards that to secure some platforms, some LMS, so that we can be advanced in our learning. One of the challenges is connectivity, yes, but we are trying to get the solution to all those areas, especially the maritime and also the interior, the interior of Naitasiri. Those are some priorities. And we're so happy that our PS is there in support towards that initiative. So that's something that I think that the Constitution should address, looking to address in terms of sharing that right to education, equity, accessibility, so that every student, despite of different area locations, they should be shared with equal distribution of services, education services to them. Yeah, that's all that I wanted to share. Vinaka.

PS Education: Vinaka Director, so basically in conclusion for that item, Chair, I think what we're trying to drive here is we're trying to share the importance of the funding gap for the inclusive education. Because with that inclusivity, then only will that gap, that financial gap, can be addressed through digital learning, as what Director TVET is trying to highlight, so that children and teachers, they'll have all accessibility to teaching and learning. Maybe I'll pause here, Chair, for a minute, if you have any questions for us on this item, before I move to the next item.

Mr. Valenitabua: Section 31 of the Constitution. Do you have copies of the Constitution? Section 31 of the Constitution. It deals with rights to education. Every person in Fiji has a right to early childhood education, to primary and secondary education, and further education, which I will take as tertiary. Now, that is from Section 31.1. Section 31, Subsection 1, A, B, and C. Then there are subsections which follow, Subsection 2, Subsection 3, Subsection 4, Subsection 5. Right on Subsection 5 is the matter which the deputy permanent secretary of the primary and the secondary has referred to. It says if the state claims that it does not have the resources to implement the right, it is the responsibility of the state to show that resources are not available. That state, the word state, I believe reflects the Ministry of Education.

Now, we've been looking at those provisions. Despite that provision, Section 31, which deals with the right to education, you are submitting to us this afternoon that there are challenges that are being faced by the Ministry of Education. And it is being suggested that we add provisions to the Constitution to try and resolve those challenges. Correct me if I'm wrong on that. Now, with those challenges, what are some of the solutions which the Ministry of Education sees which could be added to the Constitution as provision so that the government, that is the central government, could assist the Ministry more? Thank you

Mr. Bure: Thank you, Chair through the Permanent Secretary. Thank you, Commissioners. What we want the Constitution to do is to have some bold statement in breaking those barriers to give us the liberty as the arm of government servicing education to modify what is actually lawful to do. We can be given the liberty to do like homeschooling or infant schools, established infant schools. Because without this, what we have seen is the communities are moving to the urban areas and they are settling in informal settlements and they are contributing to overcrowding in our urban schools. So, we need the Constitution to give us the liberty to go beyond the simple explanation of why we cannot provide resources and to build smaller schools. Not the standard schools that you and I know, but we could come up with anything that could provide educational services to this small community. That is what we try to explain in this bold statement.

The liberty for the Ministry of Education may, through its available resources and capital, establish infant schools or home schoolings to this community so that we can stop that urban drift. That urban drift is really giving us another problem in the urban schools. The teacher-student ratio is very high and then with it comes all those social problems that you and I all know are contributing to our issues, national issues. Thank you chair.

Mr. Kohli: Thank you. Chair, through you, if I may just ask you, what is there in the Constitution that inhibits you or prohibits you from carrying out what you want to do now? Because the Constitution is a supreme law which is for all the people in Fiji. And if you look at Section 31, as Chairman has rightly said, every person has a right to early childhood education, primary and secondary education, and further education. Where does it limit you? How does it limit you or restrict you from carrying out maritime education, early childhood education? Where does the Constitution stop you from doing that? That's my question. Is there anything that prohibits you or limits you?

Dr. Baba: Chair, can I come in please, sir? So, through you, Chair, yes, through you to Mr. Bure. Bure, if I'm hearing you, your suggestions was touted around the Pacific in the 1960s and 70s. The early commissions tried to do that. We were searching for alternatives because things were not working. So, I'm talking about the Tragea Report in Kiribati, 74, that go to education for what in Solomon Islands, where we created area high schools. And in Fiji, the Burns Commission, 69. So what I'm trying to say is, in every decade, we have to think about alternatives because the school is not built to cater access for everyone. I want to base it like that. So, your three suggestions are, maybe I'll just repeat it because it's not in the Constitution, but it may be in your Education Act and your regulations because we haven't seen your Act either, P.S. So, one, in the 1960s and 70s, there are alternatives to what you're saying. But today's alternatives, I've heard you say, infant school, they are not there. Are you telling us, because we can't put everything in the Constitution, but what you're saying is, when you have early childhood, that's not the same as infant school. That is between five, six, or four, even four. Because the ECE educators are telling us now, start with three and four because Japan does that. So maybe in the early childhood, is that what you're saying or would you rather keep it at the Act level, Education Act, and the homeschooling? Because those are alternatives. This Constitution just serves the general. So, I'm interested that you are now talking alternatives. We don't have what you're saying. All I'm asking is, will you keep it at the Constitution level or do you want it at the Education Act level, in which case, P.S., the last time we sent the Act to the Solicitor Mr. Bure: General's office was in 2007. Is it finished?

Mr. Bure: Thank you chair, No.

Dr. Baba: So, is that where we are going to have to look at detail or are you asking us to put it here? Because here we don't have what you're saying. I maybe just clarify, that is not the same as early childhood. And I'm agreeing with you, but you are talking about 31A. B should be the alternative school, infant homeschool, which will serve all our populations. Right now, some of our children can't go to school. Yeah? You're saying that?

Mr. Bure: Yeah. Thank you. I think you read what I was thinking about. The need for infant school. Infant school is not in the Constitution and homeschooling too is not there. So, we wanted that to be in the Constitution so that it can give us the authority to confidently do this in the system. We have not had a case where a child in the island who does not access education take the government to court. We have not had that. There might be a day somebody is going to stand up and say, I'm here in my native village and I don't have education access. So that's what I'm trying to explain here. That can be in the Constitution. Infant school. Yeah. And homeschooling too.

Dr. Baba: Yeah, and homeschooling too. And alternatives. Yeah. And TVET is not there, and LNL is not there. Were you going to talk about that?

PS Education: We were going to talk about it. Okay.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Chair. Chair. Yes, please. Just so I understand what we're talking about, and I presume I will defer to whatever you have in the way of a written submission, because we're dealing with a Constitution that we've been asked to amend, and the area that we've been talking about over the last 15 or so minutes is Section 31 of the Bill of Rights, subsections 1 to 5. They're the areas that allude to education. Now, just in respect of what was spoken there, I think we want to understand that this is the supreme law, and by that I mean it's not your Education Act and it's not all the regulations that may govern how you actually run the Department of Education.

These are aspirational things, and I think it's important that we don't get too carried away with inserting subcategories, because I think if you said early childhood education, that does not exclude infant schools. It doesn't exclude homeschooling. It doesn't exclude anything, because by definition early childhood education is early childhood education. It doesn't say it has to be in the home, in the school, in the kindergarten, the preschool. That's as I read it. I have two lawyers here who can correct me if I'm wrong, but to me that covers everything before formal education. We go to the second one. Primary and secondary has everything, and then if we say further education, that includes everything. TVET, everything else is in further education. So, everything, for the purposes of education, is covered in these three areas. You can get pedantic and name, you know, but you tell me that one of them is not covered under one of these three, I'd be interested, because otherwise we could have 15 or 20 subcategories here and then make this an unworkable document. I think you can subcategorize that in the area of your education act and look at, you know, areas like the infant school, which claims to address the issue. What I'm more interested in is what would you take out of here to solve your problem or add into here to solve your problem? And like I say, I will defer to your written submission, because you have time to put it. I think the other discussions about how you address it, I think like Professor Una's suggested, these are things that the education department and the ministry need to address, the unions need to address, in terms of how you operate it. I'm not sure that the Constitution is the area to be addressing it in that detail.

The second thing I want to emphasize, and I want to ask a question about, particularly because we are talking about the big generic things that we should apply to all of us under the rights, and that is Section 3, which is conversational and contemporary iTaukei and Fiji Hindi languages shall be taught as compulsory subjects in all primary schools. Now, that's been in the Constitution as of 2013. What I'm interested in is have you, the education ministry and department, applied that across the board, ensured that that is enshrined as per the Constitution into your education system, and if so, can you assure me that all the primary school kids are now speaking the other races' language? Because this is critical. It was put here for a very specific purpose. I'm not convinced that this has been achieved, and I think when we start talking about aspirational things, for me this is fundamental, and that's not a political statement. This is fundamental to how we want our country to go. It was put in 2013. It was seen as important enough.

What I'm more interested in is what has the Ministry of Education done in ensuring that the mandated requirement that all primary school kids, which means by the time they reach class 6, they should all be speaking. All the Fijian students should be speaking Hindi. All the Hindi students should be speaking Fijian, and the Rotuman's and the others can be speaking one or the other. I ask that earnestly because I think that we need to make sure that the things that are mandated here are addressed. I mean, when I say addressed, I mean in total because this is the supreme law, and if we're looking at these in a half-hearted measure, then I would be disappointed. These are just some general thoughts. Thank you.

PS Education: Thank you. Very pertinent, and I concur with you. The Ministry of Education still has that challenge where all our children are conversed with all these languages that is being mentioned here in the Constitution, and it is a challenge that we face. Maybe DSPS, our Deputy Secretary, will further comment to it.

The challenge in hand in schools right now is the number of students who would like to pursue further education in these areas. As we can see, when they proceed their education from primary to secondary, this language, this iTaukei or Hindi subject areas, these specific subject areas and focus drops out as they move towards the latter upper and the latter in the secondary school. That's why the number is so small when it comes to national exams, students taking iTaukei examinations, so Hindi examinations for that matter. DSPS, maybe you would like to comment further on that. Thank you.

Mr. Bure: Yes, we are actually implementing that requirement of the Constitution, but then again, we are also faced with certain challenges, one of which is the composition of teachers in schools is unable to address that need because we cannot, you know, there are schools that, for example, majority of the teachers are Indonesians or iTaukei. In some schools, all teachers are iTaukei. And to teach students conversational Hindi, you need our Indo- teachers to be part of the teaching staff of the school. So that's where the challenge is, but we cannot actually dictate to the teachers where they should take their teaching posts. That is the liberty of the teacher's choice. So, in some schools where you have a good mixture of the two ethnic races, you have this going on very, very well. But when you move to the schools where the composition of teachers is majority Indo teachers or majority iTaukei, we are unable to teach both, one of these conversations. So, that is something that we have already discussed with the Honorable Minister. It's in our Denarau Deck that we have to deal with this from the recruitment of teachers to the teacher training institution. We need to have a well-balanced ethnic intake from the teacher training institutions. That is the challenge that we are facing with this conversational language. If I could share that with you all. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Deputy, yes?

Dr. Gounder: Yeah, thank you. Thank you, Chair. Thank you, PS and your team for your presentation. This afternoon, listening to your points, I take the point about homeschooling and the infant schooling. If we are talking about the right to education, then access or lack of access will be an issue when it comes to the right to education. But listening to the other points, I find a lot of those operational issues rather than those issues that we can deal with at the constitutional level. And they may be best suited for Education Act or more to deal with operations at the ministry level. For example, you mentioned lack of special trained teachers, special inclusive education. That is more an issue that you can deal by liaising with educational institutions. E-learning as well, for example. Those are more operational issues rather than issues that we can deal with at the constitutional level. You also talked about funding gap. Once again, that is more of a financial challenge rather than a constitutional provision. But having said that, do you think having something in the constitution will then provide you access to funding? Because it is an issue across all ministries. Thank you.

PS Education: Thank you, Doctor. Yes, I think that was the idea here, is our emphasis on these areas. Perhaps if it's more pronounced in the constitution, that will sort of help us, help the Ministry of Education to deliver these educational constitutional aspects in operational delivery. And that is the angle we were trying to discuss on this particular point. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: PS through you Chair, Again, thank you. I won't harp on this, but I'll go back to my comment earlier about compulsory primary school. Remember, we're talking conversational. We're not talking about further studies and people who want to go and study it, and the access to it. We're talking about conversational, spoken Hindi, and iTaukei in primary school. Now, with all due respect, we have not specified in the constitution the need to teach math's or English, that it become compulsory.

We have specified one thing only. I appreciate there are challenges, but I don't think there's a single school in Fiji that does not teach math's or English. And if you can succeed to teach math's and English in every single school in Fiji, then I have no doubt that since 2013, and that's 13 years ago, you should have succumbed and overcome the challenges of implementing the one thing, the one subject, that the constitution saw fit to demand that you do. And anything short of that, personally, I think is an excuse, not a challenge. Thank you.

Mr. Toribau: Thank you, Dr. Fatiaki. That one thing is a big thing for us. Maddy has already alluded to that, having to provide the teachers to be there, especially those who are speaking Hindi, those who are speaking iTaukei If you go around the whole of Lau's, hardly you cannot see any Indian, Indo-Fijian teacher there. It's a big challenge for us. However, we are working on some solutions. Right now, we are working on trying to increase location allowance so that these teachers can be compelled to go there. We are working on some solutions to get them there. We are not neglecting this. This is the supreme law, as mentioned by Honorable Chair. But we are not neglecting. We are trying our best. The Ministry of Education, your Ministry of Education, is trying our best to address all that is articulated here in our constitution.

Ms. Nailatikau: If I may, Chair. Apologies, Mr. Bure. I just wanted to extend my appreciation to PS, DS, and officials for your contributions here today. I have two questions, because I think you've outlined some operational issues that have constitutional implications. My first question is related to subsection 4 of section 31 about how the state may direct any educational institution to teach subjects pertaining to health, civic education, and issues of national interest, and any educational institution must comply with any such directions made by the state. Mr. Toribau, you were talking about curriculum relevance and how there is a need for learning management systems so that curriculums meet the expectations or the realities or context of students.

And I'm wondering about whether there's been an example of this subsection being operationalized, where government directs educational institutions to teach a certain subject, and how you feel about the appropriateness or impact of that, given, I would assume, you would know better than me, there are curriculum development protocols in place and there are processes for this. I would just be interested to hear you expand on whether that has happened and what is the extent or the appropriate extent of the government's intervention in this subsection.

PS Education: Very good question, and it's very pertinent in terms of curriculum relevance. If I can side track a little, I think for me, from behalf of the Ministry of Education, the curriculum relevance is very critical. We need to teach students a curriculum that is relevant, that is more sustainable, that is recognized, that has quality education, and that meets all those educational requirements. For instance, things have revolved. And in our curriculum, we have missed out on very two important aspects or issues that is evolving around the education. One is climate change, and the other one is AI. Maybe when the curriculum that was designed that we are following did not embed those factors into it, but now it has.

So, I'm wondering, going back to Chair, your question, and Dr. Fatiaki I think you have very clearly outlined we must demarcate the operational matter from what's supposed to be enshrined in the Constitution, but we're just trying to drive our operational issues so that how we can capture it into the Constitution. That's, I think, the idea here. So, on that curriculum, I think these two, how we can include it so that it becomes a focus in the Constitution, because climate change and AI is something to stay now. It's our future. It's something that we can, we have consequences of it right now. We need to embed it into our curriculum moving ahead, and that's how the students will be future-ready. If not, we'll be left behind. And before I'll ask my team to further comment on that, the other clarity I have, Dr. Fatiaki and Chair, is on this Constitution, on Section 31, on 1A, B, and C, do we have, is it specifically if the Constitution can mention about special education, students of need, because these are very special areas. It's not covering only primary or secondary. These are specific set of education required for specific set of children. That would be my proposition in this stage.

Mr. Bure: Mr. Chair, just to let you know that we've been asked to probably put it in education act or policy. We cannot do that, but from experience, there's always a risk with putting this in policy because of the changes in government. The power of the minister in the Constitution is very, very clear. If there's a political minister, the minister comes in, he's not happy with a particular policy, that policy is going to be shelved. I'm talking from experience. When it's going to be shelved, it's going to be quite difficult for us to actually achieve excess equity for those disadvantaged, vulnerable members of our community. That's the reason why we're asking for it to be included in the Constitution so that even if there's a change of government, this will not be changed.

There is a commitment by the ministry to see to the fulfillment of provision of education to even the most vulnerable, disadvantaged members of our community. That's all that we are asking here. If I can share that experience with the last government, the then prime minister visited this school and saw a teacher and a parent pulling the child on the beach. The teacher was trying to pull the child, he's an infant, to the boat to take him across. The child was crying for the parents. He doesn't want to go because he was not supposed to leave his parents.

That's when they asked, what is happening here? He said, this is early childhood children and infant children going to school to the next island on the boat. They'll stay there for one week and they'll have to come back on the weekend. That is taught in the Constitution, this infant school that I'm talking about. This is a special area, special teaching skills, special training for these teachers. Part of their training is well-being, care, it's more towards the care component. It's not simple teaching and learning like we know in high schools and primary schools. That's the reason why we're trying to get it across to our commissioners because we have seen with their eyes the reality on the ground. In some cases, these children, that impression, that schooling impression they get at that age, they don't like schooling. I hope you can understand the point of view we are coming from. It's okay with policy, but then policy is policy. It can be changed overnight. That's what I want to share. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may, P.S., Mr. Toribau and Deputy P.S., Now, from what I am gathering from the submissions you have been making this afternoon, it is your request or your submission to the commission to extend the right in Section 31.1. It says, A, early childhood, the right to early childhood education, the right to primary and secondary education, and the right to further education. I have heard that infant school is not included in any of those. Is that right?

PS Education: Yes?

Mr. Valenitabua: And I have also heard that homeschool is not included in any of those. So, you would like that to be included as a constitutional provision. Under Section 31.1.

PS Education: Yes, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: And in Subsection 2, the state must take reasonable measures within its available resources to achieve the progressive realization of the right to free early childhood, which is covered in A, to primary education, to secondary and further education, and including that early childhood and infant school so that it can be precise under the Constitution. Whatever government comes in, whatever minister comes in, they can't change the policy because it is a constitutional matter. Am I understanding you correctly?

PS Education: Yes, Chair. And perhaps the emphasis on SIE, special inclusive education.

Mr. Valenitabua: This is in relation to special schools.

PS Education: Correct. All two states. Okay.

Mr. Valenitabua: SIE is?

PS Education: Special inclusive education.

Mr. Valenitabua: So that is what you are trying to get as, I understand it. We are hearing challenges of these teachers and so forth. So, Subsection 31.1 is to include those two categories and two for the state to provide finance, teachers, and schools and whatever else.

Mr. Toribau: Yes. Through you, Chair. Thank you. In addition to that, Chair and members of the Commission, if possible, the recognition of skills pathways. I know that further education mentioned by Dr. Fatiaki is covered there. For me, as the Director-Director, there should be special emphasis on this. Why am I saying this? Close to 80% of our employment in Fiji are TVET. TVET-related. 80% of employment in Fiji. If you can add on that too, because education is broadly defined there. Explicitly, but non-explicitly, TVET is not mentioned there. If that can be added too. I know 90% of the people here can agree with me.

Dr. Baba: Thank you. Chair, can I please address this? So, at every level, maybe it's good to, I want to support that. The reason is this. In the whole Pacific, maybe in the whole of Oceania, only FNU is the dual sector. That means it recognizes further education, but TVET is the path that the Vualiku Program is funding, not further education. The reason is this. Those of us who have studied the literature, all of you have, this is the problem in the Pacific. It's probably our colonization. So, when people see it further, they only fund high ed. That's how people think. The literature that I alluded to earlier is comprehensive on this, that no one really cares for TVET. And I'm afraid I have to say, my friend, it's really only FNU in the Pacific that worries about it. Now, for us, those of us on the Commission, personally for me Isoa, it is only something I've realized now after 40 years of this area that I've worked in and I've written a lot. But TVET for me is just something that's happened in the last 10 years in my head, just because I've come here. So, I would like to agree with you. If you don't separate the two, most of the world is only doing high ed. But the jobs of the majority of our population, that's why we go community TVET. That's why we're setting up a center in Savusavu. Because the majority of our people do not have, cannot meet, the high education further ed requirement by law. But in having said this, in supporting this in particular, because this is my area, I'm wondering if you, kindly, MOE, peers in your team, if I can ask through my chair, at the moment you are doing your education commission. Make sure the alternatives go there so that we can put it here. See, every decade in the Pacific we've done commissions. I've alluded to the Burns, the Tragea in Kiribati, the Bugotu education for Solomons. Every decade we do that. Out of USP we've influenced the countries. But you need to make sure your commission also support what you're saying. But I'd like to think, not only TVET, but triple L. Because triple L is also covered in the Delors report. We have ratified that. We haven't really seen it here. The problem, I think, is people that write this maybe don't know that. That some of us are struggling. We can't develop the bulk of our people if this is how we write things. Because when we fight for the dollar, it doesn't say it doesn't get the dollar. So, for TVET, but triple L as well. You know, the 1996 UNESCO Delors. UNESCO sir your chair. Your PS is UNESCO chair. Thank you. Thank you through you, chair. That's what I'd like to add. Connected to your education commission. Connected to your act. And why is the act taking long, may I ask? It's from 2007 when we put it in. Sorry. It's a constitutional matter or not? Sorry. Timoci, thank you. Thank you, chair.

PS Education: Yes, thank you. Maybe that was the second thing we would like to discuss, which the director has alluded to. Regarding the dual sector concept, and I think the vice chancellor correctly have identified and expressed on it. How we're seeking clarification, how you and your team chair in terms of this constitution can give a demarcation to it where TVET is emphasized. This is a major skill gap in the market we have at the moment. We train these special students and graduates. The reality is they leave us. They leave us for better opportunities. And that's a huge gap in this area. And how we as ministry of education can emphasize in this area in terms of the development of TVET education not only from high ed perspective but it's a dual sector like the vice chancellor is alluding to. On TVET education sides of things.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may ask back sorry about this. I'm not answering your question. I'm asking you a question again. In your education act does it refer to TVET?

Mr. Toribau: No sir. current 1969 does not explicitly explain anything about TVET.

PS Education: We're still reviewing it and it will be formalized I think maybe it's not the right forum for me to say right now until it's formalized and it goes through my minister. But for my point that I was trying to highlight is the demarcation of it perhaps in this constitution in terms of education.

Mr. Valenitabua: Legally it should have been demarcated first before it goes into the act. Because the act has to agree with the constitution. So, if it is being included in the act and it's not in the constitution under which head does it come under? We've got section 31 early childhood. No, it doesn't go there. TVET doesn't go there. And primary and secondary education maybe like in technical schools RKS they had from 3 to 4, 5 tech drawing and engineering and then you have further education. We used to have what was the technical school at Nasinu? Now the technical school at Nasinu. Anyway, further education. Now that might or might not include TVET. Does it include USP? Treasury? So, if we are to have that in the act then it might as well be included in the constitution so that you have the constitutional basis for the law in the education act. And that is what your request is.

In other words, it's SIE, triple L and infant schooling and homeschool all to be included in there. Now believe you me, at our first discussion in relation to section 31, we were thinking that A, B and C are sufficient to cover all these branches or disciplines in education. Now we are hearing differently so we'll have a think about it.

Mr. Kohli: Can I just say something? PS, I think you quite rightly picked up that under the education section 31 doesn't address the disabled people, whereas under section 30, 42, the rights of persons with disabilities doesn't say about education but talks about accessibility, et cetera. Now as far as what you are trying to say to include in a constitution, sometimes can backfire with greater respect to people. Reason being when you spell everything out in the constitution which can only be changed by two-third majority, you will then have to wait. The other way of thinking is this, everybody has a right to education. That's it. They don't say anything else. Everybody has a right to education. If you put down things here you limit it. For example, you put down education. How do you define further education? PhD., old doctor, double masters. So, some places they leave it to the education department and the government depending on the resources, where to go. So here if you just put down right to education, another story. You can do whatever you like to do. So, this is another interpretation here. New Zealand has accepted that right to education.

Dr. Gounder: Through you Chair. On the flip side I think the timing is good since you are reviewing the education act. Based on the discussions you can go back and see how you can include things in the education act. Some of the challenges you are facing. Reviewing the education act was one of the feedbacks that we got during the NDP consultations as well. So, I think the timing is good. May I just get chair please.

Dr. Baba: May I just add chair please, I would assume that you will finish your commission before you finish the act. Am I assuming right? Make sure the commission is finished. So, you are asking us to cover it. Usually, we finish the commission then we do the education act but I don't know how we are doing. The act is out for 20 years almost. So that needs to hurry up too. Thank you. Sorry Timoci Bure you are looking at me hard now. Chair. Sorry chair. Chair through you.

Mr. Beg: Chair Through You. Members of the ministry of education. Thank you for the enlightening presentation. A couple of things that kind of bothered me earlier was one of the commissioners said it was operational that early childhood education out in the most remote areas in the axis. My question is I think the solutions for that is you are looking outwards rather than inwards. Because off the top of my head I can think of so many solutions right now that can work. So that is an operational one. I kind of know where that is going and happy to contribute to that. The most important one was I think Dr. Unaisi raise about the Act. Is your frustration with completing the act is contradicting with what is in the constitution. I am trying to understand that. You are saying operational needs in one breath and in the other breath you are highlighting some matters with the constitution which relates back to elected government and the powers of the ministers. In that triangle there is a collision of particles that are causing this uproar and frustration I hear. I am trying to understand that. Correct me if I am wrong. That framework is what I am hearing. I shed a tear because when Deputy PS mentioned that the child was handed over on a boat that should never happen like that. I kind of shed a tear because that thing should never happen. I just wanted some clarity.

PS Education: Thank you, commissioner, for that important question. I believe we would like to see everything synergize. If we are aligned to the constitution that the act is aligned to the constitution. However, maybe the challenge is to align it for us. Things that we think of that needs to be in place needs to be properly aligned. That is what we are looking into. There is a key member amongst us who is driving this education bill and has been going on to forums and trying to represent the ministry. Metui is here, maybe you would like to enlighten a few points that you highlighted from our act that we are trying to align to the constitution. I understand it still hasn't been finalized but I will leave it to your comments. Metui, if you have something to share.

Mr. Metui: Thank you chair Through you chair, I would like to add to the question posed on the status of our education bill. Basically, our bill is now being handled by the social committee on law, justice and human rights. We have had a series of consultations at the national level and as we speak, we are currently finalizing the bill. Basically, the timeline was supposed to be April but then there were unforeseen circumstances. So, what I can say is I guess this year they will table in parliament. They will table the bill in parliament. The question posed on the TVET, yes, it's included in the bill.

The TVET is primarily addressed to the establishment and regulation of education institutions and the national curriculum. While the bill is comprehensive, TVET provinces are integrated into several key areas rather than being confined to a single TVET section. Just to answer the question posed on the inclusion of TVET in our current education Bill. Thank you.

Dr. Baba: Can I just clarify. I would like to clarify what Commissioner Conway was saying because Timoci and I were from 2006. Timoci, I think we gave the act for review in 2007. This constitution is written in 2013. This is the problem. Maybe it's good for us to know that we have begun the work on the act when we were in 2007. I forget what the world was like. Some of the concerns you are saying now, some of the people my age that may have written the constitution don't know how some of these are the concerns of these ages. The homeschooling and all those in it because we don't have climate change either, so I want to clarify to Timoci you have the exact thing because you were acting Ps. It's being 20 years now, now this constitution only came in 2013 I'm worrying about your commission which finishes soon put some alternatives there. Otherwise, I can't say what I should really say, but the players in the education market PS have not always had education qualification. They messed us up quite a bit. I'm talking about those that represent government in our institutions, in our education ministries and things. But moving forward, we are worrying about those two documents. Metui, you worked with this gentleman here on national planning. The education comm, the CRC we are doing, the constitution must tangle at all times. They have to talk to each other. Chair, maybe you can talk about this. How do you make sure that those of us that sit and make these things, make sure we are aligning? Otherwise, your problems will not be solved. Whether it's here or there in the commission. I've read some drafts of other commissions, not yours. They need to talk together. I thought I'd bring the ears. It started a long time ago. I forget what we were worrying about in those days with the education act.

Mr. Valenitabua: PS if I may, now we have the bills. Metui now we have the Bill Education Bill I presume and, in that bill, is included TVET. What about early childhood education?

Mr. Metui: It also is included in the draft bill.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, the way to go about it in my view is section 31C. Section 31 early Childhood Education, Primary and Secondary education Further education you have to define what is infant school. You have to define what is home school, you have to define what is TVET. Design it so you are in accordance with section 31. So that way you are covered under constitutional provisions. So, if someone turn around and asked, hey TVET is included in constitution, No TVET is defined as further education as in section 31 [c] of the constitution. Do you get my point. So, for the infant school, it would be hook on early childhood education. So primary and secondary education is hooked on to this one here from class 1 to class 8 from 3 -7. So, you define what is the discipline in the bill and attached it to section 31q. Once you do that than the state is obliged to section 1 [2] to provide for all this. You can go and talk about sit with PS and your minister and the other 'policy department. It may be included in the constitution but as we are saying you know define it in the Bill so that its attached to the constitution.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair if I may through you. My comments in respect of some of what I'm hearing, and it's obvious to me that some of the issues are that the Constitution aspires to demand that you provide these things, and I've heard that there are limitations in resources and things like that, which you are obligated supposedly to fulfill, but are unable to fulfill by virtue of lack of resources, etc., etc., lack of teachers, whatever. How do you feel about withdrawing that requirement, going the other way, and saying, well, don't force us to do it, because you don't have the resources to provide it, rather than, you know, find resources, because again, that's an operational matter, but how do you feel about withdrawing the requirement that you must provide it? Because what I'm hearing is that that seems to be a fundamental problem that you're facing at an operational level, is the fact that the Constitution says you must, by definition, provide these, but what you allude to as challenges are there, and you are either unable or unsourced to provide it. My question then is, if that is the case, maybe you should ask us to amend the Constitution to remove the requirement that you should or the state should have to provide these things. Just a thought, again, you're going to have time to write a proper written submission and put some thought into it. I'm sorry, I bring it back to this, because you see there, we've got five subsections here. These are the areas that we're going to have to address. You either add to it, you subtract from it, which is what I suggested you might consider doing, or you change it. These five areas. Okay, so you can, those are the three general things that we have in terms of amending a constitution. We're not writing a new one. Okay, we're taking this one, and we've been asked to amend it. And thank you.

Mr. Kohli: Chair, through you, first of all, I must say that when I first said that why don't you just have education, the idea came from Dr. John Fatiaki. I was against it; he was for it. In the very beginning, he said, why don't you remove all that and just put education? And now when you think about it, what he's now trying to say is a new advantage. You do according to what you have, your resources. Rather than if you note it down, unable to comply, then you're falling fall of the law, falling fall of the Constitution. So just put it. He's saying, remove childhood, primary, secondary, just say education. So, whatever you can afford to do, you can do it. I think that's, if I hear you clearly, absolutely.

PS Education: Yeah, thank you. Dr. Fatiaki, your perception is very unique, in a way. Yeah, and I appreciate it. Yeah, because perhaps coming into this forum, we were thinking of maybe having it so that it's more pronounced, sort of, you know, give emphasis in the constitutional level, so that sort of states obligation to fully resource it. So perhaps we were looking at that angle. But it comes with a challenge, like from the discussion we have. But we certainly will consider the way you have looked at it. And maybe I can get back with the team when we provide our submission.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may suggest, my comments are usually very pragmatic, which means what I'm saying is what is actually happening, right? You're asking for things, you want to do these things, you've been told you have to do it by the Constitution, and you are unable to. Yeah, it comes from that. It's not, you know, sort of an extremely unique idea. But thank you for that perception.

Mr. Beg: Thank you. Chair, through you. I kind of beg to differ a little on that, Dr. John. I mean, you can see our commissioners, we all have different opinions. But you've got to be fair to the fact that our system needs to evolve and develop. So, you can't sort of not ignore that completely. If we can't deliver that service, we don't do it. But somehow, I kind of think we're a developing nation. The Constitution isn't like the architecture of state, you know, it's a framework of moving forward. I think we still need to consider things like that. Well, there may be something in the provisions of the Constitution that tends to dial us up in that direction. I mean, that's my strong thoughts about that. Sorry about that. Yes, thank you.

Mr. Toribau: Through you, Chair, I do agree to both of you. I have something that I wanted to share regarding the LMS. I'm championing LMS. it's part of our E-learning in our ministry which comes under my supervision. So, I'm championing LMS. I'm just raising this. While we have this, we still have all these challenges. I think that because the problem I can see is the methodology. We do not have proper methods. And trying to come up with the most appropriate solutions to address the problem. And we have all these problems. The methodology that I'm talking about here, we're still talking about. But the current era, the current now, the situation now or here now in the world, they are moving towards digitalization. And digitalization is not in the Constitution. It is not there. Maybe something that should be included. Because under digitalization comes LMS. Learning Management System will address teacher shortages. And those in the outskirts and those in the interior will be able to reach, will be reached through LMS. Provided we have all these platforms. We invite Elon Musk to come and talk to us. And he can give us that connectivity. Maybe it's a change of mindset. We have the solution. We can tackle that. But in the 13 years, we've had 10 Minister of Education. I've been 13 years in the Ministry of Education with Mr. Bure. Maybe seven PS's. The seventh is a good number. Number seven. I'm saying there's a solution to every, not there by accident. Maybe we go back to the context on which that clause was developed or derived. Or maybe it was some political influence to that. I'm also a part-time architect, Mr. Conway. I know you 20 years ago. So that is my, what I wanted to share in light of all that we just discussed now. We push through learning management system. That will solve everything. My children at home, they have gadgets. And I take them to all the textbooks that we have in our website. They have tablets. Yes. So, if anything happened to the ministry, and you know, just even the discontinuity of learning in the last few days, my children, they were still learning. Because of the digital that we have. So that I think that something, digital technologies or digital technology or digital education is something should be included there. Because digital is futuristic. Digital talks about artificial intelligence. And every other, any related elements to it comes under digitalization. That's what I wanted to share. I just want to say.

Mr. Bure: I'm a little bit worried about Dr. Fatiaki's suggestion. I'll be very honest with you. Because infant education and early childhood education, this is the foundation of any education system. It's the foundation. If you look at the funding formula with the free education grant, it tells a lot about the mindset of this government, last government, this ministry. If I tell you how much is given to early childhood education children, it's $50 per term. $50 per term. Primary school is $156 per child per term. Secondary school is around $300, $400 per child per term. That's the perception of this station on infant education and early childhood education. But you go talk to any educator, like Una, like PS, like some of you, which is the most critical level in the system, they will tell you invest in early childhood education heavily. That's why I'm driving this, so that we can change our perception and our mindset on the importance of infant education and early childhood education. Because this ministry and this government and the last government have been trying to fix this literacy and numeracy standards, which is a global indicator of the quality of education that we have. It has never been able to fix it properly. Because of the amount of investment and commitment we give to our infant levels in the system. We're trying to fix the literacy and numeracy at primary and secondary. Una will tell you until the cow's return. We'll fix it at ECE and early childhood education. That's why I'm pushing for this to come out in the Constitution, so that we can have a commitment to infant education. That's why I'm saying. I'm very, very worried about Dr. Fatiaki's comment. Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Dr. Fatiaki.

Dr. Baba: Sorry, Chair. May I just add, because the reporters are here, just last week I was on record saying this, and to PS, maybe you should say this more often. A lot of people don't know that Timoci Bure, a lot of people don't know that between 0 and 8, the IQ of everybody is made, almost. The basic infrastructure of IQ, intellect. This is why in Japan, that's where all the money goes. Sorry, I take back what I said earlier, but we do need educators to lead the Ministry of Education at every level of us. Because what Timoci saying, Timoci and I argue about all the time for the last 30 years. That's how we've been. Because he's been in the ministry, Timoci. But from the top of everybody, we should talk about that. This is why I was interviewed last week. I was telling mothers; every child needs to eat properly. Basic to intelligence, 0 to 8. So, Japan puts all its money between 0 to 5. There is a reason. But in this country, we start with here, 'Sa bera'. There is absolutely nothing we can do when your IQ is made, it's made. We can put painted white, painted red. But the basics of intelligence, like Elon Musk, is made early. Actually, it starts here. That's why mothers should play music to their stomach when they're pregnant. But let's have these conversations elsewhere, maybe Timoci Bure. We need to fight it out in the other seminar. And you must come, USP. You must come. Thank you, Chair of the Commission. Thank you, PS.

Mr. Valenitabua: Is there any other issue which the Ministry of Education wishes to raise? We have heard you. We understand where you're coming from.

Mr. Toribau: Just one more thing, and last, thank you. I would like to go back to Madam Nailatikau. I felt so bad when I directed your question to Pierce. Well, that's the protocol. PS first, and then the loose one comes to us. On relevance, curriculum relevance, I just spoke on LMS, digitalization. So, speaking on curriculum relevance and whatever the intent of the state we fall with. For example, you were quoting from 31.4, which is about citizen education. We are already now implementing citizen education. And also, we are already now implementing digital technology. We have already started, because of the relevance, the relevancy in education.

What is there out there in the market, we have to abide by it. We have to comply to it, because the job readiness will be there once our graduates come out from secondary and vocational centers. And also, we are benchmarking with Finland, with Australia, New Zealand, and Singapore. We have some of the models already implemented. For example, in our TVET section, we're having this dual approach, just like FNU. When student finishes Form 6, they will walk away with FSLC and Certificate II in Carpentry Engineering, or Certificate II in Automotive. That is a dual approach. The same approach from FNU. We have a little FNU at the secondary level. The next thing we will ask some funding from them, and they will support us in the years to come. So, speaking on curriculum levels, we are there. We pick up things that are there, and we have curriculum workgroups, and then we talk to each other, and we bring it to the curriculum. Yes. So, that's all that I want to say. Thank you for the time, for giving me the time, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Did you want to say something?

Dr. Fatiaki: I just wanted to extend a vote of thanks to you, PS, and your team, DS, and the others. Thank you for your candid discussions this afternoon. We hope that we were able to share some thoughts, and I think this is very useful. I think that a lot of what you brought to us today would be better addressed at an operational level, in terms of your Education Act. I've tried to focus on the constitution part of it, because obviously that's our mandate, but we do appreciate the discussion, and we thank you most sincerely for the work that you do. It's through you, Chair.

Mr. Kohli: You've been talking about digitalization, education. I totally agree with that. We have to move along with AI, but the Chair and I belong to old school, you see. What I want to know is this, and nobody's addressed this, the evil of social media and the effect on the children, in schools, et cetera. Australia, for example, has banned under 16. Sweden, which is a very, what do you call, liberal country, under 13. Do you have any stance on that? We should put in the constitution that under 13 should not be allowed until it becomes in the constitution, or do you have an education act? Because if you look at it with the greatest of respect, if a baby is crying, mothers give the phone to the child. You know, if a child is crying, I see they're taking in the prayer, and the baby's eyes are this far from the... So, I just want to know what's your stance on it. Maybe not directly, but indirectly.

Mr. Bure: When it comes to education of the children, that's where we can boldly share our ideas. But when it comes to issues such as that, I think the Ministry of Women, Social Welfare and Children, they need to comment on that, because it's better handled by them. Unless the government wants to give us, the Department of Children, to the Ministry of Education, then total care and education of the children will be with us. We don't encourage these devices in the school right now, but it's something that is happening in most homes. So, when it comes to homes, we do our best to stay hands-off from them. It's the Ministry of Social Welfare and Children that needs to attend.

Mr. Valenitabua: I mean, at the moment, we don't have any further comments to make. If you have anything else you want to add, PS, it's open.

PS Education: Thank you, Chair. I think, just in the conclusion, I would like to thank you, Chair, and your very astute team. Personally, I believe this is the right team to review the constitution. Personally, when I read about each member that was appointed, I was overwhelmed with the experience and the diversification the team brings. And as part of Ministry of Education, we are here to look after the welfare of our children, welfare of our teachers, and we're looking forward in working in partnership with all our stakeholders. And I think with your leadership, sir, we're looking forward for a better Fiji in the near future. Vinaka Vakalevu.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu P.S, Vinaka Vakalevu, Deputy P.S. Vinaka Vakalevu lady and gentleman. It's been an exciting afternoon listening to a delegate from the Ministry of Education. As a former school teacher, I know where you stand. The difficulties faced when we have resources from government being limited. And not only a school teacher, a direct school teacher. We have heard you. I think the most important thing here is not what we write down in the constitution. It's what we will be introducing our children and our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren to in the years to come. Are we going to limit the definitions we put in the constitution? Or are we going to expand it? Now that I'm a lawyer, if we just say every person has a right to education, what education? And lawyers can play around with the word left, right, and center, up to the sky and down to the deep blue sea. So those are the things we're going to be thinking about. We can reduce it to just education, but what education? How many people are going to fight out in court in order to define this, what education is? There's formal education, there's informal education, and then we have early childhood and primary and secondary and so forth. But leave it to us. You've heard some of the comments from us or from the commissioners. We'll deal with it at the appropriate time. And thank you very much for your attendance this afternoon. We are looking forward to receiving your written submissions. The email address can be taken from one of the girls, Kesa or Lia. They're sitting there at your right, on the table at your right. Vinaka Vakalevu.

EDUCATION-2013 FIJI CRC (Una 4/4/26) Sat

[Below is a substantive, policy-oriented analysis of the 2013 Fiji Constitution's provisions on education, with concrete suggestions for improvement, written in a way that is suitable for a constitutional review, commission discussion, or reform paper]

I focus mainly on Section 31 (Right to Education), while also noting linkages to equality and non-discrimination provisions.

1. What the 2013 Constitution Currently Provides (Brief Context)

Section 31 – Right to Education provides that:

- Every person has the right to early childhood, primary, and secondary education.
- The State must take reasonable measures to ensure access.
- Education must be quality and inclusive.
- Religious instruction is protected, with freedom of belief.
- Citizens are not excluded from education on prohibited grounds.

Strengths:

- Explicit recognition of education as a justiciable right.
- Inclusion of early childhood education (progressive by regional standards).

- Emphasis on accessibility and inclusivity.

However, experience over the past decade reveals several gaps and ambiguities that constitutional reform could address.

2. Key Areas for Improvement

A. Clarify the State's Obligations (From Aspirational to Enforceable)

Current issue

The Constitution uses broad language such as "reasonable measures" without clarity on:

- minimum standards,
- timelines, or
- measurable obligations.

This can weaken enforcement and accountability.

Suggested improvement The Constitution could:

- Define minimum core obligations of the State (e.g. access, affordability, quality).
- Require progressive realisation with clear benchmarks.
- Place an explicit duty on Parliament and Government to resource education adequately.

Example reform direction:

"The State has a fundamental obligation to ensure free, accessible, acceptable, and quality basic education, and shall allocate sufficient resources to progressively realise this right."

B. Explicit Protection of Free and Compulsory Basic Education

Current issue

While education is recognised as a right, the Constitution does not clearly guarantee free and compulsory basic education at constitutional level.

In practice, families still face indirect costs (transport, materials, uniforms, digital access).

Suggested improvement

- Constitutionally guarantee free and compulsory early childhood, primary, and secondary education.
- Explicitly recognise indirect costs as barriers to access.

Why this matters

- Aligns Fiji with international human rights standards.

- Strengthens justification for public funding and judicial remedies.
- Protects children from exclusion due to poverty.

C. Stronger Protection for Equity and Marginalised Groups

Current issue

Equality provisions exist, but education-specific vulnerabilities are not well articulated.

Groups facing persistent disadvantage include:

- children with disabilities,
- rural and maritime communities,
- informal settlement residents,
- children living in poverty,
- children affected by climate displacement.

Suggested improvement The Constitution could:

- Explicitly require inclusive education systems.
- Prohibit exclusion on the basis of disability, language, location, or socio-economic status.

- Mandate reasonable accommodation and support services.

Example reform direction:

"The State must ensure inclusive education systems that accommodate diversity and provide appropriate support for learners with disabilities and other special needs."

D. Recognition of Indigenous Knowledge, Language, and Culture

Section 31 does not explicitly link education to:

- iTaukei knowledge systems,
- indigenous languages,
- cultural identity,
- or community-based learning traditions.

Suggested improvement The Constitution could affirm that education should:

- respect and promote iTaukei culture, language, and epistemologies,

- value multicultural and multilingual education,
- support community involvement in education.

Why this matters

- Strengthens cultural continuity and dignity.
- Aligns education with identity, belonging, and nation-building.
- Responds to long-standing concerns about cultural marginalisation in curricula.

E. Explicit Link Between Education and Civic Responsibility

The Constitution frames education primarily as an individual right, with limited reference to its nation-building role.

Suggested improvement Include recognition of education's role in:

- constitutional literacy,
- democratic participation,
- civic responsibility,
- respect for diversity and rule of law.

Example direction:

"Education shall promote democratic values, respect for human rights, social cohesion, and understanding of constitutional governance."

F. Lifelong Learning and Technical/Vocational Education

The emphasis is on early childhood, primary, and secondary education, with limited constitutional attention to:

- vocational education,
- adult learning,
- re-skilling and lifelong learning.

Suggested improvement

- Expand the right to include technical, vocational, and continuing education.
- Recognise education as essential to economic resilience and adaptability.

This is particularly important given:

- youth unemployment,
- changing labour markets,
- climate-related economic transitions.

G. Accountability and Remedies

Current issue

The Constitution does not clearly provide mechanisms for:

- monitoring education standards,
- addressing systemic failures,
- ensuring remedies where the right is violated.

Suggested improvement

- Require independent oversight or reporting to Parliament.

- Strengthen standing for individuals and groups to seek remedies.
- Require periodic review of education implementation.

3. Climate Change and Education (A New Constitutional Imperative)

Emerging gap The 2013 Constitution does not anticipate:

- climate displacement,
- school relocation,
- disruption to education continuity.

Suggested improvement

- Recognise the State's obligation to ensure continuity of education in the context of climate change and disasters.
- Include preparedness, digital access, and resilience.

4. Summary: Key Reform Directions

In a constitutional review, improvements to the education section could aim to:

1. Make the right to education more enforceable and less discretionary
2. Clearly guarantee free and compulsory basic education
3. Strengthen equity and inclusion, especially for vulnerable groups
4. Affirm indigenous knowledge, language, and culture
5. Link education to civic responsibility and constitutional values
6. Recognise technical, vocational, and lifelong learning
7. Build accountability and remedies
8. Address climate resilience and continuity of education

5. Consultation Question (Optional)

This may find this framing useful for public consultations:

"How should the Constitution better protect the right to education so that it is accessible, inclusive, culturally grounded, and responsive to Fiji's social, economic, and climate realities?"

Electoral Law Reform Commission (ELRC)

Electrol Commission
11.am-1.30pm

Justice Fatiaki: Today, I have a consultative session with you. Before I start, I'd like to introduce the members of the commission that I chair, the Fiji Electoral Laws Commission. On my left is Ms. Deidre Brookes from New Zealand and she's done a lot of work with electoral commissions and in fact is presently, to our benefit, is presently working with the Fiji elections office to do with municipal elections. So, I took the opportunity to drag her along screaming to this one. I said no, you don't get beyond this, you can't forget what we did and so thank you very much. The next one I want to introduce is Ms. Seini Nabou. She's a well-known person amongst us and certainly amongst the federation party officials or members. She used to be general secretary of that party and stood in elections. So, I'm the chair of course and I'm surrounded by two women which is wonderful but I'm the rose and they're the thorns. You will find that out as we progress. They all accuse me of being the thorn but actually they're the ones. Professor Narsey has given his apologies. He's presently on the road between Geelong and Melbourne where he lives and he's racing to Melbourne to attend a hospital case for an in-law's suspected brain needs brain surgery. So, he apologizes but true to form as that professor is prone to do, I noticed that he's beaten all of us already with a two-page opinion in the Fiji Times. I'm very glad that the opinion says it's entirely his, has got nothing to do with us but I think those of you who have had access to our report and I understand you received soft copies yesterday and I really would like to express our appreciation because it was an embargoed report after we finished which rather deflated our sales but we hoped against all hope that at some point in time someday somewhere the embargo would be lifted and so I'm very grateful on behalf of our members that you chair.

You're obviously chairing a much more important commission than mine because you were able to get it lifted. I understand it's lifted for the for this consultation purposes and that's fine by us as long as we get to be useful and those who've had an opportunity to skim through what we've done I think you'll appreciate that we have done quite a lot of work and I suspect that some of our work I hope will not be duplicitous with what you're going to do but it gives you a front run on this whole thing. So, thank you very much for that. I really didn't have a long speech to make. I'll hand over to my members after this and ask them to say a few words if they wish and then we're really in your hands about how you want to handle this. The fact that our report is out there we're more than happy to in fact I suspect that you will get more benefit out of asking us questions than we would sitting here and giving you a spiel about what we did and how we did it. What we did is obviously in the report how we did it and what recommendations we made all there but if you want details about certain specific things then by all means please ask us. With those few words I'll hand over to Commissioner Deidre.

Mr. Valenitabua: Judge Fatiaki, if I may. First of all, I would like to welcome you to the commission. Maybe you have done your duties your task appearing here this morning in response to our invitation is a privilege and we are honored that you're here this morning. As you know before the two ladies enlightened us or speak with us in good company, I'd like to say a few words that is that this is the commission that has been appointed by his excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji to work on a review of the 2013 constitution. We are tasked to do consultations to hear from the people of this country to collect data which we need to write a report in like you have done and to present it to his excellency after 31st of August. You might all know that we have six months to do this consultation and the review and prepare the documents to be presented to his excellency. The members are here sitting in front of you I'm sure you will know most of us but name tags are in front I will not I am in front of the table I will not introduce us individually bearing in mind that you are all experienced you know the personalities that are sitting on this side. You have said that you want to hear questions from us first of all our term of reference says that we are to hear and listen from the people of Fiji and record data. We will ask some questions but we are anticipating or we request that submissions come from your side. We welcome you we hope to have this as a very constructive session since you have been around in relation to the law reform or the law reform commission, the electoral laws reform commission and your report would be very useful to us and should be of assistance too. So, with those few words of welcome I would now pass the mic back to your group and continue from where you left off.

Ms. Brookes: So, I suppose if I kick off a little bit about the electoral system that we recommended and the associated matters so you probably have read a lot of Wadan Narcey's opinion in the paper this morning. I think just to position things we did all our consultations we come up with what we thought was going to be the best electoral system for Fiji and some associated reforms as well.

We then took a look at that stage this constitutional reform was not on the table and we didn't know if it would ever happen so what we did was we paired back our recommendations to what could we fit under the current constitution. Some of it fits reasonably comfortably and some of it I'll have to say took a little bit of creative interpretation massaging words what have you but we thought given how much the people wanted it you know that creativity might have been accepted and tolerated given that the review is going to go through we're able to enlighten you as to the full aspects of the system as we proposed it. So fairly much as Wadan was talking about in the in the paper this morning but our overarching proposal was a mixed member proportional system MMP as it's known with a closed list.

So, to fit under the current constitution we had to recommend an open list but you will find when you read through our report at appendix one is a constitutional road map. In fact, there's a couple of times the constitution comes up here a constitutional audit of the proposed electoral system that was our explanation as to how we felt what we were recommending could fit under the 2013 constitution but at appendix one was the constitutional road map we lay out exactly what we felt needed to be changed in the constitution to fully accommodate everything that we were recommending. I can come back and say more about that later if you like but I think it would be a good opportunity for Saini to have a chat about our consultations and where we went.

Ms. Nabou: Good morning Honorable chairperson and members of the constitutional review commission. When we discussed this session and what benefit we could add to the commission we sort of like broke it up into you know the main chunks of the work that we planned out for ourselves. As you know this time last year, we were in right in the throes of planning our public consultations but when we came together one of the first things that we recognized was that it would be naive of us to think that going out there people will know about the electoral laws.

First of all, people here were not consulted in those laws and the only things that they would know were things that they would have read in the media so we knew that we were approaching this with a blank sheet of paper and so then we decided I think the chair was very wise to guide us along this pathway to have questionnaires. I don't know whether you recall seeing them in the papers but those questionnaires were to lead to guided conversations because if you go out there to the communities the urban center's will have some idea but in the urban communities you're asking them to talk about anything and everything to do with elections. Now that's not to say that out there the rural population are out of whack with what's happening.

They are very much aware of what was happening in terms of the election and that's why when we created the questionnaires we tried to be as general as possible but before we did the questionnaires, we said okay let's assume that we don't know anything. How do we generate the discussion? How do we get people interested in what we're doing? Mindful also that the parliamentary committee were out there doing their work on inputting to the various bills that are before them and I know for a fact because of the work that I used to do in parliament that getting public engagement with parliamentary committees is a really hard job unless you're investing the time and the effort to make sure people are interested. So, we made sure with chair we prepared a week or two a media blitz is what we did. So, we got the chair. We bullied him into being the voice. There was only going to be one face and one voice representing the commission.

Often it becomes a bit confusing when you've got too many people talking to the public. So that was what we decided to do. We prepared interview sessions with various media houses. Commissioner Mary would know. She interviewed us for the breakfast show and we tried to get a wide demographic to make sure also that we were touching the languages. There's the Fijian radio stations, the Hindu radio stations.

In hindsight I think when towards the end we got more help, assistance from the ministry of iTaukei who helped us with the questionnaires, the translation and all but in terms of getting the message out there it would have been helpful because radio is still very powerful to get the iTaukei affairs or the equivalent for the Hindi translations. We got Fiji Times to do that for us for a fee. So that was one of the, we did the media blitz and then that of course engendered more interest.

Then when we advertised our public hearing schedules of course the media were also very keen to follow along and it was all public and Chair was also very open to the media for any questions or even the media had no idea about the various aspects of the law. For example, the blackout period and all that. So, it was quite educational on many fronts.

I think one of the first things that we did when we were planning and I have to say that I noticed I see Mr. Leighton Fatiaki and Ms. Lia Duru from the Law Reform Commission. They're going to be a very good allies because they also accompanied us and they know all the highs and the lows of being on the road together. Number one is get good cushions, get snacks because there are long days, get water and if you're going to get transport to take you here and there might we recommend asking Parliament for their lovely bus. It's more comfortable. Being stuck in a van doesn't help you when you have to sit for long days and long evenings. We wanted to make sure that everything that was said to us was recorded so the Law Reform Commission had very good contacts of Hansard reporters retired who got the audio recordings and transcribed every bit of it. I don't think it's in the report but I think I believe it's in the law reform if anybody wanted to cross-check what we had said in the report. I think that's about it that I can share in terms of the public consultations.

We also wanted to make sure that we recorded everything. You will see it in the report some of the conversations delved outside our mandate like there were complaints about the slowness of development. We did share with the subuties that we that was not really our mandate but of course they're taxpayers so we included that also. The state owns that report they have they also have a right to know what's being said about those aspects not related to elections but this is what the public wanted us to take away so we did that. I believe I'll end there.

Justice Fatiaki: Chair, I was wondering how we would proceed at this point. We're happy because you say you're here to to listen. We're happy to give you a brief presentation of I think probably the best thing we can do is to actually draw your attention to the public requests that we heard very often during our rounds around the country. Some people have accused us of imagining some of those recommendations we made but I'm very pleased to see Mr. Kohli sitting amongst you because we dragged him around all over the place so he knows exactly what we say when I say this is what we heard the villagers say in Naduri or in Somosomo and it's recorded in summary form and in bullet point form under each of those public hearings but most people spoke not from a detailed knowledge of the electoral laws most spoke from personal experience and so although there wasn't too much knowledge about the law and when you mention words like dehont you know even to qualified lawyers and people like us it was utterly sort of nonsense we didn't understand it at all. Thank goodness for Deidre she had an understanding of it but you know even the great professor had an understanding of it but I'm saying you know you mentioned words like that and it's totally foreign so we relied on our people's experience you know so they may not know what's written in the law or in the constitutional or the electoral act provisions but they do know what they voted how they voted what they liked about it what they hated about it and we got responses.

Now one of the very first requests from everywhere that we went was we want constituencies we do not want whatever they gave us we want constituencies we want to be able to vote for someone from our community who we can identify who we can wake up at midnight and complain to him about the water system. We want that well I call it back because it used to be like that until Dehont arrived and this electoral system arrived and we lost those two very important electoral elements what I believe a democratic electoral system should reflect whereas and so that's certainly one of the very first requests we want constituencies we want to know who our MP is so that we can take our complaints to him right now under this system we know neither.

We need to make voting easier we don't know what this Sudoku thing is I used to call it center vote tick pages others called it Sudoku and Sudoku seems a modern term but you know what I mean it is basically a card with hundreds of numbers on it and you tick or circle or cross the one you vote for. We had many elderly voters tell us they'd get brainwashed by their children and their politicians and into what numbers they should tick then they'd get to the voting booth you know 500 meters away because they weren't allowed anywhere closer and by the time they got there they'd forgotten it.

There was this elderly people who were not numeric just didn't remember the numbers and they couldn't work out the sequence of numbers and I mean it's a huge tragedy you know they're very large percentages of informal bad votes because people couldn't remember and the worst thing is even in an audit you can't work out whether or not the bad votes were actual votes or mistaken votes because you couldn't conduct an audit with each person saying did you actually vote the correct number.

A lot of them when they came out found out that what they ticked was the wrong number but for the electoral counting they still counted even though the person who voted it knows that's the wrong number but that's the kind of system we had. Forget about glitch another famous word everywhere we went people talked about glitch I don't think they understood it but frankly it makes no difference. These are people who are used to a system where they could see the votes and they were counted immediately in front of them and a system which doesn't do that and ends up with glitches loses its credibility. So, credibility of an electoral system is so much more important than having rules about voting so, they wanted the old voting paper names, photos, party all of that on the ballot paper now.

I'm saying these things because we recommended them all of them so sometimes I read the papers I also as you may know contribute to the letters I write letters and I go through the papers every day and I read a letter about the electoral system or something and I tick done that done that and I think you will find if you do read our report that a lot of the demands that the people wanted we have actually recommended. So, the rural areas wanted more direct representation they were sick of being tied and aligned with large mainland provinces where their voice was just meaningless meant nothing and they could never influence how they'd get onto the parliament because they just get outvoted you know Lomaiviti gets tied in with the whole of Nadroga and you haven't got a hope in hell Kadavu gets tied in with Serua, you know the differences in your needs your wants is so fundamental we decided as an electoral commission fine we understand it totally, we have been in the urban areas we have been in the rural we know your wants and needs are different we'll give each of you a seat so what did we do we created five what we call maritime constituencies made up of Lau, Lomaiviti, Rotuma, Kadavu and Mamanucaa, Yasawa. That's the five maritime constituencies guaranteed seats for those people represented and only we voted well voted by anybody but they were guaranteed to those maritime zones. No longer would their voices be lost forgotten or a byline in another mainland politician.

The other major recommendation we made was to deal with women the women have a very forward-thinking profound research abilities behind them and an ability to articulate right and voice their demands especially the women's rights movement uh we're naturally concerned about that because we experienced it also in the rural areas, we went to. It still maintained the fears that we thought had vanished still existed. The women sat in at the back and very rarely said anything all the men sat in the front and spoke almost all the time.

We actually had to make an effort to call for the women to speak it is changing there's women's groups even in religious rural areas they will speak their requests. Anyway, we had all sorts of arguments back and forth and not easy uh in our thinking because women don't vote for women and that is such a fundamental problem that it's difficult to deal with.

Our compromise situation was we actually decided that we were going to have reserve seats for women we were going to change the entire scenario we were not going to you know do what we've been doing for the last 60 years say no, no, no the women should struggle to get onto the ballot and they should struggle to you know go to the polls and go to campaigning and everything, but you know what we often heard was this playing field is not level it is not equal you can say whatever you want it has never been equal it never will be and we're asking for what they called in UN language temporary special measures.

I suppose in my time we called it affirmative action or whatever so we decided right fine we reserved 25 seats for women and they would represent they would come from all the constituencies so it'd be one for each constituency. Women would really have a voice serious voice and everybody would vote for that person not just women voting for women no everybody so, that that woman knows out of all this constituency. I have the most support both men women and young people of 18 years age.

That was the concessions we made all right we'll give you reserve seats but these are two things that's going to happen men will vote for you not just women men and everybody you'll be just like everybody else and secondly because of the way this proportional system went you will not be part of the open list. The open list is the list that brings proportionality into the system according to the number of votes a political party gets .and so we took women out of it that was it because they had reserve seats, they weren't going to be part of it. Only the men who stood in those constituencies could get in through the reserve seats through the skirts as we described.

They wanted a senate we said yes sure we recommended the senate. We could discuss more about the audit see we were kind of when we started we were caught between the devil and the deep blue sea and what I called the elephant in the room which is what you people are dealing with.

You were our elephant in the room the constitution and I kept thinking we're a bit back to front here you know we're not dealing with the constitution first we're dealing only with the Electrol system and the constitution by the way impacts seriously especially part 3(a) on the electoral system. You know so we had to address the elephant as part of our work and we had to try and think what we would do we obviously would prefer to provide you the people with what they wanted which was basically an entirely new electoral system would have loved to do that and we still did it anyway in our recommendations but what we did do is we also tried our very best to try and make as much of what we recommended uh manageable within the provisions that exist in the 2013 constitution.

So, you could actually adopt maybe 80 of our recommendations and still do it under the existing constitution without breaking it into smithereens. But I'm I spoke well yeah I confess I'm mainly responsible for that kind of interesting reading of provisions, but some of the readings we already knew.

One the word constituency doesn't exist in this constitution right which means the so-called demand that there be one constituency is flawed fundamentally it says one electoral role not one constituency. So, we've decided on our reading you can have one electoral role and 25 constituencies and it's basically I dare it prove us wrong and if you can't you know bad luck so it was that kind of reading but it's not so out of the left field or too far out of the box that people couldn't understand it now likewise .The five percent term what do they call that threshold something we also heard that was a cause virtually of eliminating all minor parties and all independents no more because of this threshold.
This threshold gave rise to a demand the people wanted parliamentarians to be in parliament on the basis of the votes they got. Not on the piggyback stuff so they didn't want to see parliamentarians with 300 votes and people with 5 000 votes didn't get in. They weren't interested in daunt and explanations and you know our people have a immense common sense about these things and yes an electoral system that allows that to happen is not reflective or democratic.

You can call it whatever you want you can call whatever system you're using you want but if someone with 300 votes sits in parliament and someone with 3 000 votes sits outside parliament there is something wrong. So, how did we fix it we introduced constituencies and we took the five percent and applied it to each one not an entire electoral system each one. So, when you take five percent of 25 constituencies you don't need 35 000 votes no for each constituency you only need two. Two is much more achievable for one politician or one political party than 35 000 and that's how we did it you see. So, we still complied with the five percent it's just we didn't apply it to the whole election we applied it to each constituency election.

Now again does it say it has to be it can't be applied to that no again prove me wrong but so we struggled with all sorts of things hoping that you know our electoral system could come in in time. We have heard politicians say no no it's too late which really doesn't help us but they're all saying we'll have it under the de hunt. Well, that's fine because what we've recommended can also go under that because there are certain assumptions under this so-called de hunt and this electoral system that says that you can't do what you want to do. So, they say you can't have multiple constituencies and i say why not they say well because you're only supposed to have one and i said show me where it says that well there it says one electoral.

I said what it's one electoral roll go and ask if they give you one electoral roll for the whole country no problem what's that got to do with constituencies you mean they're not the same actually no so even under this present system the constituencies can go because it's not forbidden and if it is i've no doubt that you people will find it we'll have an interesting discussion over it but um yeah send it anything else um yeah all right .

Again, this is something i guess I'm responsible for but um when we came to deal with um the qualification of candidates uh we didn't have problems with most of what was written there we had quite interesting discussions with the people about whether convicted people should be allowed to stand or should be allowed to vote. I'll say our commission was quite liberal that way um if you'd served your time we had no problem with you voting or standing we're allowed.

The other thing was we had to face some people especially the academics from FNU uh professor law and justice and social justice academics and even ordinary people said well what about those people who conducted codes. We don't want them to stand we don't think they deserve to stand and it never sort of it's not something you really think about you.

But when you hear it you certainly realize yes we come from a nation that's had four coups and so much immunity is given to these people you know um and the people don't forget and they don't want those kind of people standing and representing them you know. So, we try to address it and this is how we did it well we haven't done it this is how we recommended, we recommended that anyone who wanted to be a candidate in a general election would have to sign a declaration which says he does not rely on the provisions of chapter 10.

You see it's one of those double-edged sword things if you say you rely on it we'll kick you out you're not going to stand we're not going to allow you to stand. If you say you don't rely on it we'll hold that against you until another day because we've got a signed declaration and you can't stand. That's how we dealt with it also in this sort of drug infested country of ours people came up and said well what about politicians taking drugs and all that we said yeah I suppose they do um and so we recommended a drug test during the nomination period. I understand parliament has a drug test after you actually enter parliament but there you are so yes we've got some interesting novel recommendations relative to the qualification of persons. We struggled with the Rotuman's diaspora. There's not too many us Rotuman's around we had to wonder well should we allow because we were going to recommend a seat who should be allowed to stand only those who live in Rotuma or those who live in rotunda in Fiji or diaspora which had most of the Rotuman's . Struggled with that we discussed it talked about it um and it became part of a residency requirement which was already there and we just sort of included it in it to force a residency requirement.

I think we also forced it for you to stay in rotunda that wasn't good enough just to come to feed no you want to represent Rotuma you're going to live there for three months before we allow your name on this thing i think it's something like that. I've forgotten the details but that can happen when your document is embargoed you know you kind of give up and just you know put it in the too hard box like everybody else puts it in the too hard box anyway but you know so we did quite a lot of struggling thinking arguing with each other we generally finished our meetings you know on a friendly note.

There were some that ended in silence and i was the chair and you know i don't tolerate these people much so i slapped them around and next day we were back again you know I've been called all sorts of names so at my age nothing really fazes me. As long as you get your work done and you think seriously about what we're doing and i can tell you this report is the result of a lot of serious thinking .We could have done with more time i suspect so can you but um you work with what you have we push this thing through in three months and we hope that it's an electoral system that the people well, we know it's an electoral system that the people want because we responded to their call.

When it got embargoed, I thought well obviously government's got different ideas then I thought oh some people said Well i mean I think the women's the problem we shouldn't have done that you know we're not ready for that kind of thing i said well when will you ever be ready and why do we still have fewer women than other places ask yourself those questions.

There is a chapter on the women's and the justifications that we believe we justified besides the call for more women I think justifications in our case we felt the need to try and justify the number but the number just conveniently matches the number of constituencies. So, we didn't want to have 25 constituencies for the normal general election and four huge constituencies divided into divisions with one woman from each. You know that's a much harder election to actually run but if you have 25 constituencies one seat open and one seat reserved for women that's easy because it's the same constituency. The same balance and the same counting it's the one which separates the women because you don't want to do the 25 you want to give them fewer reserves that is very difficult consequences for the electoral office. But did you can speak more about the practicalities of that kind of thing and in fact I don't know why I'm talking about it when I'm surrounded by two women they can talk about the women's seats. I think I've said enough for the time being I hope that i pricked your thoughts enough for you to be in a position to ask questions of us right now.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you judge I'll now ask the members of the CRC if they have any questions to ask questions.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you chair and thank you Justice Fatiaki for and members for your contributions I was thinking along the lines of um of the topic you ended on about um wondering if um participants in your consultation said anything about voter education noting how let's say controlled voter education has been in uh in past elections and that being such an important part of encouraging civic participation from all kinds of voters let alone young voters which make up a massive part of the demographic So I'm very interested to hear what um recommendations you may have made or what you may have heard about sources trusted sources of voter education all these other aspects given that if a new system is um is undertaken that would make voter education all the more uh important.

Ms. Deidre: Yes that did come up quite a bit um of course it's not something that you'd address at a constitutional level um and we didn't put a lot of detail about it in our report but in the draft legislation that we worked on we certainly opened up the opportunities for voter education coming from much wider group of people removing those restrictions on CSO and what have you to you know participate in that voter education in the delivery of it also political parties .

Mr. Kohli: Thank you commissioners I was I'm glad to say that i participated in your consultations and I can see how valuable it was and how you reached out to the people .To get their views going out of where to tell them please speak we are here to hear you and that was very important .Having said that I read with concern professor Narsey's observations that he thinks it's a waste of time for us to be doing this because he thinks we are duplicating , we are not basically you are only concerned about part of the constitution which was the electoral system whereas we are concerned concerning a much wider spectrum . So, that being that's that I would like to pick your brain since this is private now media is not here , you know guide us about what do you think some of the changes that can be brought in the constitution apart from the electorate.

It is spoken about constituency yes representation of women yes, no issues with that but apart from that if you can assist us because daily brooks we have a lot of experience with someone else about these things and yes so I shall be grateful if you can guide us on that.

Ms. Deidre: Vinaka.so um as I mentioned before I'd refer you to appendix one the constitutional roadmap okay where we set out there um all of our recommendations for changes to the constitution. If that should happen which would broaden what we could bring in in our electoral system . Chair was talking about for example the open list and we're saying no our preference was a closed list with the electoral system. So, um it's all very well set out there uh what we're recommending but in particular um entrenching in the constitution a statement of the principle electoral system. Removing all of the other electoral related provisions from the constitution and reflecting them in the electoral act that's more to make it simple for the people of what they're voting on for a change to the constitution.

Introducing a constitutional provision to avoid changes to electoral laws in the year before an election. introducing caretaker government provisions. Introducing a term limit for the prime minister and a compulsory retirement age introducing a provision to regulate the early announcement of the election date by the prime minister revising the electoral management body architecture entrenching the establishment of the new constituency boundaries commission. Introducing a new apolitical appointed senate representative of cross-cutting issues .Then we go into each of those in a lot more detail we've set out there the sections of the constitution that we recommend uh be repealed and then the things that are replaced in there.

I can do a quick skim through it for you if you like just highlighting some of those things so um as Chair said you know many of the submitters were in favor of you know all of the electoral provisions being removed. In fact, I'll say they're in favor of the whole constitution being removed we didn't hear it once we heard it everywhere we went it came in through the window check it out through the back door but that was not what we were there for we were looking at you know what could we do for the electoral system.

So, there's about 10 sections of the constitution that we believe that could be repealed and all the things addressed in the legislation. So, a new section 53 setting out a mixed member proportional electoral system with a closed list complemented by electoral constituencies including constituencies reserved for women. With further details to be provided in a written law and of course we would add the five maritime constituencies something to reflect the threshold to be reduced to two percent and a justification for that is because while we were recommending a 71-seat parliament 25 constituencies an open seat a women's seat and then bringing in proportionality from 21 people through your closed list is what it would be. And in a 71-seat parliament each member of parliament represents 1.4 percent of the registered voters so you wouldn't need a threshold applying to the constituency seats but coming in on the party list then you would have the two percent threshold.

The composition of parliament we felt that the number of seats ought to be set in the constitution as a starting point so currently the electoral commission reviews the number of seats in parliament. So, if you have a set number of seats your constituency uh boundaries commission will look at constituencies and sometimes, they will add an extra constituency because of numbers and if so then that could be balanced by one less number in your list seats.

Voter qualifications and registration and chairs have really touched on this but there were very strong views about the rights of people to participate in the election. So, removing the disqualification from voting for all serving prisoners the public were very much of the view that people in prison are still affected by the laws that are made and ought to have a right to vote for their representatives so they shouldn't lose all of their rights simply because they're put in prison. And also, the blanket disqualification from persons of unsound mind which is very archaic again you will see when you read our questionnaire prompts they were deliberately the ones for the public designed very simply very simple questions that they could understand and respond to.

And everywhere we heard that if they understand what they're doing sure they should be allowed to vote so it would be some sort of medical assessment to go does this person have the capacity to understand what they're doing in casting their vote and if so the public were very keen on them being able to vote they should be able to vote people in prison should be able to vote people who have served their time in prison should be able to be a candidate very very strong on that also dual citizens should be able to be candidates. They felt they said a lot of our diaspora bring a lot of strong skills and as long as of course that they would be living in Fiji during the time that they are in parliament.

Candidates who are public officers there is a bizarre well sorry what we think is bizarre in the constitution that included in public officers are trade unions and employers federations but they are not public officers so the removal of those two groups of people from who's a public officer and therefore prevented from standing as a candidate or in fact the way the law addresses it is if you're a public officer and you stand as a candidate then you are deemed to have vacated your public office .

We put some provisions in the draft bill around the date of nomination and the date of polling but as we've said we've kind of touched on that the election date being that if the prime minister's announced the election date three years and three months after the first meeting of parliament which is six months before the last possible date. for the election then the election date is deemed to be three years and six months after the first meeting of parliament. So, three years and three months is nine months before so basically saying if you haven't announced the election date by then it will be deemed to be six months before the last possible date which also allows for if there's sometimes you have to have a postponement due to weather conditions.

Those sorts of things and still meet the constitutional requirements there's a lot of reasons for it or we set out the justification for it but you know there's significant advantages for the preparation of the conduct of the elections all of your international best practice you know recommends you know the early announcement also saves the government an awful lot of money and it deals to the political advantage that there is to the government members knowing exactly when the election is going to be and nobody else does also often that the unofficial use of official funds for politicking a caretaker government. So, a lot of submitters called for a caretaker government and we recommended a model based on the Westminster caretaker government model and that's followed in Australia, Canada, India, New Zealand and the UK and of course these are places that always countries that always rank highly you know on your international transparency international democracy internationals scales for good governance and the key components of the model include the government staying in office until a new government is appointed.

But once the campaign period commences the caretaker government does not make any major policy decisions or significant appointments enter into major contracts or international obligations, but where urgency requires for it then they have to get the agreement of the opposition. Prime Minister there were a lot of people suggesting that there should be a limit on how many terms a prime minister can have and also a retirement age. So, the recommendation was a maximum of two terms doesn't mean that they can't then be still be an MP or a cabinet member but stepping down from the role of PM succession planning you know so that you don't get into that situation that there's only one person that can meet. And they also recommended a retirement age and we aligned that retirement age with the requirement for judges to retire at 75.

The election management body architecture and we did not only consult with the public on this but also the electoral commission and the Fijian elections office and there was consensus there to follow the model that's used in Australia New Zealand Tonga. I think Vanuatu also does it where you have your election management body is most election management bodies in the Pacific or in fact in the world there is only one and they manage everything.

In Fiji you've got two and there's a challenge with you know where the boundaries are with for some of those things and in a lot of duplication so the model recommended is that the two agencies be merged there be a board of three commissioners, two are part-time the chair and the deputy and full-time is the supervisor of elections is the third member of that board. And then what you have is this board of three people making those significant decisions so the commission then your law just says that's the commission everything talks about the commission and the commission has the authority to delegate and they will delegate to the supervisor what they want to delegate to the supervisor and give the supervisor the power to on delegate some of those functions.

But it does mean that those significant critical things that can become slightly political etc. decisions are being made by a group of three people rather than one person. Constituencies boundaries commission and again we looked at our commissions elsewhere around the pacific and we're following a model particularly used by Australia and New Zealand and I'm sorry i know i come from New Zealand that may be part of the reason that I was on the commission. So, the boundaries commission the beauty of the boundaries commissions in Australia and New Zealand is that they are successful in getting their recommended changes um through that is because unlike other countries in the pacific they set up the boundary's commissions occasionally not very often but they do the commission does an awful lot of work recommends changes to boundaries to level out the number of people in your constituencies. So, for the equality of the vote goes to parliament and it never gets adopted never I can tell you PNG's been doing it since about the 1960s and they still can't get it changed um the model that we're recommending has on it. Of course, you know it only comes into effect when you need to do your boundaries review which you generally do following a census of course that's often not regularly done in the pacific but in New Zealand Australia every five years a census then every five years a boundaries review and you have on that the chair of the electoral commission would chair it you have the supervisor of elections you have your lands and survey department.

I think it's called here your census population department statistics and I think there was it's in the law, I would have to look at it um the rule of maritime one of those one of your one of your local ministries that we don't have else .Then the icing on the cake why the politicians generally accept it is that you have two politically appointed people on there one appointed by the prime minister one appointed well they were both appointed by the president but on the recommendation of the prime minister and the leader of the opposition .So, that gives the politicians comfort that they've got their watchdogs there everything's being done you know according to the rules and then you can get these revisions of your boundaries as and when you need them and they and the boundaries commission has the authority to put them into effect they simply table their report in parliament for parliament's information but parliament doesn't get the opportunity to say yay or nay.

The senate as chair touched on so there was a lot of call for a senate and also you know to provide the checks and balances on what your elected politicians are doing they favored the senators to be appointed by the president on the nomination of specified organizations to be apolitical and represent the various ethnicities in Fiji as well as cross-cutting issues including those that are in the 2013 agenda .They thought this this is a good way so you're going to be bringing representation in through the constituencies and what have you but also making sure that at the senate level you've got all of those cross-cutting issues being addressed there as well as ethnicities all of your minority groups, including a representative for prisoners it was a very strong call for that as I said and that aligned with our thinking then if you're going to give prisoners the vote that sort of thing but not be allowed to stand as a candidate.

They thought that was a step too far then yes have them represented their climate representatives' face-to-face groups your national council for disabilities representatives for women and youth your minority groups and your indo-fijian community Malaysian community there were strong calls around them for the Malaysian communities of course the GCC and the council of Rotuma.

So, the powers of the senate would include legislative review and accountability inquiries and they could conduct hearings and also have the power to veto legislation pertaining to customary land matters and native administration along just as we do for the architecture of the electoral management bodies also recommending in the senate that your appointments can be staggered. So, one of the one of the things that always happens if everybody's appointed at the same time is that you lose all of that institutional knowledge all of the education training and capability all walks out the door at the same time so we're recommending for the electoral commissioners that their appointments be staggered. And also, for the senate of course the first one would all happen at the same time but then when somebody resigns or leaves the senate for whatever that their position is refilled. So, that eventually you would create a staggering of the senate and of course the senate would continue to operate all through the caretaker government model.

So, that's an overview of the things that we recommend for the constitution more broadly all election related or democracy related but we didn't go into the other areas we may have some personal individual views on them referendum , well of course the constitution would make provision for referenda for change it's interesting with the referendum bill that's came up at the moment there's been a lot of comment about well apart from the fact that yes it's a very dire bill, but that it makes provision for referenda outside of just constitutional amendment and that's actually the norm.

It might be a good idea to clarify in the constitution not only referenda for the amendment of the constitution and how you'd go about it but of course that the the government has parliament has the power you know to call for referenda on other matters as well. I don't see it as essential but I think it would put a stop to a lot of that is there something more. You might want to add on to that.

Justice Fatiaki: You probably wonder why we would be involved in that well the reason we couldn't avoid it is that once we address the elephant in the room and the possibility that there would need to be amendments made to the constitution. It was inevitable that we would also investigate the requirements within the constitution about amending itself and obviously those who have been following it realize that there two aspects to amending the constitution.

The first is a parliamentary majority and the second was a referendum. I surprised us when we looked around that this thing didn't exist in our laws there was no law for the conduct of referendums and you sort of wondered to yourself well. I shouldn't wonder so openly because i actually wrote a letter recently asking those fundamental questions about why we didn't have a referendum act in 2014 following a constitution in 2013 which required a referendum if it was to be amended it seemed natural that would have had a referendum act since 2014 otherwise, we have a constitution amendment process that is incomplete in the legislature hence maybe the word impossibility crept into the whole equation. But that's why we got involved in referendum we recommended amongst the work we had we had enough work to do without going down that path.

We recommended that the legislative drafts people look at the Vanuatu Referendum Act that just passed an act in Vanuatu for a referendum and it's simpler easier to understand and doesn't suffer from the kind of things that this cut and paste out of Singapore ended up on our tables and created all that havoc. I thought to myself well obviously they didn't bother to read our report because if they had the first act they would have had to look at is the Vanuatu one which by the way is you know three hours by plane it's not that far and those people also Pacific Islanders and you know have an experience of these things so you know no go to Hong Kong and China where these things from.

So, that's what we wanted to say about the referendum act and how we got dragged into at least some mention about it but we were surprised that you know even now we're discussing an act which should have been passed in 2014 or certainly at the same time as the constitution. I'll say one thing we the GCC didn't address us. They invited us to talk to them that is different from them addressing us now they invited us to talk to them and we were quite happy to talk to them well at that kind of time we talked to anybody, you know like sort of almost prostituting ourselves and trying to get our report out there so that everybody would know about it and everything. I don't care about that kind of terminology but the important thing is we went there and talked to them and they were very pleased to hear some of the things we had to say especially about the electoral system about constituencies about knowing who your parliamentarian was. We didn't address with them the non-ethnic seats and that obviously is something that I'd invite your commission to think about because you will hear about it .

There will be a request um our approach to it was yes there was a request but amongst us we had an economist demographer Wadan who's sort of lived with this thing for so long it's just blown his mind a bit so he said no no we don't we don't have to go down there we don't need any of those ethnic stuff.

I said why I mean you heard the people say they want you know he said no no they just don't understand so what do you mean he says by the time the next election comes around the number of the demographics would have so changed that you don't need ethnic seats you know it's it's what it is. 60 of the population will be Fijian 30 will be Indian and 10 percent would be the rest. And if everybody votes according to those lines then 60 of parliament will be Fijian.

I thought you know okay nutty professor that he is you know there's a huge if that he introduced this thing with you know. The demographics will turn out like that 60 40 30 and 10 and that will hold and reflect in government if they all stick together. But our experience with our indigenous features is they don't seem to understand that if, and many of our governments and much of the instability in our governments is because the Fijians didn't understand that they're supposed to stick together.

So, thanks to Butadroka Ratu Mara gets the boot you know that kind of thing but so I want you know we skimmed it and said the demographics doesn't require it besides I sort of put my foot in my mouth very early in the system and very early in our review and i said uh we're not considering ethnic seats there was a big push back on that so we never talked about that again but we certainly wasn't going to include it in the report anyway . So, we have not recommended featured seeds Indian seats and other seats. it's just so unnecessarily complicated yes well yeah uh you know the senate's a different thing, but you will hear it and

I'm hoping that you will struggle uh with the struggles that we decided to avoid by just talking demographics and blaming one but there will be a request and even demand for ethnic seeds that is something you know we have not had a problem with because we believe that it was necessary that we you know drag the country screaming into the future and the unity and i think the latest discussions and letters and social media postings on just one word chapter one feature well including myself i confess but you know should tell you that out there this thing is real it is real so yes you can .

I still firmly believe that the creation of well the bringing back of ethnic seats is regressive for our nation and that you know it's better to educate our people and especially our young who are more understanding of these things. Talk about young qualifications to vote we had huge arguments in our group between 21 and 18 I led the 21 campaign and every now and then i could drag Wadan with me he wasn't interested in but these two women were straight up the 18 you know that was it wadden was in the 18 camps in fact. I was the only 21 camps by myself while these three were happy to go on with the status quo you know and good luck today uh they won out and we didn't change it but we flagged that question.

It has been flagged because the villagers themselves especially the rural you know when we whenever it was raised we'd get men stand up and say these young punks just play rugby you know anything about anything can't make them allow them to vote or allow them to stand they're complete rubbish you know you've got to be 20 .Well I'm delighted to hear that you know being the old school that I am as opposed to this sort of you know CRC stuff that comes out of the rights of the child and all that 18 year olds I said well you know it might be fine internationally but we live in this country and let's you know talk about our country.

Ms. Nailatikau: I have a question in response to that this was something i noticed in the report especially that talked about trying to put something in the constitution that would affect voting behavior. It's like trying to find a technical solution to a behavioral problem right and I think looking within the remit of the of the constitution this impacts exactly the experience you're talking about as our demographics change. People are still quite attached to certain labels for certain seats because our voting behavior is tied to it and perhaps it's it's a problem that has different solutions but with you know we become stuck on you know a technical one like the like the constitution for example and my question was also going to be about in terms of the representations for candidates for candidate tests in terms because something that usually accompanies the lead up to elections is the policy issues tend to get overshadowed by what parties qualify or don't and what parties are able to register or not um there's is understand there's also a code of conduct bill, that's in in process at the moment or awaiting what were some of the things that you heard about in terms of candidate tests you spoke about drug tests for example again these won't have landing spots in the constitution but um have implications.

Ms. Nabou: I think one of the you know chair has mentioned it and i think commissioner pierce has also is like sometimes we take for granted that the people out there have no idea they're actually quite switched on. Few of the comments that we got back in with regards to candidate standing is in the first instance they must own a house you can't be going to parliament to enrich yourself you must own a house and these are young people. We heard that a few times is that you know you're not so we're not sending you to parliament to you know to get a living .You need to be have something in your pocket and also you know you've got things related to corruption linked to that because when you're making laws you want to make sure that you are without blemish and you know you know you don't have a hook somewhere that you're going to pass a bill that benefits somebody that's going to pay you twenty thousand dollars under the table which is very valid.

So, it was it was raised with us uh those kind and then we thought we thought how do you put that into a law you must own a house because the other side of the coin is that at the at the community level there are a lot of good mobilizers who do things at the community level women especially may not own a house may not have thousands in the bank but they know how to get things done with minimal minimal money they know how to you know barter for assistance here and there so that was a we didn't yeah we couldn't find a solution to something like that, I hope that answers your question.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you thank you Judge Fatiaki and members of the review committee and it's been very enlightening to hear you speak about the approach you took to review the act and the thinking around some of the recommendations that appear in the in the review plus the challenges you faced I mean I can hear you whole day so thank you very much for enlightening us. You mentioned about the constituency and having a simple and clear voting system I mean these are some of the things that we have heard from people time and again and it's good to see that finally it's appearing in the in the recommendation voting for a person rather than a number including a party name also allowing for maritime constituencies etc.

I wanted to ask you about the thinking around constituencies boundaries and it's not only about convenience but also taking into account the economic and social circumstances including the the demographic changes that that happen over time so. I think you explained that the thinking that went within the within the committee towards the last part of your speech. I just wanted to pick the brain of the committee on the announcement of the elections where you also mentioned that the government will be limited from carrying out certain functions especially related to policy decisions and money and expenditure related issues because we have a very strong chapter 7 and chapter 8 in the 2013 constitution.

So, I want to make sure that we tie together the constitution as closely to the act that you have there because they need to be in line so if we are talking about big policy issues and spending decisions will we need a kind of fixed parliaments act the one that the UK has which explains more in detail about the activities that government can carry out or cannot because if we live it to the my experience and what I've seen elsewhere .If we live it to the electoral act it might not be sufficient it might still leave large gaps in the way governments behave because governments will find a way to game the system and they will approach things even in concrete water will find its way if there is a little crack so just picking on I don't know I just want to pick on the expertise of the committee to see if we might have to do something more than more than that. And i also agree with the Judge Fatiaki that we don't always have to go to Singapore and Hong Kong there's a lot of experience from within the region that we can tap into for example Vanuatu has a very good electrolyte now that we can all learn from and which was done in a very inclusive inclusive manner so thank you very much i just wanted to have your view on that.

Justice Fatiaki: If I might start start off our discussions on constituency boundaries well when we started hearing everywhere we went we want constituency we want us naturally we had to think about constitutive boundaries we were also constrained by the fact that we were we had three months to deal with this incredibly complex field. So, you know we a lot of people said well we're going back so we yeah we went back and had a look and had a look at what sizes of parliament they were and how the constituencies were written uh we went back to 1970 and 1990 and obviously 1997 .And 1997 seemed to be the easiest for us so rather than reinvent the wheel and go down a huge draft legislation again you know our law we didn't have a constituency boundaries commission or act which predetermine those kind of things. We had one provision in the constitutional which says the electoral commission determines this according to this formula and can't go beyond well they apparently sat and changed it twice I believe illegally but you know that's their business but they changed it over two years and it went from 50 to 55.

And yet these things are supposed to apparently reflect our demographics you know even their formulas stuck with the demographics anyway long story short. We decided okay for our purposes because we were going to say your constituencies and if government was going to implement, we'll tell them listen as a transition thing we suggest you take on and just adopt 97 constituencies because you already have 71 created already maps boundaries the whole lot.

If you look at the if you look at the report you will see that we have actually done it and taken what we can from each constituency and filled in the dots that which matches we spent two days giving the electoral officer headache but we had a foot in the door so that's helped but yes over two days we did all of this all of this because we were hoping you know if they were going to go down that path then this is how we suggest you do it .And even the Maritimes we did it the same way and we realized that for the last elections well the 97 one certainly well the last three elections they had um what do they call these things voter yeah they had polling venues. They had polling venues and so using that information we just basically adopted that and drew the boundary around it in what I believe was much more sensible boundaries than existed when they grabbed maritime and shoved them into Serua and shoved them into Nadomo or whatever and I thought no the boundaries that we actually founded for them and worked over two days to create is actually more workable than the boundaries that the 97 created. And that's without a boundaries commission I don't blame any I don't claim any knowledge about these things other than voting and having been born and lived here but you know Kadavu does not belong in Nadroga that's it that's why as far as I'm concerned and that belongs by itself likewise returner. We've got no business being stuck with none at all or Taveuni and Savusavu. I mean none at all you know and yet they were stuck with them really i mean mama nuda's got dragged into Lautoka and you know all that kind of thing.

It just you know if you lived here common sense tells you and helps you to see things that maybe demographers and demarcators you know who create boundaries but I suspect the boundaries that were created as part of gerrymandering by politicians see we have no politicians so we're able to actually create sensible boundaries and do away with the political rubbish that's crept into the system and I don't know. But when we took it up to the actions office they looked at and they said yeah that is so sensible where did you get that from, I said well I lived here for 70 years and that told me what is sensible and what isn't he said yeah we all knew that I said well um okay and I said can you do it he said yes because it's based on polling booths and we have it all. The addresses the names of the people who are registered on it in fact it's on your card you're pouring both you know so that's what we did.

Ms. Nailatikau: If i may chair um my final question I am selfishly asking this question as a mixed methods researcher but it is very clear that the centering the work the people's voices it also went through rigorous debate and discussion amongst you all as you pulled the review together. I would really love to hear your reflections on your on the process you used in that very vital link between people's voices and how you worked together to write this this review that you've that you've submitted were there right shops robust debates and discussions giving and divvying it up based on your important you know expertise, but also comparing to best practice regionally globally or within Fiji's own history. I would really love to hear that um your reflections on the process of writing the review as you analyzed and and took into place people's voices.

Ms. Nabou: I suppose I can start but which is one of the first reasons why I suggested get a comfortable van is because after every session that you sit through, you're talking through what you heard and then it's going through your mind so having comfortable seats and before you get to the venue you're talking through and reflecting on what you're hearing that that helped.

Also, uh for I think the four of us will come well I mean I I knew professor warden I had only heard of justice as somebody who's quite distinct in the judiciary and I'd never met Diedre before but I think the way we walked into this in terms of our conversations you can ask the staff Leighton and Leah .The law reform commission is usually very quiet and it's a law office it's a government office and we would have a lot of very robust discussion very robust they probably never they were probably thinking to themselves my god where are these people from, but that was all valuable part of the relationship building and the trust building of trust among each other that we all had a valuable input .

You know different perspectives but it all did come together and of course um chair had between uh we started off with a skeleton of terms table of contents um and then that refined as we got on yeah but but basically having having the space to have the debates and allowing it do it because it'll come out richer because when you have to defend it later you know that each of you have put into it and that you can you will defend it equally because you all have debated vigorously . It's a process but uh very character building I reckon chair.

Justice Fatiaki: I'll speak last and I suppose.

Ms. Deidre: Just to add to that so so from that yes, we did split up um parts of the report to draft each but um we didn't exclusively own them we were simply the starting point yeah to put to put together the information and then we all collectively reviewed the entirety of it we often moved stuff around change things. We need to say it differently but uh in the end we got to a draft that we're all reasonably comfortable with the lack of mediation you know might not be that everybody's totally happy but they can live with it and that's where you need to get to but I would certainly endorse what Nalini said about um having the space and the trust to have those robust discussions because if you can't you're going to have a report going out that some of you go no I don't I don't want to associate with that so you've all got to be able to own the entirety of the report not just the little bit that was your passion to write about .

Dr. Baba: Chair if I can just continue from the Mere's report you know the table of contents was the chair the one that drew it up number two when we are moving around in the sorry this one is not later this one is not okay right now when you're moving around because we will have team one team two. A few times we'll amalgamate a few times I'm thinking of the process that man is talking about because I suppose because I'm such a this is what professor is worried about it's not the talking it's the final report so I've been burdening over it.

When you're all over the place you know moving around how does the report get written the transcriptions are done by the ladies yes Judge Daniel and then sorry I'm looking at right now the transcriptions are done when do you get to write do you write as you go because the table of content is already there that's what Nilesh is doing right now for us for the chair. I think the table of content just the drafted so and then how does the transcribed reports get to that format, do you actually take one month off like the education commission to write two months or do you write as you go.

Justice Fatiaki: Thank you I'd like to answer your question by saying I wish we had three months yeah from start to finish uh what and i we didn't really know each other at all actually until we jointly put in a joint submission for application for the joint tender for the commission the only relationship I had with Wadan was that Wadan got disallowed to stand as a candidate in some election. One of the years and john acted was the one who disallowed him he judicially reviewed john in my court and I said John you're wrong what a new stand and he became the minister of finance for I don't know how long that's the relationship we had obviously we understood each other's writing and the way we think and talk and Wadan and I are on a pretty even playing field we came with all our different baggage's our women .I don't mind saying that

Seini was maybe the sainest of all of us Deidre is a strong cement eating kiwi woman Wadan of course you know he lives in the stratosphere and I am firmly on the ground so between us like I said, we had vigorous discussions .We assigned the writing to where we believe the strengths were having said that the assignments were very good the writing was very good and Wadan carried the electoral part very well Deidre is legally qualified and worked quite well with the elections office great experience so Deidre would look after that part of it certainly the legislation, the management electoral management systems um and the logistics of carrying out elections which drive me and wadden nuts you know. Seini handled our PR and also the consultations was her draft part and we would share the drafts with each other and I read the whole lot and had a very firm grip on the language that we would use so I vetted everything that went through this chair not an easy job dealing with professors strong-willed people you know English a second language and all that kind of stuff lawyer you know to boot so we had between.

Deidre and I we had vigorous legal discussions what would happen is these two women would go off and conspire cigarettes smoke cigarettes on the veranda and come up with all sorts of quirky sort of , you know when you're a goth or a cricket person they bowl you googly so whenever they finished their cigarettes and came back smiling you knew well you know the s is going to hit the fan now sure enough I said now what do you think of this where did that come from no no no what do you think of it.

I mean you know let's I said well let's talk about it so we had some pretty vigorous discussions and I'd like to say one thing that you know we often knew like every good family we knew how far you could go and we knew what triggered you and what didn't trigger you and we were willing to make concessions and accommodate each other. So, Deidre and I had vigorous legal stuff but I think Deidre is uh you know respectful of the fact that I was who I was but I also I think occasionally.

I let ideas slip and it would hit her and she would be bounced off you know thinking about it especially the the readings she would come and say no impossible you can't possibly read it so well let's discuss this thing you know and then I'd grab her twist her brain twist her words and by the time I'd finished she'd come around you know she could live with it but um obviously it isn't an easy exercise I don't envy any of you .

As far as these things yes I from a very early start I began to start thinking about how this thing would be assembled and what the contents would look like the the chronology of it and you know we struggled with where her papers would fit kind of thing .In the end I think we've got something that and also her paper where it fit in the end i think we came up with something which is readable logical chronological um and you know hopefully helpful um yeah so that's basically no we did not have the luxury of taking a month off to write the report this was a sort of work in progress it just well we had three months what can you do if you spent one month touring the countryside you know it it's hard as hell you know and I mean was and couldn't believe it when he came to me and he said so how are we doing the public consultations. I said well how else do you do it he said I don't know you tell me I said well we get on a blooming bus and we go around the whole of Fiji he said what I said well how else do you do it he said well you can sit behind your computer write a little sort of questionnaire and send it around and get the answers and tick that box and say we did consultation.

I said Well I'm sorry I'm old school the only way I can do this thing is to get on a bus and go to the village sit cross-legged on the bloody ground and listen to them so and that's why they talk about cushions. You know at our age the backside's a bit lean so it's bone on wood so in the end I got cushions for all of us and it was quite hilarious stole the chairs from future law reform, stole the van from parliament or FEO office and I just came along with my cushions. You could see the commissioners walking up carrying their cushions and they were lime green bright but it was yeah it was just that's just how it happened but yeah that's how we did it I don't know I don't know how we pulled it off but we pulled it off.

Mr. Valenitabua: May I? Judge Fatiaki, Ms. Brooke and Ms. Morgan, Mr. Ami Kohli needs to leave us now. He's asking to be excused.

Justice Fatiaki: I have absolutely no problem with that Mr. Chairman. Mr. Kohli is a member of the Electoral Commission. This is, you know, Deja vu for him.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you.

Mr. Kohli: Before I leave, I'd just like to thank you and I must say that one of the advantages which you've had and we didn't and Professor Narsey didn't have is because of your experience as a judge you always knew people you were dealing with were very difficult people argument pros and cons and you all always listen and I think that's made a difference so thank you very much if you may be excused. Thank you.

Ms. Deidre: So if I could just add a little more to the to the drafting, yes we didn't have we didn't have sufficient time and we knew that and so we worked nights and weekends and an extra week that we weren't paid and all sorts of things. But I mean unfortunately you know I've had that view from the start anybody who's tone a lot of research of any type whether it's public consultations or not .You'll know that your your drafting and your reporting will take as much time as your research and your gathering of your information and I think you know that's a useful rule of thumb so think about how much time you are taking getting your information that would be my recommendation and be putting aside at least that much time for drafting and then working out how in your busy life you're actually going to find that you know and it probably will be you know until two o'clock in the morning then get up at four o'clock again and start drafting as we did but hopefully you'll have a bit more time. Thank you chair.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, chairman and the reform commission, and the members I'm very enlightened in the report. I must say I've I just read through it quickly and but one of the three points that I have when was the the last election of the 2022 elections you know we have a we had registered voters about 693,000 that were registered in about 473,900 you know casted their votes so that's about 68 percent turnout right. So, our current population is about 930,000 so when you look at the voters that were or that voted within just half the population. Did you have any thoughts around how you address that during your ,that was one question and the other one was

I really appreciate the proposed hybrid model that you're suggesting in your it's called Pulse I think it is P-U-L-E-C you're sort of combining the contingency based proportional representation of elements in your. The problem is that one of the things that I think there's a risk in the institutional ambiguity with the parliamentary system and I notice you address that as well in your how can you can you talk a bit more about it, because I think it's entrenched in the constitution and yet when I hear you saying earlier that you you'd like to see that portion of that in the constitution. I mean you talk about constitutional basis of representation territorial versus proportion and then you talk about differential role and accountability of members of parliament. I like to hear your views on that in the constitution yeah because there's some institutional ambiguity within the parliamentary system.

The third was a great thing that you've done with the map I looked at your maps I can't help it as an architect I looked at it and I feel that there was some about I've seen the old boundary division maps but that's a very good point that needs to be honed in and entrenched in the constitution because I strongly Greg thank you for bringing that up because that's very very strong thank you

Ms. Deidre: So, the concept around proportionality and it's not new so currently your constitution says that you have a proportional system and yes it does because you have these open lists in there but the hybrid model as you call it makes member proportional. That's actually common throughout the world that you will have constituencies complemented by a list either an open list or a closed list of members who fill those seats.

I can speak strongly on the New Zealand model Australia is similar except I've got federations and things in there as well which confused me so basically your people stand in the constituency they get elected to the constituency and they will always be that representative in that constituency for the for the period of the time.

There are two votes in fact because we suggested a reserved seat for women it would be three but if we take the simple concept of your voting for your person in your constituency and then you're voting for the political party that you want to lead the country. Now, often people think it's the same thing but if I give you an example and nothing real about this but if we say that chair because he's bright yellow he's representing the pineapple party and just party whatever so we've got a pineapple party and a yam party okay.

So, I'm voting casting my votes and I say to myself I really want Seini for my constituency because she works really well in the constituency and I love the things she does okay that's fine. So, constituency vote I'm voting for Seini when it comes to my party vote for leading the country I may want to vote for the party that she's with or may want to vote for another party and my thoughts are whilst. I love Seini and her work in the constituency I'm not all that keen on the yam party and what the overarching policies are I really like the policies of the pineapple party and I want them to lead the government.

So, what is often considered splitting the vote some consider that's bad in New Zealand we consider that our voters are getting sophisticated when they do that and often it will be also because they think okay yes I want this candidate but they're from a very small party there's no way they're going to lead the parliament so I'm going to give my vote to one of the bigger parties that you know is more likely to lead as simple as that so. In doing that you then say okay so the people in the constituency those are elected they are the representatives and the party at the time of nominating candidates also puts in a party list this is a list of their candidates. Their list if you like in a closed list system those people are not voted for but you declare it and everybody knows who's on your list they can in fact put on the list the people that they're standing in constituencies as well but if the person wins a constituency seat then you ignore them on the list when you come to allocating seats. So, you count up the number of votes that each political party gets and then you use a formula to work out how many seats they get and this is where the simplicity comes back in. You use a formula your constitution says that a formula has to be used internationally recognized and this is the de hondt system that nobody understands.

I even struggle with there are a few others that are well known out there as well so currently not even stuck with as the formula but what introduced the here formula or the sun blog formula which we use in New Zealand, which I can't even pronounce let alone understand how it works okay it always has to be a computer-generated thing so for with our system what our recommended system.

We actually landed on just using percentages okay if you if your party gets 40 percent of the votes the party votes you get 40 percent of the seats in parliament and then what you do of course is you'd say okay so um cheers pineapple party yep got is eligible for 30 seats and his candidates won 18 seats in the constituencies so, he gets another 12 seats off his list the people at the top of the list going down taking out those that have already won a seat yeah and then those people are allocated the seat.

If a constituency seat becomes vacant, please ignore what we say in our report because we had to comply with the current constitution and said that those seats would have to be filled from the open list but the idea is that your constituency seats will always be filled by by-election but your list seats it's the next person on the list. So, it's a combination of what you currently do with your open list yeah like always having the by-election back in the constituency so it's always a constituency representative there.

I would just add a wee bit about the um about the using the percentages because it is addressed quite a bit in the report one of the reasons that these complex formulas that we can't pronounce and don't understand are created is because using your Nmp systems you will often come up with an overhang an overhang is an extra seat.

So Saini's party uh is allocated on its percentages proportion gets eight seats but in fact her candidates actually won nine constituency seats you don't take one off them okay but on that percentage of the number of seats in parliament they got an extra seat now that's a genuine overhang with using your percentage but you can create unfortunately underhangs or overhangs, because normally it's the percentages it's the it's the fractions of the percentages and whether you round them up or round them down and the norm as you know is that anything at 0.5 or more is rounded up and less than 0.5 rounded down.

So, that can create another sort of overhang and it was only last night when i was thinking of coming here that it dawned on me that there is actually a solution for that that could be addressed. When you don't have a standard rule about rounding up or rounding down you do your percentages how many seats have you got and so ignore the fractions and then if you're a seat less it would always be an underhung not an overhang if you're a seat less then you just go down the highest of your fractions okay so anybody with 0.9 gets that seat if there's no point lines what is it is it 0.85 is it 0.75 is it whatever and that would avoid that artificial overhang and under hang that just using the percentages .

The reason we use percentages they're not as perfect except for what i thought of last night as these other complex formulas but the people wanted simplicity, they wanted what they can understand and a percentage they can understand they might not understand what creates an overhang and what have you and that would take a bit of education but they understand a percentage they understand his party gets 30 of the votes he gets 30 of the seats, yes okay.

They hate to haunt in fact most people think to haunt is the whole electoral system it is not it is simply a nasty little formula that is applied at one point of it.

Justice Fatiaki: Before i hand this over the discussion to say me let me just say this in summary or briefly proportionality is actually expressed in the constitution itself in describing the electoral system. It comes from the list aspect of the electoral system. There are open lists and closed lists and you can find all sorts of literature on the benefits for either one in our particular case in presently the open list is chosen and put into the act inside the constitution our recommendation is that it should be a closed list. I think partly why we've opted that way is because of the reserve seat for women and that needed to be addressed um proportionality is also a much smaller margin of this of the of the seats that's involved so on our recommendation because of the 1997 having 71 we went with 25 25 21, but it could be 55 in which case it would be 20 20 10, but it's just that it's all the same but there will be more there'll be more seats than actual constituencies. I mean now more parliamentarians than actual.

Mr. Beg: Just a question chair according I mean because you've done the groundwork sorry you've done the groundwork which which is resonating you feel it needs to go back to the 71.

Justice Fatiaki: That's to be decided by the electoral commission obviously they're the ones who actually have you know that particular elephant to deal with and struggle because they're actually mentioned in the constitution and the power for the creation of boundary the creation of the the size of parliament is the composition of parliament is with them.

Let me say also if I could draw your attention to appendix 12 appendix 12 is a simulation validation exercise, we conducted which is the more practical and that's what we had at the elections office with actual voting paper and counting and it's described. And I notice um that there's a there's a small paragraph there 11, where when we said reserve seats for women suddenly we had this huge sort of pushback and what's a woman and all that kind of stuff and you know, it's not the kind of thing you think about sort of naturally so we dodged it as the too hard basket and we said no this thing comes out of the birth certificate and whatever is left is a problem that parliament should decide . Who gets on to that thing as far as we're concerned as electors' recommenders you come out of a birth certificate you know we're not into transition.

Ms. Nabou: That's how we dealt with it because it's quite Justice Fatiaki: Well, I think i can read you there were robust discussions about the inclusion of transgender persons as candidates in the RSWC the commissioners have determined that such a controversial question needs to be decided by parliament and not indirectly as a side wind determined by this review. So, it's a duck but we said it's this thing is more important than a little commission dealing with it no this is a parliamentary thing so that's i mean yeah but this is the simulation exercise which i think will address you know if you follow it and I wish Wadan was here because this is pure nasty you know

Mr. Beg: I couldn't help I couldn't help I couldn't agree any further because the grievances that I hear from you sorry I feel the grievances that I hear going resonating back is addressing the electoral system and how that affects the constitution and all the elements that we have to deal with I'm like you are we all been given different chapters to address and chapter six is my chapter which is the public service.

Justice Fatiaki: Yours is chapter six is it yes sir no it's inevitable that that's got to be done but uh you know um my brother will tell you I give him a headache I love it because because i only had to deal with elections and I struggled like hell with it and he's got a whole constitution so I just love it. I find something else to think about.

Mr. Beg: Your question about turnout.

Ms. Nabou: Yes, sorry how did we address turnout, well obviously we struggled and said we could make voting compulsory we had very strong views about that. I don't know saying so before I answer the question by commissioner Conway about the low vote to turn out. I just wanted to also just quickly squeeze in and just suggest very strongly. I know you pressed for time but try as much as you can don't split up as a commission. It was put to us also at the law reform commission you know we don't have time split up, and we were very adamant is that when they when the public receives you, they want to know that you've given them the respect by coming as a full force not half a commission. I don't know whether you see this also with the TRC you know when they're halfing up half here it doesn't look as wholesome. I don't know optics I mean it's just very and there was the fact that each of you is going to visit every spot and hear the same thing. You will hear different things and when you do discuss it you fill each other's gaps so that was one of the things I just wanted to just briefly suggest very strongly uh also if you want to suggest if you want to um you know the time that you spent with each group keep it to two hours at a minimum.

You will understand that the conversation starts to taper off uh but you will get a lot a lot in done especially when you have a questionnaire and the conversation is more focused. Also, if you Mere will know also that we if you do have the funds uh try and get some somebody from the media house to actually follow you we had ministry of information. The quality of the audio wasn't that great the Hansard reporters struggled with the audio quality so.

Also, if you want to do video cutaways because you are answerable to the public of what you're doing out there you don't think about these things until right at the end you know the people want to see what are you doing. So, you need a proper agency to do that somebody ministry of information is really good, but they have all their work cut out for them. They're already assigned to do this this government events so if you do have the funds, you know get somebody. So, just to address the matter about the low voter turnout if you look at the stats itself progressively from 2014 to 2020, they have been getting lower and lower so we in the actual report. There is a I think an addendum with the actual law changes that we had suggested to make sure that that doesn't happen.

If you recall by 2022 was more and more draconian, we had the birth certificate the woman's birth certificate I mean I was party to that with the other woman who took it to court and then FICAC the threat of FICAC for political parties was becoming more and more loud you know and jail term was becoming very real so those are things that you can just strike out in the law. I think we've done a very good job of that knowing what we had experienced just on the on the maps and stuff the voter registration system what we found out during our consultation is that a lot of the voters had said I was assigned to vote here at this polling venue I was not. But I was a different polling venue of the same name that kept coming up you'll see it in the report and that continues I think to this day it's the voter registration system that is so rigid we've paid a lot of money for in 2012. It's so rigid you can't make any amendments to cost the people in constituencies so that's why we had to come up with a map.

We grouped polling venues together which are logistically together yeah on a map try to make the numbers as equal as possible 30 000 voters 30 000 and that's how we got the maps. Ideally that's not how you want to run elections you need to have a proper voter registration system I don't know FEO or EC might tell you that but that. To me is a red flag that's what gave birth to the glitch the last time because the baseline data is the voter registration and you know it's only when people raise to say.

I went there but it didn't I wasn't registered to vote there that's when it's picked up hopefully it will be it'll be better this time around so and um commissioner talked about the caretaker government i think there was a provision in 97 constitutions so that's where we came up with because it also came up, I think at FNU. Once the writ is issued it's not that they're going to have a free reign it's only about two months at best and you're not they're not going to be certainly not going to be preparing a new budget. Thank you.

Justice Fatiaki: We would forbid it now the other the other point about proportionality is that we decided as a commission because of the requirement of simplicity we would go with first past the post first past the post everybody knows about everybody knows how it's counted. you know. The only disadvantage of first past the post one of the very major disadvantages is quite often the person who actually gets elected doesn't get more than may not get more than 50, maybe less but that's why we needed the proportionality To actually deal with that aspect because it was important that you recognize that that was one of the shortcomings of the first past the post whilst we love the first past the post everybody knew about it even voters told us about it .

We want first past the post and it's like well okay we've had this since the 1970s everybody knows about first past the post said yes, they just put all the votes there, counted all like that done. We introduced and that's why we looked carefully at proportionality to try and balance some of those shortcomings so that's all I'm going to tell you about that but please read certainly read parts of the report that would interest you

Dr. Baba: Chair, i still have one last one for the judge is it okay to ask this is you might not want to answer but I would like to ask anyway so your report is will be going to parliament. I hope we can't say whether but we are looking at that being used in the elections my question is. You also think that we are on time because the election if I don't know the right word for it the lawyers have it, between August and February something is happening. I'm just looking at the practicality that you guys went through and every time you're talking, I'm feeling you from here no because. I do a lot of the work that you do you know really just on the road it gets really tiring um do you think we will be done by August and the elections will be guided by it because I thought something can also happen between August and February.

It's not nice to ask but it's bothering me and because you Judge Fatiaki could you please answer that because the doors are closed yes certainly Justice Fatiaki: I'll answer that I have no problems thank you I am such an opinionated person I'll answer anything thank you uh you have two aspects to your question the first is will this be made a parliamentary paper the answer that is no very simple no .This report was embargoed by government yes I know we also refuse to hear it Wadan banged his head against it got slapped around because of banging his head against it but the answer is no and that's why I was so happy that for this particular session the embargo got lifted so we could talk about it and we have much to talk about there is much in the report that would benefit our people if they could get it . But that is a decision that we don't make so the answer to your question is no, the other reason why I say no is because if the news is anything to go by I thought the prime minister said we're going to have an election under this 2013 constitution our next election.

I mean that's just public comment but as far as time i sort of smile to myself I'm thinking well they pushed us to do it within three months because we thought they were aiming for February 2026 and or 2027 You know if we finished ours within the time frame they'd have all this time to think about it you know bring in whatever but you know our report wasn't easy particularly when we tried to accommodate the 2013 constitution continuing and the election coming in that was our struggle whether you have time. I mean if they can't meet our time, I'm pretty confident they won't meet yours there's no way.

Dr. Baba: So, it's not probably it's through your chair so whatever we find and whatever is embargoed could live after the new government possibly because if you are embargoed, I'm hoping we are not going to be so that's the scenario. We it's still important the work you do I think because what you said today is really refreshing although now it's embargoed. In a university an embargo is 30 years so I hope there's nothing enough in the constitution that talks about embargoing 30 years so that all the participants die. For university PHD's yeah there's more good to Morgan Tuimalevano we embargoed his thesis at university yeah so yeah well .

Dr. Fatiaki: I hope I hope they're reading a different book uh and that embargo in their sense is about power as opposed to actual time.

Dr. Baba: Thank you Judge Fatiaki thank you chair I don't know if we're allowed to ask that but I did think I wanted to just have some clarity around our work and just do it and finish it on time thank you, thank you chair.

Ms. Nabou: it's not to say that you can't use if you wanted to take a certainly a big chunk of your work

Dr. Baba: The appendix one seems like our work we you know I already thought you know it can fit there here.

Justice Fatiaki: That's a small chapter and you have more power it's still 12 hours

Dr. Fatiaki: Chairman and members thank you I thought that i would not say anything here because uh obviously there's a conflict of interest in us sitting across the table from each other and I know that we will be meeting this evening over a bowl of kava where a lot of my questions can be addressed. However, I don't have any specific questions i have reflective ones generic reflections about our various roles you mentioned that the constitution was your elephant in the room i guess for us your report is the elephant in our work and that may explain why yours is embargoed I don't know that they can embargo ours because ours is from the President' office it's not from a solicitor general's office. I'm sorry the AG's so I I'm not sure that they can embargo this in reference to what Professor Nabobo was mentioned but, you can rightly understand that for us your report is definitely the elephant in our room.

If it were to be released to the public, I understand various snippets of it have been released by members of your commission and I think that goes to the to our respective roles. Now our terms of reference is to review the entire constitution which includes the composition of parliament that the methods of election the appointment of you know the speaker which would encompasses basically the entire 2013 constitution other than the directions we had in respect of section chapter 10 relating to amnesty which we understand that the supreme court indicated that we should not be reviewing as part of this review process. And again, we've posed questions to that effect in these in-camera sessions and they've been answered candidly by various participants. Having said that our terms of reference are significantly different to yours from what I can read obviously there are areas that we've been asked to address specifically in our terms of reference, that maybe your report doesn't really reflect because it's completely from different a different genesis and different intent in terms of what they're hoping to get from us versus what they hope to get from you.

I allude for instance our terms of reference we specifically requested to engage significantly the people of the republic of Fiji in meaningful consultations on the constitution which if I read that as a layperson and not as a lawyer, it means that we come up with is a product of we the people and reflects that not our collective wisdom on this panel, but really should for the bulk of it reflect that. I hear contradictory statements in terms of how you approach that issue you, hear the public say something , you hear a lot of it being said but you've decided that it's not an issue to be addressed because we've moved beyond that.

I don't want to get down like I say to specifics I for instance I hear in our terms of reference very specifically we have four or 30 to 40 percent of the terms of reference here specific ones alluding to our in addressing aspects of indigenous protection in our constitutional review. 30 percent of the question of the terms of reference ask us to do that , whereas for instance we have nothing asking us to comply with CEDAW requirements or women's representation in our terms of reference when we are asked to review the constitution whereas I see in yours for instance you're asked to do that . Rightly so and you come up with a recommendation you can understand that from our point of view. I mean comments such as women don't vote for women that's a problem i don't understand that if women don't vote for women, women don't vote for women.

For me to think otherwise is essentially to socially engineer the outcome of the election to reflect what i consider to be a progressive move I don't know how people i don't know whether the what you tell us is genuinely reflective of what the people want in all instances .Now i take for instance the issue in our terms of reference and ask us to address aspects of protecting indigenous rights what are your thoughts about communal voting I understand that that was dispensed out very early in the piece but what did the people say to you what did the people actually say to you, because obviously if you've dispensed with that at the outset then how on earth do you represent the views of the people again your terms of reference are different if you're going to comply with the UN requirements as far as democratic elections are concerned then maybe dispensing with ethnic considerations or communal representation would be appropriate.

In our terms of reference, it isn't we have to take that into account I think also the idea that we live in this society that is completely devoid of ethnic considerations is really quite silly. I think you've heard from the outset comments made to the effect that in social media today one of the most topical issues was raised for instance by the GCC the issue of a common name that's very emotional a lot of people are talking about it .It relates to the people of this country and so therefore, I think that the whole idea that you know communal representation which we had incidentally for the first from 1970 until 1987 should be dispensed with because it wasn't in keeping with the times therefore, then doesn't reflect what we are asked to do which is that we become a constitution written for the people of Fiji by the people of Fiji to be used for the governance of the people of Fiji .

Those are just reflections that i have in respect of some of the things that you've talked about. I'm sure we'll be talking about a lot more but I understand this aspect of the elephant in the room for you and for us. Secondary secondarily the complete approach to the issue of our review in the constitution in terms of our requirements under our terms of reference which I can tell you significantly differ from yours and, if we're to address our terms of reference then obviously there are aspects of your terms of reference that have affected how you've presented this report to us that will completely and utterly not apply because they actually contradict the requirements of our terms of reference.

Those are just some reflections there are no specific questions I guess the only question I had was really what was the feedback as far as the public was concerned in terms of communal seats my understanding from what you were saying is that they demanded it before first across the post you know my understanding is it was simple it was done we did it all the time we understood it they wanted it but you chose not to because we're with proportional representation.

I say these things because for us number one in our terms of reference is the need for us to engage the people in meaningful consultations which means we write our report it will be reflective of what they say and not what we as a panel decide is good for the country. Thank you .

Ms. Nabou

Commissioner Dr. John just to I'm sorry if we come across as giving mixed signals that was not our intent but on the way where you might have found that so for the for the bulging of the 18 year old .

You remember the chair said we had mixed views should revert to 21 years old 18 year the reason why we had to go back to 18 despite what many of those in the rural sectors told us was because as you know the EC chair is a high court judge and he would continually remind us about our obligations under CRC [convention of the rights of the child] which included that so that's why we had to give way to that. In terms of the women. I think women don't vote for women I think if you refer to page 86 of our report you could see quite clearly there the results speak for itself women if women did vote for women, we'd have 50 of parliament with women MPs.

Dr. Fatiaki: My comment there was what is the problem it's not what the outcome is the question is what is the problem is there a problem?

Ms. Nabou The problem is the voting system itself which was what we were we heard a lot the big man syndrome. The fact that in one constituency it's one person who's going to pull everybody up, the big man you know and the coattails that's why so everyone is going to vote for the big man.

Dr. Fatiaki: But along similar lines we're talking about not voting communally because we're moving away from this want us all to be uniform and you know vote for the best candidate and then at the same time you're telling us reserve seats for women because they're a special category that doesn't get represented. I'm not going to argue this I've got five daughters who will disagree with me okay but the point I'm making is that's confusing. You're saying remove communal considerations because we don't want Fijian ethnic and again i take you know the idea that i mean this was dispensed off with the idea that somehow the demographics are going to correct it

I can tell you categorically in 1970 where we had weighted communal seats the constitution of the government and parliament was significantly better representative than it is today where supposedly we should be fully represented. I think at that point in time we had something like five Indian ministers three part European and European ministers and maybe 16 or 17 iTaukei Fijian ministers.

Today it's 95 percent ITaukei, no minority and three and this is a supposed system despite the demographics. What does that say? Obviously, the system is not representative of what actually comes out and the idea that demographics is just going to take care of it doesn't work because if demographics is going to take care of it care of it then we would have those representations. We don't.

The 10 percent of the people of this country are not represented in parliament right now and certainly 30 percent of the indigen- sorry the ITaukei, the Indo-Fijian population is not represented in parliament right now. They probably represent only five percent ten percent even though their numbers are 30 percent so, the fact that the demographics are there no the engineering of this electoral system is what's produced this result. It's actually worse off than the results that we used to get before which was more representative even though it wasn't supposedly as progressive as the one that we have right now.

Ms. Nabou

Sorry chair you know on the on the issue of rights which are mostly you know to ensure that the state does not I'm not a lawyer but the state doesn't abuse its power it's more individual.

One thing that did drop off from the 2013 constitution that dealt with that ethnic component is group rights which catered for all our and it just totally I mean the guy draft did try to bring it in but the fact that it got totally you know which I think is a bone of contention among the ITaukei especially.

Dr. Fatiaki:

And Commissioner Deidre just in respect of you know aspects to do without drafting so we've given ourselves a month to go through the past constitutions including the 2013, a month to have in camera the sort of invited and then we disperse for two months and the last two months is spent drafting with people who are. I understand we have seconder drafters that have come by assistance from abroad as well as consultants and specialists and that's our timeline that we're working on. In respect of our divisions, we agreed like you that we should stay together as a panel so for all major consultations that we will have in every major center we will all be together.

We will only split up when we go out for instance to the islands to much smaller population center's and we only split up into two for those but every we will all be together as a group all seven for those consultations to the point that you made in respect of our public consultations. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, it's 1.30 now we've been here two and a half hours we had allocated two hours for this consultation. Is there any other NATO which the commission of the chairman would like to raise?

Justice Fatiaki: Mr. Chairman thank you very much. I'm pretty much exhausted everything I want to say. Obviously, I'm going to pick up with my brother where we left off this evening and I think the big bowl is definitely deserved the very big bowl but no yeah that's the important I think I think the importance of it of our work in your work became clear today.

I have told him I am your elephant he said nah we are no elephants you know being the hunter that he is he said we shoot all the elephants. I said no we are the elephant you will find out. I think today's session has opened his eyes to exactly how big we are an elephant in this room relative to that particular topic and, if the availability of our report is able to provoke your thinking assist your writing .There is much in here that is uncontroversial and um you know I would urge you because writing something as important as you're involved in if you can get as much help as you can you know then I suggest you take advantage of that.

So, thank you very much for your patience thank you very much for giving us more than the time slot I requested but you know when discussions are interesting time seems almost irrelevant yes and you know unless you shut me up, I'll speak all day. So, thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may thank you very much for today's session. First and foremost, I have to thank you Judge Fatiaki for asking for this report through the commission our commission if it was not for your request, I would not have gotten this so I thank you very much indeed for sending me that email if I could get a copy of the report for today's discussions. Going through the report last night I haven't asked any questions today because I realized the work that you have done is applicable to us and very important to this commission here and most of the things that have been done here it also affects what the Constitutional Review Committee is going to deal with.

The recommendations I have seen the recommendations and I don't want to ask questions about those right now we'll have to discuss with the commission so thank you very much for having taken that or having asked me or directed me to get this report. Fortunately, the SG was agreeable and then we had to get the report from the Law Reform Commission yesterday afternoon. Each commissioner now has an electronic copy which was sent to us by one of our staff Leighton and I'm sure they're going to read it properly and then it will assist us a lot.

I was listening to the discussions and it has been a lot of assistance and I thank you and your team for it. Matters have been raised by my colleagues we'll discuss those as we go along and we'll take into consideration what we have heard from you and what we will read and then we'll decide what sort of things we are going to recommend to his excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji. With those few words I thank you very much indeed for the consultation today.

It has been enlightening, it has been eye-opening and it has been very very very good I can say that. So, with those few words thank you very much and if there is anything else if there's anything else from your side or from our side we will be in touch. We will definitely be in touch if we need any opinion particularly you, your lordship, our judge.

Now I have one last question please pardon me. This was asked to Mr. Judge Mataitoga and Judge Temo in relation to the separation of powers. As a former judge I'd like to hear from you in relation to this.

Section 106 the appointment of judges. We are talking the constitution here not only the electoral commission. Section 106 the appointment of judges.

It says that the attorney general must be consulted. As a former judge, Judge Fatiaki, what is your view in relation to this? Section 106 the appointment of judges. Particularly subsections one and two. That one there, that limp of it, the consultation by the AG. What is your opinion on the separation of powers? If you may.

There has been talk that there's a lot of power given to the attorney general and it's sort of he's in control of every ministry.

Now we have here the judiciary or the judicature which should be independent. If we have the attorney general coming in and to be consulted on every appointment of judges, does that leave the judiciary impartial? Is there a breach of the separation of powers?

Justice Fatiaki: I think it is something that has happened in former during my time. It was never written into the constitution. I think the writing into the constitution is problematic. Why? Because whilst it would not appear extraordinary, prime ministers do consult their legal advisors for advice. That's totally understandable but it's the writing into the constitution that presents problems.

What are they? They're problems of perception and that's what it is. It's the perception that independence has been compromised. And so, my short answer to you is that that should be taken out. It is unnecessary. It has never been necessary. It has occurred.

Everybody knows in the past but it's never needed to be written into the mother tongue that does present a perception of compromise which I think is unfortunate.

Mr. Valenitabua: It is the duty of the attorney general anyway to advise the prime minister Justice Fatiaki: But it doesn't have to be written in the constitution. In fact, it shouldn't. Forget about the fact that too much power is given to them. But people are saying that because it's written but informally AGs are very powerful people. They are. I mean the only problem is, the only other problem is, I'm sure it's in the constitution but it doesn't, you're in the constitution and they tell you well it's just consultation. You don't actually have to accept it. And that would be written. Consultation means blah blah blah but you don't have to accept it. But it's not necessary. The important thing is the perception.

And if it presents a perception that you know the AG has a direct involvement, has a constitutional involvement, I think that's unfortunate. Because it's never needed to be in previous constitutions. But we all know attorney generals speak to their prime ministers and vice versa. We'd be just pretending if it didn't happen. It does. But it doesn't have to be in the blue book.

Ms. Deidre: I think that the additional thing that yes it will happen in practice but what you've got here is a constitutional obligation on the prime minister to actually consult with his AG, his or her AG.

Mr. Valenitabua: Because in the 1997 constitution it was not that case. It was not the case. The appointment would go to the standing committee, parliamentary committee, not the attorney general.

Justice Fatiaki: You know it certainly, definitely, I would strongly recommend that that particular consultation be removed for the reasons that I've seen. Very well.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much Judge Fatiaki, Ms. Brooks and Ms. Qoro. It's been a pleasure. If we have something to talk about, please check your emails.

----------End of Session [15-4-2026] ----------

Jioji Kotobalavu

Presentation of Mr . Joji Kotobalavu & Mr.Emitai Boladuadua

Date: 16/04/2026

Time: 2.00PM-4.05PM

Mr. Valenitabua: It is a pleasure having you gentlemen here today. We really appreciate your attendance.

Mr. Boladuadua: Can you hear it?

Mr. Kotobalavu: I can't, so he'll translate for me because that's why I have him here. But the important thing is for you to hear me. And if you ask questions, he'll take them down and then I shall answer.

Mr. Valenitabua: We welcome you. We know that you know why we are here, the Constitution Review Committee. We have received your submissions and we await your oral submissions this afternoon. I will not say more. I will now pass the mic to you, Mr. Kotobalavu, to make your submissions to the Commission. Thank you.

Mr. Kotobalavu: Can I begin? Alright, well thank you so much for giving us time to appear before you. Now I had asked for an in-camera session with you because I did not want the media to be present when I talk about some of the concerns of the Great Council of Chiefs. It is better that we discuss in confidence. And secondly, thank you so much for giving us this time because I wanted to be of help to you in identifying key issues of the Constitution, which in my view must be covered in any review of the 2013 Constitution. So, hopefully, in the summary of issues I have identified, that will help you in your wider consultations with the public. Because you go with particular topics. Don't ask the public for any submission because you'll get all kinds of rubbish. It has to be focused. Focus on particular topics, subjects. So, I hope that in the process I will be helping you in identifying some of those topics.

So, what I'm talking to is this briefing paper, Summary of Recommendations. So, we begin with, I am suggesting, some improvements to the preamble of the Constitution. This is important because it reflects some of the concerns conveyed to you by the Great Council of Chiefs.

The preamble. What is the preamble of the Constitution? It says, the preamble is essentially the introduction. It is to explain who we are as the people of Fiji. It is to point out significant events in our history and then to declare our common and collective aspiration. That's the purpose of the first part, the introduction. So, the preamble is structured into two parts. General recognitions. The first part, general statements of recognition. The second part are declarations.

Now, in my review, the declarations in the first page of the Constitution is okay. Very good. There is no need for any name change. But, the recognition part, we need to make some very important additions.

And hopefully this will satisfy the Great Council of Chiefs and the Christian Churches. Very important. If you want to counter any proposal for declaring a Christian state, you must state this in the preamble.

To satisfy the Methodists especially that the arrival of Christianity has been recognized. So, I'm suggesting the recognitions part in the preamble needs some additions. To begin with, paragraph one in the declaration must recognize expressly that the iTaukei and Rotuma communities were the first to arrive and settle in Fiji. And by virtue of that, they are entitled to be referred to and respected as indigenous communities. Okay? So, that's paragraph one. And the rights conferred to them in the Constitution. Because the current statement simply assumes that we are the iTaukei and the Rotuma are the indigenous people. What we need to say, how, how, how, why, what is the basis of that? Because they were the first to arrive in this country. Very important. And that will help with the argument about the name. Because, in my view, it satisfies the requirement iTaukei because they were the first to arrive in this country. So, that's paragraph one.

Paragraph two, it is very important that the preamble recognizes the arrival of Christianity in Fiji. And the profound impact of this on the way of life of the people. Remember cannibalism? Okay? All that came to an end. And the explanatory part explains. Three Tahitian catechist teachers arrived in Oneata, my island. They're buried there. And not far from where they're buried is a water hole which never runs dry. It's amazing. You know, this island is blessed because these catechists were the first to arrive. They arrived in Lakeba and then they transferred to Oneata. That's 1830.

And then in 1835, two Western missionaries arrived at Lakeba. You know, this is very important for the Methodist people to recognize. The Constitution recognizes the arrival of Christianity. So, here, they were Western missionaries, Reverend William Cross and Reverend David Kagil. They arrived at Lakeba in 1835. So, I trust you will recognize the significance of recognition of this in the preamble. The arrival of Christianity and its profound impact on the way of life of the people thereafter.

Okay. Number three. This is what the great Council of Chief was after. And you must put it in. Recognition of the significance of the iTaukei of the Dead of Session of 1874. Okay? Very important. Because, let me explain. Recognizes great significance to the iTaukei of the Dead of Session on October 10, 1874. When, in reciprocation to the High Chiefs of Fiji, ceding sovereignty over their islands to the British Crown, Great Britain recognized their rights under English common law. You know, the lawyers know this. Under English common law, to their ancestral tribal land. See, that's the first. That's the first thing the British granted in return. Okay? Ownership in common by the ITaukei, under British common law, of their ancestral land together with natural resources.

Number two, you know, based on the custom, usage, and tradition. Number two is reciprocation to the dead. Great Britain recognized the right of self-determination of the ITaukei to administer their governance through their provinces. You know, sometimes you question, why is it that in the governance of Fiji, we have a separate Ministry of iTaukei Affairs, and they administer the 14 provinces. It starts from this. It must be recognized, right? It's their right of self-determination. So, there's a connection. Because if people ask, you know, why, you know, we used to have advisory council for the non-iTaukei. They're gone. So why are the iTaukei being privileged? It derives from this. It's their right of self-determination to govern themselves through their provinces.

Number three, in reciprocation to the deed of cession, sovereignty over Fiji to the British Crown, Great Britain recognized the authority of the chiefs over their people, provided they exercised that power, authority, according to law. That's why the GCC has to go back to the constitution. They have to come back to the constitution. They're right, as individual chiefs, as a collective, the GCC is the apex body of the iTaukei. So, it must be recognized in the 2013 constitution. It was taken out by the Bainimarama. So, it's very important that this is recognized right from the beginning in the preamble.

And then, next paragraph, very important. John, where's John? John here? Very important for the Rotuman's. Because I always feel that the Rotuman's have not been justly and fairly treated. You see, at the time of the deed of cession, the Methodist Church, they always referred to "Viti kei Rotuma" Fiji and Rotuma, because they were separate. They were separate jurisdictions. The high chiefs of Fiji ceded sovereignty over Fiji to Great Britain. Separately, that was 1874. In 1879, some say 1881, the chiefs of Rotuma ceded sovereignty over the islands to the British Crown. And in reciprocation, Great Britain did the same with them.

It must be recognized in the preamble, because I will further argue that in the body of the constitution, there must be, in addition to the express recognition of the ITaukei, the right of self-determination of the GCC to be in the constitution, the right of Rotuman people to be recognized. Because their right of self-determination is registered in Rotuma, the Rotuma Act. The iTaukei, their right to their lands is recognized in the iTaukei Lands Act, together with Section 28 and 30 of the constitution. Rotuma needs to be recognized. So, to begin with, it has to be stated in the preamble. So that's Rotuma.

And for paragraphs 5 and 6, it's okay. We just cite what is there at the moment. The recognition of the arrival in Fiji of descendants of indentured workers from British India and Melanesia, meaning Solomon Islands and Vanuatu. You know, this is another forgotten community. You know, when I was a child, I was attending school in Lautoka. Many of the students were from this Solomon Islands settlement in Navutu, in Lautoka, here in Suva, in Wailoku. You have a Melanesian community. They're forgotten. They have no rights. So, it is time that they are recognized. And so it's there. So that's all about in the preamble. Needs improvement by the insertion of those paragraphs. It's all about recognition. Does anybody have any questions?

Mr. Valenitabua: Just carry on, sir. Just carry on.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay, now we move on to the second subject, which is, okay, just on my proposals, improvements to the electoral provision of the current. Number one, you must impress support of government, parliament, in your report that before the general elections, which must be held between August and the first week of January 2007, okay, the Electoral Act of 2014 must be altered, must be amended, so that the design of the voting form. Remember, okay, currently the voting form consists of numbers. Candidates are listed as numbers. Very confusing. That's why one or two people have got in, because they thought they were voted for by Bainimarama. So that needs to be altered so that the voting form lists the candidate in terms of name, party affiliation, and a photograph.

Makes it easier for a candidate to pick, you know, the candidates of their free choice. So that's one.

Number two, the 2013 Constitution itself, the electoral provisions of the 2013 Constitution. Now some of you may, you know, might have read that long article by Wadan Narseys, Professor Wadan Narsey, in yesterday's paper about their report. You know, that's utter rubbish. You know, I tell you, you ignore, there must be a reason why the government has not released their report. They have gone into so much detail about the fairness of the system of election. Make sure that 25% are women. You know, when you study an election system, there are two aspects that you need to take into account simultaneously. First, the voting system of citizens voting for their members of parliament. Second, the impact of the voting, the system of elections on the kind of government that will result. Okay? My concern with what they have recommended is that we will end up like New Zealand. Okay? Endless, okay, coalitions, and, you know, there's no majority government.

You can't have an effective government unless you have a majority government. No witness. After the 2014 elections, 2020 elections, when the government won with a clear majority, very good. They govern with clear decisions because they will not be challenged. That's what I mean by majority government. That's the kind, so in other words, we have an election system that produces that.

Now, right now, Rabuka's government started with a big mess in that they needed Sodelpa with their three to give them the majority. They demanded everything. They demanded the key ministries of education and business affairs. They demanded ambassadorships. But all that has gone in ten former members of the Fiji First crossed the floor and joined Rabuka's party. So, now we have a majoritarian government.

So, the point I'm making is that when you consider, okay, the efficacy of the election system recommended by the judges for the election commission, and the current one in 2013, always bear in mind not just the system of election, but the impact of it on the kind of government it produces. We want an election system that is fair in terms of its representation of individuals and communities, but also fair in terms of the kind of government it will yield. So, I'm all in favor of retaining the system in the 2013 constitution with some minor adjustments.

Minor adjustments needed for two fundamental reasons. Because currently, the election system is resulting in the election only of iTaukei and Indo-Fijian MP. And what you're going to see with the rise in iTaukei population from 57% to, I think, 68%, the number of iTaukei MP's will continue to rise. he Indo-Fijian population is coming down. Indo-Fijian MP's are coming down. So, we need to make some amendments to make it possible for other minority communities to be elected. That's one. Okay?

Another current, very unfair aspect of the current system is the 5% threshold. The 5% threshold on the basis that the whole Fiji is one undivided constituency. So, 5% at the last election was set at 23,000 votes. So, in other words, Mahendra Chaudhary's party and Savenaca Narube failed to reach that target of 5%, the 23,000. So, we need to address it because it's very unfair to small parties and independent candidates. So, on the basis of that, all that I'm suggesting is we go back to what Professor Yash Ghai had recommended. Very good. Because Professor Yash Ghai had taken into account the recommendations of, you know, the John Sami, those who voted that Mahendra Chaudhary. And essentially, Professor Yash Ghai recommended that instead of one single undivided constituency, you create three regionals. Central Division, Western Division, Northern Division. Okay? And the seats will be allocated accordingly.

In addition, the Eastern Division, because of its scattered nature and the low population, should be allowed to elect their members on simple majority votes. So, I stick to that. Very simple. I don't go into other details. Now, why the Wadan Narsey team went into dealing with other women? See, my view is that when you look at the election system in the 2013 elections, don't just look at the electoral provision. Also look at other provisions.

Now that we're going to restore the Senate in the 2013 elections, we're going to restore the Senate. Okay? Where the Bose Levu Vakaturaga will nominate 14 members, the Council of Rotuma will nominate one, the Prime Minister will nominate eight, and the Leader of the Opposition will nominate seven. You know what? Those 15 nominated by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition can make up for women representation.

In fact, by that method, you know, women selected will be, you know, much better calibre to go and contribute in Parliament. People like the Vice-Chancellor of the FNU, the University of Fiji. Okay? See this Chinese lady? Who's the Chinese lady? She's done so much for this country. We've never had a Chinese. She's a woman. She's a wife of...

Professor Baba: Seeto. Yeah, yeah. Jenny Sito.

Mr. Kotobalavu: Jenny Sito. Yeah, Jenny Sito. Jenny Sito. She's a woman. That's the kind of woman. Yeah. You, see? We're now bringing to the Parliament quality women, not just, you know, women who got in last time and who cheated on their dresses.

Secondly, you need to take into account culture. You know, in the iTaukei culture, the women have their place. They sit at the bottom. The men does all the decision-making. So, what if you elect so many women? Where do you get your ministers? And if you make six women to be full ministers, you know, a lot of people is going to be very uncomfortable with it. You know, when they perform the iTaukei ceremony, you're welcome. You know, men presenting the award to women, we need to be sensitive. So, my view, the increased representation of professional women through the Senate is much better. And their role is to contribute to the debate on bills and policies in the Senate. And so don't just look at the electoral provision for the representation of women. Look also at the Senate.

Does that make sense? Right. So that's the election system. By the creation of the three regional constituencies, Central Division, Western Division, Northern Division, hopefully we're going to see some, in addition to the iTaukei and Indo-Fijian, some from the other communities. And also, the 5% threshold will be brought down from circa 23,000, 25,000 to about around 15,000. That's more manageable. That's fairer. Very simple. And Rabuka knows that the current system is very favorable. And I'm sure he will resist any fundamental change. Because last election, he got 79,000 votes. This time around, he's going to exceed that. So, bear in mind when you make a recommendation. I'm sure this is why the result of the other commission has not been published. I don't know why it has not been released. But I suspect because people have calculated the impact on election results and system of government. It will lead to instability. Okay. It's the system of election.

Now we move on. Restore the Senate in the Constitution. There are various specifications. Restore the Senate to allow the GCC to nominate 14 members, allow the Council of Rotuma to nominate one member, and to allow the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to, in their nomination of 15 members, to make up for the gaps in representation in the House, lower House. For example, more women, professional women, okay, from the different ethnic groups. You make up for that. Since there is a third couple representing from the minority communities in the lower House, make up for that by nomination. So that's why the Senate is very important for restoration. Okay.

So, it's the upper House. And it will satisfy the great Council of Chiefs because it gives them an opportunity to review legislation, policies, and then the Rotuman's likewise, to ensure that nothing ever harms the well-being and interest of their community. Because under the iTaukei Act and the Rotuma Act, the responsibility of the great Council of Chiefs and the Council of Rotuma is to look after the good governance and well-being of their communities. That's their role in that Senate. So that's it. Restore the Senate for all those reasons.

Now, restore the GCC. This is a big issue because without consulting anybody, Bainimarama abolishes them, they have a right to be restored. They are the apex body of the iTaukei administration. They have a right to be restored because their duty under the Act is to look after the good governance and well-being of the iTaukei. By restoring the GCC in the Constitution, that will then provide the legal basis for them to make nominations to the Senate. You see, the two go together.

Likewise, for the first time, I am strongly urging upon this Commission to recommend that in addition to the recognition of the great Council of Chiefs, the Council of Rotuma be also recognized because they have their own separate legislation. How do you justify the Council of Rotuma nominating a member of the Senate? The legal basis must be recognition in the Constitution of the Rotuma Council itself. It's set up in the Rotuma Act that just like the ITaukei Act, the role of the Council is to look after the well-being and good governance of their community. So, they must be treated equally. It goes back to the preamble, remember? There's a paragraph there to recognize the legal session of Rotuma. You can see the linkages.

It starts from the preamble, and now we see it in the body. Okay, so that's restoration of the Senate, great Council of Chiefs, and now Council of Rotuma. This is going to be a very interesting subject for you.

You will need to consult again with the great Council of Chiefs because who? Who appoints the President? Under the 1997 Constitution, the President is appointed by and the Vice President is appointed by the great Council of Chiefs. But under the 2013 Constitution, the President, like the Office of Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition, are all appointed by comparative elections in the House of Representatives. So, we have to decide.

Do we go back to the great Council of Chiefs deciding who our President should be? Or should we leave it, we continue the current function together with the qualifications for appointment as set out in the current Constitution? Now obviously some of these young chiefs who are making submissions to you have in mind, you know, their ambition. They can't get to high positions through elections, so they're hoping that by virtue of their position as Vice President of the Great Council of Chiefs, that one day they're going to be appointed by the GCC as President of the Republic of the Fiji. Okay, we now live in a parliamentary democracy. We have to stand firm. So therefore, my strong recommendation is that the GCC no longer has any role in the appointment of the President. The only role of the GCC is to, in the Senate, to make sure that no legislation, no policy in the House ever harms the interests of the Fiji. The same for Rotuma. Okay, now this is going to be a very important one for you because I'm sure the GCC will have very strong views on it. But democracy, you know, let me tell you about a little bit of history.

When you go back to the 1930s up to the coup of 87, political leadership amongst the iTaukei has always been through our traditional chiefs. You know, I joined the Colonial Service in 1968-69, and I was taken to the Prime Minister's office. And there I used to attend, as a junior secretary, a meeting of the Council, the equivalent of Cabinet, chaired by the Governor. Okay, the members of all, you know, high-ranking 'kaivalagi', officials of the colonial government. The only local representation were the paramount chiefs Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara ,Ratu Sir Edward Cakobau, Ratu Penaia Kadavulevu and Ratu George. Amazing. And I know that leadership. Then the coup of 87 happened. A few years later, in 1999, the Chiefs of Fiji and the people say, let's set up our own political party to ensure that the interests and the rights of the iTaukei are well protected. So, they decided to found a party, the SVT, [Soqosoqo Vakavulewa ni iTaukei]. So, there was an election competition. And the two candidates were Sitiveni Rabuka, the coup leader, who was declared a hero by all in iTaukei, and Adi Lala Mara, the wife of the Prime Minister, Ratu Mara. And who won? Rabuka. From that moment onwards, okay, political leadership amongst the iTaukei has been through democratic elections. No longer through chiefly succession, chiefly status. So that was a key moment. Rabuka was a, he broke the tradition. So that today, the iTaukei accepts political leadership. It must be by a democratic election, no longer by chiefly status. So those in the GCC who are aspiring to restore the arrangement in the 1997 constitution that they should appoint a president, I think they're out of date. We now live in a system of parliamentary democracy. That requires a lot of courage from you. Stand firm. That's what I want to say on that.

So, on the common name, now everybody knows about that. I believe that the iTaukei economy captures the rights of the iTaukei interest. Because first, they were the first to arrive in Fiji. The iTaukei. They were the first nation. You know, the iTaukei and Rotuman communities. They were the first to arrive and settle in Fiji. Therefore, they are British indigenous communities. They are the iTaukei.

Second, they are the iTaukei for another reason. Because of their deductions. Through that, the British government recognized their right to their lands, their natural resources, the right of self-determination, the right of the chiefs. Very important. So, iTaukei, this is if we are referring to ourselves as a society. You know, sociologically.

Who are we as a society? We are made up of multi-ethnic communities. And so, within that, to me, it is proper for the iTaukei to be referred to as the iTaukei. Because of what I've explained. But, if we are referring to ourselves as a state, it's different. We're not talking about ourselves as a society, but as a state. The sovereign democratic republic of a state of Fiji The state republic of Fiji. Okay? The foundation of our identity is our citizenship. Irrespective of our ethnic, religious, or cultural background, as citizens, we are equal in our fundamental rights and freedom. We are individuals. We are not members of a community. So, in looking at identity names, we need to look at the context.

If you look at the context of we as a society, then iTaukei has every right to be called iTaukei. Okay? The others, Indochina, etc. But, if we are looking at ourselves as a state, the republic of the state of Fiji, then we, as a political community, we are made up of individual persons with equal fundamental rights. And what we have in common is our common citizenship. And what that confers upon us, equal rights. Therefore, it is only natural that we should all be called Fijians.

Now, if the GCC still don't have the way we are, you have only one other option to consider, and that is to recommend that we change the title of Fiji instead of, as a state, instead of calling ourselves as a sovereign, democratic republic of the state of Fiji, we call ourselves the Republic of the Fiji Islands. Then, everybody, all the citizens of the state of the Fiji Islands can be called Fiji Islanders. Thus, reserving the name Fijian to the iTaukei, if they want to. So, my suggestion to you, just present these two options. Let the government and parliament decide.

Last one. The procedures to be followed when government and parliament consider your report. And I ask for this in-camera seating because I don't want to discuss this in the presence of the media. And also, because I feel that on this particular issue, Chairman, I would recommend to you that you call personally on Prime Minister Sitiveni Rabuka and ask for his views, his guidance. Okay? You are required to submit your report by the end of August. The supervisor of elections already announced that elections must be held between August this year and the first week of January next year. There just isn't time for government and parliament to process your report. Okay? Get it through parliament and then the referendum. Okay? It's unrealistic. And also, in order for your report and recommendations to be given fair and just treatment, I would respectfully suggest, Chairman, that you call on Prime Minister Sitiveni Rabuka and suggest to him. Okay? Because of time constraints. Okay?

And second, in order that the report of the commission is dealt with in a non-partisan, okay, combined government and opposition approach, you proceed this year with elections in December. Go ahead. Under the current constitution. That would be very good for him because he'd want re-election. No problem.

It will also give us an opportunity to gauge, okay, the effectiveness of this constitution in producing the results of the election of MP's and the kind of government that flows from that. But, so essentially, for Rabuka to agree that, okay, they receive your report. Okay? Because you are required to submit by August. They table it in Parliament and ask the Speaker, Mr. Speaker, okay, we're tabling this report. Okay, we request, can you hold on to this until after the election? When the government and the opposition are elected following the German elections, okay, this report should then be considered. So, in the meantime, hold the elections within the time frame already set by the Supervisory Election.

In other words, as of latest by first week of January, 2027. And then, after the elections, after Parliament has elected the Prime Minister, the leader of the opposition, they should then, as was done by Rabuka and Jay Ram Reddy in the formulation of the 1990 constitution, adopt a joint united approach. And that is, for the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition to jointly move a motion to establish in the House a Joint Select Committee on the Review of the Constitution with the PM as Chair and the leader of the opposition as Deputy Chair. It is a joint committee that looks at your report as a unified body, as a constituency body. See, not partisan, not just the government. You know, it's a combination, government, opposition.

And the aim is to secure, in looking at your recommendation, is to secure unanimous support for what they would have to produce, the 2013 Amendment Bill. That bill, the aim, the objective, is to have it approved by the House of Representatives by unanimous vote. Wouldn't that be wonderful? Because we're acting as one nation.

In other words, that's very important because in our constitution, requires two kinds of actions. First is to establish its legality. By going through the constitutional process, the process set up in the constitution, first reading, second reading, third reading, so on, that's legality.

So, by processing the 2013 Constitution Amendment Bill through the process, that satisfies the legality requirement. In order to satisfy the other requirement, which is democratic legitimacy, it requires, okay, the Constitution Amendment Bill requires the support not only of the general public that you will be consulting, but all the members of parliament, because all the members of the House of Representatives will be acting as representatives of the people. When they put all of them, irrespective of their party, put their signature in favor of that bill, they are establishing the democratic legitimacy of the new amendment constitution. And then after that, the ratification in the referendum will be an easy process. And thereafter, when the constitution bill is promulgated, you know what it is going to be called? It's not going to be called 213 Constitution, so and so. It will be called Constitution of the Republic of Fiji or Constitution of the Republic of Fiji Island 2027.

Does it make sense? Okay? It will be a new constitution. And it will fulfill, okay, what is stated right in the preamble. Remember, the beginning of the preamble, we are the people of Fiji. Then that usage is then justified.

If a unified approach is adopted in looking at your report and your processing of it, and the 2013 constitution amendment bill. Okay? That's all I have to say. Thank you. Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu Mr. Kotobalavu. Very enlightening. The commissioners might want to ask a number of questions.

Mr. Kotobalavu: Yes, yes, yes. Would that be all right? You can ask questions now. Yes, yes, yes. He will write down the questions for me because at an old age, I can't hear properly. So go ahead, please.

Mr. Valenitabua: I'm reaching out for the 1990, for the constitution prior to Mr. Jai Ram Reddy and Mr. Rabuka. That was the 1990 constitution. The amendment process in the 1990 constitution what I'm trying to get at, what I'm trying to get at is the bi -partisan suggestion. In the 2013 constitution, there is a provision, there is a provision for amendment in chapter 11 of the constitution. That is the amendment provision. It does not say anything about a bi-partisan process. Could you please enlighten us on how we can go around that constitutional provision?

Mr. Boladuadua: In the 2013 constitution, there is an amendment provision in chapter 11. Chapter 11. There is no mention of a bi-partisan process. Can you suggest a way of coming up with a bi-partisan process?

Mr. Kotobalavu: Okay, it's not written anywhere. So, it's a parliamentary process. They meet after the election following the appointment of the Prime Minister by election and the leader of the opposition. They consult. You know, it'll be an act of restatement by the Prime Minister. He's acting about being a political leader. I am doing this in the interest of the nation. And this is what happened in the formulation of the 1997 constitution. Prime Minister convenes a meeting with the leader of the opposition. They talk, right? For the amendment to the constitution.

Let us adopt a national approach, a united national approach, a bi-partisan approach. Let js agree jointly moves a motion to propose that the House establishes a joint select committee on the review of the constitution. The objective is that this joint committee with the Prime Minister as chair, the leader of the opposition as deputy chair, is then to be tasked with the duty to critically examine your report and recommendation. And then, maybe with the assistance of the Law Reform Commission, draft the 2013 amendment bill. That's how it's done. It's a parliamentary process. t's not written anywhere. That's why I'm suggesting your consultation with Mr. Rabuka. First, for him to agree that we must proceed first with the election because of a time constraint.

Second, for him to strongly suggest to him, okay, you and Jai Ram Reddy very successfully, outstanding, produced the 1997 constitution via a joint united approach, government opposition. Can you do the same after the election? After the election of U.S. Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, can the two of you agree to table a joint motion in the House proposing the establishment of a joint select committee on the constitution review? The purpose of the joint committee is then to consider, scrutinize your report and draft the 2013 amendment bill. And then, the aim, because you are working together, is to secure unanimous approval for this bill.

Just as they did with the 1997. This is what I'm saying. If they secure unanimous approval for the bill, then that fully satisfies the other requirement of constitution making, full democratic legitimacy. Justifying what will come out after the referendum, justifying the statement right at the beginning of the preamble, we the people of Fiji, this is our constitution. You can't, you know, we the people of Fiji cannot be used unless, unless the bill is unanimously approved. So, that's the process. It's not written in law. It's an act of statesmanship. This is why the consultation with the Prime Minister is very important. He knows. Softened him up by telling him, you know, no doubt he will win the next election because already in the last election he got 79,000 votes. Please turn him around. He'll be even more. And he's already, his party already has a two-thirds majority in the House. Right now, they have a two-thirds majority necessary for amendment. But they shouldn't do it. They should not adopt a bi-partisan approach. So, I'll come again. You know, your consultation with the Prime Minister is going to be very, very important. The sooner you go and see him, the better. To guide the work of your coalition.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, sir.

Dr. Gounder: So, I just want to thank Mr. Kotobalavu for coming here and for your presentation. It's been very enlightening. And you have been a civil servant for a very, very long time. And we thank you for your service. And thank you for the wisdom that you have shared with us today. Thank you very much.

Mr. Kotobalavu: I think you should thank Mr. Emitai because I think he was the teacher of most of you, right? I should say, Mr. Fatiaki, he and I, when we were together at QVS, your father was our biology teacher. So, it's a long connection. And some of you were when he was at RKS. So, he's a very old man with big connections. Thank you, thank you,

Dr. Baba: ` Thank you so much. Through you Chair Of course, today has been very good for us. We've heard a few suggestions so far. But today we were also talking about what you've just answered us. As of yesterday, a number of us were worrying about the process. How do we move, eh? So that this, what we are doing, will become a map to the future where we all live together comfortably. But I'd just like to also add in terms of your work at ESCAP that we want to recognize the weight of your contribution, both of you today. Because not only did you head ESCAP for young lecturers like Nilesh, may not know that you were advising economic development for the Pacific. That some of us don't know.

I'd like to recognize the weight of your suggestion today. Not only that, but you do, you have worked under how many Prime Ministers of the country, where you are telling Sir to go and talk to the Prime Minister. I think that one, even if everything else is taken on board, is written, that's the step that we needed to be told today, I felt. So, thank you. Thank you for your wise counsel. When you two were coming, I thought personally, having worked with you, the both of you, that this is going to be fascinating. And thank you for making it here. Thank you, Ambassador, for coming with Sir. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: If I may, Chair, Mr. Kotobalavu and Mr. Boladuadua as the youngest, I won't belabor the point of this commission, I want to convey my sincere gratitude to you both. It has been a very moving experience to hear your contributions. We look at you and see our parents and ourselves in future years, and if in future we remain as passionate and as involved in the future of this country as you are, I think we have much success to look forward to.

A shared future, as Professor Baba has mentioned. Something I also wanted to extend gratitude for is also an opportunity to move from politicking to statesmanship or states personship, and I think that's all, it's become all the rarer in the current generation, something that we have a great appetite to see, and something that we also have an opportunity to encourage with your kind suggestions to us today. So, I just wanted to extend amongst many things, give gratitude to you, Sirs, for advising us today.

Mr. Beg: Chair, through you, Mr. Kotobalavu and Master Emitai, thank you very much for your deliberations today. I thoroughly enjoyed it. Mr. Kotobalavu, can you hear me? Shall I shout a little bit? Can you hear me? Can you hear him?

Mr. Boladuadua: Can you hear him?

Mr. Kotobalavu: No.

Mr. Beg: That's alright. I just want to say thank you. I will make it later on. The part I liked the most the part I liked the most was your talk around the Senate, in how that could be a reinforcing foundation for stability, also bringing back some insanity as well, the way you put it. Insanity, sorry. My apologies. But yeah, I kind of found that very riveting in the way you stress that across. And to you, Master Matai, thank you very much for being the right-hand man you are and I really appreciate you being here today and thank you for your presence.

Mr. Boladuadua: I just reiterate the point that, you know, in order for you to achieve enormous success in what you will produce and the way it's going to be used by the government and the opposition, hopefully after the next election, the hope is that they will adopt a united bi-Partisan approach so that the end product of what will emerge constitutional PD 2027 was promulgated with the unanimous support of the House of Representatives and a very high degree of support in the referendum to ratify the bill.

I think that should be your aim, you know, that for all your hard work, you know, it should not be dealt with on a bi-partisan, because it will flop. But if you're able to persuade the Prime Minister that after the next election they adopt the same approach he adopted with Jay Ram Reddy in the preparation formulation of the 1970 constitution, you will achieve tremendous success and he'll take credit for it. He'll take credit because it's an act of impeachment by him.

But you as a commission, you know, you say, well, we did it all. Okay? Because not only did we get the views of the people, we were then able to persuade the government and the opposition to act together and to bring about the newly amended constitution by unanimous support, bipartisan. So, that's all I'm hoping for, that you're going to be very successful in your mission.

Mr. Boladuadua: Do you want to say something, Master. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A few just comments. Would you have any terms of reference for this work?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes. Would you have a report for that later, please? After this we'll provide a report.

Mr. Beg: I was interested in Dr. Reagan's comment at FNU about the number of times the AG and the PM appeared in the constitution. And I went ahead and did the count myself. And I came up with these numbers. For the Attorney General, 1997 constitution, the Attorney General came up 19 times, and in 2013, came up 62 times. For the Prime Minister, 1997 constitution came up 71 times, 2013, 97 times. Now I noticed why A.G wanted to have his name mentioned many times. I'll quote you one example. Section 115 on FICAC. It says that the FICAC shall be independent, and body and shall not be subject to the directions or control of any person or authority. Subsection 9 says the commission, the FICAC, shall provide this is the punchline, shall provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney General on any matter relating to its functions and responsibilities. I believe that- that section allows the A.G to tell FICAC what it should do. So FICAC is normally independent. And the thirdly, subsection 12 says on the remuneration.

Dr. Baba: Sorry sir, we are just trying to find section 152, which part?

Dr. Baba: I was looking at 152.

Dr. Baba: Page 100, what does it say?

Mr. Boladuadua: Page 101 subsection 6 says the commission shall be independent and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority Are you looking at the small one, sir?

Dr. Baba: We got the big pages. Check down Check down 67 on the big page Okay, 67, sir. Mere's got the page for you, sir. Mere, 67 on the big one.

Dr. Baba: Alright. 67, sir. Yeah, we have 67. Oh, sorry.

Mr. Boladuadua: And subsection 9 the commission allows the Attorney General to influence FICAC because subsection 9 says the commission shall provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney General on any matter relating to its functions and responsibilities.

Ms. Nailatikau: That's subsection 12 in our copy.

Mr. Boladuadua: And even furthermore regarding remuneration it has to be agreed to by the Attorney General. This is subsection 12 on my page 102. That's the kind of control this person tries to do in that constitution. That's why he's mentioned how many times? 62 times when in the 97 constitution he's only mentioned 19 times. This is just an example of a control freak that we see in that constitution. So that's why I suppose BLV is saying we should throw the whole thing out the window. TOR, that's what I wanted to ask and the process for anybody to make submissions to the commission. How do we go about that? If I may ask.

Mr. Valenitabua: We are inviting submissions from members of the public. From the members of the people of the country. We have advertised twice already I believe. A third one will be put up on the newspapers on Saturday. Now I understand that Mr. Kotobalavu came through Dr. Fatiaki through email and then Dr. Fatiaki forwarded the email to me and then I contacted Mr. Kotobalavu directly. Now there is one way of doing it. The other is just to give us a call inform our team that someone wants to make a submission and then we'll give a time and a date. Or a date and a time. If we still have them.

From the 2nd of May we will be going out to the country. So, there will be 2 teams traveling different directions visiting various places for this purpose. So, if someone has been inquiring maybe the easiest question to tell him or her is to contact us and then we can give him or her a date for him to appear here before us. But that would be after we come back from the public consultations around the country.

Mr. Boladuadua: Thank you. Chair.

Dr. Baba: Can I, Mr. Boladuadua because I know that you have a big following behind you. Today I gave to FNU the whole so if I get your email, I used to have your email I'll send you the public consultation so it's easy for you to forward to FTA, FTU and retired teachers because I know that's your intention maybe. So, if I just find that email, I've sent to FNU, I'll send to you. Is it still EB Boladuadua sir? Chair, through you.

Mr. Boladuadua: EL Boladuadua.

Dr. Baba: OK, so it's... I'll help the chair answer to you because I know you want to just forward that elboladuadua@gmail. I'll also send what chair Boladuadua was sending out. It's easy. At gmail.com Alright, sir. We'll send you now so you can send to your constituent parts. I have it.

Mr. Boladuadua: The last point is I went to a inaugural seminar in commemoration of Sir Moti Tikaram. I don't know the year. That is School of Law at the University of Fiji. He was present. Attorney General Tony Gates was present. All the lawyers were present. And he Justice Moti he has since died. He analyzed the 1970 Constitution 1997 Constitution 1990 Constitution and the 2013 Constitution. And he dwelt on 2013 Constitution to say that to try to bring out the fact that especially the preamble saying we the people of Fiji, etc. t's all a load of hogwash kind of thing. And he ended his lecture by saying that this supreme law is therefore a supreme lie. That was his conclusion. I thought I'd mention that this afternoon. It's a pretty it's a good summary of what the whole process is. We've been fooled and he's been imposed on us and we've been having problems with it. So, we we're happy with the work of the Commission and hopefully better things will come out of the result of your work. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Kotobalavu and Mr. Boladuadua what we have been discussing today is recorded. And the copies will be available to us at the latest tomorrow morning. So now that we have your email address, we will be able to send you the transcript of what had transpired here today for your reading and if you need to or if you wish to add to what you told us today you are welcome, sirs. In addition to that the term of reference the term of reference is with the staff our support staff we are going to have that term of reference attached together with what Professor Baba is preparing and then we'll send them to you. Apart from that thank you very much indeed. Thank you very much indeed for the paper and the oral submission. I was reading through the oral submission Mr. Kotobalavu very very helpful. And I was expecting you know I was waiting for your attendance today with Mr. Boladuadua so that we can hear from you personally. It is going to be helpful the Senate yes, a lot of people are saying we have to bring back the Senate GCC , yes people are saying that we have to bring back the GCC and some other provisions but your submissions will be very grateful will be very helpful to us and we are grateful for that. Thank you very much.

Mr. Boladuadua: Thank you very much on our behalf. Thank you very much. Good luck.

Mr. Kotobalavu: Can I just raise one issue, eh? Which is it's created a lot of legal controversy. Who advises the President when he exercises his executive authority? It's a very important question. Because all these legal problems we've seen of late arose from this. Because under section 82, it is made out very clearly. The president, in his exercise of his executive authority, receives advice from cabinets and so on. Essentially from the Prime Minister.

But there is a minor law, not the Constitution, there is a minor law which says, in exercising his executive authority, the president acts on the advice of the Judicial Services Commission. That is ultra-vice. An ordinary act, whereas the Constitution says, section 82, the president, in the exercise of his executive authority, acts on the advice of someone in cabinet, essentially the Prime Minister. So, I think that it's a point of law. It has created a lot of controversy. But I am absolutely clear, and this was pointed out in the Commission of Inquiry, that because the requirement that the president acts on the advice of the Judicial Services Commission comes from an ordinary act of Parliament, not the Constitution. Section 82 of the Constitution overrides that. Therefore, that law has to go. That's all. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu.

----------End of Session [16/4/26] ----------

SUBMISSION TO FIJI 2013 CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION

BY JIOJI KOTOBALAVU [A FORMER LONG SERVING PERMANENT SECRETARY IN THE FIJI CIVIL SERVICE AND CURRENTLY A LECTURER IN PUBLIC LAW AND IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND DIPLOMACY AT THE UNIVERSITY OF FIJI JDP SCHOOL OF LAW]

[1] THE MANDATE OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION IS TO RECOMMEND AMENDMENTS TO THE 2013 CONSTITUTION, AND NOT TO REPLACE IT.

The Commission's mandate is to make recommendations on amendments to be made to the 2013 Constitution. These amendments are to improve the efficacy of the Constitution as our country's supreme law and the various provisions it contains for a parliamentary system of democracy and government, the protection of the fundamental rights and freedoms of every person in Fiji, the administration of law and justice, and the system of executive Government to serve the people of Fiji.

I understand that the Bose Levu Vakaturaga [BLV] or Great Council of Chiefs [GCC] has very strongly recommended the total replacement of the 2013 Constitution. This is not surprising because all provisions in the 1997 Constitution relating to the GCC were excluded from the 2013 Constitution.

However, the complete replacement of the 2013 Constitution is simply not possible. The 2013 Constitution itself makes this impossible. Let me explain.

This is in light of the following decisions and declarations by the Supreme Court of Fiji.

[1] The Supreme Court expressly declared in its advisory opinion to Cabinet that the 2013 Constitution is legally in effect as the supreme law of Fiji, and further, the 1997 Constitution is no longer valid.

[2] The Supreme Court also declared that any amendment to the 2013 Constitution has to be in accordance with procedures as set out in CHAPTER 11- AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION, but with the following adjustments—

(a) For a 2013 Constitution (Amendment) Bill to pass in its second and third readings in the House of Representatives, the required affirmative vote of MPs present is reduced from the affirmative vote of three-quarters to a two-thirds majority, and

(b) in the follow up public referendum to be held, the majority vote required for the Bill to be ratified is adjusted from "three-quarters of the total of registered voters who have voted" to a simple majority of valid votes cast.

In addition to the above, section 160-(1) of the 2013 Constitution makes it very clear that:

"160-(1) A Bill for the amendment of this Constitution must be expressed as a Bill for an Act to amend this Constitution."

So, we can assume that after its approval by the House of Representatives, and its ratification by the people in the public referendum to follow, the Bill is promulgated as "An Act to amend the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji"

"Act no – of 2027 (or year of promulgation)"

The short title will be:

"2027 (or year of promulgation) Constitution of the Republic of Fiji"

[2] THE 2013 CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMISSION SHOULD STRONGLY RECOMMEND THE ADOPTION BY GOVERNMENT AND PARLIAMENT OF A BI-PARTISAN OR JOINT GOVERNMENT AND OPPOSITION APPROACH IN CONSIDERING AND ACTING ON THE COMMISSION'S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS

In appointing the Constitution Review Commission, it would appear that the Peoples Coalition Government has chosen to adopt a "partisan" approach where it will itself consider the Commission's report and draft and table a 2013 Constitution (Amendment) Bill.

If this is true, this partisan approach will severely undermine the democratic legitimacy of the newly amended 2013 Constitution.

This is because the parliamentary Opposition could opt to oppose the amendment Bill, and its public supporters could choose to vote against the Bill in the referendum. This is simply to show their displeasure at not being directly consulted and be given the opportunity, as elected representatives of the people, to be involved in the drafting of the amendment Bill.

Adopting a bipartisan or joint Government--Opposition approach would be consistent also with the view that in the preparation of Fiji's Constitution, our supreme law, the House of Representatives should consider itself as a National Constituent Assembly, to carry out this national undertaking.

As already stated above, the end result of a partisan approach is that the newly amended 2013 Constitution, even if passed in both Parliament and in the public referendum, cannot claim to truly represent the democratic will of "WE THE PEOPLE OF FIJI"!

Accordingly, I strongly recommend to this Commission to impress upon the Peoples Coalition Government to refer the Commission's report to a Joint Select Committee of Parliament on the Constitution Review [JPSC], appointed by the House of Representatives, with the Prime Minister as Chair, and the Leader of the Opposition, as Deputy Chair. The JPSC is then to consider the recommendations, agree on what is to be accepted, and then, with the help of the Law Reform Commission, draft the 2013 Constitution (Amendment) Bill for the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to jointly table in Parliament for its unanimous approval.

This was, in fact, the outstandingly successful bi-partisan approach adopted by Prime Minister Sitiveni Rabuka and Leader of the Opposition Jai Ram Reddy in the preparation and unanimous approval and promulgation of the 1997 Constitution.

If this bi-partisan approach through a JPSC is also adopted when the Commission submits its report, I have no doubt that the 2013 Constitution (Amendment) Bill will be unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives and will easily pass in the referendum. The "new" Constitution that emerges from this will fully meet the requirements of legality and democratic legitimacy. And it can truly claim to represent the expressed democratic will of "WE, THE PEOPLE OF FIJI"

[3] WHICH COMES FIRST? REVIEW THE 2013 CONSTITUTION AND THEN HOLD THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTIONS UNDER THE NEW CONSTITUTION, OR HOLD THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTIONS FIRST UNDER THE 2013 CONSTITUTION

THE 2013 CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION IS REQUIRED TO SUBMIT ITS REPORT BY THE END OF AUGUST 2026.

THE SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS, ANA MATACIWA, HAS ALREADY ANNOUNCEED THAT IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE 2023 CONSTITUTION, THE NEXT GENERAL ELECTION MUST BE HELD BETWEEN AUGUST 7, 2026 AND FEBRUARY 6, 2027

THE PEOPLE'S ALLIANCE PARTY [PAP] AND ITS LEADER, HON. SITIVENI RABUKA, HAD PROMISED IN THEIR 2022 GENERAL ELECTION MANIFESTO TO UNDERTAKE A REVIEW OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION.

SO, IT IS TO HONOUR THIS PROMISE THAT THE PEOPLES COALITION GOVERNMENT IS SEEKING TO UNDERTAKE AND COMPLETE THE REVIEW OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION AND THEN HOLD THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTION UNDER THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

THE PROBLEM, HOWEVER, IS THAT THERE IS SIMPLY NOT ENOUGH TIME TO CARRY OUT THE WHOLE REVIEW PROCEDURES AND PROCESS REQUIRED UNDER THE 2013 CONSTITUTION, BEFORE THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTION.

AND FURTHER, EVEN IF THE PEOPLES COALITION GOVERNMENT HAS ENOUGH TIME TO COMPLETE THE WHOLE REVIEW PROCESS, AND IT NOW COMMANDS THE SUPPORT OF MORE THAN ENOUGH MPs TO ENSURE PASSAGE OF A 2013 CONSTITUTION (AMENDMENT) BILL [IE, 37 OUT OF 55 MPs], IT IS NOT POSSIBLE TO CARRY OUT THE 2013 CONSTITUTION REVIEW AS A JOINT GOVERNMENT-OPPOSITION NATIONAL UNDERTAKING, AS STRONGLY RECOMMENDED ABOVE.

IN LIGHT OF THIS, I AM RECOMMENDING THAT THE CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION'S CHAIRMAN SHOULD CALL ON PRIME MINISTER HON. SITIVENI RABUKA AND SEEK HIS ADVICE ON THE WAY FORWARD.

A POSSIBLE SOLUTION OR APPROACH IS AS FOLLOWS:

[1] PROCEED WITH HOLDING THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTION UNDER THE 2013 CONSTITUTION

[2] AND THEN THE NEWLY ELECTED GOVERNMENT AND OPPOSITION TO JOINTLY CO-OPERATE THROUGH A JPSC IN CONSIDERING THE REPORT OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION, AND IN INITIATING THE PREPARATION AND TABLING OF A 2013 CONSTITUTION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

THE FUNDAMENTAL OBJECTIVE OF THIS UNIFIED APPROACH IS TO SECURE THE PASSAGE OF THE 2013 CONSTUTION (AMENDMENT) BILL BY UNANIMOUS VOTE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE PEOPLES ALLIANCE PARTY CAN PUBLICISE ITS COMMITMENT TO THIS BI-PARTISAN AND NATIONAL APPROACH, TO ITS POLITICAL ADVANTAGE, IN THE LEAD UP TO THE 2026 GENERAL ELECTION.

IN FACT, THE ADOPTION OF THIS BI-PARTISAN AND JOINT GOVERNMENT AND OPPOSITION APPROACH WILL, IN MY VIEW, ELEVATE HON SITIVENI RABUKA'S LEGACY FROM BEING AN ELECTED POLITICAL LEADER AS PRIME MINISTER AND HEAD OF GOVERNMENT, TO A STATESMAN. HE MERITS THIS BECAUSE HE PLACES THE NATIONAL INTERESTS OF FIJI AND ALL ITS CITIZENS AND COMMUNITIES FIRST AND FOREMOST, ABOVE ALL OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.

[4] RECOMMENDED AMENDMENTS TO 2013 CONSTITUTION

HEREWITH IS A SUMMARY OF MY RECOMMENDATIONS

[1] SYSTEM OF ELECTIONS AND ELECTORAL PROVISIONS

It is a such a great pity that the Government has not publicly released the report of the Justice Fatiaki-led Electoral Review Commission.

So, I make these recommendations without the benefit of knowing the recommendations of the Justice Fatiaki-Led Commission.

ELECTORAL ACT 2014

Amend this legislation to achieve the following.

Re-design the format of the voting form. Remove the Sudoka-style numbering to identify election candidates. Replace it with individual candidate's name, party affiliation and photograph

Allow political parties to erect sheds at a reasonable distance from the polling station, and to organize transport to bring in their voters. We should encourage voter turnout. However, restrict or prohibit parties from offering free food, T-shirts and other hand-outs to influence voters. Harassing and bribing voters should not be allowed. Yaqona can be freely shared with party members and supporters at the party shed

2013 CONSTITUTION

(1) Retain voting age at 18 years of age and above

(2) Change the current use of the whole of Fiji as a single undivided constituency, for all seats in the House of Representatives, and replace it as follows [as recommended by the Yash Ghai Commission whose report was trashed by the Bainimarama Military Government, the author of the unilaterally imposed 2013 Constitution]:

Create 3 regional multi-member constituencies based on Government's administrative divisions: Central Division, Western Division and Northern Division

For the Eastern Division, because of the scattered and widespread nature of the islands, and their small resident population, create 4 single member geographical constituencies, comprising Lomaiviti, Kadavu, Lau and Rotuma

Based on Fiji's population as estimated by the National Bureau of Statistics since the 2007 National Population Census, set the total number of seats in the House of Representatives at 60, and this is to be distributed as follows: Central Division 24, Western Division 22, Northern Division 9, and Eastern Division 5 [with 2 for Lomaiviti and 1 each for Kadavu, Lau and Rotuma, based on their respective resident population]

Total number of seats in the House of Representatives and their distribution, is to be reviewed by the Electoral Commission after each national population census

For the three regional multi-member constituencies, MPs are to be elected by an open list system of proportional representation, and within each regional constituency, each voter has one vote with each vote being of equal value. [This allows for the continuation of the "perfect" voting formula of one person one vote and with each vote being of equal value].

For the 5 single member constituencies in the Eastern Division, MPs are to be elected either by simple numerical majority (?), or by a substantive majority of 50% +1 vote(?)

The 5 % threshold to qualify for a seat allocation in Parliament in the 3 multi-member regional constituencies is to be retained. The move away from a single whole of Fiji multimember constituency makes this more reasonable for small parties and for non-party independent individual candidates. [IN THE 2022 GENERAL ELECTION, THE 5 % THRESHOLD WAS SET BY THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION AT CIRCA 23, OOO VOTES. BUT THIS WAS FOR THE WHOLE OF FIJI AS A SINGLE MULTI-MEMBER CONSTITUENCY. WITH THREE REGIONAL CONSTITUTENCIES THE 5% THRESHOLD REQUIREMENT WILL BRING DOWN THE MINIMUM NUMBER OF VOTES REQUIRED TO AROUND 15, 000 TO 17, 000 VOTES]

The closed list of proportional representation is not recommended for use to promote the election of more women and minority community candidates. [In a closed list, the voter votes for the party of his or her choice. The party chooses the ranking of candidates in the party list. This allows a party to place women candidates and those from selected minority communities high on the party list of candidates. However, the in-built problem is that candidates placed in the lower half of the party list have little interest and incentive to campaign for the party because they know they have no chance of ever winning a seat for themselves. In an open party list, by contrast, all candidates are enthused to campaign very actively because irrespective of where a candidate is placed in the hierarchy of the party list, it is ultimately the voters who elect them. The more votes they secure for themselves and for the party, the greater his or her chances of winning a seat allocated to their political party]

Members of the BLV OR GCC [formally established under its own separate legislation] are not to be eligible to stand as candidates for election to the House of Representatives. [Once elected, very often, their people [ie, Vanua members] expect them to be appointed as Ministers, and to be served by the people, rather than to serve the people] If a sitting member of the BLV/GCC opts to stand as a candidate for election to the House of Representatives, he or she must resign from the BLVGCC]

[2] RE-ESTABLISH OR RESTORE THE SENATE IN THE 2013 CONSTITUTION

Restore the Senate in the Constitution as the Upper House of Parliament. This to be achieved by re-instating the following provisions in the 1997 Constitution.

"64-(1) The Senate shall consist of 32 members, of whom

(a) 14 are appointed by the President on the advice of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga [GCC]
(b) 9 are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister
(c) 8 are appointed by the President on the advice of the Leader of Opposition
(d) 1 is appointed by the President on the advice of the Council of Rotuma."

The main purpose/justification is to allow for wider participation in national decision-making in Parliament by members appointed by the President and drawn from the Great Council of Chiefs, the Council of Rotuma, and, in addition, by members drawn from ethnic minority communities, women's organizations, civil society organizations, and the professions.

There is to be no stipulation in the Constitution for the representation of the Churches or any particular religion in the Senate. The right of every individual person to choose one's religion is a fundamental human right, fully protected in the Bill of Rights. So, Fiji is to remain a secular State.

The right or entitlement of the BLV/GCC and the Council of Rotuma to nominate their Senate members derives from their right of special recognition conferred upon them by Great Britain in reciprocation of their cession to the British Crown of sovereignty over Fiji and Rotuma in 1874 and 1879 [1881?] respectively. Their right to rule over their people was recognized provided they respected the laws of the British Colony.

This right of self-determination is institutionalized in the following legislation:

[1] The BLV/GCC is established under section 3 of the iTaukei Affairs Act [Cap 120] to serve as an advisory body to the central Government on the good government and well-being of the iTaukei people.

[2] The Council of Rotuma is established under section 12 of the Rotuma Act [Cap 122] to safeguard and ensure the good governance and well-being of the Rotuman community.

Today, the GCC/BLV and the Council of Rotuma are the apex or peak body of the indigenous iTaukei and Rotuman communities in the administration of their provinces. They serve as advisory councils to the central Government on all matters affecting the natural resources rights, and the general well-being and welfare of their communities.

So, their constitutional right to nominate their representatives in the Senate derives from their communities' right of self-determination, and their solemn duty to ensure that any legislation passed by the House of Representative does not harm or prejudice the rights and interests of the indigenous iTaukei and Rotuman communities.

[3] RESTORE THE GCC or BLV IN THE 2013 CONSTITUTION AND ALSO INCLUDE THE EXPRESS RECOGNITION OF THE COUNCIL OF ROTUMA

Restore in the 2013 Constitution this provision in section 116 of the 1997 Constitution in relation to the BLV/GCC:

"-(1) The BLV established under the Fijian Affairs Act continues and its membership, functions, operations and procedures are as prescribed in or under the Act."

However, for the considerations explained below, do not include the 1997 Constitution provisions under section 116-(2) and section 90.

Under these two provisions the BLV/GCC is empowered to appoint the President and the Vice-President of the Republic of Fiji]

The function of the GCC/BLY to be provided for in the Constitution is the responsibility to nominate the Council members to be appointed by the President to be members of the Senate.

Include in the Constitution provisions expressly recognizing the Council of Rotuma established under the Rotuma Act, and its responsibility to nominate a representative in the Senate to be appointed by the President.

This recognition of the Council of Rotuma in Fiji's Constitution is something new but the Rotuman people fully merits this. It derives from the reciprocal recognition given to them by Great Britain in return for the cession to it of sovereignty over Rotuma in 1879 [?] or 1881 {?]

This is the origin of the right of self-determination of the Rotuman peoples to administer their island's governance with the support of the central Government of the whole of Fiji.

[4] APPOINTMENT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF FIJI

A crucially important question for the Commission to consider is: who is to appoint the President of the Republic of Fiji? The BLV/GCC [as provided under the 1997 Constitution], or Parliament [as provided under the 2013 Constitution]?

Under section 84 of the 2013 Constitution, the President is appointed through election by Parliament from competing candidates submitted by the Prime Minister and by the Leader of Opposition.

I strongly recommend the continuation of the appointment procedure under section 84 of the 2013 Constitution, and also the qualifications for appointment, as set out under section 83.

The qualifications for appointment of the President of the Republic of Fiji, as set out in section 83 in the 2013 Constitution, should be left as it is, unchanged, in the hope that one day a well-qualified non-iTaukei with an outstanding record of public service can be considered and appointed by Parliament.

For nation-building and national unity, it is so vitally important for all communities to feel firmly assured and secure that Fiji is home to us all. Common and equal citizenship as fellow Fijians is not enough. Fiji is not a single ethnic nation State such as Japan or other Pacific Island States like Tonga or Samoa. No community in Fiji should be denied a fair and equitable opportunity of representation and participation in national decision-making on matters/issues relating to our collective national and economic security and well-being.

I should also explain that membership of the GCC/BLV is based on hereditary status, and not through democratic election. There is nothing wrong with that.

However, given the overall significance of the role of the President as representing the unity of our State in embracing all its citizens and its communities [based on ethnicity, religion and culture], I strongly recommend that for the appointment and qualifications for appointment of the President of the Republic of Fiji, we should retain the current provisions under sections 83 and 84 of the 2013 Constitution, and not to return to the procedure under the 1997- Constitution.

So, this means that all the three national leadership positions of President, Prime Minister, and Leader of Opposition in Parliament, are to be appointed through competitive democratic election in the House Representatives of the people.

I should mention that following the 2022 general election, in the election of the President of the Republic of Fiji in the House of Representatives, the two candidates were actually drawn from the membership of the BLV/GCC. Ratu Naiqama Lalabalavu from the Tovata Confederacy was sponsored by the Prime Minister, and Ratu Meli Tora from the chiefly Vanua of Vuda was sponsored by the Leader of Opposition, as representing the Western Chiefs. This is a much better way to recognize the GCC/BLV than to allow the GCC/BLV to directly appoint the President, as provided under the 1997 Constitution. Our President must be appointed through democratic election in the House of Representatives.

Once again, I reiterate that the GCC/BLV should focus its attention on its statutory function under its founding legislation, the iTaukei Affairs Act. And this is to serve as an advisory body to the central Government "on the good government and well-being of the iTaukei people."

[5] ORGANISATION AND MANAGEMENT OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE: HAVE THE IMPOSED CHANGES IN THE 2013 CONSTITUTION SUCCEEDED?

Under the 1970 Constitution and 1997 Constitution, Fiji followed the British approach and tradition of maintaining a clear separation between the elected executive Government under the Prime Minister, and the independent organization and management of the Public Service by a statutory authority, the Public Service Commission.

The underlying rationale was the importance of having a Public Service that is efficient and effective, independent [objective] and impartial, but, at all times, loyal to the elected executive Government of the day.

The PSC was directly responsible under the Public Service Act for making decisions on appointments, promotion, transfers, and disciplinary action. The only linkage with the elected executive Government was through the requirement that the PSC Chairman was to consult the Prime Minister in relation to all Permanent Secretaries. The purpose was to ensure that the PM was satisfied and in agreement with proposed appointments, transfers and disciplinary actions. This arrangement continues today and it is working well.

Over the years, the PSC began to progressively delegate authority for staff appointments, promotions, transfers, and disciplinary action to individual Permanent Secretaries as the CEOS of their respective MINISTRIES AND DEPARTMENTS. However, the PSC held on to senior management positions in the Public Service from Level or Grade 3 and upward. The purpose was to identify high fliers and to prepare them for appointment to higher positions of responsibility, including Permanent Secretaries and Heads of Departments

However, all this changed under the 2013 Constitution. It was quite clear that Prime Minister Bainimarama and Attorney-General and Minister of Finance, Saiyad-Khaiyum, wanted to see greater political oversight over Public Service appointments, promotions, transfers and disciplinary action.

The direct result is that under section 127-(7) of the 2013 Constitution, authority for all staff appointments, promotion, transfers and disciplinary action has devolved totally from the PSC to individual Permanent Secretaries. And further, in exercising this power, all Permanent Secretaries must obtain the prior agreement of the Ministry's Minister.

I believe that this new arrangement under the 2013 Constitution has inevitably led to the increased politicization of the Public Service, and increased incidences of nepotism, favouratism, ethnic bias, and corruption in staff management.

Section 123 of the 2013 Constitution states very clearly the merit requirements for recruitment and promotion.

"123-(i) recruitment and promotion [must be] based on-

(1) Objectivity, impartiality and fair competition, and
(2) Ability, education, experience and other characteristics of merit."

I should also mention that the devolution of senior staff management authority from a single central body, the PSC, to individual Permanent Secretaries, has led to the creation of "vertical silos." There is now a tendency for Ministries and their departments to create their own salary/pay scales.

Further, senior management staff are now faced with the disadvantage that they can pursue their vertical career prospects only within their Ministry and Department. In the past, the PSC could transfer on promotion high fliers it has identified, to another Ministry or Department.

So, for all these shortcomings in the current devolved management in the Public Service, I strongly recommend to the 2013 Constitution Review Commission to invite the PSC to make a submission on the efficacy of the Public Service staff management reform under the present 2013 Constitution.

The Commission may also find it useful to invite the Prime Minister for his comments as the Minister responsible for the Public Service

Presentation by Mr. Navneel Sharma
10.00am-11.18am

Mr. Valenitabua: Good morning commissioners. Thank you very much for attending before this commission this morning. Thank you very much for your attendance this morning. And on top of that you were attending alone, not as a group. You were attending individually. You are the first one who has attended before us a consultation individually. So, there'll be about another two this afternoon. By way of introduction, you know most of us. I don't think I have to introduce you all of them.

Mr. Sharma: That's fine sir, yes, I know majority of the panel, yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: And the name tags are there in front of you. Our task, our task is to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into the 2013 constitution. That is our task and we are to consult widely with the people of Fiji while undertaking that task. The objective is the preparation of a draft amended constitution for the republic based on submissions we gather from the members of the public or from the people of the nation. We hope to get submissions which reflect values, needs and aspirations of our people. At the end of our commission, we will need to submit our findings. And recommendations derived from the submissions made to us to his excellency the president. It's all towards the theme of we the people of Fiji. This is our constitution. That is why we are undertaking this wide consultation. So, you are here today to give us submissions. And I'm sure you know what you want to tell us. I don't have to spell out what we need to hear from you. Apart from those words, I welcome you and we hope to hear your submissions. And also, we are here to hear that submissions and record what you're going to say. Thank you. Over to you.

Mr. Sharma: Thank you very much, Chair and members of the panel. Thank you very much for this opportunity. Sir Chair, members of the panel, I have a cursory introduction. But before I go into my substantive points, I'll be reading out my submission. And I also will be providing the secretariat a copy of my submission. I've got a hard copy and I'll later forward the electronic copy to the secretariat. Chair and members of the commission, I do not intend to take too much of your time. My presentation is kind of pegged at 15 minutes and no longer. Thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you and make this submission. I acknowledge the diversity, experience and expertise of the chair and distinguished members of the panel. At this important moment in Fiji's constitutional history, we are called to reflect not only on where we have come from, but also on where we aspire to go.

Our constitution should reflect the richness of Fiji's history, the resilience of its people and the depth of its cultures. At the same time, it must articulate a clear and principled vision for the next 50 to 100 years, grounded in unity, justice, accountability and opportunity for all. In this sense, a constitution is more than just a legal instrument or the supreme law of the country. It is a statement of national identity and shared purpose. We have the opportunity to develop, and I say this to the students that I teach, one of the world's most modern written constitutions, and this is something we should approach with both ambition and pride. At the outset, I emphasize that this commission carries a significant responsibility. Public consultations must be meaningful. The views gathered should not only be recorded, but carefully considered, properly contextualized and generally reflected in the drafting process. A constitution must not merely regulate power. It must command public confidence.

My name is Navneel Sharma. I'm an academic and teach constitutional law at the University of the South Pacific. The views expressed today are my own and do not reflect those of my employer or any organization that I'm affiliated with. I will touch on six areas, Chair. The Judicial Services Commission, the Office of the President, the Status of the Great Council of Chiefs, the Office of the Ombudsman, Emergency Powers, and the Selection of Portfolio Ministers.

First, the Judicial Services Commission. In the constitution, the current version, the 2013 Constitution of Fiji, the name Judicial Services Commission, or JSC for short, appears 45 times. It is established under Chapter 5, which deals with courts and judicial offices. The JSC is chaired by the Chief Justice and performs appointment recommendation and advisory functions within the judiciary. However, its role extends beyond the judicial sphere. The JSC advises on matters, for example, relating to the re-enumeration of the FICAC Commissioner under Section 115, makes recommendations regarding the Solicitor General's appointment under Section 116, as well as the Director of Public Prosecutions under Section 117, and advises on the appointments to the Mercy Commission, Section 119. This expansion raises a structural concern. When a judicial body exercise influence over prosecutorial appointments, anti-corruption oversight, and clemency processes, the separation of powers becomes blurred. The concentration of advisory authority within a single institution risk weakening checks and balances and may affect public perceptions of institutional independence.

My recommendation.

Sir Chair, Members of the Panel, the Commission may wish to consider whether the JSC's mandate should be more clearly confined to judicial administration, with executive or quasi-executive appointments allocated to appropriately structured and truly independent mechanisms.

The second point, Sir Chair, Members of the Panel, is the Office of the President. The appointment of the President by a simple parliamentary majority under Section 84 of the Constitution is concerning. In practice, this enables the government of the day to determine the appointment, limiting meaningful participation by the opposition. Especially, voting is not based on conscience voting, but along party lines. The President is intended to serve as a unifying and non-partisan head of state. Yet, if the selection process is dominated by the governing majority, public perception of neutrality may be undermined.

My recommendation.

Sir Chair, there are options worth considering. A supermajority requirement in Parliament could be considered. Voting should be done on conscience rather than on party lines to ensure the government does not necessarily get who they nominate. Having said that, and on a cursory note, I think a lot is said when we boast ourselves as the hub of the Pacific and punching beyond our weight when we still have not had a female President as head of state for our country since independence.

My third point, Sir Chair, the 2013 Constitution has disregarded the role of the Great Council of Chiefs. This omission is constitutionally significant. The GCC functions as a central institution of indigenous governance, reflecting the authority of the Vanua and communal leadership within iTaukei society. Its removal singled a major shift in how traditional authorities recognized within the constitutional framework. I support the recognition of the GCC under a new constitution as a paramount body reflecting indigenous interests amidst ever-growing global pressures. However, the question is not simply whether the GCC should be restored, but what role it should perform in a modern constitutional democracy and the balancing of this constitutional representative body against groups who do not have such chiefly structures to represent them and are at the mercy of the ever-changing executive body. If we imagined, the GCC could contribute to national agenda setting in areas where structural challenges are evident, including school dropout rates, climate change, indigenous land utilization and productivity, rural development, substance abuse, disproportionate indigenous representation in the criminal justice system, bridging the ethnic divide, improving standards of living in rural communities and pressures caused by urban migration.

Recommendation.

Sir Chair. The commission may wish to consider the constitutional recognition of the GCC as an independent advisory body with clearly defined but limited functions. Its role should be consultative rather than political, with a mandate to provide non-binding advice on matters affecting iTaukei interests, including customary land, traditional governance and indigenous social economic development. To ensure coherence within a modern constitutional democracy, its functions should be expressly confined so as not to encroach upon parliamentary sovereignty or executive authority. Consideration must also be given to requiring structured consultation with the council on legislative or policy directly affecting indigenous interests while avoiding any form of veto power.

The fourth point, Sir Chair, is the office of the Ombudsman. For many ordinary citizens, engaging with the executive bureaucracy can be difficult. Administrative processes are often slow, opaque and unresponsive. Where correspondence is unanswered and decisions remain unexplained, public trust erodes. The Ombudsman has traditionally provided an accessible and low-cost mechanism to address maladministration. It offered investigation and resolution without delay. Complexity and expenses associated with court proceedings were avoided. It did not replace judicial review. It complemented it. While judicial review remains available in the courts, it is often time-consuming and financially burdensome. For many citizens, it is not a realistic avenue of redress. The removal of the Ombudsman narrows accessible accountability mechanisms and places great reliance on litigation. In a constitutional system committed to the rule of law and responsible government, there should be an independent and accessible institution capable of investigating executive maladministration. Without such a body, accountability risks, becomes reactive and court-driven rather than responsive and citizen-centered.

Recommendations.

Sir Chair. The Commission may wish to consider the re-establishment of the Office of the Ombudsman or Ombudsperson, to be more agenda-sensitive, as an independent constitutional office with a clearly defined mandate to investigate administrative conduct across the public sector. Its function should not include power to receive, should include, my apologies, the power to receive complaints from the public, initiate own-motion investigations, and make findings and recommendations on maladministration. To ensure effectiveness and credibility, the office should be institutionally independent, adequately resourced, and accessible to all citizens without undue procedural barriers. Consideration may be given to require public authorities to respond to Ombudsman's findings within a specific time frame, thereby strengthening administrative accountability while preserving the non-binding and complementary nature of the office alongside judicial review.

My fifth and second last point, Sir Chair, is election of ministers. It is concerning that the Prime Minister retains broad discretion in the selection of cabinet members. In practice, individuals who receive relatively low numbers of votes may be appointed to significant ministerial portfolios, while others with substantially higher electoral support remain backbencher members of the party. Similarly, individuals who enter Parliament through replacement mechanisms following resignations or deaths or terminations may be elevated quickly to ministerial office despite having secured comparatively limited electoral endorsement. This raises questions about the relationship between electoral legitimacy and executive appointment and may affect public confidence in the representativeness of the Cabinet. While the formation of the Cabinet is primarily the function of the Prime Minister and the Executive, a complete disconnect between electoral support and ministerial appointment risks undermining the democratic signal expressed through people's vote.

Recommendation

Sir Chair, the Commission may wish to consider reforms that enhance the transparency and democratic legitimacy of Cabinet appointments while preserving necessary executive discretion. This could include the development of guiding principles or statutory criteria encouraging the Prime Minister to have regard to factors such as electoral support, experience and competence when constituting his Cabinet. Consideration may also be given to requiring the publication of reasons or criteria underpinning ministerial appointments, thereby strengthening public accountability without unduly constraining the function of the Executive.

My last point, Sir Chair, Members of the Panel, is the state of emergency provision within the Constitution. Under Section 154, the Prime Minister may, on recommendation of the Commissioner of Police and the Commander of the RFMF, declare a state of emergency. This formulation appears narrow and rooted in more traditional conceptions of national security threats. Contemporary experience, most notably COVID, the COVID pandemic and the global economic disruptions, demonstrate that emergencies may arise beyond the scope of policing or military advice alone. This raises concerns about whether the current framework adequately captures the range of modern crises requiring urgent and coordinated state responses.

Recommendation.

The Commission may wish to consider revising Section 154 to broaden the basis upon which a state of emergency may be declared and who advises upon it. In particular, the power to advise or initiate such a declaration could be vested in the Cabinet. Rather than being limited to recommendations from the Republic of Fiji Military Forces and the Fiji Police Force, this would better reflect the multidimensional nature of contemporary emergencies, including public health and economic crisis. Any such reform should also retain appropriate parliamentary oversight, including timely approval and review of emergency declarations to ensure that the exercise of emergency powers remain accountable and proportionate. That is my submission, Sir Chair, members of the panel, and that concludes what I have to say. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr. Sharma. The GCC, they've been in the headlines in the past weeks. They are currently, or they were established under an Act, a normal Act, under the iTaukei Affairs Portfolio. Now, you are suggesting today that they be included in the Constitution, that their establishment and their functions are to be included in the Constitution. That is, am I correct?

Mr. Sharma: That is correct, Sir Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Now, you aired that on and you said that something was to be non-binding. What was that again? The advisory function.

Mr. Sharma: The advisory function shouldn't be binding. It should be working on an advisory basis. The outcomes and the agenda set by them and what emanates from their discussions and deliberations should be advisory only, not binding on the executive.

Mr. Valenitabua: What about- there are suggestions that we bring back the bicameral? House.

Mr. Sharma: Meaning upper house and lower house.

Mr. Valenitabua: House of Reps and the Senate. Usually, or it has been the practice that the GCC has members in the Senate. If you're saying that they are to be advisory only, that body is to have advisory functions, how do you tie that up with suggestions that they have members in the Senate?

Mr. Sharma: That might be a good synergy, Sir Chair, between what they do as a separate body and having that roll over to decision-making capabilities in Parliament. That's, I would suggest that's an excellent idea.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, as they are sitting as the Council of Chiefs, they act as the only advisory role. However, members of the GCC can be appointed, depending on how they would select them to be members of the Senate.

Mr. Sharma: Correct.

Mr. Valenitabua: Right. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Chair, if I may. Thank you so much, Mr. Sharma, for your contributions this morning. I'm interested in the deceptively short chapter nine on emergency powers that you spoke about, and about broadening the entry points for being able to advise the Prime Minister, for example, on declaring a state of emergency. You mentioned Parliament or Cabinet, sorry, as a potential body for undertaking this. As we've experienced, it's important to be agile and quick when it comes to declaring a state of emergency and balance that with it not being a red button that's pushed too often. I'd be interested to hear you expand on how you might see that working in terms of Cabinet playing this role or broadening this role to include Cabinet.

Mr. Sharma: Thank you, ma'am. What has been recommended is, when we talk about emergencies and how it has been reflected in the current constitution, it's based on this traditional notion of emergencies, where there's civil disruption of some sort, whether internally or externally. Now, we've seen with modern problems that we've experienced, we've seen COVID and during COVID, and certainly prior to that, there was a global economic crisis.

So, what I'm suggesting is that the Cabinet, made up of portfolio ministers, should actually come together and advise. But this doesn't negate the role of the commander RFMF as well, as well as the police. Practically, it may happen where the Cabinet actually presents advice, but I think it should be spelled out more clearly in the constitution, where a body as such is feeding the prime minister before he declares a state of emergency, and that body be recognized under law.

Dr. Baba: Just in terms of COVID, I think if the Cabinet, like you're suggesting, sir, if the Cabinet looks after this, the Cabinet may even choose a think tank that's economic in nature or a health task force. It doesn't exclude calling these other people, but it does give Cabinet the right to adjudicate on what is correct and necessary for any type of crisis. So, I see your point. Maybe you'll help with giving it a sentence. Oh, but we'll get your written submission. That's what I saw in COVID. The military were on the road, blocking the road, you know, in terms of don't access, that's fine. But we didn't really mobilize health from all over the world. You know, like my team of teachers, we were feeding the military and the police, but it's, yeah, we needed health to be mobilized and a think tank that's more economic, you know, to, yeah. So, I see your point. Thank you.

Mr. Sharma: Most definitely, Professor. Thank you for that. When we look at COVID, it was just not health. It had ramifications, economic ramifications, domestic violence ramifications. So, I think there needs to be a body that has a multifunctional role and able to consolidate and provide that opinion.

Mr. Valenitabua: Appointed by cabinet? The body?

Mr. Sharma: Cabinet to advise the Prime Minister on a state of emergency.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, if not the police, remove the Republican, rely on those decisions. And if there's a need, they can call on the military and the police.

Mr. Sharma: Most definitely, sir. Yes.

Dr. Gounder: Chair, thank you Navneel for your presentation. Following on from Mere and your last point about the state of emergency provision, I will focus on very specific emergency provision, for example, utilizing any form of instability as a threat to national emergency, because we saw that immediately after the last elections, a phase during which political parties were negotiating to form a government. It's when the police commissioner declared emergency, saying that the Prime Minister should utilize his powers. And it relates well with the argument that you are making. And I remember having a public spat with the police commissioner who said there has been widespread violence in the Western Division. And I replied to him by saying, I just traveled back from the Western Division. There is nothing of that sort. So, it was clear that there was an effort made to utilize the narrow provision of the emergency powers to take over, supposedly, the negotiation process and perhaps the formation of the government. So, this is just for the information of members of the panel. It's a good suggestion. That's something maybe we can consider.

Dr. Fatiaki: Navneel, thank you, through you chair. And dealing with the same issue of emergency powers, let me just understand this, because my understanding is there is such a thing as a National Security Council. Does that exist? And I'm sorry, I've tried to have a look to find it here. I haven't. But I know from a practical point of view that there is such a body, either mooted in a white paper or in place. And I want to clarify something. I think Chair kind of took it to the other extreme, which was basically to sidetrack the question of police and the army commander, and then they become a secondary entry point.

No, I think the nature of national emergencies are these are the two point people, as in the two-point institutions. I think if we're going to do anything further, it's to add to that in the form of maybe a Security Council, but not to remove them and then have a bunch of, I don't know who, you know, politicians or bureaucrats to try and determine whether this is a national security situation and then bring them in. No, I think they still need to lead it.

And although, yes, we've talked about other things such as COVID and that, the reality is when we talk about national security and we talk about the security and safety of all, we're talking war, we're talking civil disobedience, strikes, strife, that sort of issue, which ultimately is in the reams of the purview of the Fiji Police Force and the army. So, I'd like to think that they continue to be the main people. My understanding is you are suggesting that they not be the only ones because obviously you need the input of other agencies.

And that's where I think the existing, if it currently exists, I'm sorry, I can't refer you to the particular legislation or whatever, but I know that there is a thing called the National Security Council, which involves the commission of police, which involves and maybe this head and others that are convened for the purposes of these sorts of things. And that the decision making then process then goes to the prime minister and the prime minister then takes it to parliament. I think it's written here.

You know, it goes to parliament actually to then make considerations as to actually passing the necessary legislation to put into effect the national provisions that come into play when a state of emergency is declared. So, my only input in that is to be clear. I don't think Una and, I'm sorry, Professor Baba and Chair intended to sidetrack the police and the army. They're the lead people. I think it's more for the purposes of involving others. As you rightly point out, the scope of the emergency may not just be a civil discord and strife that requires enforcement and policing. It may be other issues such as COVID, which obviously involved health. And therefore, in the National Security Council, you'd have other voices that will be inputting in that respect. That is correct.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. If I may add to that, the state of emergency would arise in a situation where security is a threat and also where safety is a threat. Those are the two circumstances. And in B, if it is necessary to declare a state of emergency, so security, drugs can be security. Yeah, we've got breaches of security in relation to drugs, weapons and natural disasters. COVID was a health thing, safety issue. And we are not going to remove the police. You know, like I said, if there is this body, if it is going to be established, then there is a state of emergency. We have to get the police in for control and regulating the people. Because we all know if there's no police, if there's no army, when there's a state of emergency, people will never bother to follow any rules or whatever advice is given. So, with that, I'm with Dr. Fatiaki. He's not completely sidelining them. No, they are the people who can control people.

Dr. Gounder: Chair, the focus more here is who has got the power or the authority to invoke this condition. That is the focus here, I think. And it should not be left, so to say, in the hands of one or two or three people even, there must be some greater number of people, if need be, some expertise in making the decision as to invoking the powers to utilize the emergency.

Dr. Fatiaki: I'm not sure that you've actually prepared your submission, but for the purposes of maybe guidance in this respect, for instance, it says right now, under 154, the Prime Minister may, on the recommendation of the Commission of Police and the Command of the Republic Military Forces, obviously that limits what you rightly point out, that limits it to two people initiating it. I would suggest that maybe we substitute for that the National Security Council instead of those two.

And then somewhere along the line, you make up the construct of National Security Council, which will be the Commission of Police, the Army Commander, the DISMAC Coordinator, the Minister for Health or whoever the relevant bodies are that will constitute this body who then advise the Prime Minister, please, sir, we need you to declare a state of emergency because this is where we're at right now.

Mr. Sharma: Correct, Commissioner. In that way, it's graduated and it escalates as it goes. You have your baseline advisors. It goes to another body and that body ultimately informs the Prime Minister.

Ms. Nailatikau: OK, if I may. You said something quite thought provoking in your presentation, Mr. Sharma, when you spoke about, for example, publishing the rationale for ministerial appointments, for instance. One thing that COVID brought forth was the effectiveness of how publishing the levels of security is very useful as well. For example, in New Zealand, they color coded their levels of security and they communicated very openly and transparently about what code green means or what level, you know, what level two means, what level three means.

And I'm wondering as well about the application to a declaration of a state of emergency, about being public and open about the conditions for a state of emergency. As Dr Gounder said, it can be quiet, you know, conditions for emergency can be quite elastic, I guess, in terms of the judgment of a narrow group of people. So, I think in the same line as making sure that the rationale for appointments is published, a criteria for emergencies would also be a requirement in terms of whatever body decides it. Just putting that forward, not necessarily for a landing spot in the constitution, but, you know, for consideration.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, again, through you. Now, Nick, I thank you for bringing to the four aspects of amongst our discussion, things that we've already talked about. But having said that, we prefer it to come from the public. And these are issues such as you know, the separation of powers issue, for instance, with respect to the JSC and its involvement in various aspects of the constitution and the need for bodies such as FICAC, the prosecutorial parties to be. What I think we need is in your written submission, very specific directions as to where these bodies might go, for instance, you know, rather than because at the end of the day, the document that comes out in our report will be comprehensive. It's not good enough for us to say, look, we want to separate the powers. We need to say FICAC should come under here or should disappear or whatever. And, you know, and go back to DPP's office. Those kinds of details are important. And I have no doubt that as an academic and as a lawyer, you can spend a bit more time to put in the submission very specific recommendations as to how we might approach that. OK, and along similar lines, I didn't quite understand the supermajority aspect of getting the president voted. Do you want to enlighten?

Mr. Sharma: Thank you, Chair, for that opportunity. Sorry, Commissioner. With the current setup, a nominee for the president for the office of the president comes from the government side and the opposition side. Now, a nomination from the opposition side, it's tokenistic in a sense, because government will win if they have the numbers and they vote along party lines. So, in order to get more widespread support, I think the supermajority should be should increase from 50 to two thirds or 75 percent in order for the president to have that support from the people. So, with the current setup, I feel that, you know, the office of the president or the person elected is really being dominated by the government side rather than being a truly neutral person for everybody.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for that. I only have one final comment. This is more a reflection. You alluded to the GCC. We've received this submission and I hear your comments. My concern, particularly when people tell me, well, or, you know, native lands protected and all indigenous rights are protected under the current constitution is it's almost like you say tokenistic in the sense that we say, all right, where you're there, but you don't have veto powers. You can't, you know, you can't override the decision of the parliamentary majority, because to me, it's like you're giving us a role and then you're making it tokenistic in the sense that I've got no teeth or clause to ensure that you cannot, for instance, change native legislation, native land legislation. So I'd like you to rethink that in terms of, you know, I think it's important that not only do you give them a role, but that it's a meaningful role so that if it's to reassure them that, for instance, land could not be alienated, that it's not, oh, well, you know, you give your advice, but we can just ignore it because that's what happened in the last government. I think for a lot of times it was, it's tokenistic, it's written there, yes. But at the end of the day, if two people decide no, they have the power to do that. And for me, that's an important fundamental question. Give them a role, but let's not make them a token role. Let's make it meaningful. And I say that in the context of make it meaningful so that they feel assured because that's the important thing if we're trying to avoid the circumstances that led to subsequent calls for which every constitution then attempts to rectify. And hence why we have every constitution.

I've said to my colleagues, I think if you trace every constitution, it's come as a consequence of a coup. Maybe we should address the reasons for the coup in terms of designing the constitution so that we don't have a situation where the uncertainties or the concerns and the anxieties promote the kind of thoughts that might, you know, some army officer might utilize as a means to, you know, usurp another government. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. Through you. I just have one question. Mr. Sharma, thank you for your presentation. Your comment about the ombudsman coming back into the constitution. Ombudsperson, my apologies. Sorry. Thank you, Mere. That's why we've got Mere here. I'm sorry. I was, I was interested in that because Australia and New Zealand in their, New Zealand doesn't have a constitution, but it's statute of law and Australia has one. I was interested in how you'd frame it.

Mr. Sharma: Well, in the Ombudsman's office, my submission didn't go that far, Commissioner, but what I'm saying is that we need, now, I'll give an example. If someone is not processing something for me in a ministry, where do I go? I can drop numerous letters. I can try to get a meeting. I can drop emails, but if someone doesn't want to act, it's very difficult to get them to act. So, with that oversight by an Ombudsman's office to actually mandate them to have a role and to have ministries be accountable to that office, I think that would add a lot in terms of service delivery and the enhancement of service delivery for citizens. So that is the reason why I said that, because if you have a decision or a lack of a decision from a government ministry, it's either an email or a meeting or a complaint or the most extreme matter is taking it to court for review. And that can be quite tiresome and can take years. Yeah.

Mr. Valenitabua: The JSC, from the turn of what you say, that it has too much power?

Mr. Sharma: It's blurring the lines, Sir Chair, between judicial role and executive role. We have them creeping in, in a sense, towards appointments and renumerations for executive officers. And we see this in various facets. My submission actually outlines the various sections in which they are involved in.

Mr. Valenitabua: What about their function in relation to complaints against judges and the other Constitutional Office, where they deal with misbehavior, they appoint tribunals, the JSC.

Mr. Sharma: Correct.

Mr. Valenitabua: Where does that leave?

Mr. Sharma: It's judicial and quasi-judicial then. They act in both capacities. They sit, again, in both capacities. If someone is disgruntled or not happy with the tribunal, where does it go then? Back to them in the courts.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, with the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal, as members of the JSC, what should their function be? Just administrative? Because if it's judicial, then it has to go to the court.

Mr. Sharma: Correct. Yes, correct, yeah. I would limit them, in a sense, to their judicial role and administration within the judiciary, not the executive.

Mr. Valenitabua: When you look at the makeup of the JSC, they were the two most senior judges in the jurisdiction, the President of the Court of Appeal and the Chief Justice. At the moment, they are members. So, you're going to be demoting them from their judicial roles.

Mr. Sharma: I wouldn't say demotion. I would say pinpointing their role, not necessarily demoting them, sir, chair- I have greatest respect for their office and the work that they do. But no, it's important. You would appreciate it, though, that notion of the separation of powers. It's sometimes blurred, in a sense, in most cases, blurred between the legislature, executive, and judiciary. But I think we should at least strive to make it independent as much as possible. That is the basis from which I'm coming from. It's more theoretical than practical, but in a sense, I think we should be moving in the line of thought of making it a true reality as much as we can.

Dr. Fatiaki: I think point taken through you, Chair. This relates to the issue of the ombudsman. Let me just reassure everybody that the man in ombudsman, it's actually a Swedish word that means like a proxy or representative. It doesn't somehow imply agenda. So ombud -woman would be like a silly sounding thing. And an ombud person is also a silly sounding thing. Ombudsman is a proxy, is a person, and it has nothing to do with whether the person is a male or female. But just that's a side issue. But my question really has to do, again, I want you to put more thought in it. In terms of, you know, I've always thought the ombudsman was underpowered. You know, he kind of just had this role that you could complain to him. But it's, there we go. But I felt like empowering him more, but then against that, all disputes can go through, you know, they've got tribunals in the labor where people can address their complaints. And the last thing you want is for every guy who's going to complain to rush straight to the ombudsman. It's like FICAC.

You know, you've got every man in his dog accusing the other fellow of corruption and they rush straight to FICAC. There should be a cutoff point where if you give him more power that somebody has to, how should I put it, go through the processes of addressing his dispute or his complaint, whether it's within the ministry complaints box and then to the tribunal before he arrives at the ombudsman. And he or she will then obviously address the issues that go beyond that, independent of the courts, because ultimately the courts are the arbiter, you know, irrespective of what complaint or issue you have.

If you don't get redress in the particular area that you pursued it, then you can go straight to the courts. The idea behind the ombudsman is he's that person who can act as an agent, a proxy with some power to deal with these issues without necessarily taking it to the courts, which is the final arbiter. And I think you can empower them, but at the same time, you don't want every man in his dog going with, you know, that clock did not get to my call within five minutes. Mr. Ombudsman, could you look into it? I think that that's the area that we need a bit more thought in terms of the submission, in terms of the detail about how we would do that. And that, you know, those would then be the basis upon which we might make recommendations as to changes. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I think on the same note and for purposes of not taking, I think we could also consider some threshold level for which complaints can be made. And also, that there needs to be a process followed before a complaint will actually be looked into. For example, Fiji Human Rights Commission has a set procedure. If the threshold is meet, then only they go and investigate. So, if we have something like that, we could always factor in your good argument. So, I think this is important for note taking so that when we come back, we have something to refer back to. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: The point is that we got to get it with the constitution first and then work from there but recommendation as to be the re-introduction of the ombudsman, I don't know why they remove it ,It used be an office.

Mr. Sharma: I think at one point we had John Apted as a... Was he an ombudsman? But long before him, Justice Moti Tikaram was I think the first ombudsman for Fiji. And I mean, that's, you know, that's about as high as you can get in terms of, you know, ongoing.

Dr. Gounder: Chair, also a lot of complaints I mean the banking system also taken up by the ombudsman. Actually, the inquiry into the banking services in the 97 or 98, I think when I was a student at USP was actually initiated by the ombudsman. Yeah.

Dr. Fatiaki: Oh, man. You've really hit the note on the head here. Any of you with online banking, go and have a look at your statements. I guarantee you 60, 70% of the line items will be fees. Every time you do a transaction, there's the fee beside the transaction. It is just... Forget the ATMs. I mean, this is just ordinary online banking. And where do we go? You know, they used to have a banking ombudsman at one point.

Dr. Gounder: Now in Australia, the commission is through the ombudsman's office in Australia. Commission into the financial services.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair. Can I just answer that quickly? There is a process. I've just done it recently with the FCCC Act. It's very clear the FCCC Act protects the consumer. And you're right. The banking institutions are a law to themselves. You don't need a lawyer. You need the Act to protect you. It works, and I've tried it. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Chair, if I may, further to what Conway was saying and relating to your role, Ms. Sharma, as a teacher of constitutional law and as a lawyer yourself. Your constitutions, there is constitutions about what you call the mother law, for example. And then there is the national legislating, making process, procedures and protocols, for instance.

And every country has its own balance in terms of how much is in the mother law and how much is the business of national legislation making. Fiji has been quite unique. I'd really be interested to hear what, you know, what your views are on someone who's teaching future legal practitioners in this country in terms of the right size is the wrong word, but the level with which you can have a mother law in a constitution that works, but a healthy national legislation making environment as well.

Mr. Sharma: Thank you, Commissioner. The constitution in Fiji is written. It's a written document. There's been a lot of debate as to why our constitution is thick or content heavy. And I think it really boils down to the fact that we're a new country. We're still in a baby phase of growing, even though we got our independence in 1970. And there's been a lot of discussion. And there's been a lot of problems with our constitution and the respective cause that have emerged. So that's why a lot of people are still very comfortable with a written text that guides rather than having a more aspirational sort of constitution.

And it being left to the legislation and rules and sub legislation to actually give it teeth. So, I think that's really where the argument comes from as to why our constitution is very heavily on content because people love the guidance. And I think something that we have become used to in a sense.

Now, the comment from Mr. Commissioner Beg is about New Zealand and Britain, Australia. Australia has a written constitution. New Zealand doesn't have doesn't have a written constitution, but doesn't mean that they don't have a constitution. Similar with the British. They don't have a written constitution. They have a system like New Zealand. I think it's just a matter of semantics and how they have evolved with with their laws and with their history. Yeah, but I think we still like to be guided.

Mr. Valenitabua: Your recommendation in relation to the appointment of ministers.

Mr. Sharma: Yes,

Mr. Valenitabua: you are concerned with the persons who have low voter numbers. Getting into parliament and then being appointed ministers. Now, I may be wrong, but the appointment of ministers is the prerogative of the prime minister. How can we overcome that? Should we tell the prime minister what he should know?

Mr. Sharma: What I meant, Sir, Chair, is that it should be transparent. And how can we increase that transparency? Now, you got someone who has 5000 votes, amassed 5000 votes, and then you have another person who has 200 votes and that 5000 votes doesn't get a seat, a cabinet seat. The person with the 200 votes gets a cabinet portfolio.

Now, what does this do to democracy and what the people have had to say? They've had their say and then it goes to the prime minister and then the prime minister makes his decision as to who he wants to hold that high office. How can we balance this better? How can we make it more transparent? How can we give that sort of that symbiotic relationship between the numbers that that person has brought to the table to get the government appointed and the recognition that he should hold high office?

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, through you, let me just throw a spanner in the works in terms of how we think about this. One would be the issue of separation of powers. If the legislature, which is the parliamentarians, become heads of the various government departments, as is the current Westminster model, then invariably you've just made the legislature basically run the executive. You know, technically, the minister should be in charge, but not be too involved with thePS is meant to do that. But the reality is he's the head of that department and he's a legislator.

He's a parliamentarian and he's part of the legislature. So, the American system, for instance, where basically the prime minister or the president then gets to appoint from anybody in the world, literally, I mean, American citizens, people to run the various departments in his executive. They don't need to be parliamentarians.

Yeah, your thoughts about that? Number one, is there some way that that can be done in our setting where the prime minister is not limited to choosing one of his parties, how should I put it, candidates to be the minister? Could he appoint ministers like he currently has the power to do with the AG? He's allowed to appoint the AG from outside. Wouldn't it be wonderful if the prime minister could come out and appoint people from outside who are obviously very competent? He has the wide array, irrespective of political affiliation, he's not tied to that because I agree completely with you. I know you're saying the idea, but at least if he's going to appoint from parliament, appoint the guy who's got 5,000 votes who's the guy who's got 200 votes.

But I think take it outside of that and separate it completely. If they can do that for the AG, why can't they do that for every other ministry? And how would we do it in the context of amending our constitution? Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I may just comment on that, if the prime minister is going to be pulling people from outside to hold ministerial positions, then what's going to happen to the vote that was cast? People voted for people to be in parliament to do the job in parliament.

And in addition to that, it may be an argument in favor of changing the voting system completely. From what we have now, where you have people with 200, 300 votes being there as members of parliament because of the voting system. Do you agree?

Mr. Sharma: I agree with that, sir chair. Taking on board both your comments right now, what is happening is the prime minister is selecting who he wants to work with as opposed to who the people said that he should work with. So that is currently happening. So, I don't have any radical ideas in terms of how that can be managed.

But what I did mention is that it should be transparent and there should be a certain level of transparency to actually show why he picked a particular person over the other. Now, say, for example, you have a doctor who has come in. He's elected. He would be the best person in most senses to be the minister of health. But you select a person who comes from a different background to be the minister of health. Now, where is the sense in that? That person wouldn't know the difference between a virus and a bacteria, with all due respect, Sir Chair. Whereas you have someone who knows the job, who's been in the field, who knows the people around them, who knows how the structure works. So that is inherently the problem that I'm trying to show.

Dr. Baba: Can I come in, please? You know, I don't know whether I totally agree with you. In the fact that I'm a professor of education, I declare my conflict of interest, but it is within that that I speak. We in education have been wondering about what you're saying for a while, and I see the value. Say a chair is prime minister in another setting, and there sits in that corner John Fatiaki, who I prefer to be the minister of health because he's got 3,500 votes, but not in my party.

As prime minister, I think he should get him to be the minister. He don't care, he belongs to another party. But where's the legislation that tells the prime minister to use more than just his party? Because the people have put him in. Doesn't matter the party. I totally agree with you, and I will not make the, you know, I will not point to the Ministry of Education, but people think in this country that because they go to school, they understand education fallacy. We also, like you have a lawyer in the AG's office, you have a doctor in the medical office.

Education is central to everybody, but then you don't want to put an educator there? Weak. So yeah, I totally agree with you, but we're, you lawyers must help us because if he is the prime minister, he should be able to navigate and represent, get the representative, which is John, not in his party. It don't matter. You know, what, that's how do you make it happen? That's, that's for you lawyers. So please don't fight further. Just do the work so that we can do it. I see your point. It is so limiting what we have right now. There's somebody with 300 votes just because he's friends to Nilesh, gets to be in government. That is not good. Sorry. Yeah, that's my two cents.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, through you, to answer your votes, Professor Nabobo, the 1997 constitution. Well, after, after the elections are done, I think the prime minister was mandated to offer ministries across to, depending on the proportion of seats they attained. OK, we know how that worked out. It didn't quite work out too well because he made up all sorts of funny ministries, you know, minimum, you know, 50 staff ministries and gave it to the opposition because that requires a person to act in good faith. But I think the principle behind it was to force a sort of a government of national unity. I take it again a step further and I'll answer chair's question or chair's comments. I think the prime minister as the person who wins already will have his policies. Now, who actually implements the policies at the executive level will be of his choice. It doesn't mean he's deserted the party. I don't necessarily think that the guy who got elected into parliament, he's elected into parliament by definition to make laws. He's not elected into parliament to run an executive because that's the whole idea. He's the legislature. Parliamentarians are legislatures. They're not meant to be executives. So, they should come into parliament and make laws.

Right now, we're making them make laws, but we're also making them run ministries. And unfortunately, it becomes an issue of what I need to reward you because you came on my party and therefore, you know, he has a high-status position as a minister for whatever. But if you were to choose from basically open the field so he could choose whether it's from another party or whether it's the general public, competent people to become part of the executive and that they run the country independent of political machinations.

So, the simple answer, Chair, when you asked that was the policies will still be the party's policies. The platform will still be the same. And the people that he puts in place, I presume will do what the prime minister wants them to do in terms of the policy, which would be the party's platform. But the individuals who are doing it are doing that. I don't think that because somebody got elected into the party, that somehow that translates into him becoming a good advocate for, you know, for implementing policy. I think, you know, a cynic might suggest that once he's there and got his car and his overseas trips and his per diems, he forgets the policy that they stood on.

And I don't mean to be a cynic, but definitely if you did not limit it to the ministers, right now you're limited. They suggest we include the opposition members, but you're still limited to 50 people. If you have 500 people you could choose from, it'll do two things. One is you will separate the executive from the legislature. You don't have any parliamentarian running a ministry for better or for worse. And number two, you will then probably have the pick of the crop in terms of the best people to do these things. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: I'll just, do you want to make a comment? No, thank you. I think I've seen how this works at first hand, the allocation of ministries and who's selected and so on. And I take your point. I have the same issue as well. The difficulty that I see in legislating something of this kind, the challenges. But, what usually happens is over time as political parties mature, they try to bring in people who have the relevant expertise and know-in, know-how in terms of the ministerial portfolio that they are assigned to. So that is an issue. One of the ways we can fix this is by changing the electoral system. The electoral act, if it changes the boundaries and if we have those, we can change the system slightly. But the challenge will always be here. We may not elect a person who has the right mix of expertise. It's difficult to legislate in my view, but it's worth something considering looking at what can be done. And I also understand the point. If you select 50 people, elect 50 people, you may not always have the right expertise. But your point is taken. You know, yeah, good point. We'll take that on board.

Mr. Valenitabua: It's meant to be difficult. You know, we've got a party system there. And then maybe change the constitution to the condition of a government of national unity. I don't know. Because with a party system on, what we are trying, what we are commenting on, just won't work. Right? Look at the condition. Have they improved?

Mr. Sharma: Everyone is fighting for survival.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, if you keep appointing people from outside of the party, you'll lose your support from your own party.

Dr. Fatiaki: You only need to worry about that when you come to the next elections. But for four years, you can govern with competent people. And the chances are that if you govern with competent people and produce the goods, you'll probably get reelected, irrespective of the guys that you didn't appoint from your party.

Dr. Gounder: Other countries have dealt with this by strengthening the bureaucracy to ensure that we have enough technical expertise within ministries. Something which we have in Fiji is weakened over time. I experienced two years with dealing with all the ministries. The bottoms-up approach of highlighting the actual problems and then filtering it through the ministry systems and processes and getting the expert opinion, finally, is lacking. And that's where... Some of the provisions, I don't want to preempt anything, in the constitution provides more powers to the ministers in decision-making, which has created a lot of these challenges that you have highlighted.

Dr. Baba: Sir, could I be just a loud cheer? In terms of what Dr. Navneel has just said, could you comment on the concurrence that thing that says that PS's need to concur? Because if we have to go by his logic, then we expect the expertise to comment on the running of matters in the ministry. Those that are educated to the point where the bureaucracy has collected them because of their brains, not because they belong to party A or party B. A minister comes in and then he tells the legislation tells the PS's to concur with the minister. Can you please remove that? Or what are we going to do about it? Because then it weakens what Dr. Gounder is saying. So, I'm not a PS, but from my level, I only deal with PS's And if they cannot be allowed to act with their brains, because that's why they're there, because of that one word, because we can't... John's got a better word, chair. We can't make the ministers behave professionally. They are political. I mean, what Nilesh is saying is, we have a good group of workers. Let's allow them to do their work. In this country, it's called the PS's. They should be allowed to operationalize. But now with that word concurrence, it's not working. I know this because I deal with the PS's. So yeah, that's a good position to be at. But take out the word. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Sorry, on the same gist, what I've experienced is that under the democratic convention and the system that we had, we had different layers of decision making, starting from commissioners and then district officials and then commissioners and then flowing through ministries, etc. In the last 20 years or so, that structure is essentially broken. Ministers tell the people they will solve all their problems. So, it's been driven from top down rather than the bottoms up. So, if we strengthen the systems, the way in all these civil service mechanisms are supposed to work within our democratic convention, then only we'll be able to strengthen the way expertise decision making filters through at the ministerial level. And then to cabinet, and then to parliament, and also policy making. That has been weakened over time. And that's why I think I see your point. If you don't have a minister who has the expertise and is selected based on political grounds rather than expertise or some understanding or know-how, you see the mismatch between the minister's roles and the ability to carry out those roles. Because the minister is no longer relying on the expertise or technical expertise of the ministry.

Mr. Sharma: Thank you, Commissioner. I've been around the block in my limited life. I've seen how governments work. The real experts that come from ministries are the directors and deputy secretaries. The permanent secretaries sometimes, but most times maybe not. Look at Fiji's examples. We've got a handful of permanent secretaries who have no knowledge of the ministry that they are in. Similar with ministers, obviously. So that bulk of expertise and knowledge base is really at the director and deputy secretary and principal officer as well. So that is some of the problems that I've seen working in various ministries as well.

Dr. Gounder: Through administratively, one of the strategies that we did last time is to have strategic planning officers back in the divisional offices, Commissioner Division, Commissioner Northern, Commissioner Central. So, there's a direct link between the planning ministry and the feedback that we get from the different divisions. So, this was taken away in 2007. That's something that we appropriately saw. There is a lot of administrative work that needs to be done as well to ensure that we sharpen the way problems and issues are identified on the ground and the way these issues are then taken up into policy making through expertise advisory processes. I totally agree with you. It's the deputy PS, the director, all of these down to commissioners' level, etc. But district officers should play an increasingly important role. We have completely seen the disempowering of the district officers. That's why we used to have these divisions here. Yeah, because they have the government on the ground. We're still collecting data based on the four divisions, but the decision making does not flow on through these processes that we used to have. There's a clear breakdown of how this system was supposed to work in our democratic conventions.

Mr. Sharma: I would like to just thank the chair and the members of the panel for this immense opportunity. The comments I will take on board and thank you very much for your time as well, sir, chair and members of the panel.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much for your attendance today. You have created very robust exchanges here, not even between the commissioners. But thank you very much. You have raised some really pertinent points. I liked your idea about the GCC, but we'll have a look into that. The ombudsman, when you mentioned the ombudsman, I thought, why did they ever take away that office? So, we look into your submissions. Please hand over a copy of your written submissions to the policy team on your left or on your right, sorry. And if you have any other submission which you can help this commission with, please don't hesitate to send them to us. You can get our email address after that, if you haven't got it already. And thank you very much.

Mr. Sharma: Thank you, sir, chair. I wish you all the best with the important task ahead. Thank you.

Submission to the Constitutional Review Commission – 16 April 2026

By: Navneel Sharma

Chair and Members of the Commission,

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you and to make this submission. I acknowledge the diversity, experience, and expertise of the Chair and the distinguished members of this panel.

At this important moment in Fiji's constitutional history, we are called to reflect not only on where we have come from, but also on where we aspire to go. Our Constitution should reflect the richness of Fiji's history, the resilience of its people, and the depth of its cultures. At the same time, it must articulate a clear and principled vision for the next fifty to one hundred years—grounded in unity, justice, accountability, and opportunity for all.

In this sense, a constitution is more than a legal instrument; it is a statement of national identity and shared purpose. We have the opportunity to develop one of the world's most modern written constitutions, and that is something we should approach with both ambition and pride.

At the outset, I emphasise that this Commission carries a significant responsibility. Public consultation must be meaningful. The views gathered should not only be recorded, but carefully considered, properly contextualised, and genuinely reflected in the drafting process. A constitution must not merely regulate power; it must command public confidence.

My name is Navneel Sharma. I am an academic and teach Constitutional Law at the University of the South Pacific. The views expressed today are my own and do not reflect those of my employer or any organisation with which I am affiliated.

I will be brief. I will address six areas: the Judicial Services Commission, the Office of the President, the status of the Great Council of Chiefs, the Office of the Ombudsman, emergency powers, and the selection of portfolio Ministers.

1. The Judicial Services Commission

In the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji, the name "Judicial Services Commission" (JSC) appears forty-five times. It is established under Chapter 5, which deals with courts and judicial officers. The JSC is chaired by the Chief Justice and performs appointment, recommendation, and advisory functions within the judiciary.

However, its role extends beyond the judicial sphere. The JSC advises on matters relating to the remuneration of the FICAC Commissioner (s 115), makes recommendations regarding the Solicitor-General (s 116) and the Director of Public Prosecutions (s 117), and advises on appointments to the Mercy Commission (s 119).

This expansion raises a structural concern. When a judicial body exercises influence over prosecutorial appointments, anti-corruption oversight, and clemency processes, the separation of powers becomes blurred. The concentration of advisory authority within a single institution risks weakening checks and balances and may affect public perceptions of institutional independence.

Recommendation:
The Commission may wish to consider whether the JSC's mandate should be more clearly confined to judicial administration, with executive or quasi-executive appointments allocated to appropriately structured and independent mechanisms.

2. The Office of the President

The appointment of the President by a simple parliamentary majority under s. 84 of the Constitution in concerning. In practice, this enables the government of the day to determine the appointment, limiting meaningful participation by the opposition. Especially if voting is not on Conscience but along party lines. The President is intended to serve as a unifying and non-partisan Head of State. Yet if the selection process is dominated by the governing majority, public perception of neutrality may be undermined.

Recommendation:

There are options worth considering. A supermajority requirement in Parliament could be considered. Voting should be done on Conscience Vote and not along party lines to ensure that the government does not necessarily get who they want. Having said that and on a cursory note, I think alot is said when we boast ourselves as the 'Hub of the Pacific' and 'punching beyond our weight' and we still have not had a female President as Head of State for our country since independence.

3. The Great Council of Chiefs

The 2013 Constitution has disregarded the role of the the Great Council of Chiefs (GCC). This omission is constitutionally significant. The GCC functions as a central institution of indigenous governance, reflecting the authority of the vanua and communal leadership within iTaukei society. Its removal signalled a major shift in how traditional authority is recognised within the constitutional framework.

I support the recognition of the GCC under a new constitution as a paramount body reflecting indigenous interests admist ever growing global pressures. However, the question is not simply whether the GCC should be restored, but what role it should perform in a modern constitutional democracy and the balancing of this constitutional representative body against groups who do not have such chiefly structures to represent them and are at the mercy of the ever changing executive body.

If reimagined, the GCC could contribute to national agenda-setting in areas where structural challenges are evident, including school dropout rates, indigenous land utilisation and productivity, rural development, substance abuse, disproportionate indigenous representation in the criminal justice system, bridging the ethic divide, improving standards of living in rural communities, and pressures caused by urban migration.

Recommendation:
The Commission may wish to consider the constitutional recognition of the Great Council of Chiefs as an independent advisory body with clearly defined and limited functions. Its role should be consultative rather than political, with a mandate to provide non-binding advice on matters affecting iTaukei interests, including customary land, traditional governance, and indigenous socio-economic development. To ensure coherence within a modern constitutional democracy, its functions should be expressly confined so as not to encroach upon parliamentary sovereignty or executive authority. Consideration may also be given to requiring structured consultation with the Council on legislation or policy directly affecting indigenous interests, while avoiding any form of veto power.

4. The Office of the Ombudsman

For many ordinary citizens, engaging with executive bureaucracy can be difficult. Administrative processes are often slow, opaque, and unresponsive. When correspondence is unanswered and decisions remain unexplained, public trust erodes.

The Ombudsman traditionally provided an accessible and low-cost mechanism to address maladministration. It offered investigation and resolution without the delay, complexity, and expense associated with court proceedings. It did not replace judicial review; it complemented it.

While judicial review remains available, it is often time-consuming and financially burdensome. For many citizens, it is not a realistic avenue of redress. The removal of the Ombudsman narrows accessible accountability mechanisms and places greater reliance on litigation.

In a constitutional system committed to the rule of law and responsible government, there should exist an independent and accessible institution capable of investigating executive maladministration. Without such a body, accountability risks becoming reactive and court-driven rather than responsive and citizen-centred.

Recommendation:
The Commission may wish to consider the re-establishment of the Office of the Ombudsman as an independent constitutional office with a clearly defined mandate to investigate administrative conduct across the public sector. Its functions should include the power to receive complaints from the public, initiate own-motion investigations, and make findings and recommendations on maladministration.

To ensure effectiveness and credibility, the Office should be institutionally independent, adequately resourced, and accessible to all citizens without undue procedural barriers. Consideration may also be given to requiring public authorities to respond to Ombudsman findings within a specified timeframe, thereby strengthening administrative accountability while preserving the non-binding and complementary nature of the Office alongside judicial review.

5. Election of Ministers

It is concerning that the Prime Minister retains broad discretion in the selection of Cabinet members. In practice, individuals who receive relatively low numbers of votes may be appointed to significant ministerial portfolios, while others with substantially higher electoral support remain backbench members. Similarly, individuals who enter Parliament through replacement mechanisms following resignation or death may be elevated quickly to ministerial office despite having secured comparatively limited electoral endorsement.

This raises questions about the relationship between electoral legitimacy and executive appointment and may affect public confidence in the representativeness of the Cabinet.

While the formation of Cabinet is properly a function of the executive, a complete disconnect between electoral support and ministerial appointment risks undermining the democratic signal expressed through the vote.

Recommendation:
The Commission may wish to consider reforms that enhance the transparency and democratic legitimacy of Cabinet appointments, while preserving necessary executive discretion. This could include the development of guiding principles or statutory criteria encouraging the Prime Minister to have regard to factors such as electoral support, experience, and competence when constituting Cabinet.

Consideration may also be given to requiring the publication of reasons or criteria underpinning ministerial appointments, thereby strengthening public accountability without unduly constraining the functioning of the executive.

6. State of Emergency

Under section 154, the Prime Minister may, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Police and the Commander of the Republic of Fiji Military Forces, declare a state of emergency. This formulation appears narrow and rooted in more traditional conceptions of national security threats. Contemporary experience most notably the COVID-19 pandemic and global economic disruptions demonstrates that emergencies may arise beyond the scope of policing or military advice alone.

This raises concerns about whether the current framework adequately captures the range of modern crises requiring urgent and coordinated state response.

Recommendation:
The Commission may wish to consider revising section 154 to broaden the basis upon which a state of emergency may be declared. In particular, the power to advise or initiate such a declaration could be vested in Cabinet collectively, rather than being limited to recommendations from the Republic of Fiji Military Forces and the Fiji Police Force.

This would better reflect the multi-dimensional nature of contemporary emergencies, including public health and economic crises. Any such reform should also retain appropriate parliamentary oversight, including timely approval and review of emergency declarations, to ensure that the exercise of emergency powers remains accountable and proportionate.

Mr. Valenitabua: We welcome you. The consultations which have been done, we have informed people that this is an independent commission, appointed by the President, His Excellency the President, and through a way cabinet decision. We have a term of references, and the term of reference spells out that we are to listen, hear, and then deliberately draw a report on what the people of Fiji submit to us in relation to the 2013 constitution. With the objective of reviewing it, and preparing an amended constitution. That is our term of reference. We have 10 other, or 11 other matters which are included in the terms of reference. And your presence here today, I believe will assist us very much in relation to our work as the review commission for the 2013 constitution. I will not say any further than that. We welcome you. Please make yourself at home. Let's make this, it's not a formal setting, so we'll just exchange questions and answers, and maybe some comments. But we pass it on to you to please make your submission here.

Mr. Rajesh: Thank you. Thank you, sir. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, we'd just like to congratulate all of you for being appointed in the commission. And I was so delighted, I think, since the day your swearing-in happened, and I met Dr. Baba at a dinner function, I guess. She was there, and then I was surprised when she told me, and I was so happy. Because this is one thing in my life that I fought for, was the legal 1997 constitution. And until today, I know a lot of people ask me, will you contest the election? I've been offered by other parties, even PM asked me, and other parties. I still have my reservation, and I'm a believer of the law.

And I always said, no, I will never support a constitution that was enforced, the 2013 constitution was enforced on the people of Fiji. And it was not the will of the people. And as we know, the 1997 constitution, there was a court ruling, and there was very clear in the Supreme Court ruling, and that was from the judges that came from Australia and New Zealand in Qarase versus and Bainimarama's case, April 9, 2009.

And they said that the 1997 constitution was the legal constitution, and it cannot be abrogated by the military coup or anybody else. They said the President has reserved powers and all that, that was very clear in those rulings that it cannot be abrogated. So, my simple presentation is very much, and I will say that the 1997 constitution, even though, Chair, you were there with us when we went to the appeals court, and when I was very disappointed, but when Justice Temo said that the 1997 constitution is finished.

But I still believe it's not finished, honest to God. And that's my opinion. I'm not a lawyer, but as former MP and others, I believe the 1997 constitution is still alive, and it's just sleeping somewhere.

So, for me, for today, I came here, and I'd like to thank you for giving me this opportunity. First of all, what I want to say is we want a constitution that is like 1997. And first of all, I would say to start off is that Fiji, in the preamble, we acknowledge, like America and other people, that at the moment we don't have God in the constitution.

And I would very much say that Fiji needs a constitution that we have God, we acknowledge God. As our chief who accepted Ratu Seru Cakobau when he accepted Christianity, and he declared and accepted Christ, and then that is very important to have God in our constitution, and I will be very open here in saying that I would prefer Fiji to be called as a Christian state. And every other religion, even though my Misis is Hindu, my mom is Hindu, we, my brothers, we are Christian, my sisters are Christian, some follow other Hindu religion, we all respect each other's religion, and they be given opportunity, like everywhere in Australia, in Fiji, everybody has freedom of religion, so that's it, but I think it's very important to have in our primal that we acknowledge God, and that is very important.

The second thing is we want, been fighting for this too, great council of chiefs to be legally restored in the constitution, yes, it was in the 1997 constitution, so the GCC can sit and appoint a president and a vice president, yes, it was in the 1997 constitution. And then we have senate, and same thing, prime minister appoints, GCC appoints, and opposition appoints, and then we have one reserve seat for the senate, I know it comes from Rotuma, so same thing as 1997 constitution, that's what I'm talking about is 71 seats, senate, GCC, and all those things to come back as it was in 1997 constitution. Because if you really look at 1997 constitution, it's really promoted multi-party government, multiracialism, everybody to work together, and I was surprised, and I can share this with you, I was called by our patron Turaga Na Qaranivalu, I went and visited him, he was in jail, and then he spoke to me and then he said the party president will speak to you, to Kalo and the prime minister, and I said okay.

So, what is this, he said, I won't say, but they will talk to you, and we've already discussed things. So, I was surprised, and I never even read that part, it was, it touched me, and I still today, as you saw it was, even Bainimarama called me and said, do you know that I saw a file that you named was to be appointed future vice president of Fiji. And I laughed and I said yes, that was true, because I told them I will only serve two terms, what I wanted to achieve in sports and other things, I'll achieve it and then I'll retire in 2011, just only two terms in parliament, that was my plan over the 2016.

And they said oh you can become the vice president because the indigenous people like you and you are very multiracial and you understand the culture, you respect the people and both sides of the house will be easy to convince them. But for me I would like to say the same thing in the future, it's not about me but in the future, I would love to see a vice president of Fiji come from an Indian origin or any other race, and the president has to be a paramount chief, that I will be very much aligned with that, that will be my submission. And actually, then I was just doing some research and looking at Singapore with a population of about 300,000 plus, and they had three Indian presidents came from, and at the current there's an Indian president too who's been nominated and they said it is, when I was reading all this article it was talking about how the president is a symbol of unity.

So, that's the thing on those things, and like the 97 constitution I was saying is about we should have, I know people will say oh you want to go on the ethnic line again, I would prefer we go back to the same thing, go back to the constituency boundary, we go back to the reserve seats for the indigenous people, and then also we go for the Indian people and also I know there's reserve seats for the pat European and also for the Rotuman, but I would like to add another two, because I've been going around and watching this load of our brothers from Rabi, Rabian heritage and Kiriban's, so if we can do that, and I know our Indian population has decreased, they had 19 reserve seats, I would make a submission, okay we can take four seats out from there, and if we can divert the seats to Rabian, Kiriban's, and also even to the Chinese, you know. So, when we go to Parliament and when we talk about multiracialism, we can see people in Parliament with all races that live in Fiji that call Fiji our home, they are all represented in Parliament or in Senate, and when people look at it, the younger generation or people from outside world, they will look oh yeah, Fiji is a real multiracial country. The other thing about the citizenship, and this is what I brought, this is my diplomatic passport, 2006, that is my current Fiji passport that got renewed, and this is my New Zealand passport.

So, when I look at it, this is one thing that I was not supportive and I will never support, when you know they said oh we call everybody Fijian, honestly it was an identity theft by Banimarama and Kayum, and I will never support it. Honestly speaking, we should be proud of whatever race God created us in, so that's one thing I would like to very emphasize that we shouldn't mock God, if God has created us as an Indian heritage, a Fijian heritage, a Rotuman heritage, a Rotuman, or a Chinese, or Rabian, or a Kiribati in Fiji, or anywhere in the world, I think we should respect that, very important. So, I would prefer that a common name be called, a Fijian name reserved back to our native original Fijians, Indian can be called Indo-Fijian or Pacific Islanders, like in the passport I can see that it was called before.

So, that is something that I want to very much emphasize on that, because I always write in the Facebook, I'm proud, it's not even like boasting, but what I'm proud of is my God given race, and that I should respect that, because I am someone that we cannot mock our creator, if our creator has created us in that race, we should respect each other's race and follow that, rather than trying to become something that you are not trying to, like for example, in Australia and New Zealand, I talk to my Indian friends and others, and I always tell them, we have to respect the First Nation people in Australia, the indigenous people, aborigines, and same thing in Maoris, and in Fiji. This is one thing I would like to educate my Indian community, and I've been saying that, and this is what I was brought up with my parents, and when my two uncles were ministers with Ratu Mara, one was the Minister for Health, James Shankar Singh, Mum's elder brother, younger brother, Uday Singh was a member of Parliament, and later he became a Senator, and Mr. Chaudhury for the first election against my two uncles in Ba, and that was James Shankar Singh and Uday Singh and Chowdhury in 1984, and that's where Uncle Uday, Mum's younger brother came up and became the thing, and he also, later in 87 he lost, but then he became Deputy Chair of Public Service Commission.

Yesterday I met Mr. Rokovada and he said, oh, that's your uncle? I said, yes, Mum, younger brother. So that's something that I always cherish in my life, and both of them passed away, even my dad was a unionist and he was a founder of the Labour Party, and people said, when was the Labour Party formed? Oh, this time, I said, no, no, no, I correct you, I was a 12 year old kid, I saw it very clearly, I was running with a flyer, it was called the Fiji Labour and Country Party, back in 1977 it was formed by my dad, who was a unionist at that time, Freddie Archibald and Michael Columbus and them.

So, that's something that I cherish, living in the village, brought up in the village in Qauia village, and that is my love for my people, for everybody that developed there, and that's why I joined the church. As a small kid I would go to the Methodist Church, hey, Rajesh, we go to this church, okay, we go to LDS Church, Catholic Church, everywhere I would go, and then later I got converted to LDS. But that's something in my life that, you know, when I look at people now, and I was hurt just about two weeks ago, I was recently abused in our office at FNRL, and I was called a 'kaidia', you're not needed here, we don't want 'kaidia 'here, get out of this office, because when I was trying to do something good, you know, and I just looked at them and I just shook my head, and the police officers were all sitting down there.

I said, these guys have done so much damage to those institutions, have, you know, stolen money and all this kind of thing, mismanagement, and now you call me 'kaidia', why am I called a 'kaidia', but I just took it on my chin, but it hurted me, honestly. All my life I went through these schools, it never hurted me that much, because people, I was walking in town and people were hitting each other, but I'm just still walking, they all know, and hey, you know, my nickname, and so, I was not hit, but yes, I was hit, but this is something that I would like to say that we, another, why I'm bringing this topic, I want to say that we have to take immunity out, no more immunity, honestly. From now on, we shouldn't grant any immunity to anybody, or military people, or anybody, who come in school.

So, from now on, if this new constitution is written, from onwards, we should say no more immunity, you know, because to be fair, we see the civilian people, when they do coup, they end up in prison. When the military do coup, they become prime ministers, and presidents, and whatever, you can call it, and everything they become. So, the law has to be fair, it has to be one law for everybody, not, oh no, military do the coup, they can rewrite the constitution, and they get immunity, so immunity has to be out.

And the other thing is, because we are facing this problem in Fiji at the moment, is drug raids, and all this kind of thing, I would also like to encourage, if we can, the government can have it in our constitution, that we have to have a strict penalty for all these people that are the drug lords, or that are committing crime, and I know there's a law already there, under procedure of crime. The assets can be all taken, and it comes to the state, so there's something that has to be really enforced, and this drug issue has to stop, because I know there's a lot of people are facing this problem now, and we have to safeguard our country, and safeguard our youths from these things, and we have to bring stiffer penalty, stricter penalties, even, honestly speaking, I would even say, we just have to be something like Indonesia, or, you know, if they need to face the firing squad, let it be, I know they're going to say, oh, in the Ten Commandments, I shall not kill, no, it is there, I shall not kill, but if you break the law, then what are you going to do, even like, in the 97 constitution, another constitution, I know when you commit coup, treason, it was hanged to death, but it never happened, that's why, then we had another coup, if we would have done that in 2000, that's it, then there wouldn't be a 2006 coup. Those people would have been scared, you know, deter from what is happening.

The biggest problem we're facing in Fiji now, I got a call from one of my cousin, is another problem we're facing now, is about the land lease problem, and you must have seen videos going around, and other things, and like I said, my family side is, most of them are farmers too, and they're retired, teachers and all that, and they're into farming and all that, and when the lease is about to expire, they get worried, and you know, they cry, and all this kind of thing, oh, what's going to happen now to us, and all this, so I always just teach them one thing, you have a good relationship with the Yavusa, the landowners, and all this, because they are the people. I tell them, the government can't do much, anybody, everybody blaming the government, no, government doesn't have a say, honestly speaking, the land belongs to the chiefs, and the mataqali, so if you want to work nicely, you be good friends with them, you pay your dues, your rental, and everything, and then they'll be able to renew your lease.

I mean, I know, I've been offered so many times, by Turaga Qaranivalu, and other people, I said, no, no, thank you, I've got enough, if I need it, I will follow the traditional protocol, and I'll come and ask for it, and I'll pay for a fair rental on the lease, and all this kind of thing, so that's one thing, I think, so we have to, our lease is another issue of the sugar farmers, and not only that, but I think so, we have to look at a fair return, because at the moment, when you look at the lease, that some people have, and what they're paying TLTB and the landowners, and what they're getting is not a fair return, so that's why we're having this problem with the lease, because that's one thing, the people need the security of the lease, but at the same time, I tell them, you pay a fair return. For example, you have a house, you rent your house, so if somebody wants to rent your house, they come and talk to you, so you decide how much to pay and all that, so there's something, I think, so we have to look at it in the constitution too, about a fair return that has to be inbuilt for the landlord and the tenant, and then we have a 99-year lease, and then you can have a renewal, but everything is, all has to be a fair share of the game.

It's not like one side only, it has to be both sides, that you can sit down and agree on a thing, on a good amount, and then move forward, I'll give you an example, I got a friend, so we wanted to buy a land for rugby league, and I said, how much, so this guy, I showed him his lease document, he took it as an agricultural lease, right, so he paid only 1,500, then he did a little bit, okay, built it up, 10 acres, up, now he told me, he's going to sell that land, if you want it, for 18 million dollars, and I go, what, 18 million for this land to us, when you pay only this much, come on, you have to be fair, and see, but then he turned that land, agricultural land, kept it for three years, and then he turned it into a commercial lease.

So, that's one thing I think, so this constitution, and TLTB, and all these people, I think so, we have to factor this kind of thing, because then here, he gets the money, but what if the poor land owner gets, you know, we have to be fair, I think so, that's something that we have to be very fair, then they can turn around and say, no, it's a commercial decision, or I've invested this much in it, okay, that's fine, but come on, be fair.

The other thing I would like to suggest is in civil service, I remember before it was 60-40, something that we have to, once again, introduce those kind of things in civil service, like every race, everybody is given a fair on their merit, like 70-30, you know, those kind of things for indigenous people, 70%, others 30%, you know, look at the community ratio, how much they are, that kind of thing, that's one thing I would like to suggest, that's very important, and that multi-party government. I already spoke about it, and the parliament term, I think it's good to go back to five years again, instead of four years, five years, and another thing, it was before in Fiji Trade Investment Act, now they've changed it to Fiji Investment, it was some business that was reserved for local people only, and now you can see everywhere things are happening.

I would like to encourage the government, even put it in the constitution, about uplifting our indigenous brothers and sisters, is about the government should help, in a way, is when they get their lease money, and other things, like for example, in the west, where those land are suitable for tourism, we need a lot of hotels and all this, if government can encourage FNPF, and the landowners to go on a 70-30 partnership business, not only in that, but in hotels, industry, and other business, you know, and we like to also encourage government.

If you really want to uplift the standard of our brothers and sisters, indigenous brothers and sisters, it's to uplift their, the way they're living, the standard of housing, housing is one thing, and all this kind of thing, because they get, I asked one of my friends, how much you guys get in lease, he said 38 million, I said, what do you do with that money, oh, everybody gets the share, party, do you save any money, nah, we're going to go, that week the liquor shop going to get empty, that's it, so I said, man, just imagine, if you take 50% of that money, and you put it in FNPF, or somewhere you going to get that return and in 10 years you going to double your money. You invest in some kind of this.

That is some kind of thing I would like to put it in constitution someway you are the expert that can help in uplifting of our indigenous people because they got the land they got the resources they got everything. I tell everything you can get to be the richest people because you guys got the land. 90% of the land is native, if you use it wisely you can be very rich. I t think those are the kind of thing the government is to teach people and we are not teaching people that's why I'm saying in the constitution if we can put this how are we going to uplift people. See I was very much like India, see India like the 4th economy in the world and they can go number 2 in the world. It's all about these visions.

How you wanted to hello the people. Just uplift each other, like how you can build forty million houses . I think so there is a lot of monkeys in the civil servant has been misused. If you can plan things wisely everything can be and all this kind of things like drugs. For me my personal view if government can build up sports facility. Every youth would like to play all this kind of things youths etc. Lot of money in the civil servants or in the government has been misused. Lot of money in the civil service have been mis-used. And if you plan things nicely. And if government can allocate money and build up facility. Everybody wants to play sports youths and all. Instead of going to drugs the youths can use all these kinds of things so that they can go away from drugs.

Sports is a big thing now. Sports is something that can bring people 'out from this think. I was talking to Madam Baba like things like life after sports and help our future youths. Sometimes we all don't have to go to school but then I went and talk to my Fijian friend hey, go talk to my future friend, okay, I'm going to pay your fare this side, from this side, so simple terms in English was, okay, if my future friend is going to pay my fare, okay, we're going to go to school in the morning so we can finish and then after that we can walk down from Navesi Primary School, we'll shortcut and then we go to your village.

It takes two hours but you know, when you're young, we're laughing, we're joking, we're stories, but there's that kind of thing that I cherished in my life and I never forget all these things, because living in peace and harmony and multiracial society that Fiji can be, now our kids, our schools, they get $200 fees, I mean, that allows, and I saw people abusing that money, I'll give you an example, I was talking to Isaac yesterday and Isaac was telling me that his cousin in Ba, he was in Ba too and he said, I went there, he got $1000, five kids, $200 was used on the kids, $800 was on the bus, and then they called Isaac, hey Isaac, can you help this and this and this, so he said, I have to help, but he said, you know, honestly brother, I wanted to punch him, but you know, we can't, but this kind of other things that government is giving adults, but then people have to take, be responsible, I said, why can't government in the $200 subsidy they're giving for schools, why can't they just give it to, okay, you get a voucher here, go and buy things from post Fiji.

It's a government entity, public enterprise, the money comes back to government, and then they will buy books and all this kind of thing, so I'm talking about, I know I'm talking about constitution, but I'm going out a little bit out of the way, but those are the things that I see, the problem that is out there, how in the constitution can we factor this kind of thing, social obligation and all this kind of thing.

I think we already have a bill of right, so those kind of things will be protected, but that's what I wanted to say, and I think, so just to round it off, and mostly if you have some questions that I can answer, I would like to see, like I said, Fiji is a Christian state and all this kind of thing, but the most important thing is we need all our race to be in parliament, and make voting compulsory, make voting compulsory, even the town councils to local government, at the moment we didn't have any local government election since 2006, or 2005 I think, so it was the last one, and after this there's no local government election, so we should go into local government, things has to happen every five years.

I would propose, and also general election every five years, and then common role, open seats, and reserve seats for all races in parliament, so that will be my submission for today to the constitution commission, and if you have any questions, madam, and sir, I'm happy to answer it, and even if you can give me some advice, that some things are brought up, that you think that I can go and share with our friends and community, that will help our brothers and sisters out there, thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Mr. Singh, you raised some points, I ask the commissioners if there are any questions, or any comments, in relation to what Mr. Singh has raised to us this morning.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you Jay, through you, Rajesh, I apologize if I can call you Rajesh, thank you very very much for your thoughts, and your sharing's, and reflections, I know exactly where you're coming from, because I know you for a long time, for our colleagues who don't know, Honorable Rajesh Singh was a minister in 2006, so just in terms of administration, you can't get higher than that, so you're talking from a place of knowledge, and experience.

I reflect on a lot of the things you say about the nature of the relationship between the races, growing up in a village speaking Fijian, playing with the boys, you know, he, whatever, that is something that I lived through, and I have no doubt that there are colleagues of mine who are old enough to remember that, and even the younger ones, I have no doubt that they have very fond memories, and I think those sentiments are shared amongst all of us.

The thing though, with these sort of things, is to try and figure out how to, you know, bring those things back, and I hear a lot of the things that you've reflected on, and I think, as I said, I think the basic sentiments are shared, how we do it is another question.

I think for the purpose of our discussion in respect of our role as a Constitution Review Commission, you alluded to the 1997 Constitution, and the ruling by the High Court in respect of the Bainimarama Qarase case. I agree completely with you. I think it was a very clear-cut ruling that the decision by the Appeals Court the year before, that's Gates and them, to give the President prerogative powers to abdicate the Constitution were null and void, and that was illegal.

Having said that, after that decision was reached, and I think for those of us who remember, this is near Easter, April, I think it was, Frank, Mr. Bainimarama and the boys went back to camp, and then they abdicated the Constitution by force of arms. They ruled by decree from 2006, well actually before, continuously until 2012 when they attempted to ratify this by making some form of parliamentary democracy reinstated. They tried to do that by instituting a citizen's constitutional forum, supposedly to legitimize the idea that we're all back together, and Yashgai's commission that subsequently was thrown out and burnt as he walked out of the printry at Vatuwaqa.

Subsequent to that, he then decreed a constitution. To this day we don't know who wrote this constitution. I have ideas, I think everybody has ideas about who might have written it, but the reality is we don't know.

They supposedly, there were consultations, that's absolute rubbish. The only consultations that happened before 2012 was the citizens constitutional forum and Yashgai's group, and the fact that Yashgai's findings and recommendations were trashed tells us what they thought of those. So, to then use it as somehow that's the consultation upon which they wrote the 2013 constitution is ludicrous.

After they wrote it, they then went to the public and selected people and gave the constitution and said what do you think. Not what do you think to write into the constitution, but what do you think of what we've written, and somehow legitimized it, got it promulgated by the president, and became law. That's what we're dealing with now, okay.

There's been a lot of saying around, came in through the back door, out the back door. You realize that the only way that it'll go out the back door is by another coup, by definition. That's the only way it can go out the back door.

We don't need any more coups. I'm a victim of the coup, you're a first-hand victim of the coup, but I don't think this country needs any more coups. We're at the end of our lives and we don't really want to hand over to our next generation, my children and my grandchildren, a country that is formed with a new constitution in 2026 by another coup.

So, our role, I think all of us here, is to try and avoid that, and I think you know we owe you credit to government. I mean many people thought they would bring it in 2023, because everyone said, every single party in coalition government said on their manifestos that in the first hundred days they were going to do what we're doing now. They didn't, but having said that they're doing it now, and the legal process was followed as per what is an imperfect constitution, it was done, and I think now we've reached a point where the legal people have actually ruled.

They tried to amend it last year, and they failed in parliament. That's the easiest way to do it. They sought the opinion of the Supreme Court, who have now given us a legal means to, I won't say throw out, but amend, and by definition our chair has, as a legal person, said to us that I mean can mean review, can mean amend, revoke, repeal, and then essentially the court's told us you can do all of that except for immunity.

They sort of hovered away from us touching it, because it's not written into chapter 11, but everything else, you know, can technically, you could have one line in the beginning of your report that says we, the Constitutional Review Commission, recommend the repeal of the 1997 Constitution. That's the first line, then we have a new constitution. Now many of us as part of this process have looked at the 1997 Constitution, 1990, 1970.

If you want to look at the deed of cession, then we've also looked at that too, trying to understand all of the pros and cons. When we come to the 1997 Constitution, the legal way to do it, you're aware of this, is to, for us to do it now, put that body, and I, you know, I appreciate what you said the 97, but the reality is the only way that's going to come back is the same way that it came in and that we don't need. Okay, I would be saddened if that were to happen.

We have the means legally to approach it now and that's what we're doing, you know, as a wide group with different experiences, with a hope that we bring together something that will probably have lots of elements of what you like, which is the 1997 Constitution. I have no doubt. I'll allude to the first one in the preamble.

If you look at 1997, this is my particular area that I discussed amongst my colleagues, there's God mentioned. You brought that in, in 2013, it's literally erased. Not only do they state the secular state but it's completely erased, there's just no mention and I find that ironic given that if you walk down the street and ask every second person there, I suspect 99.9 percent of people will tell you I believe in some kind of God, you know, call him what you want, but that would be the feeling.

I disagree with you in terms of calling Fiji a Christian state. That's taking it, I'm a Christian, but that's taking me and imposing my beliefs, say of 60 or 70 percent of this population, or to be able to 30 or 60 percent of the population who also believe in God, but they don't call him Christ, and for me that would be an imposition which only my God can answer that with me, and so I would have an issue with that and I'm sure that if you thought about it. I want God there, that we will be guided by God, and I want it stated, but I wouldn't want him to be a Christian God, because I don't know enough about the other gods to decide whether they were valid or not. So, I support that, but I would not support the Christian part of it, and I think you as a rational person understand where I'm coming from, and may well be amenable to having that, but I agree with you completely.

If we don't acknowledge a creator and a higher being, then we're just humans, you know, fallen humans, and we're not going to get anything right without that, so I support that part of it. Aspects that you have referred to, the GCC, this is a very emotive issue. Our panel thought that the first people we would listen to formally in life was the GCC.

We were glad we did it. I alluded to that when we saw them, their presentation was very, how should I put it, very forthcoming. I have no doubt that the idea that the GCC is a bunch of uneducated chiefs was dispelled at that presentation. These were very educated, smart people who talked to us. Some of their requests, I won't say demands, the media would like to say they demand, and it said, I think it recently, yesterday, I said an Australian, I read an Australian thing that said that they demanded a Christian state. I can't remember that in the submission.

I can't remember that. I think they asked for the removal of the secular state part of it, but I don't remember anything in the GCC submission that said Christian state. They acknowledged the failures that they had had as a body in the past in supporting, you know, extremists in terms of imposition after the first coup of a Christian state, you know, but this GCC representation that came to us is very conscious of this, and I think they share similar sentiments to me.

They like the idea of God, they don't like the idea of making ourselves devoid of God, but they didn't feel strong enough to say that, and the media would have you still play on that. Yesterday, Australian media, I think, said, oh GCC demands a Christian state. I sat here and listened to it, I can't see it, I can't hear it, and I'm looking at my colleagues and my understanding is none of them heard it either, already, so you know this is the unfortunate thing about the media in some instances where they want to, whether it's intentional or otherwise, those are dangerous things to suggest, but again, the issue of the legality of it, I think we have a process now.

If we come up with something, it may end up being 99% of the 97 constitution, I don't know. We're going to get the people to tell us what they want, but when it is ultimately taken and completed, we will hand that to government. We have a legal process, not a cool process, but a legal process, and if we follow it to its rightful conclusion, government sees fit to make a bill to amend the 2013 constitution, it's passed in parliament, and it's passed in the referendum, and it's then brought in.

All the things that you've mentioned, we are all starting to hear. A bicameral house, I support the idea of reserved ethnic seats. We had a very robust discussion with the Electoral Commissioner and his group yesterday, you know, about whether there should be communal seats and things.

I think if you want to guarantee that the Chinese and the Rabi and the Europeans are represented in parliament, you're guaranteed. Right now, they're not, and I think those kind of sentiments, how we actually do it, how the next government does it, we're still in that process, so I'm not going to preempt anything. A part of my chapter is to look at the composition of parliament, the voting system, and we're going to listen to lots of input from people and see how we can achieve, I think, are some of the things that you have touched upon.

The senate, the re-introduction of the senate. I was a senator, and I shared this a number of times, I'll say it again. When we sat down in senate to consider anything, it was the most civil body. Nobody screamed at anybody else, even though they were opposition senators. We had a mix. We had, I think, Rickman, what's his name, was there. Tom Rickards was there. Lanny Dixon Seeto was there. I mean, as well as a lot of GCC, and we were very led by those elder statesmen, and it was a very civil body.

When we discussed a bill, nobody took it on party lines, you know. I remember I was discussing the employment relations bill, the original employment relations bill, and people were discussing it like, you know, about employers, employees. It wasn't, you know, the government gave it, so let's take it on.

I know because I sat on that subcommittee, standing committee. The point being, the senate, I think, served a stellar purpose, and I think certainly the protections as far as the inherent protections that the senate had in terms of the ability to veto any bill that touched upon Fijian land was a critical part of reassuring, you know, extremists on all sides about the fact that their lands are protected. I mentioned that in respect of the senate.

I apologize to my colleagues for going through all of this because I'm sure that there are areas and they will talk to you about, but because the nature of your presentation, I want to sort of adjust it, address it in that form. I agree we have lots of problems in the country. We talked this morning about a national security council and emergency powers.

You know, I ask myself when I keep listening to the to the HIV and drug epidemic, well you, you expressed how you feel. I think that's a sentiment all of us share. When does it become a national emergency? Now we have lots of committees, lots of task forces, and lots of this.

The closest thing that someone has said to me that makes sense is what you said to me or kind of what you said is what the commandant of the Black Rock facility said. Get serious about this, make me the drug czar, and I'll solve this problem. Well, I mean they obviously cautioned him about talking out of line.

You know exactly what I'm talking about, but the point I'm making is when does that become a national emergency? When all our kids are walking around like zombies. I mean you look at the pictures of people in LA with fancy drugs. Exactly what point does one have to go extremist and go that way? I mean I brought that in because we talked about the National Security Council.

Who should call a national emergency? These are the kind of things that governments have to do, not our group, but I share that because I think we all think about that and I think if we get our work right, get the right balance of right people. I know your uncles very well. I was a little kid in the subdivision when he was living in Tamavua up there, Ramzan, when he was held.

I know Uday's sons, we were in Tasmania together, you know, and so I share your sentiments and these are, you know, Indo-Fijian politicians were very much part and parcel of the fabric of our society in terms of governance and it was a good, we got on fine. We didn't have these racial issues and I'm sure that at heart we all are exactly the same and we can get there. So, your thoughts and sharing's are much appreciated, Honorable Singh, and you know the fact that you're here despite the fact that you hold a New Zealand passport says a lot about obviously how you feel about this country and I thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thanks. Thank you, Doctor. You talked about leases and the expiry of leases that will be followed by applications for renewal of leases and their consent from the landowners and then for agricultural leases the issue of Alta comes in. Now, what is it that you suggest to be in the constitution about leases of, I believe it's iTaukei lands, leases of ITaukei lands. When we have the iTaukei Lands Act, the iTaukei Lands Trust Act and their regulations and these regulate leases, there are provisions for renewal of leases and there are provisions of leasing iTaukei land where the land has to be de-reserved with the consent of the landowners and then put on lease. There can't be any lease of a reserved land without the consent of the landowners.

Lands which are already on lease, they have their expiry dates and what is happening is that the TLTB renews leases without going back to the landowners and it's hurting the landowners. It just adds to the sadness it has raised. It adds to the injury caused by that unfair return of leased land.

I'll give you an example, a very well-known company running a very big operation here in Fiji, exports within Fiji and around the Pacific, regional exportation, making millions every year and you know how much the landowners are getting? Two mutton gullies getting $206 per annum. Two mataqali getting $206 per annum. Members of the mataqali's would be around 100 each so there's 200 people sharing $260 per annum for return on the use of part of their land for big operations which is earning millions of dollars a year.

I concur with you, there is a lot of unfairness's on the returns of the leases. Companies, hotels and whatever industries that they are making a lot of money but with very little return. What do you suggest we can do there? If the landowners refuse to renew leases, we can understand them because they're not getting anything out of it.

On the flip side of it, on the flip side of it, most of the leases which are returned to the landowners never get used. Most of them, so bushes grow there and so forth and so forth. Is there any suggestion from you which can assist both the lessees and the landowners considering that, what I've just explained?

Mr. Rajesh: Thank you, sir, thank you Chair. I think so it's very important, like I said it has to be a fair return on both parties, like for example landowners and the lessee. So, if you have given a very good example and like what I was saying about this land owner that he was leasing the land, same thing 400 something a year and then now he wants to sell it for 18 million. So, what does the landowner get? Is it fair? This guy makes all the money but the landowner doesn't.

So, something I think we have to factor, something like this is even like I said about, that's for the landowners like when they have those land that has, where the project can be done on tourism sector, that FNPF can go partner with them and help the landowners. Okay, even 51-49, I'm looking at minimum 70-30 or max 51-49, 51 FNPF for the investor, 49% landowners. If you really want to uplift the standard of our indigenous people in business, that's what we have to look at it and the other option is like 51-49, 70-30.

But this leasing, honestly speaking, this is very outdated, I think so, very outdated. It has to be come; you do it on the current market value. Everything has to be reassessed.

Even I, I'll give you an example of this one, very quick one, is I help the Indian government and this thing was going on and when Turaga na Qaranivalu came and they called me and they said oh, this is an issue about having this hospital land. So, in Nasinu, so I called Turaga na Qaranivalu and you know very close brother and son relationship and he said son, come pick me up. I came, pick him up, called the Indian High Commissioner, they came home, at home, hosted a dinner and I told him protocol, one tabua, everything, so indigenous gentleman sitting down there, brother, did this service to Turaga Qaranivalu, everything, had dinner, everything and he told me, he said, where's Prime Minister? I said, he's in Tonga, in Samoa.

He said, who's directing Prime Minister? And I said, we're still eating and I said, oh, Honorable Gavoka, DPM, call him. I called him, same time Mr. Gavoka answered the phone and said, hey, how are you? Good, good. I said, I'm here with Turagaqaranivalu and Indian High Commissioner, this is the land issue we're facing and he laughed and said, wait, wait, I said, Ratu is here, so Ratu spoke to him and he said, okay, no problem, I'll call you back in half an hour, but you call your tau, because if I take my Nadroga side, but I'm going later, but I'm originally from Nadroga.

He said, call your tau, minister and talk to Vasu too, so we have a meeting tomorrow morning. So, I called Vasu straight away, man. Next morning, we were having a meeting in 8.30 at Minister Vasu and then we sat down, Indian High Commissioner there, the GM, the TLTB, CEO, everybody there, Turaga Qaranivalu and Uncle Peniasi Kunatuba.

So, we were able to sort those things in like half an hour, it was all sorted. And then, this is where I want to come, so it was a fair thing and then the landowners were paid three million dollars goodwill for that land. That's about 12 acres of land, three million dollars goodwill was paid.

And then the Indian government, High Commissioner said it straight, we want to pay, be a fair one, what is a fair thing, we want to pay, but then it was negotiated and then I think so then the government said no, we'll pay. So, the government paid them three million. Indian government said, okay, we'll build a hospital, now it's coming to the last stage now, we're going to start soon.

So, I was looking, so the three million was given, so Turaga na Qaranivalu called me and said, okay, can you pick me, we're going to go to the research station, I said, where? I said, okay, let's go. So I went, pick up in the morning, seven o'clock, we were driving, then the TLTB staff, this is before Christmas, and they called and said, oh, sir, we got the money here now and how you want it to be distributed? Then Turaga na Qaranivalu goes, if people don't know, he's accounted by a professor, related, and he said, son, what do you think I should do? I said, Ratu, invest half money, half, you know, for your plan and half share it with Christmas, it's a very good idea. So, I asked the lady, she's on the phone now and Turaga na Qaranivalu said, I'm driving and Turaga na Qaranivalu is sitting and Turaga na Qaranivalu said, okay, me and Ratu are just discussing, you go on the speakerphone.

So, I said, okay, what is the return on future holding? They gave this amount, what is in unit trust, this amount. So, I was just looking and they're thinking, and then we made the decision, but this is Turaga na Qaranivalu claim, but then he said, son, what do you think? I said, okay, let's, what do you think is right? Okay, 1.7 million out of the three million went into the investment of the Mataqali. So, some things went to unit trust, some amount went to future holding, to buy shares.

Mr. Valenitabua: That is the result of legislations. Now you are presenting to us today in relation to the provisions, in relation to this. Well, the legislation is outdated, honestly speaking, the legislation is outdated.

Mr. Rajesh: I think so, and it has to be reviewed like the constitution. If you really look at the constitution, every constitution says like within seven to ten years it gets reviewed, right? So, I mean, for example, if we go and buy another, I mean, just for example, a house, right? So, if my house, like I bought a house 20 years ago, if it cost me $10,000. Now that same house is worth $200,000. So, the value goes up.

The same thing, why is our poor landowners or anybody, honestly speaking, or freehold land or ground land or government's land, ground or native and freehold, it has to go according to the market value, of the current market value. So, see, every current market value, so I would prefer that the leases has to be adjusted like once the lease expire, okay, what is the current rate? Let's be fair, what will be the for the landowners and what will be the thing for the tenant? It has to be a fair return. If it's not a fair return, honestly speaking, Fiji will keep having problem.

It has to be a fair return. And now, like I said, if that legislation is outdated, I feel I'm not aware, but you are the chair, with due respect, I would prefer that there should be a legislation or a law be enacted, so this fair return has to be on the current market value. Because if you don't give a return to a current market value, I mean, Mr. Conway, I know he's an architect and all this, even he will agree with me, I think so. On this point, we have to have a current market value. It has to be a fair return. I mean, like, for example, I'll give you another example quick, just our family. We have a house. This house was rent for $6,000 just three years ago. Now American Embassy came, same house, they pay $12,000.

See, just in three years. So, okay, it's a freehold land, so we okay, but our city rate is going up and all that, you have to pay all that, pay the tax, pay city rate, okay, that's fine. But what I'm saying is this native land, and this is one thing, and I say, even my business get, like, a little bit agitated, but I say that's fine with me.

And my simple question is, how come, this is a question, is how come my land is freehold? My next land is native. How can it be? So, there were this, honestly, I'm not a fan, I'm going to be straight up here, I'm not a fan of the British Empire. I am not.

And I, even if I get charged or anything, I can, I care less, but I'm not a fan of them, because they came and did a lot of wrong things everywhere, in Fiji, India, and everywhere, Australia, and Israel, and everywhere, you look at it. You know, so those kind of thing, I think that that kind of land, you know, so how can be my next door is native and I'm freehold, when it should be, you know? But, and even my good friend, former Speaker of the House, former Director of Lands and all this, he was telling me a story about what happened to their land in Korotogo. Korotogo, their land, became freehold land, where outrigger and all that, but he's the chief of that place, and then I said, and I said, how can it be, brother? And even my own first cousin, my Talevu's son, he's got a land there, it's freehold, and then this, and I told him, it cannot be freehold, no, no, it's freehold.

I said, bro, honestly, you're joking, but, but he showed me the title, but you know, this one thing I can't understand, and this is something the Constitution Review Commission, and I think the government has to really seriously look at it, because some land has been, even now, one lease, I think it was going in the media around 999 years, lease in Tavua or somewhere, and people were arguing about it.

I told my Indian friends, I said, hold on, the act is very clear, it's 99 years, so there must be a typing error, or something must have happened, but how can you give 999 years lease, when the act, like you just said, sir, if there's an act there, it's 99 years, how can it be 999? And then people want to take, come on to court, and all this, this is so ridiculous, I will say ridiculous, I mean, if there's a law, there can be a typing error, we can make mistake, but it has to be fair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, okay, we take your point, we take your point, just before. Section 28 of the Constitution addresses the rights of ownership and protection of iTaukei, Rotuman, and Banaban lands.

Now, as it is, it is wide, you know, and the interpretation in relation to returns of leases and things like that does not appear here, so the TLTB and the landowners would have to rely, and citizens of Fiji, would have to rely on the legislations before them, the iTaukei Lands Trust Act, the iTaukei Lands Act, and their regulations.

You still have not answered my question, I understand where you're coming from, but how can we make this a provision, a constitution provision? I'll hand over to Dr. Fatiaki.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, I'm not sure that this really addresses the issue, but let me just say that the areas that are written here in 28 section, 28 subsections, 1, 2, 3 is the Rotuman land, 4, 5, Banaban, 6. I think are the areas in the constitution that allude, for instance, to the aspect of the ownership of iTaukei land, Rotuman land, Banaban land, that does not allow it to be alienated, supposedly.

What you are telling us, and what I think is obvious to all of us, is that in the administration, meaning that the actual administration, the executive management of these areas has been left open, and it's like Swiss cheese, lots of homes in it, whether it's a 990, 90, at least that shouldn't exist, whether it's 'Mataqali 'land that's become freehold land, or whatever it is, obviously that's where the problem is, and it's beyond the, I guess, the gamut of this constitutional review body to legislate, or not legislate, to make recommendations, to insert into the constitution the management of these lands. So, I guess in the case of iTaukei land, that is an issue for the iTaukei people, and the ITaukei management of their lands, whether it's the TLTB, TTFB, TTLC, whatever, to address. That's something that only the iTaukei people can address.

This protects them from anyone else alienating, but how the TTFB or TLTB manages their land is a problem for me, personally, as a farmer. No one else can solve it, and how they give leases and make sure that the security of tenure for, you know, for farmers, cane farmers, or whoever, that's an area that I see. I don't want to comment on iTaukei management of their land, because I don't think it's my place, but that's where it would happen, at the executive.

Same with us, on the island of Rotuma. I think the precautions, I should put it, the provisions are, that are written into the constitution are more for the purpose of saying we don't want anything, any provision that may allow you to alienate it, but we haven't gone into detail into this, but for instance, we know that there is now a land bank. Well, what does that exactly mean? You know, there's a land bank that iTaukei land can be put into, where basically the landowners have nothing to say.

Now, I don't know, we may get to the point where we actually start discussing that, but this protection, so-called protection of a iTaukei land, well, how do you protect your land if it can go into an iTaukei land bank, you know, supposedly with the consent of one or two chiefs, and therefore they can write it and give it off to any man and his dog without any concerns about how fairly it's done. Those are areas that, again, I emphasize, we need to look at the constitutional provisions in terms of not allowing it to be alienated, but at the same time, our role is not to write into the constitution how the iTaukei Trust Fund manages the land and how they work out the formulas of how much they don't charge and how long the period of tenure is. I think those things are better dealt with at the executive level. Thank you.

Mr. Rajesh: Just my, just a question to the chair. So, if there's an act, right, DLTB Act, like you told me, so, I think, if I'm wrong, please correct me, the parliament makes the law. And then when we're going to have a senate, then senate is approved. So, if we can have the law amended, the act can be amended, right? Or can it be amended or it cannot be amended? Under this constitution, you know, honestly speaking, I'm going to be straight up here.

I don't, I always call it Khaiyum corn constitution. That's what I call it. Every time I write Khaiyum corn constitution. That's what it is. That's what my question is. Can we do that?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, that is, that is what will eventually happen. That is, yes, you're correct, right? In short, yes. If this is amended, then the legislation will have to be amended. So, that it is in line with the constitution.

Mr. Rajesh: So, that's what my question was, because honestly speaking, I've got friends, good friends, you know, very good Fijian, Fijian friends. I'll call them Fijian, no ties, okay? They are native people, my Fijian brothers. Even I go with my great-grandma is Fijian, right? So, we got Fijian heritage families in Ba.

So, even some of my friends, like I'll give you an example about this guy, and this is the one when you're talking about the land cannot be annihilated. This is just one of my friends, he is with us in the rugby league. So, Vulagi State.

So, Vulagi State has become a ground land, honestly, and they are the land owners, right? And it was ground land, and then I think so when, if Mr. Conway will be able to correct me and say, yeah, then when they get a development lease, is it for what, you have to do something in five years or ten years? Is it five years?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, build a house. Two years from what we call our unplanning. Okay.

Mr. Beg: So, nothing has happened for ten years, right? Nothing has happened in ten years. And later, when they wanted the land back, suddenly the lease got renewed by the former Fiji First Minister, Jone Usamate. And I told him straight, when they showed me, I said, bro, take it to five weeks, yeah.

But renewed, and the land owners doesn't know about it because they were thinking, okay, we're going to get our land back so we can do something. It's nice for a resort and all this kind of thing. They even had some investors ready to come in.

But unfortunately, the poor guys went back to, no, the lease has been renewed without their consent, like, and because it's ground land. But honestly, if I can recall, the ground land only happened when there was, ground wanted the land for public use or for government use, right? Then native land was given to them, okay, here's native land, you use it for the Crown. If you don't use it, then those land was supposed to be reverted back to the native land, to the native owners again.

Wasn't it, say, if I'm wrong or if you can correct me?

Mr. Valenitabua: Come again, come again. If, like, for example, when the land was, became Crown land, was because if, when Crown wanted to use it for Crown purposes, right? But if the land is not used, I thought, because it was, original land was native, remember? Then it became Crown land or Crown. So, if it's not used, it was supposed to be reverted back to native.

Mr. Valenitabua: Going back to the native owners. Yeah, native land.

Mr. Rajesh: So that's why my question was, this is my poor friend, brother, I call Tai Siti, and the land is still Crown land, and I thought it was supposed to be reverted back, but it never went back to them, and nothing, it's not Crown, no, somebody, highway stabilizers got it, and aquifer families, and they wanted to do something there, but in all these years they've been waiting.

But they were, when they had investors ready, and that was the land, even he showed me a letter that the iTaukei Affairs wrote to them and said, yes, your land will be given back. But it never, suddenly it's gone back to these investors. So, that's where my concerns are.

Mr. Valenitabua: You are saying that in order to change the legislation, we've got to put a provision in the constitution which protects, you know, which can then be used to change the law down the legislation. Yes, yes, that's where I would love to see it.

Mr. Valenitabua: That is where you're coming from.

Mr. Rajesh: Yes, and also to be a fair return, say, a current market value, not that. And the other question, say, I have, sorry, this other quick question, is I asked my friends, I said, how do you know how much of your land is leased? Whatever TLTB give them, that's it.

There's no statements of account. Like, for example, if you own a business or if you have houses or property and it's on rent, you will exactly know, okay, this property is getting me $10,000. Okay, this one is getting me this one. Or even if the land is leased. So, I don't know if a TLTB has that, but these guys are not given. Only they're just given the second one, oh, that's your lease money.

But they don't exactly know if everybody is paying the lease or no. So, there's another thing that we have to really, I think, so in fact, I don't know whether law or the act, there's something that has to be.

Mr. Valenitabua: Two points. TLTB has got those records. The landowners, they tell the landowners every January, if they go to TLTB, they can collect the list of their lands which are under lease. And they can also see how much they're getting out of that. The landowners have to go there. The lawyers, sometimes we are barred from that. Okay. But I get the information from the landowners themselves.

Secondly, that Crown land, which you have been talking about, it was a native land used for public purpose. Instead of being returned to the landowners after the use for public purpose, it was registered under Crown lands, right?

Mr. Rajesh: Yes, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay. Section 29.1. I don't know which year that happened. But section 29.1 is the key provision here which has been used for securing land which were used by CSR and those sort of, you know, entities at the time.

Section 29. Ownership of land which came into or which were in existence at the start of this constitution, 2013 constitution, they continue, shall continue to exist under this constitution. So, here's an example.

I did a case for the Natadola Hotel. There's a piece of land there which was given to CSR. As we started the cases, we were moving. Housing Authority was involved. And then this provision came in. The court stopped the case. This is the provision which was put in place to stop all those lands being returned to the landowners.

Mr. Rajesh: That's unfair, sir. Sorry to say that, but that's very unfair. Yeah, it is unfair. It is.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, just to give you an idea of what this constitution is doing. When you're talking, I'm thinking along that line. Because, I mean, if you really look at it, sir, even like Rakiraki Mill has closed down, right? And even I saw some of the land was in the paper, it was standard, like Labasa and Lautoka and all this FSC, right? So, who gained the money, right? So, it was okay. But then, if FSC is not using, that land was supposed to be returned to the landowners, like what we were talking about, and it never did.

So, who benefited? So, now, who's benefiting the money? FSC is getting the money. But in original, that was supposed to be the landowners. Why the poor landowners are not benefiting? I'll give you another example. I'll just highlight it. It's just in front of us here, Princess Road. Yeah, telecom building, you know, telecom was crowned.

This is crowned land, I'm saying. Telecom sold a portion of the land to American Embassy. I think the amount was six million, if I can really correct it.

It was about six million, right? The land was sold. So, who benefited it? Originally, the land was supposed to be, if I really look at this thing, and I saw it in my eyes, some people showed me, it was all Naitasiri land, but then it became a Rewa land now. So, instead of money going to, okay, the river people and Native Cedar people, now the money has gone to telecom. But honestly, it was a commercial deal. This is where I look at it. It became a commercial deal.

And when it's a commercial deal, why the money is not given? Because, remember, when the state take everything, crown, they will say, oh, no, no, no, we're not going to pay you much because this is for crown. This is for public use, right? But this is not for the public use. Remember, you're selling the land to, like, giving it to American Embassy, or Ford, or whoever.

But that was a commercial decision. Then why that money is not given to the landowners? That's where my question is. Why it's, if it's a commercial deal, come on, give a commercial rate.

If it was for their purposes, public purposes, okay, that's fine, this might be $100 for that, but there you made millions, this is commercial decision. Why the landowner just gets $100? Why can't you go and split it up, okay, at least 50-50? That's where my question is. I'm just saying, to be honest, it has to be a fair return.

And this is something that is really bothering me. Because I see all my friends, right, and this is my indigenous friends, and these guys are suffering. So why can't we change this law? Because if we don't change it, honest to God, this is coming from my heart.

If we don't change it, we will keep having this problem and the mistrust between the two races and other people. But we have to be fair to the landowners. This is why something that we have to really look at it.

Mr. Beg: Chair, through you, thank you, Rajesh, for those enlightening comments. The issue with the state land, it's perpetual, it's fixed. It's perpetual, it's fixed with state land. Once it's in state custody, it's fixed. I agree with you. If the purpose of the land, for the development, like for instance, the telecom site, if you want to use that as a reference, is specific for that purpose.

Now, for them to embark on a commercial development, then that needs to, that whole case, selling the piece of land, should not be, I agree with you, should not be in their hands, because that still belongs to state. It was given, it was fixed by Crown. So, Crown, historically, Crown became state.

And then the state lands became perpetual. So fixed. So that whatever they do, that land must not be sold for commercial, but for purposes specifically for state and for development.

I hear you. You've got some very interesting points, but I'm just trying to go back to the law and what the law framework is around that, and how historically land that was given by the word native land was transferred, was when it became Crown, it became state, and that legislation. Yes, correct.

So, but I agree. What the problem is, I feel, is the management of that, those lands, by TLTB. Maybe that, again, that's something that needs to be looked at, because I've had some interesting cases like yourself, where those things become very interesting, to say the least.

So, you make a point, because the lands is a, or what you're trying to say is something that we need to look at, but the constitution is not silent. It's very kind of dormant, because it respects the laws, the land acts in the land laws. So I hear you.

Maybe that's something we have to align the Lands Act, the constitution, and also ITLTB in that manner, and it is causing a lot of riffraff. I agree. So, I hear you. But I just wanted to clarify the point about state. It's perpetual. You can't, there's no expiry date.

Dr. Gounder: Chair, if I may, thank you, Rajesh for your comments. I think, you know, I'm a strong believer in fair returns to landowners, the same time protection of tenants' rights and responsibilities as well. Most of the things that you have mentioned is basically, it's a failure of coordination between TLTB, landowners, and the tenants.

I think, in my view, the Act is well designed, except that there must be a call by landowners themselves and TLTB in what they want to see changed in the Act. I'll give a quick example. In the 2024-2025 budget, government allocated $2 million to pay for lease renewals.

And at that time, I was in the planning office. We worked together with TLTB in renewal of the leases, and one of the things we made sure reflected into was the market rates. So, it's more to do with coordination failures within TLTB rather than anything to do with the Act itself.

And I'm not sure how much we can change in the Constitution. And as Mr. Beg has said, if the Constitution is silent, that gives a lot of flexibility for the Act to be able to deal with those kind of changes. And if we leave it to the Act, the benefit is that we don't have to go through a constitutional provision of changing the Act.

So that's the advantage of that. And I completely agree with the challenges you have highlighted. My experience is more to do with the coordination failures and the fact that TLTB is the custodian of all iTaukei land, but they're also required to consult landowners, which I think is the real issue at stake.

And yeah, so I think that if we address those issues, a lot of these issues that you have highlighted can be taken care of. Thank you.

Dr. Baba: Just to say something before I think I thank you for today. The insights you are throwing to us and you are sharing with us, it's bothering me a lot in my conscience. Because while I'm a scholar of the area, I probably am the one that has written about land gifting. If I recall, there's only two. The other one was Nayacakalou my mine came out of Scotland in a book in the FNU. I kept thinking about all the gifts that we've received. We are in 17 places in this country, all gifts.

And this year alone, in the last three months from January to now, through me, I personally have received just about six more pockets of land from high chiefs. Now, when I listen to you, and this is something I've written about the Tuisuva and his people being squeezed to one side. That is why you have the Suvavou house that we are in today.

People don't know that. It's because I argued so much my husband couldn't go to sleep. That's the Labour Party that did this. I think that goes, you know, people forget, you know, that we, I agree with the panelists here and you. I think this is something that bothered me personally. As of late, at FNU, take for instance, the Ba Campus, that's Tui Ba, Lautoka campus, shared with Namoli, the Maramana Taukei Veitarutaru.

Now, they have a campus, Namoli. Did we give back a cent in all the years we've existed? Not a cent. So, okay, it's not regulated by law, but it's regulated in custom that when a land is given by a high chief, presumably it's given to another high chief.

They have an understanding that it's reciprocal, but law does not identify with land understanding by the native's people, by the indigenous people. So, I find a lot of loopholes. As a vice-chancellor, slowly we are trying to get into this area, if you like, to resolve this, and this is a long-standing problem.

When I look at FNU only, because that's the only place that I can work in, lately my team, the management, has been given my land, Chitta, from Scotland, from Byrne and Graham. It's the first time it's written too, on land gifting, 2015, Scotland. It had to be done in Scotland because they thought it was useful.

The publication. So, Koronivia is a Turaga na Qaranivalu, and I'm very conscious when I see you, I see him, because you are the one that helps him to get economic value. It doesn't matter what anybody says, that's what I know, because that's what he tells me.

When he came back from prison, I want these constitution commissioners to know, we got him back to Koronivia because I feared he was already sick. What did we do? After 70 years of sitting free, when he came, we did a big presentation, probably cost us 30,000, we still haven't given him a cent. So, I'm going to regulate at FNU, at our level, that we do not sit free.

There's got to be some scholarships, there's got to be some things, and if we build something of value, they need to take a cut. Now, when he came, he would not believe this, he behaved like a chief. So, I sat there and I was almost frustrated, because what he did was to give us more.

I mean, as it is, it's more. I mean, who would give real estate like that? Yeah, so that's Navuso. So, right now, we are doing something at FNU, might get the help of chair and the people here, because they, I know now that they can help.

And you look at the Nasinu major campus, Matanikorovatu people, the youth have come to see me, just to say, can you help us? And I almost cried, because it is not something they should ask for. It was given because they assume the one on the other side is a chief, and you know what? It's called reciprocity, but the law is quiet on reciprocity, or even equal gifting, because that's the assumption the chiefs give for free. Yeah, the other one is Tuisuva, the direct campus, free for 80 years.

The whole of Tamavua nursing school, I'm waiting to go and see Ratuloki. Laucala Tuisuva, and I'm, you know, I'm getting into Tuisova, trying to do things for him for free, because at the back of my mind, we've sat here for free. So, I would like the lawyers among us, and you too, that maybe moving forward, we could, it's not the duty of the commission maybe, but I'm sure the lawyers will find some place to stick this into the biggest rulebook of the land, because there's got to be something about fairness.

And I must tell you, every time I see your face, that's all I'm reminded of. It's kind of a painful reminder, because I am a writer in this area, but on land gifting alone. So, when two chiefs meet, like my people, they give 72,000 hectares of our land in Vugalei free to the government, to Ratu Penaia, from one chief to another.

When they made the company, they did not include the landowners. I've written about this. Yeah, there's so many disconnects with law and regulation and acts, and land.

I could probably look at an international funding to make it a consistent work after the constitutional review for people like you and me to actually have this, and make sure there is fair return, because my view, the land, when it's not fairly done, we are not going anywhere. Thank you for your contribution. And I'm afraid if it's not constitutional, sir, here we'll make it somewhere. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: The constitution, section 29 [4]. Parliament must ensure that all land leases and land can protect the rights of land leases and landowners. So, it's already here, but not yet.

Dr. Baba: What he's saying is market value. Maybe that's the only word that's missing. Fair at market value. I think, sir, that's the one that's really important. We have to highlight it.

Mr. Rajesh: It has to be highlighted, sir. See, that one, thank you so much for clarifying that, sir. I think that is very important. Honestly, I don't support this going on, but I will write and I'll read it. So, there's section 249? Section 29. Page 22.

Page 22. I'll tell you what Mr. Sir about this, it's about native land, right? We are talking about native land. Just do a little bit more heading down.

We'll contemplate. Right now, we're going to section 29.

Dr. Baba: Sir, Honorable Singh, I can help you, send you a person to record you. If you want. I mean, because I know you are running to try to build sports in the country. And I'm one of those that's keeping him busy. I haven't paid him. But if you need help, because it's so important, could I then offer? You just call me; I'll send a young man and woman to hear you and then give you the submission. Just for that help.

Mr. Rajesh: That would be great. Is that okay? Yeah. Just one more additional comment.

Dr. Gounder: So, if you look at section 29. Sorry. Section 29.4 Section 29.4 It talks about legislation and other measures must ensure that all land leases provide a fair and equitable return to the land owners. And fair and equitable basically captures much more than market rates. And it's better to use fair and equitable rather than market because sometimes market rates cannot be determined especially in rural areas. So, if you use market rates land owners may be in a more unfair situation.

More disadvantageous situation if you use market rates. It's better to use this particular perspective.

Mr. Valenitabua: What's the word?

Dr. Gounder: The fair and equitable. My take is that it's more to do with coordination failures in TLTB rather than to do with the act as it is. Yeah. That's why I highlighted that point. Thank you for making that point. We can always publish some of the feedback that we get. The idea is that the feedback that we get from people like yourself does not stay with us.

That it goes out. People are able to read it, people are able to see it and that others can use it for other purposes as well. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Rajesh: I mean just for me to add I mean in my life as a small kid brought up in a village. I was surrounded by all my like Indian friends and Fijian friends and we were never ever like oh no 'iko na kaidia' and all these things. These cool things brought all these things up and I remember my mum always tried Raksha Bandhan. Raksha Bandhan is a bond between brother and sister to PM Raksha Bandhan because when he was in Marist he would go there and he would call mum because my mum was the elder one and she would make the 'gulgula' and he still remembers that and then he would call her sister so that's why me and Roko Ului we are very close everybody thinks oh even the Marama

I never told her and she said why didn't you tell me that you were the nephew of brother James, brother James Sankar sing I didn't tell anybody everybody thinks I'm very cuckoo but I'm originally from Nadroga and Vasu I Ba. But that kind of thing like what I'm saying is I remember as a small kid I was lifted on the shoulders because my dad was building a big sawmill and even I think the record is there it's called HB Singh & Sons. He had like he registered the company and he had 50-50 share with the landowners and they were building a sawmill but unfortunately, he had a heart attack and he was given the land from Naitasiri right up to Navosa logging construction

I was a young kid at 6 years old and we always called this guy who was a his son his son-in-law was Rokomeleni is careful Satareki was calling him Nana and he called my mom, daughter Setareki Nana I remember he's calling me every time on his shoulders every morning he comes, he carries me on his shoulders and we're going to go to the river we're going to swim in Visari and then come back and he cooks good food. My mom was sick and I'm just sharing this story and I did share this in Fijian and it was a heading and who was registering and I'll cry for this and this is, every time it touches me because when my dad and they were building that sawmill when he had a heart attack he ended up in the hospital.

I was a 6 year old kid I don't know anything about it that ok, dad had a heart attack and when he was admitted in the hospital our mill manager was Vijay Maharaj who's the lawyer, his father and he went and this is the story we got when we were growing up he went and did.

My father had a heart attack in the hospital he did his thumb print and he put it on the thing and he sold our land told like it's a freehold land where the mill was building to ley lands so that land just went there was a freehold land where the sawmill was just about to be built and they had some, all the things coming and we lost that land and so he didn't know he even didn't know .

He came back out of the hospital after 2 weeks we were home and the court sheriff came right, oh you have to vacate and my dad said why, this is my land no no, your land been sold and my dad said what who sold the land. They took the documents he had a debt because it was there, I don't know, heart thumb print power attorney, bang, sold, gone we lost it and my mom.

My mom snapped the thing in front of me I was a small kid and my sister was crying because she didn't have a daughter she didn't have a daughter and I was his favorite grandson and we were we were vacated all our things were taken out of our house and it was blaze of the road we were literally on the road and my mom was taken by they called the police she was black Maria and I was crying she was taken to St. John's hospital.

It's from the day of the lava and for the speech and she said people, I remember my dad went and called Ratukarawa and he was still in Lami and they came with the carrier and they carried all our luggage we were taken to Qauia village and that's the day we were given a house in Goya village where there was also a mill and I said we stayed in that house for 11 years.

I'll never forget all this that's why I'm so close with the Fijian people because my mom, my dad always taught us you stay close with these people, they'll be loyal they will always help you and all my life .Sir, I know and I know that because my mom was my hero it's not my dad, my mom was my hero and every time I think about it I cry every day and I think of how teaching that she taught us and my dad that's why you're going to even like my brother we both, we are so close with the indigenous people because we saw what happened to us and not against the Indian community or anybody but just imagine.

I lost my mom, I didn't see her like I was, as a small kid I was spending time with my mom and like Setareki never confronted me, even when we moved to Qauia village he always come there he came and looked after us he carried me on his shoulders, same thing same thing, never changed.

I remember all the and then Christmas time, he puts all this black thing, bowed down to me and we go to Waiqanake village and I remember everything but like I said, in my life I've seen this is a proven record it was a big headline who is Rajesh Singh. Then Bainimarama called me when he read all this article he called me and he said, Rajesh where you are, I said, come to Me went, and he said, who is it and he starts swearing, you know, typical of him who is this fella, tell me, I'm going to bring them, I'm going to look them up I said, that guy is dead man his wife is dead, he is dead, but the son is alive but don't do, my mom and dad told us they passed away when they said let God be the judge but they said.

Look at our brothers and sisters, look at your Nana look at them they gave us a place they gave us a place this one thing I'll never forget, sir until the day I die, sorry sir until the day I die, this thing in my heart.

Mr. Valenitabua: I understand I understand and I just want to say, sorry to cut you off sir I understand your experiences and how sad it would have been but please pardon me we have heard you and we have identified a provision in the constitution, which needs to be changed or amended that is 29.4.

If you have any other submissions Professor Baba has told you that she can send one or two of the students there for you to take your statements and then they will be forwarded to us but, we are short of time now, we have another session at 12 o'clock

Mr. Rajesh: Thank you so much thank you for allowing me sir to come and give my submission, sorry whenever I talk about this it recalls me. I always cry even not here, even at home or anywhere I come because I'll never forget those days what had happened in our life so once again.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much we have to end here it's not that we don't want to hear you more, but we are we've got time I understand thank you so much thank you very much we have heard you we have recorded what you said we have identified a provision which needs amendment and we'll take it from there. Thank you

Leighton: I'd just like to thank you for coming. Just a few housekeeping matters. Just to let you know, the session is closed, so there's no media present, as requested. Also, when you speak, if you can just press on the right side of the mic in front of you, just to turn it on. And once you're done speaking, you can turn it off. There's also an attendance register which is going around, so please, everyone, fill in your attendance. Just to show that we've actually gone and met people and spoken to people, and not just sitting in this empty room. I'll hand over now to the Chair to introduce the Commission. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Leighton. Ladies and gentlemen, it's a pleasure receiving you here this afternoon. We had made communications with the Fiji Women's Rights Movement, and eventually we are meeting here today. We thank you very much for turning up to meet with us and to make, I believe, submissions in relation to the 2013 Constitution. As you would be aware, the Constitution Review Committee was appointed by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, and he appointed seven of us. There are five of us present this afternoon, and two are away. It does not mean that we don't hold you as important, it's just they have some matters to attend to, and one is travelling overseas. So, your five Commissioners who are present here this afternoon will hear you. We've got Mere on my right, all of you would know her. I've got Mr. Conway Beg on my right. Next to me on my left is Dr. Fatiaki, a well-known person. And on the far left is Dr. Nilesh Gounder from USP. And I am Sevuloni Valenitabua. Our task is not to try to tell you what we have to have in the Constitution. We are to review the 2013 Constitution, and part of the task is to hear from the citizens of this country, or the people of this country, what they want to be included in the Constitution, or what they want to be removed, or what they want to be changed, or the new provisions to be added. It is our task to listen, record, and then consider what is submitted to us at the end of our timeline. We have six months, a timeline of six months. So, at the end, by 31st of August 2026, we should have completed our report and presented it to His Excellency. Now, I know that women's rights is a big issue. I know that you are a strong body, a strong forum, a strong association. And we are ready to listen. So, with those few words, I now invite you to please make your submissions to the Commission. Thank you.

Ms. Nabalarua: Thank you very much, Chair and members of the Constitutional Review Committee. My name is Akanisi Nabalarua. I am the Board Chair for the Governance Board for the Fiji Women's Rights Movement. It's my task this afternoon to introduce the members that will be submitting today and what their roles are within the organization. I will start from my far right. My far right is Laisa Bulatale. She is the Program Director at Fiji Women's Rights Movement. Next to her is Shayal, who is the Team Leader for Gender and Transitional Justice, the Gender Transitional Justice Program. To my immediate right is Nalini Singh, who is the Executive Director for the Fiji Women's Rights Movement. To my left is Adashni Bikash, who is also a board member. And we also have another board member in support today, Ms. Luzanne Sahib. But of the presenters, last but by no means the least, is one of our founding members, Ms. Imrana Jalal. Just in terms of our submissions today, we won't be going in order. We'll be just going in order of the clauses that we've highlighted and speak to it very briefly and then have questions at the end. At this juncture, I'd like to pass on to Ms. Nalini, our Executive Director.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Akanisi.

Ms. Nalini: Thank you. I would like to just provide a brief synopsis of FWRN's work. This year we mark our 40th anniversary. The Fiji Women's Rights has worked for women based on substantive principles of democracy, feminism, human rights and the rule of law. We believe that we have legitimacy and credibility proven by hard work and significant achievements. We have never supported any coup because that would not be true to the rule of law. That is what we are known for, being steadfast to the rule of law.

We have never stopped reminding all governments of their duty to 50% of the population, the women of Fiji. And we are not aligned with any political party or government. Our greatest achievement is staying true to our foundational principles.

We have never wavered from our stance on human rights, good governance, rule of law and democracy. I'd like to highlight some hard-won achievements over the last 40 years. Some of the more known campaigns have included changing the law on Citizenship, the Fiji Family Law Act, Employment laws, looking at CEDAW provisions being incorporated in our legislation, etc.

However, some of our lesser-known campaigns include changing the common law to get rid of the sexist corroboration rule in rape laws, first through new legal precedents long before legislation was passed and lobbying for better sentencing guidelines for sexual assault and child molestations. One of our first achievements was spearheading the Women's Coalition for Women's Citizenship Rights, which brought together equal rights and affirmative action into the 1997 Constitution, including sex, gender and sexual orientation as prohibited grounds of discrimination. We then undertook the massive 12-year campaign and mobilization on the Family Law Act 2005, giving women equal rights in family law.

Our publication Laboring Under the Law created enormous awareness and one direct result was putting sexual harassment in the workplace on the national agenda. We provided the intellectual leadership for that. During the early years, after pushing various governments, we got the Ministry of Women established.

Our CEDAW work has been consistent, providing support to government reports while always being clear about our parallel shadow reports. FWRM's staff and members have been well trained and their subsequent employability at SPC, Pacific Women, other regional organizations, the United Nations and international NGOs is living proof that we hire and train strong feminists and gender equality advocates. FWRM is also a good training ground.

Regionally, we are movement builders and supporters. We now convene the We Rise Coalition, the Pacific Feminist Forum and support national feminist forums all over the Pacific. We took the former government to court for forcing women to vote in their birth certificate names, a policy that would have potentially marginalized 100,000 women from voting.

Now, just a little bit on some triggered debates and impact of our research. One of our strengths is that we remind the government of all the shortfalls and we never let up. We keep at it, dogged resistance and tenacity.

We have triggered national debates, often making ourselves unpopular, but we hope one day those debates will lead to policy changes. Right now, we have made menopause and menstrual hygiene a national conversation. We have blown the lid on early marriages happening in Fiji despite the age of marriage law and the failure of our systems.

Through research and hard data, we highlighted the absence of women on boards, which led to government action to encourage more women to apply, moving from 19% to over 25% now. We are not there yet, but we hope for incremental change. Our research is appreciated.

Our 10-year trend analysis on rape cases is being used by UNICEF and they are using our research and other videos on these issues. We are now building a pool of future leaders to take over. Our new Young Feminist Network is our latest effort.

Our Feminist Intergenerational Leadership Program follows a lifecycle approach. We have girls, young women, women in mid-career and older women. Our mentorship program, Paid Forward, has mentees aged 35 to 40, where we mentor women in the private and public sector who are heading towards piercing the glass ceiling. Our young women's age range is 18 - 35. ELFA, or the Emerging Leaders Forum alumni, has now about more than 100 members. This submission is therefore not just about law.

It is about securing a future where a new generation of feminist leaders inherits a constitution that includes them and is worth defending. So having summarized our movements for 40-year history, our hard-won achievements, the debates that we have triggered and our commitment to building the next generation of feminist leaders, I now hand over to my colleagues. Each one of them will speak to specific articles of this submission.

They bring not only legal expertise but lived experiences and decades of advocacy on the front lines of human rights struggles. They have been part of the fights we have won, and they have felt the losses when wins were stripped away. I invite you to listen to them not only as distant experts, but as women who have argued, organized and persisted for a Fiji where the rule of law truly protects every Fijian.

Ms. Nabalarua: The first submission I will make – there are 10 submissions altogether. The first I will make is the discretion to apply international human rights law, and I particularly focus on Section 7.1.b of the 2013 Constitution. Forty years ago, when Fiji ratified the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, also known as CEDAW, we made a promise.

The promise was not to the United Nations, it was to the women of Fiji. It was a promise that their rights would be measured against the highest international standards. The 1997 Constitution honored that promise.

Section 7.1.b of the 1997 Constitution said that the courts and tribunals must apply international human rights law when interpreting the Bill of Rights. Not may, not sometimes, must. That word meant that a judge in Fiji could look directly at CEDAW, or the Convention on the Rights of the Child, or any other treaty Fiji had signed, and use it to protect a woman's right to equality, dignity and freedom from discrimination. It was binding, it was enforceable, it was a shield that women could rely on. The 2013 Constitution changed the word must to may, and now courts may apply international human rights law.

The one-word changes everything. May means discretionary. May means optional. May means a judge can choose to ignore CEDAW if they wish.

Fiji cannot abdicate its international responsibility, nor its duty to the women of Fiji. CEDAW is not a suggestion. It is a legal commitment by the state of Fiji when we ratified it. We promised the world, and more importantly, we promised our own women that we would be bound by it. A Constitution that says may breaks that promise. We are asking for one word to be restored. Must. Because the women of Fiji deserve more than a maybe. They deserve a must.

The second submission I'll be speaking on today is around Section 65C of the Bill of Rights, and the limitations of those rights and freedoms. Essentially, rights cannot be tampered with unless reasonable and justifiable in a free and democratic society. We have witnessed this country go from coups, constitutions, and crises.

The one thing that protected ordinary Fijians, especially women with no power and no connections, was the ability to go to court and say this limitation on my rights is not reasonable. The 2013 Constitution took that away. It says rights can be limited because someone in power decides it is necessary.

I ask the question, necessary for whom? Necessary for what? And then it says some laws cannot be challenged at all. That is not democracy. That is not the rule of law. That is a door being locked from the inside, keeping, excluding people, especially the vulnerable and the marginalized. We need the 1997 standard back. Only restrictions that are reasonably justifiable in a free and democratic society.

The 1997 phrase, reasonably justifiable in a free and democratic society, is a standard that has been tested in courts around the world. It requires evidence. It requires justification. It requires the government to open its books and say, here is why we had to limit this right, and here is why no other option would work. That is the protection our women need. That is the protection our democracy deserves.

To restore that 1997 standard and restore full jurisdiction to our courts. No exceptions, no ouster clauses, no hidden corners when the rule of law does not reach. The courts, not elected politicians, are the final arbiter of lawfulness. A court's jurisdiction cannot be ousted. And we need the courts to have jurisdiction over everything. No exceptions.

At this juncture, I would like to pass on to Laisa, who will be speaking on the third submission. To Imrana, my apologies.

Ms. Imrana: Thank you, Akanisi. I'm not sure whether you would like to ask questions of my two colleagues, or at least on those two different points of law, before you'd like to hear from me on the next point. Or would you care, Chair-Commissioner, to ask questions later? We're very flexible. These are quite complex matters, obviously. And so if you would like to ask questions of Akanisi, I'm happy to wait to talk about the issues that I'm going to be talking about.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Imrana. We will hear all of you, and then we'll ask questions later.

Ms. Imrana: Thank you, sir. So, first of all, let me say what a pleasure it is to be here. I'm possibly one of the few people in the room who made submissions to the BT Commission, to the Reeves Commission, and written submissions to the Yash Ghai-led commission as well.

And it's quite sort of surreal to me to be here again looking at this issue. But as I look upon you, I would say there's some huge improvements. For example, the first two commissions I appeared before had all men, including the commission who produced the 1997 constitution, which I'm a big fan of. So, I'm not saying that men can't produce good constitutions. I'm just saying what an improvement. And I understand that of the total of the commissioners, there's at least three women.

Am I right? Two women. Okay. So that's an improvement on none.

But, yes, for me, that's quite poignant and quite kind of starkly apparent. So, I congratulate you on that. Of course, it should be noted also that it's because of lobbying from women's organization's like ours that there are women on the commission because we put a lot of pressure on government to remind them of their responsibility to 50% of the people.

So, I'm going to talk about a very tricky and thorny subject, and in a way the commissioner chair has already mentioned it, which is I'm going to look at very briefly, I won't speak for long, section 26 of the 2013 constitution, which purports to carry on the rights granted in section 38 of the 1997 constitution. Now, I think it's probably public knowledge that I am not a fan of the 2013 constitution, nor is actually anybody here as part of the Fiji women's rights movement. We worked very hard to get certain prohibited grounds into the 1997 constitution and to ensure that the protections that are universal are in that, and then it's been very sad for us to see some of those rights whittled away in the 2013 constitution.

One has already been mentioned by our chair that the 1997 constitution, every single right in the Bill of Rights had this limitation. Rights can be limited as long as it's reasonable and justifiable in a free and democratic society, which does not exist in the 2013 constitution. So that has a direct bearing on what I'm going to say now, which is this.

That 1997 constitution and section 38 of the old constitution aligned with 85% of the constitutions of the world. In fact, to be fair to the 2013 undemocratic constitution, it also contains rights that align with 85% of the world, because both constitutions protected sex and gender. And then the 2013 constitution, of course, extended it to no discrimination on the grounds of marital status and no discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation, which we agree with and support.

But as I said, I have my reservations based on that reasonable and justifiable point. So, given that we align with best practice and 85% constitutions of the world, why is it that some groups in our country have made submissions to you to remove sex, gender and sexual orientation?

When a constitution modernizes, the last thing it should be doing is rolling back the rights or regressing on rights that have been granted, because the rights were granted by the 1997 constitution, and now there are people who are saying they should be taken away. We place our confidence in you that you will not do that, that you will make a recommendation to Parliament that says we must align with international best practice, we can't roll these rights back.

So, that's the first point that I wanted to make. Why align with global excellence and then roll it back? You know, those provisions in the 1997 constitution didn't appear simply out of the goodness of people's hearts in Parliament, no. We lobbied for them, Commissioner Chair.

We lobbied for them for 11, 12 years, over 15 years, actually, when you think about it, to get those provisions in. It's of great sadness and great poignancy for us to think all that hard work in time, poverty, energy, resources that we put in to get sex and gender into the constitution to protect us, that there's a possibility it might be rolled back. So that was my second point.

My third point is that I don't think that it is clearly understood how important sex and gender are. And maybe the best way of illustrating it is to give you an example. There are many people in this room who have invested a lot of money in our children's education, our daughters' education.

Removing these provisions means this. If you invest in your daughter's education, she becomes an accountant at FNU. She gets five years of experience in some accounting firm in Fiji. She then applies for a promotion to a more senior position or maybe to partnership. All of a sudden, she doesn't get the job because another person, a male person with much lesser experience of two to three years, gets that promotion. Let's assume that they're equal in almost everything.

Now, under the 1997 and 2013 constitution, she could challenge that decision. She could say, I have the experience and the skills and the quality to take this job. Why have you given it to my male colleague who has two- or three-years' experience? If that provision is moved, there's nothing that female accountant can do about it.

In fact, if that provision is removed, people like Ms. Nailatikau would not necessarily be on this commission because if it was an all-male commission, we could not challenge it and say, that's discrimination. You haven't included our female representatives. So, I think that needs to be clearly understood.

There are consequences for women and for gender and for minorities if those provisions are taken away. It would mean that we are condemning our daughters, our sisters, our children and family members and minorities to discrimination in employment, wages, violence against women, family law, decision-making, FNPF, pensions, access, housing and land ownership. All of it would be affected.

So, my final point is to, in a way, put a plea before you for you to recognize that you have an enormous responsibility. Your responsibility, may I say with the greatest respect, is to ensure that the rights that you grant us are the same as the rights that you grant men and other groups. And so, you have a duty to protect and defend our rights and we are asking you with the greatest respect to please remember that enormous responsibility. Thank you.

Ms. Laisa: My presentation, this speaking point this afternoon, will be around still on Section 26 and that is the inclusion of temporary special measure in legislature. My first point is the situation of Fiji women as a group compared to that of Fijian men is of significant historical disadvantage.

Women are latecomers to political arena and to being able to participate in modern public and political life. It is difficult to compete with men when there is no pre-existing level playing field and therefore no fair competition. The historical and systematic disadvantage needs to be acknowledged so that women status as a group is addressed by the adoption of legally permissible temporary special measures as you may also be familiar with as affirmative action to progress women into similar situation of that of men as a group. When a level playing field is reached, women are able to compete in open seats in decision-making positions in the same way as men.

Under Section 26.7 of the 2013 Constitution, it is provided that treating one person differently from another or any of the grounds prescribed under subsection 3 is discriminatory unless it can be established that the difference in the treatment is not unfair in the circumstances. This section means that it is legally permissible for temporary special measures to be imposed as long as the special treatment is justifiable in the special circumstances of women in the current overall situation in Fiji.

In the current special circumstances where there is no level playing field between men and women as a group, TSM for women in this does not constitute discrimination against men and different treatment is fair in the circumstances. It is widely accepted that TSM's are necessary to promote women's equality, to bring about a level playing field between men and women. This is not a measure against men, but it is rather a measure to bring women forward to enable them to participate more fairly in a legislative process.

In the 1997 Constitution, Affirmative Action on Temporary Special Measures was specifically permitted and allowed so that disadvantaged groups could catch up with others to create a level playing field. We would like to see similar provision in the 2013 Constitution. Therefore, we respectfully of the view that this Constitution should enable subsidiary legislation to be passed to allow for provisions for minimum quotas for women as a form of Affirmative Action, not only in Parliament but in all public bodies to accelerate progress towards equal representation in political and public life and eradicate historical systemic under-representation.

Ms. Shayal: Just a continuation from the same point on quotas for women in decision-making generally. We all know that women comprise approximately 50% of Fiji's population, yet their representation across leadership and decision-making spaces, they remain critically low. While the 2013 Constitution guarantees equality and prohibits discrimination on the basis of gender, this has not translated into substantive equality in practice.

Women hold only 25% of board director positions and just 11% of board chair roles, with minimal presence in deputy chair positions that typically serve as pathways to senior leadership. At the executive level, women occupy only 13% of CEO roles, many of which are concentrated in branch offices and private non-listed companies. These patterns demonstrate that structural and systematic barriers continue to limit women's progression into positions of power across political, corporate and public sectors.

We need to introduce gender quotas across all spheres of leadership in Fiji. Quotas are necessary to accelerate progress towards gender parity and correct historical structural exclusion. They are not preferential treatment, but a legitimate and evidence-based mechanism to achieve substantive equality.

Increasing women's representation in decision-making spaces has shown to improve transparency, inclusivity and the responsiveness of institutions. Without such deliberate interventions, progress will remain slow and inconsistent, undermining Fiji's constitutional commitments. Thank you.

Ms. Adashni: Thank you, Chair, Commissioners. I will be addressing two points, one after the other. One is in particular reference to legal standing in courts to protect rights and the other one is the limitation of powers. Before I commence with my part of the submission, I'd like to offer the following disclaimers. I make the submission on behalf of the FWRM as a board member. These are not the opinions of my employer.

I would also like to state that the submission only addresses the constitutional provisions with respect to the concentration of power in the official capacity of these roles. This part of the submission does not serve to criticize any individuals past and present. We will also be submitting detailed data-backed submissions in due course and join in with other women-based organizations in a separate submission.

I'd like to go on to legal standing to protect rights. On the face of it, the Bill of Rights appears to be extremely progressive. That is a fallacy. There are many issues with it. However, the one that I am addressing today is Section 44, specifically subsection 1. That, in summary, only stipulates individuals to raise constitutional challenges in court. It is only extended to another person when the person whose rights have been contravened is detained.

We submit that this does not provide Fijians with all possible mechanisms for seeking redress. It is, therefore, an incomplete mechanism. Section 44 does not allow public interest groups such as non-government organizations to file matters of constitutional redress on behalf of those whose rights have been contravened.

These types of organizations act as the crucial mechanism in bridging the gap between those whose rights have been violated and their ability to access justice. This includes minority and marginalized groups as well, not just individuals. Barriers like poverty, fear of retaliation, lack of knowledge, or geographic isolation prevent many victims from seeking justice.

NGO's and CSOs often work directly with these communities and understand their circumstances. By allowing them to file cases, the legal system becomes more accessible to those who would otherwise remain unheard. It transforms rights from abstract promises into something people can claim.

As an example, this was clearly demonstrated when an FWRM took the government to court for the women's name case. In that case, we actually had to actively search for seven women who could be plaintiffs in that matter. This should not be the case. It is simply not right.

In this time of uncertainty and great change, the protection of human rights must be our shared responsibility. It cannot be an individual burden. This is crucial to citizens' fundamental and equal rights to access to justice. For far too long, not only has this right been unfairly limited, it has been enshrined in the 2013 Constitution. This wrong can be righted by amending Section 44 to allow public interest organizations such as NGOs and CSOs legal mandate to assist aggrieved individuals and groups in seeking redress.

At its core, this is about recognizing that justice is not always something a victim can pursue alone. Sometimes it requires someone else to stand beside them, behind them, in front of them and say this is wrong and it must be answered for. Allowing NGO's and CSO's to file cases affirms that human rights are a shared responsibility and that no one should have to fight for their dignity in isolation. That was the first part of my submission.

The second addresses the separation of powers. In particular, it looks at the concentration of powers in one particular office. At the heart of any strong democracy is a simple idea. No one is above the law. And the system that protects this idea is the rule of law, which is supported by the doctrine of separation of powers.

But when those lines begin to blur and when one office holds too much influence, we risk sliding towards something far less, something less than a democracy. Separation of powers means that the three arms of the government, the executive, the legislature and the judiciary, each have their own rules. They act as checks on one another.

That is simply the purpose of separating the powers. This is the legal safeguard against autocracy. It ensures that people who make the law are not the same ones enforcing it without restraint and not the same ones judging it without independence.

Without this balance, power becomes concentrated. And history shows us that concentrated power, regardless of how well-intentioned in the beginning, does not end well.

Under the 2013 Constitution, the Attorney General in particular holds significant and far-reaching authority. This one role carries sweeping influence across different areas of governance. It has caused legal, political and executive influences to overlap in one office. It weakens the very system designed to hold power accountable. And when accountability fails, people begin to question whether decisions are being made fairly, independently and in the public interest. We have seen this happen. This is the entire reason we are here today, making these submissions before you.

Current provisions in the 2013 Constitution demonstrate that the role of the Attorney General are far-reaching. And just to give a very basic example, the Constitution of India, which is a very progressive constitution, a very voluntary document in fact, mentions the Attorney General no more than a dozen times. Ours does so approximately 70 times.

And that itself is a demonstration of how pervasive the powers are and how centralized they are. And that is the opposite of what democracy demands. Limiting powers is about protecting democracy.

This is why the role of the Attorney General must be clearly defined and limited. This is what will strengthen the system. It reassures citizens that no single figure can dominate the legal or political landscape unchecked. That must never be allowed to happen.

Further, the role of the President must be clarified. This is Part B of this submission. When constitutional roles are vague or open to interpretation, it creates uncertainty. This is why the role of the President under the 2013 Constitution of Fiji should be more clearly defined as a ceremonial role. Respectfully, the President is meant to be a symbol of national unity, above politics, above division.

A clearly defined ceremonial role removes that ambiguity. It ensures that everyone understands that the President can only act on the advice of a lawfully elected government, not on personal discretion. For example, the President cannot nominate public officials but can officially endorse the nominees of the government without suggesting his own candidate.

Section 82 must be amended accordingly to reflect this. In a democracy, real executive power must rest with leaders chosen by the people. That is where the political mandate is derived from. Unclear powers can lead to standoffs between the President and the government. These conflicts have a destabilizing effect on governance and erode public confidence in institutions. At the end of the day, democracy is not self-sustaining.

It requires constant care, vigilance, and sometimes difficult reform. We must ensure that the rule of law prevails, and that means being willing to question where the power sits and whether it has grown too large. And it has. We respectfully submit that this must be rectified.

Ms. Laisa: My next submission is around Section 45 of the Constitution, which establishes the Fiji Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission. It's a mandated body under the Constitution designed to promote, protect, educate on human rights, including investigating violations and providing some level of redress.

One problem to note here is that the clause seems to allow the Commission to only make recommendations to the government but not to tribunals and other bodies and not to the private sector or to challenge state decisions. Under the 1997 Constitution, the Commission could make recommendations to anyone, including the private sector. Therefore, we submit that Section 45 of the Constitution must be strengthened so that the Commission can make recommendations to the government, tribunal, private sector, and other bodies about matters affecting compliance with international human rights laws, existing and proposed new laws.

The Constitution gives powers to the Commission to not only make recommendations but to monitor whether the government, tribunals, private sector, and other bodies are actually complying with the recommendations from the Commission.

Section 45 (5) of the Constitution also allows any person to lodge a complaint with the Commission alleging that a right or freedom has been denied, violated, infringed, or threatened. As my earlier colleague also highlighted in her submission, we are proposing that the new Constitution include provisions whereby civil society organizations are able to file complaints to trigger investigation into human rights violations, especially for vulnerable groups like women, persons with disabilities, children, and women human rights defenders.

And my last point on this is that Section 45 is silent on who the Commission reports to but references the Human Rights Commission Act 2009 to articulate this. So, if you look through the Act itself, the Commission reports to the President in Section 44.1 and it must submit a copy of the annual report to the Prime Minister. To ensure true independence, credibility, and effectiveness in holding the government accountable, we recommend that the Constitution include provisions whereby the Commission is mandated to report directly to Parliament and not to the executive branch.

This is best practice everywhere. Reporting directly to Parliament acts as a transparent process because it is an elected body by the people and it also underpins the notion that the Commission is ultimately responsible for the public. Thank you.

Ms. Nabalarua: I'll be speaking on the seventh point. Myself and Shayal will be interchanging. There are only ten points, so we're at number seven. And I'll be speaking on no small topic, which is the role of the military in civic society, particularly Section 1312. And I say this having relatives and friends, former colleagues who have served with the military. I say this with respect but with absolute clarity.

The military is not a social welfare agency. They are not a development organization. The military is not a substitute for an elected government. When you put the words, well-being of all Fijians into the constitutional mandate of the RFMF, you have given soldiers the power to decide what is good for civilians. That is not democracy. That is a guardianship state.

I have seen what happens when the military believes it is responsible for our well-being. Rights are suspended. Women's human rights defenders are silenced, and the voices of elected representatives become optional.

The 2013 Constitution must be amended to state explicitly that the military is under the direction and control of the civilian government at all times. Its role is external defense, disaster response, and nothing more unless the Parliament declares a state of emergency with strict time limits. We respectfully submit that the Section 1312, again, should contain an explicit clause that the RFMF is at all times subject to the direction and control of the civilian government. And I'll pass on to Shayal.

Ms. Shayal: I will be presenting on point 8, which is on immunity, immunity for coup makers, which is under Section 156 to 158. Although the past cannot be changed, it should not define the standards of our future.

Sections 156 to 158 of the Constitution, they grant sweeping and irrevocable immunity to those involved in the 2006 school and interim government, shielding them from any form of legal accountability. Such provisions, they weaken the rule of law by placing individuals beyond scrutiny. Moving forward, there must be no provision for future immunity as accountability is essential.

As young women, we refuse to be shackled by the legacy of past coups. We want a constitution that reflects equality, the rule of law, and inclusion for all Fiji citizens. Do not condemn us to an uncertain future shaped by past instability. Give us the opportunity to build a better one. Thank you, and I'll pass it on to the next speaker.

Ms. Nabalarua: I think, you know, it'd be, I should have, as a lawyer, I should have also had the disclaimer, but it goes without saying that, you know, what we do say here is not a reflection of our employees, as we are volunteers on the board.

I'm so grateful that Dr. Nilesh Gounder is here because we both work for the same school at the University of the South Pacific. But, you know, it's, and I was thinking about it today sitting at graduation, is we still have to cover ourselves because that trauma, that fear still exists and we could potentially, that our livelihoods are at stake. But what we're doing here is trying to set boundaries and guarantees and fight for the freedoms that have been so easily, that's so fragile, that can be taken away or can be limited at any time, at the whim, and it can still be legal. When we're giving up the parts, I think I, I don't know whether I was, I attract all the hard, the hard conversations, but none of these are easy.

My presentation on the ninth and tenth point, the first is about FICAC. And essentially, it was set up to prosecute corruption, but is being used politically.

Corruption, as we know, is an infection that spreads. Every Fijian wants it fought, but as the good doctor, medical doctor would agree, the cure cannot be worse than the disease. When an anti-corruption body is used to silence political opponents or intimidate critics, it stops being a guardian of justice and becomes a tool of oppression. So, when power is wielded selectively against some people and not others, that's not accountability. That's fieta. The solution is simple.

We submit that FICAC be abolished as a separate entity and return its prosecutorial power to the Director of Public Prosecutions. The DPP has constitutional independence. It's already responsible for criminal prosecutions. And corruption is a crime. Let the DPP prosecute it without political interference, without selective targeting, and without the appearance of a political weapon.

The last submission I'll be making, we'll be making today, is the concentration of powers in the executive in relation to judicial appointments and removals, thereby undermining the independence of the judiciary.

As a lawyer, we are always taught that we are servants of the court, first and foremost. And so, I say this as a servant of the court. The 1997 Constitution got it right.

Under Sections 131 and 132, judicial appointments were made by the President on the advice of a Judicial Services Commission, a collective body of senior judicial and legal professionals with no role for the Attorney General. Section 136, 2 and 3 of the 1997 Constitution was equally clear. A judge could only be removed for inability or misbehavior.

And the President had to appoint a tribunal on the advice of the JSC. The JSC acted as a filter, ensuring that removal proceedings were based on merit and proper grounds, not political convenience. That is the standard we should maintain.

We respect our judiciary. We honor the difficult work that judges, magistrates do every day. But we must be honest about the constitutional framework within which they operate.

The 2013 Constitution places them in an impossible position. Section 107[2] requires the JSC to consult with the Attorney General when appointing judicial officers. 114[.3] requires the same consultation for the appointment of the Commissioner of the Independent Legal Services Commission.

Section 122 repeats the pattern for the Public Service Disciplinary Tribunal. The Chairperson and two other members appointed by the President only after the JSC consults with the AG. The Attorney General is a senior political appointee and a member of the Executive Branch.

Previously, the JSC acted as an independent filter for removals. Now the AG is directly embedded in the chain of appointment and approval.

This is not a criticism of any judge or magistrate. It is a criticism of a constitutional design that forces judicial and disciplinary officers to be appointed and potentially removed through a process that involves a political figure. No matter how independent our judiciary may be, the very existence of these provisions creates a structural vulnerability.

When the law requires the AG to be consulted at multiple points, it creates an unavoidable impression that appointments and security of tenure depend on executive approval, undermining the public confidence in impartiality of the courts and tribunals through no fault of the judges themselves.

We therefore submit that the Constitution should be amended to restore the 1997 model. Judicial appointments and removals to be made by an independent Judicial Services Commission on the advice of that Commission to the President with no role for the Attorney General.

Specifically, Sections 107 [2] 114 [3] and 122 [2] must be deleted. The removal process must return to the 1997 standard, removal only for inability or misbehavior with a tribunal appointed on the advice of the JSC alone.

Our judges, magistrates and tribunal members deserve a constitutional framework that protects their independence and insulates them from any suggestion of executive influence. A judge should never owe their position to a politician. A magistrate should never be placed in a position where litigants could reasonably doubt their impartiality. That is not an attack on the judiciary. It is a defense of it. Vinaka.

Ms. Nalini: So, there we have it. The 10-point submission that we have made is therefore not abstract legal commentary, provided by my colleagues today. It is a defense of our collective lives' work.

It is a demand that Fiji returns to the path of genuine constitutionalism where human rights are real, justifiable and enforceable. International legal obligations, especially CEDAW, are binding and not optional. The military serves the civilian government, not the reverse.

Women in marginalized groups have the legal tools, including TSM's and quotas, to achieve substantive equality. And no one is above the law. And no future immunity will be granted to the overthrow of democracy.

We submit this not as opponents of Fiji, but as its defenders, where the respect of human rights, the rule of law and equality is a stronger, safer, and more prosperous Fiji for all its citizens, especially its women and girls. Vinaka Vakalevu.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu Nalini. Thank you very much, ladies, for those submissions. Deep, strong, they will be considered. Now, before I ask my fellow commissioners if they have any comments or questions, may I request at the outset that if you have soft copies of your submissions, please send them to us so that we can consider them, we can print them, distribute them to the commissioners, and then we can consider them later on. Thank you. Now it's time for comments from your commissioners. Like CJ said, it's time for us to cross-examine you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you, Chair, and thank you for your presence here this afternoon, Laisa, Shayal, Nalini, Agnesi, Akanisi, and Imrana, and, of course, your colleagues. I was a high school student sitting on the floor during school assembly when Ms. Jalal appeared at my school to talk about the progress towards the Family Law Act. And then later, as a research assistant at the Legal Aid Commission, I got to see the Family Law Act in practice, and that was around 2005 or 2006.

I wanted to thank you for the grace and calmness with which you delivered your submissions, but with uncompromising clarity, I must say. And I moved beyond description to see the intergenerational makeup before us, something I hope our commission might also reflect, and I know it's something that we all live in a walking dream towards. My question is about the very important point you made about making evidence-based policy advocacy that FWRM has done for as long as I've been around, for the 40 years of its existence.

You spoke about the 10-year rape statistics analysis. You spoke about the evidence gathered on women's presence on boards. And because one of the responses that I'm sure many of you also deal with when it comes to speaking for things like temporary special measures and affirmative action is says who or who said that, evidence and research becomes all the more important.

And of course, it will be in the massive responsibility in terms of the work that we do. I would just like to invite you to expand on FWRM's work in research and in evidence gathering that is quite substantial, I understand, over your 40 years. I'm sure it will be something we come to refer to a lot in our work.

Ms. Imrana: When we make our submissions in writing, which we will definitely give to you, we intend to preface it with the data on women's ratio in employment, women on boards, women in the judiciary. All the gender data, sex disaggregated data will be provided to you so that you can see that our submission is based on actual data.

Over the years we have done various points research. One recent research I think you already know about is in 2020. We did research to show the public of Fiji that women, although we had equality, legal equality, that de- facto equality did not exist in terms of decision making. That's only one. And Nalini will give you other examples. We have always based all our submissions on hard data. And not only do we have sex disaggregated data, but we also collect anecdotal evidence, qualitative evidence, from the women that we talk to, the women that we train in our workshops, our membership.

We have 100 women who are young women who have graduated from our training program. So as Nalini said, we are building a future pipeline of leadership, not just for us, but also for government and decision making. Nalini, I think maybe, I mean, I'm thinking about the first 20 years and the research we did then, but we've become better.

And now that we have research people employed full time, we've become better at collecting information. So rather than give you 40 years of research, why don't you just highlight one or two of the things that we've done over the last decade. And can I say, Mr. Commissioner Chair, that I should have also said that I took leave today to come and speak.

I do not speak on behalf of the Asian Development Bank. And I just want to be clear that I'm here as a board member of the Fiji Women's Rights Movement. So just to clarify, thank you.

Ms. Nalini: Thank you, Mere, for that question, and rightfully so. The reason why we do research is what Imrana has talked about. There's disparity and limited understanding of how we need to look at data. It's taken us a long while to actually get to the appropriate desegregations, and even in the most simplest way, looking at sex desegregated data. So, we have given ourselves a mandate that we are going to be looking at any topical issues with the gender and sex lens, because we would like to show how, when we look at gender in a very neutral way, where the cracks and gaps are and where women are slipping off. So maybe just to highlight a few examples.

This work actually began in the 1990s, and it was around women in the economic sector. And one of the key issues coming out was sexual harassment in the workplace. And one of the first researches we did was around prevalence rates.

I think it was as early as 2012, and the data was something around one in three women were experiencing sexual harassment in the workplace. Then began the whole lobby to have our legislation include the clauses and to get organizations, companies, private sector to become more compliant. And again, when we repeated the prevalence study in 2016, the data showed one in five women as prevalent.

And we could see where the hotspots were, and this was in our food and beverage hospitality industry. And one common issue coming out as a barrier was not knowing what sexual harassment actually was. So then began a whole effort from our side in terms of educating institutions, corporations, whoever would want to understand this and put in better policies for their workplaces.

And we should be looking at doing another prevalence study to see where we are now, because this is a significant issue for us. In relation to the plethora of work that has happened in legislative reform, including Family Law Act, the Enactment of Domestic Violence Act, looking at the revisions in the Crimes Act, where we're looking at rape and sexual assault, etc. So much progressive changes have been made.

But when we did an evaluation of how well is access to justice for women, working out with all these reforms, then we find some stark realities. Again, we find that for women, it takes an average of 268 days to seek formal justice sector response. And within that two-and-a-half years, women are trying up to an average of six times to reach out.

And one of the biggest barriers is women in communities everywhere not knowing the justice pathways. So, we are working with different organizations, service providers, including government. Now we have our national action plan on the prevention of violence against women and girls.

So that's where we are bringing in this data and recommendations to ensure that the disparities and the gap that we see are eliminated. And I think to look at the more recent studies we have done, as we have explained, we have analyzed that we have child early marriages in Fiji, despite having marriage law which says 18 is the legal age for marriage. But in reality, we actually have younger women in traditional or customary unions.

And there are reasons for that as well that we have to find out why. And it's a failure of our systems when it comes to providing comprehensive sexuality education in schools and sexual and reproductive health services and information. And that is resulting in unintended adolescent pregnancies and leading to customary marriages.

And nobody has ever been taken to court for that, which is quite astounding given the number of marriages that we have seen. What another recent research is, it's around, well, we've done 10 years of rape case analysis. And this was premised on the fact that we wanted to build a profile of who the victim survivor is and who the perpetrator is and essentially also try and understand how long does the justice sector or the case in court take.

And what we have found is that majority of victim survivors are children because they are under 18 and the perpetrators are from mid-20s to mid-30s. And we also find that the home, the community, is the most unsafe place for victim survivors. And we also find that it takes up to about 2.5 to 3 years on average for cases to be processed in court.

And it's also a stark realization that we do not provide any support for psychosocial issues, mental health issues to the victim survivors as they go through the process. So, this is a new analysis that we are finding and we will be looking at what do we do in that regard. Another ongoing research we are just working on that is looking at the Sustainable Development Goals and looking at Goal 3 on health and Goal 5 on gender equality to see how well is Fiji faring.

And we know that the progress on those goals, we are either stagnant or we are regressing. And we are not progressing in the ways in which the SDG's were designed. So, research is very important to us and everything that we advocate for and lobby for comes from that background. 40 years of knowing where we are, especially for women and girls in Fiji, is what we bring in our submissions.

Ms. Imrana: Thank you, Nalini. May I just add two data points that I think is very relevant to how you situate us when you are talking about women's rights in your report.

One critical piece of information is that women make up 36.2% of women are in the paid labor market. Compared to between 61 to 75% of males. So, it's almost a double gender gap when you are thinking about access to paid work.

Of course, that does not take into account the amount of household work that women do, unpaid household work. Nobody is saying that they should be paid but that it should be recognized that it is real work even if it is unpaid work. So, women do 73% of household work.

So that's quite a massive amount of work that women do apart from those 36% of women that do paid work. In addition to that, one of the features of the labor market in Fiji is that women have horizontal segregation. Meaning that women in general are concentrated in the lower occupational groups because of the lack of skills and education.

So, one shouldn't look at the women here or the women in government and say, well these women represent all women in Fiji. And that education is dispersed fairly over the whole labour market. It just isn't.

One of my favorite topics, and it's something that I was involved with at the World Bank and the ADB, is trying to get women into the TVET sector. We know that in terms of future employment, the TVET sector is a huge potential employer of women. And women should be getting training for that so that they can, because that is one sector that is highly gender segregated.

It's something like only 11% of technical and engineering people are females. So that's obviously a future sector. So that's one important piece of information which gives you a kind of a snapshot of how women are situated in the labour market. Thank you.

Ms. Nalini: Just a correction, I think I'm getting a little dyslexic as I progress with age. Women, it takes them 868 days, two and a half years, not the other way around.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ms. Baravilala, your submission in relation to Section 7, subsection 1A of the Constitution. Section 7, subsection 1A, and B. The use of the word must, which is mandatory, and may, which is discretionary. Sorry, Ms. Nabalarua.

According to the 2013 Constitution, the words used are, in 7.1A is must, and in 7.1B is may. A is mandatory, B is discretionary. What was your submission again? They should both be mandatory. Both of them, A and B should be mandatory.

Ms. Nabalarua: Yes, Section 7.1B should be amended to say must.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair. Thank you, ladies. Very enlightening presentation. I have a different view, I'm not a lawyer. I come from the vocational sector, and I'm glad that Ms. Imran has just mentioned the TVET section. But, you know, I hear you, just the Constitutional Declaration of Rights. You know, you talk around the human rights section of the Constitution. It appears that it's top-loaded and then watered down. Just hearing the voices across the table with your stories, very compelling.

But, you know, just the point about the military one was quite interesting. However, my paper that I've been asked or tasked to do is to look at the State Service, Chapter 6. And that's a sticky subject, and that's something that I share your compliments and your feelings around that subject.

Just before you came in, we had the nurses, a group of ladies that came in. And, you know, we're losing close to 1,500 women. I mean, the figures that I picked up in 2024 was about 1,500. I don't know how accurate that is.

That's driven by, again, how, as you quite rightly framed it, the Bill of Rights, the rights section, which hurts me a lot, too. Sorry, I get kind of emotional around this subject because they should not be in a position like that. And I didn't hear that come across. So, I think we're losing a lot of women. Most of the nurses, 90% of them are women. And they are finding that subject space very difficult, hearing from them this morning.

Sorry, Chair, I might be just elaborating a bit more. Their concerns are very interesting. But there's a huge group of women that are affected, and it's coming back to this Bill of Rights. But anyway, I just thought I'd just throw that in. It was nice to hear that because it's resonating with the other consultations that we're hearing. So, I thought I could just pass it on. But very compelling, and thank you.

Ms. Imrana: Sorry, if I could just comment on that, Mr. Commissioner Beg. When I refer to gender-segregated occupation, that's the perfect example.

Nursing is 90% female. They're also highly employable abroad. I have two sisters-in-law who left the nursing profession. One of them is a sister in an intensive care unit in Cairns, and another one is in the U.K. They got jobs like that with the training that we give them here, earning an enormous amount of money, to be frank. I mean, why would they stay around here if they can make the lives of their families better? But here is where employment law must address. There is a legal solution for a start.

There's a massive gender gap between nurses, highly trained, and other professions which are consisting mainly of men. But the same kind of like skill value levels, it's quite interesting. But if you did a survey and you looked at the wages and benefits, you would find a huge disparity.

So, unless we can recognize how highly skilled and trained nurses are and ensure that there is a wage that attaches to their profession, we are going to see this erosion of highly trained female staff. But I don't know whether by protecting equality in the Constitution, we can tackle that issue as well. But if gender and sex is going to be removed, then we don't have a constitutional basis to challenge gender-segregated occupation, which attracts lower decent work and salary. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: In relation to the concentration of power, which was submitted by Adashni, we have been considering that. We have questioned the two top judges in our jurisdiction, the CJ and the President of the Court of Appeal.

And we have also questioned former judge, I still call him judge, Daniel Fatiaki. And yes, everybody notices that. And it has been a subject of comment around awareness or workshops that have been undertaken around the country.

And the figures you have given us was given to us by, I think, Mr. Emitai Boladuadua yesterday. The number of times the Attorney General is mentioned in our Constitution. So that is a matter that we are taking into consideration. And the comment has been that we have to water that down.

Secondly, Section 44, reading it, any person can use Section 44. Now, that would imply that it's the person affected who is to use Section 44?

Ms. Adashni: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Except if a person has been accused or detained, then a third person can get involved.

Ms. Adashni: Yes, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Is that what you mean?

Ms. Adashni: Yes, sir. That is precisely the meaning of that. And what it does is it places the burden of filing constitutional redress matters and constitutional challenges in the courts on an individual.

And that is a massive burden to bear. Because not only are you in many instances going up against – the opponent is always going to be a more powerful figure, in this case the state.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes.

Ms. Adashni: And the interest of the individual citizen must always be protected in the Constitution against the state. Because that is where – A, that is where the political mandate comes from. But that is also the social contract between the citizen and the state.

I apologize. I feel like I'm speaking to the choir because you're so senior to me. And I've seen you in court. And it just feels a little bit intimidating.

Ms. Imrana: And he was a human rights commissioner. Yes.

Ms. Adashni: I was getting to that point. I wasn't sure of my memories. I'm so young. I don't know so many things. But it really seems like such an unfair burden. It was demonstrated in the women's name case, which eventually didn't end up – because the law was changed before a judgment could be made by the courts, which was also a separate matter, just the abuse of Standing Order 51. But that's not part of the submission. Apologies for digressing. Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: So is it your submission that that is to be amended, that third parties can give instructions?

Ms. Adashni: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Valenitabua: Can give instructions on behalf of other people?

Ms. Adashni: There must be legal mandates that allows public interest organizations to pursue that line of work. And it must be reflected in constitutional redress rules as well.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay. And I get your point. Because the only third party who can appear would be the lawyers. But to give instructions, you need a person.

Ms. Adashni: Yes, absolutely. And lawyers are also expensive, goes without saying. And not everyone – I mean, there's legal aid available, but oftentimes – but also, sir, and if I may elaborate, it places a lot of emphasis on individuals. When we also have group rights of minority people, and so sometimes when a group is affected by the same contravention of rights, the NGO or a CSO, any public interest organization that works in close contact with them would be the best avenue, would be the best way to help them, would be to go through that particular public interest organization.

Ms. Imrana: Commissioner Chair, when we fought that case in 2023 – 4, can't remember – I don't know – I'm sure you followed it closely.

We had to find seven female plaintiffs who were directly affected. We had to file an affidavit showing how their passport, their birth certificate, their FNPF, their visas, all of that was affected because the state required that they vote in their birth certificate names. But all of these women – and actually there were 100,000 women affected.

And we know this because the then Attorney General gave us the numbers in Parliament. And so, we fought that case for the 100,000 women without getting a specific mandate, but we were lucky to find seven women. And we had to find them because they were scared to be plaintiffs because they felt that they might be victimized.

And so that is the perfect example. Organizations like us, we should be given the right in the Constitutional to file a court case that says 100,000 married women who've had their names for over 20 years are being told that they should only vote in their birth certificate names. You can't discriminate against them because they chose to get married and adopt their husbands' names.

So that effectively – and we had to fundraise to pay for the lawyers for that. We should have been able to file it on behalf of those 100,000 women. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, I know that because that was the repo cation of Nawaikula case that is why I was interested in we were the lawyers at that time.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Thank you, Chair. And thank you, WFWRM, for your presentation.

On behalf of the Commission, I'd like to recognize your work, not only in the area of women's rights, but human rights, rule of law, and good governance. And I think I've said this in other forums as well. A lot that we have achieved on the ground in terms of women's rights is the hard work of organizations like FWRM and also because of your lobbying over time.

And it's good to see Madam Imrana Jalal here. Your presence here is testament to your interest in women's rights and also your contribution to a better constitution for our country. So, thank you for your very sharp presentations and very specific focus on what aspect of constitution you would like to see reformed.

One of the issues that I want to pick on is the gap between what we actually have on paper in terms of laws and the outcomes on the ground, which is a challenge. And one of the things that you mentioned is women's rep in boards and particularly in public enterprises. And in the National Development Plan, Nalini and I worked together to ensure that we have women reps in boards.

And in terms of the implementation of National Development Plan, I've seen firsthand the challenges. You need a lot of political will to achieve this actually. And I was, through my influence, managed to push women in FRCS, FDB, and FNPF.

But it can only happen if there is some level of political will. So, my question is, and I just need to pick your expertise in your brains, whether we should have something of this kind in the constitution or push it through the acts. Because one of the things we have been discussing as commissioners is how do we sharpen the constitution and reduce some of the information that the constitution has.

For example, you say people of academic freedom, and then you list a lot of qualifiers. And the constitution then becomes very broad and long. And my colleague here, Dr. John, is not a fan of qualifiers.

So, I just want to know, what shall we do? Because I have a keen interest in this. I'm working really hard to ensure that we have more women on boards. But the practical challenge is, how do we achieve this? Should we have this here? And how will it work then? Or should we? Because my thing is that it might be a good idea to have it in the acts.

So, FRCS act, FNPF act, FDB act. We might be better suited. But I'm just suggesting I want to pick your expertise, Imrana and others, please.

Ms. Laisa: Maybe I start first, and then Imrana and the rest of my colleagues can also share. So, under the 2013 constitution, if you look at section 26-7, it already provides a provision where it says that the section, it allows for legally permissible TSMs to be included in substitute legislation. Because section 26-7 already allows for it.

And maybe I can reiterate, treating one person differently from another or any other grounds prescribed under subsection 3 is discriminatory unless it can be established that the difference in treatment is not unfair in the circumstances. So, this section means that you can create substitute legislation. So, the constitution already allows for that affirmative action to be in acts in other substitute legislation.

Because you're able to justify special circumstances which requires women to have some sort of temporary special measure to be at the same level playing field, whether it's in boards, in health, in public sector, private sector. So, the constitution already allows for that.

Dr. Gounder: But this is how it happens before you come in. So, say there are five board members. When the time for nomination comes in, only if you get this push for a woman candidate, then only you'll get someone. So that's my practical issue that I was trying to highlight.

You know, we made a lot of attempts, but it mainly is to deal with the political level, the ministerial level. Sometimes they just can't seem to see the need to have. So how do you fix this problem? I mean, one of the targets in the national development plan is to at least have 50% of women on boards.

We might actually be missing the NDP target because practically we have hit this kind of a drag. So please.

Ms. Imrana: Thank you, Commissioner Gounder. So I'm a big fan of Section 44 of the old constitution. Okay? So, under the 1997 constitution, Section 44 was very clear. Parliament may make laws to accelerate the equality of disadvantaged groups, not just women. It could be poor. It could be people living with disabilities. So, it was very clear.

It's not so clear in 2013, and as Laisa pointed out, it's embedded right there amongst 26.7. So that's not good. We need a clear provision. But exactly as you said, Commissioner Gounder, I don't think the constitution is the place where you say all boards must have 30% women because we need to make sure that the women exist to draw from.

And while the gaps exist, it's not wise to put it in the constitution. Having said that, Malaysia, India, Vietnam, and many other Asian countries have passed legislation requiring that, and not in the constitution, but subsidiary legislation, requiring women to constitute a minimum of 30% on boards. But not just that. Malaysia took a further step. It said, actually, it's not just public organization's that have to have 30% women. Private sector boards have to.

So, the multinationals that exist in Malaysia have to have 30% women. And what it's shown is that, actually, it has not decreased the profits because there was all this stuff about putting more women in boards. You know, they don't have the skills.

They don't have the education. We'll put them on board, and what will happen to the profits? And actually, the research done by Thornton, which is a highly regarded international accounting firm, did the research. They looked at seven countries, and they said, actually, it improves the bottom line.

And they even looked at the Vietnam Stock Exchange and found that it did not affect negatively the bottom line. And in fact, one positive benefit was that companies that had a minimum of 30% women on boards, actually, the employees in those organization's benefited in terms of wellness. So that was a side effect that wasn't intended, but it occurred.

Now, I'm not sure. I mean, we've debated and argued about this over the years. Should we go for 30%? Or maybe we should start off with 15% or 20% just to get things going. And then in 10 years, we can say, OK, it's working. Let's improve it to 25%, 30%, whatever. But I think I'm a big fan of quotas.

The World Bank and the Asian Development Bank is quite clear. We don't see change unless you have legislated quotas. All our gender action plans in all our projects, whether it's a $1.2 billion loan to India requiring a viaduct to be built, requires that 30% of the workers must be women. And it happens. So, there's a lot of research, a lot of data, a lot of evidence-based information to show that it doesn't affect the bottom line and, in fact, it could improve it. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: I think there's ample economics research also to suggest that having a more gender representative board improves the financial performance of businesses. Thank you very much. I think we're trying to move in that line.

It might be better off to change the acts. So, for example, in Fiji Revenue and Customs Service, where I'm a board member, you know, we try to remind that, hey, we need to get more women on board. So, if it's legislated in the act, then it might be much more easier because that can be more effective.

That's just a point that I think at this stage. But I take your point that we need to be more specific somewhere in the Constitution, and then we can use that provision to argue that these acts must also then change down the line here. Thank you.

Ms. Nabalarua: If I could just add on to that. I think, you know, in terms of having clarity in the Constitution with regards to quotas or TSM's is important because at the very basic, every citizen of this country knows that their Constitution stands up for them. It includes them.

And if you make it normal at that level, it should not be hard in terms of legislation to reflect that. And for whether it's public or private sector to feel emboldened by the fact that this is not, they're not acting differently to the Constitution. You wouldn't be allowed to, or you're not in the extreme. But at the minimum level, throughout the submissions that we've given, the Constitution includes them, it sees them, and it makes up for that difference. But also, a level playing field is not achieved until we intentionally level the playing field. And to sit back on a wish and a hope that it will happen, realistically, we can sit here and tell you, in 40 years, change did not come on a wish and a hope.

It was fought for and lobbied until it was achieved, even when the wins were incremental, and this is the minimum that we are asking for. And I think even having that change in the Constitution or providing a bit more clarity is what the citizens of this country deserve from a constitution that includes them. Vinaka.

Dr. Gounder: And I think you have the complete academic freedom from USP to talk about issues. Yeah, I have experienced that first hand, so please, you know, feel free to talk on issues that is within your expertise and domain, yeah. I haven't been hanged to death, so I'm still here.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, through you, Chair. Akanisi, are you saying you want it in the Constitution?

Ms. Nabalarua: No, I was just saying in terms of our submission, we had outlined that we, you know, just how Imrana had phrased it, it's like tucked into Section 26-7 as a, you know, as a clause there. But just to, when we're talking about the debate of whether we should start from X or the Constitution, I think that at the minimum, we need it clarified, is that the word, in the Constitution?

Ms. Imrana: Enabling legislation. Enabling legislation to, yeah.

Mr. Beg: Okay, that's really good, because, you know, I hear 40 years of hard work. I agree, totally. I think it should highlight that instrument very clearly. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: If I may, Chair, I am also reflecting on your submission relating to FICAC and about how the past decades, citizens have watched the roles of public institutions evolve and mutate, perhaps, if that's too strong a word, and how so many of Fijians today have known no other arrangement under which they've lived.

And I'd really love to hear you expand on how this has also affected the lobbying environment for you all, in terms of what directions to advocate in, in terms of the freedom or lack of freedom, in terms of electioneers, as we all know how such institutions have been used or have operated.

And, you know, evolving back, sometimes when one speaks of abolishing something or removing something, it doesn't necessarily mean, as you state, that we don't believe that corruption is an issue and shouldn't be addressed. I mean, I would just really be interested to hear you expand on that from the position of a 40-year advocacy institution like FWRM, in terms of having to operate in these ever-evolving environments. The reverberations of which are still happening around us.

Ms. Imrana: To be fair, she was only three years old. Fiji woman's rights movement, stop! I would have been around the same age.

Ms. Nabalarua: You know, I can speak on my limited experience, on, yeah, just the scope here in front of me, and hopefully my colleagues will expand or pick up the ball where I may have dropped it. You know, I was thinking about the FICAC and how these institutions were almost thrust upon us and we had to pivot as and when it happened. And also understand what that meant from, you know, from access to, you know, the ability to bring cases, how you affect these people, members that were personally sort of taken to task through these institutions.

And it's not, it's both a, not an academic exercise, it's both that discussion and it's a personal discussion for people in the movement. And, you know, just to go back to, whenever I see the word FICAC, my word association is fatigue. Like, I'm really tired. I don't know how to, this was, you know, there was conversations before the previous government came in that it would be absorbed within the police. And then now we are submitting that it should, there's no need to reinvent the wheel. There might be some minor changes that need to be made.

But again, I go back to the fact that the medicine seems harder than the actual infection of corruption, of solving corruption. There is no qualms about whether corruption exists and it needs to be fixed. That's a given, right? But it's the mechanism that exists in place that allows it to be fair and transparent and not to be weaponized against our own citizens. Yeah, I feel like Nalini wants to add to this.

Ms. Nalini: Yes. This has direct correlations to when we look at number of women standing for elections. Because the precedent that we have does not provide any confidence or add to that because they're too scared. What to declare their assets? If they don't declare, what's going to happen?

You know, the FICAC cases that are ongoing at the moment. And we are hearing from those organizations that are doing workshops with potential women candidates that this does come up quite regularly as one of those barriers that stops them from standing up for elections.

We have renewed interest with the local level municipal elections now. But looking at setting the pathways for national elections, this is one of the reasons why women are hesitating. Because of how what they declare, don't declare, through error or not, they could be targeted.

And a potential for them to go into prolonged cases. They don't have the finances, but the political party support is not there. So, all of these things are adding to that limitation.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, ladies. I should just point out from the outset that as a father of five daughters and two lawyers, I was advised not to say anything at all. Not to ask any questions from this particular group.

And I have refrained from saying anything. But as all my colleagues have spoken, I think it would be inappropriate. I did declare a conflict of interest, as I said, opposite the chairman of the electoral commission review panel who sat there three days ago.

And we had an interesting discourse. I don't have any specific questions. I thank you for the presentation. It's clear, it's forceful, it's fair. And I think many of the points you have made are very relevant. My comments really are just generic reflections in the context of our role as commissioners.

And for that, I refer to our terms of reference. There are particular aspects of our terms of reference that I think are relevant to some of the issues that you have brought up that I should maybe talk about. We're asked to engage with the people of the Republic of Fiji extensively.

Obviously, this was one of the so-called democratic deficits they referred to when the Supreme Court alluded to it in the 2013 constitution. The lack of consultation before they wrote this constitution and then supposedly consulted after the event. The lack of legitimacy in not going through a parliamentary process and getting that legitimacy, you know, standing committees and that.

And the consolidation of power, which I think many have eminently addressed in respect of the need to consult with the AG. So, there's that aspect of it. And in so attempting to address that part of it, we would be having extensive consultations with the public.

And part of that process involves, and I read, seeking input and evaluating key aspects of the constitution to ensure its provisions reflect the values, I emphasize, needs and aspirations. Now, my reflections in this respect, particularly in regards to some of the things that have come out in your presentation, again, I emphasize, I protest, I'm not agreeing or disagreeing with anything. For my safety at home.

But, for instance, we're going to have significant consultations with people who will have different views because our culture is different. And we'll espouse them, I have no doubt, as we extend our consultations outside of the urban centers. That may differ, for instance, from best international practice guidelines and conventions.

And I guess for us, our reflection here is the need to balance the people's views and their values if they in fact conflict or don't go hand in hand with international best practices. And I think that's a recognized thing that's going to come up. And I don't have an answer for it.

I sit, I listen to you, and I can assure you, again, you know, in the interest of my safety, I agree with everything you've said. But having said that, I will be listening to a lot of people who will come from places with different values, different aspirations, a different culture, that will give us conflicting views as to how we should adopt best practice guidelines. And I think this is an area that we obviously will have to address is to juggle the best of the, I guess, western world in terms of the guidelines there and the conventions and their aspirations versus what our people want at this point in time. That's my first reflection.

The second one has to do with, for instance, the issue of temporary special measures, which my brother spoke about at great length. And I talk about it in the context of electoral provisions because that's obviously an area that we will have to address as part of this review process.

And the issue of temporary special measures, I think in the context of what they recommend, which is the allocated seats for women, the so-called quotas, I kind of try to address this in the context of they argued with us that communal voting was out, we needed to be progressive, that we would not reserve, you know, certain number of seats for the Indo-Fijians, that we were moving away from that, we wanted to be universal. And in the same breath, they told us, no, we want you to put in temporary special measures for the purpose of achieving an end. This raises the question of, you know, this issue of equality of opportunity versus equality of outcome.

Is the process to socially engineer an outcome or is the process to make it fairer for everybody to have the opportunity to achieve it? I say that, again, I'm very guarded. I've been educated by my daughters that it's not a liberal playing field. I argue that they've been brought up very independently and very level, and I pity the guys who will marry my girls, because they've been brought up so level and even and equal.

But having said that, I go again to an example of a temporary special measure that was brought in under the 90, I think it was the 97 Constitution. When Qarase brought in the blueprint, now the blueprint, I understand, came in under that provision, I think 26 whatever, that allowed you, if you could justify, a program to rectify, for instance, an economic disadvantage state of the indigenous Fijian people. So, the blueprint was brought in for that purpose, as my understanding was it was a temporary special measure.

They didn't call it that, but that was the intent. I understand that there were major repercussions in terms of people saying that was racist, that was unfair, you know, and obviously there was a coup to correct it, the so-called good coup. That's the one that brought this 2013 Constitution.

I ask myself, if those kinds of situations arise, where does the temporary special measure end, if we're trying to engineer an outcome? I don't know what the answer is. I know it can be better than where it's at right now, but again, I think that's the role of us when we're considering this, is to balance that. And I emphasize, I know you come from a point of advocacy, you want the pendulum to swing this far.

I suspect there are other people who are going to ask us to swing the pendulum up here, and what I hope to do is get us into that middle sweet zone where we don't have any more coups, where we reassure people that we're on the right track, but we take into consideration these other aspects, which I've given you two examples, where, for instance, these temporary special measures might not be considered as appropriate, or where conventions and guidelines, best practice guidelines, may not concur with the majority opinion. Is it our stance that we're smarter than you, we're wiser than you, and therefore we will give you what we think we should do in this country, or we should listen to you and try and convince you about how we should be looking at these guidelines and try and convince you that way, and maybe reach a middle ground that doesn't please anybody, but people can live with. I think that balancing act is an important thing that I reflect upon, and I think addresses some of the issues that you brought.

I don't have an answer for it. I think those comments are enough to keep me out of trouble. Thank God the media's not here, or I guarantee you I would not have commented. Thank you.

Ms. Nabalarua: Thank you, Dr. Fatiaki. I think I want to, at the outset, say you're welcome for the media not being here. There were so many questions between us in our conversations that we thought it best, just in the interest of having an honest and frank conversation to go in that route. And thank you for your very honest and albeit guarded reflections. I have met your daughters, and I would also be guarded as well. I think, you know, in the balance of people's views and values and best practice, I think a good indicator is to ensure that no one is left out, that everyone is included, the protection of the rights of someone to espouse very religious fundamental views or nationalist views is protected, as well as those that have progressive views at the minimum, that they are included.

We might, I mean, we come from an advocacy background as well, but we are also evidence that we don't agree all the time and that we have honest and difficult conversations and come to a compromise. And sometimes we may not agree, but as long as you feel safe and secure to say what you think without the repercussions, that could be wholly unfair.

Like, we're not about cancel culture, as other people might like to assume. For us, it's that difficult conversation, and I think our Constitution should set a standard where people can also have a difference of opinion, but also in terms of balancing the scales, international best practice is usually the minimum. It's not over, over and above what a country is capable of achieving.

And in that minimum, people are included. They have the right to go to court, to access justice. They are equal under the law, as long as we are all equal at the most basic.

And we, as individuals before you, also have different values, needs, and aspirations. But at the common ground, there are certain principles that we don't digress from. And I think if you would have, the great thing about temporary special measures is that they are temporary.

But it's just to also acknowledge the great inequalities and obstacles that women face just to get to a certain point where they can advocate, where they can put their hand up for positions. Even in the professional workspace, women are reluctant to leadership positions because of the time and the toll that it will take. So even sitting here before you today, we also acknowledge the privilege that we come from, whether it be education, socioeconomic background, the knowledge and experience.

To get here, we come before you not as the only expertise, but the representatives of a movement, of a group of people that have varying backgrounds. We have the ability to come here. But also, we have to ask for leave, and we have to make sure we check all the, cross all the T's and dot all the I's to make sure that we can come before you make submissions without those repercussions falling on us.

And we just want a society that recognizes that in the difficulties, in the obstacles that you have to face, you deserve the right to be in spaces, to advocate for yourself, to stand in Parliament, or to be a candidate in elections. Those systems are not even, they're not the same for us. It's not the same for every woman.

And if we can put at the minimum, hey, let's have 15% or 20% of women in Parliament, because as the system exists, you won't likely get 20% of candidates or elected women in Parliament. You can't, and it's not, the social engineering is not though, it almost assumes the word social engineering as though we are in a position of power, and we're trying to tinker with the system so that we get spaces in there. No, it's acknowledging it's not equal.

Let's give you a space. Let's make the roads to a position where you can, you know, win your seat, sit in Parliament, and represent, if you're a woman from Labasa represent the women from Labasa so that young girls can see that that's a possibility, that it's not a wish and a prayer and a hope, that the system is there for me as well. That's all I wanted to say, maybe my colleagues.

Ms. Imrana: Commissioner Fatiaki, I wanted to offer you some practical ways forward on the two points that you made. In relation to the temporary special measures and affirmative action, the safest route if you were to decide to go that way is to suggest it based on evidence. For example, temporary special measures for seats in Parliament.

The evidence is that women only make up 11% of Parliament. So let's look at it from a substantive equality point of view. What do we need to do to achieve that outcome? It's temporary special measures.

We know that women only, just a random example, scholarships. For a long time, women were not getting scholarships. We lobbied so hard to ensure that women got 50% scholarships. But we based it on evidence. We presented the data that said women only get 15% of scholarships. I'm talking about 30 years ago, not about now.

Therefore, we have the evidence to justify the policy change or the legal change. TSMs must only be done in the context of evidence. If we know that indigenous Fijians only make up 20% of the labor market because they don't have access to TVET education and training, then if that blueprint was a terrible word to use because it got people so emotional.

If it had been presented based on evidence-based data, you could have sold that concept to the Fiji community. But when it's done in an emotional way, without starting from data, that's when people start to get emotive and think it's racist and so on. That is why we've never been accused of discrimination against men, I don't think ever in the 40 years, because we've been able to show this is the evidence and this is the outcome we want. So, it's a fairly safe thing if you can ground it in data.

The point about the conflicting opinions, the ones about you will go out and you will hear people saying and I did it in the Family Law Act when we were going around you should remove sex and gender and sexual orientation and marital status contributes to the breakdowns of family and women get two up themselves and they want to leave their husbands, you'll hear a lot of it. But if you say to them, where is your data? Where is the information that justifies your submission? You will probably get a response that says, well, we think that this is what's happening.

We feel this way. Say for example, let's tackle this thorny subject of the BLV. The BLV came to you and said we want you to remove sex and gender from the constitution. It's at a very abstract emotional level. But I guarantee that if you said to the chair or one of the chiefs who was making the submission you understand, sir, that that means that your daughter may not be able to apply for a promotion. Or if she does apply and doesn't get it and she knows it's because she's a woman, there's nothing that she can do about it.

That's a very practical question you're putting to them. They may give you an entirely different response because they're giving a submission to you at the level of abstraction. They're not thinking about what it means in practicalities. Probably most lawyers understand that, what it means in practice. But most non-lawyers don't, actually. Unless you're very familiar with discrimination law. I can't believe, for example, that a female chief that sits in the GCC would say, actually, you should discriminate against me. And by removing sex and gender, it will allow this institution to discriminate against me and deny me a seat on the GCC. So, when you're looking at it from a practical perspective, even those people who've made that submission might offer you a different answer.

So, I would suggest that when you go around the community, the country, ask them what do they think it means. Do you agree that women should be discriminated against? Would you like your wife to apply for a promotion? You will get a different answer. Because they're being forced to think, not in abstract terms, but in terms of how it affects them. I'm sorry, I'm losing my voice from last week. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Imrana. I believe there's no other comments from the other commissioners. Just to round off this session, there are a number of matters that you have raised. First and foremost, I see that you are great fans of the 1997 Constitution.

So, we have also got our commissioners who have been referring to the 1997 Constitution. So, your submissions on that this afternoon is of great help. Secondly, the role of the military.

We are awaiting the military to come in and make their submissions, and then we will gauge how we can deal with them. The immunity, you would know that the BLV or the GCC, they are not in favor of having that mutiny provision in the 2013 Constitution. Now, having said that, and with the GCC having said that, we heard from Judge Temo, the Chief Justice, that the opinion given the Solicitor General in the Supreme Court, it was given after careful consideration of the repercussions if immunity was to be taken away.

The way he put it was, do you want to move forward or do you want to have problems? So that is an issue that your commissioners will be dealing with. It's a delicate one. It's a delicate issue.

The FICAC, we heard you on that, and the last but not least, Section 65C, Section 6, Subsection 5, and Paragraph C by Ms. Nabalarua, the limitation of rights. I thought that Dr. Fatiaki going to address you on that. We have heard people complaining about rights. Rights are given to us on the one hand, and then the right hand is used to limit the rights. So, we might as well say we don't have any rights at all. Those have been considered and we thank you very much this afternoon. I believe I should bring that to an end.

Ms. Adashni: Commissioner, just a point of clarity. Our submission was on removing immunity from moving onwards. Past immunity is obviously practically a very impractical thing to do, so ours is moving forward. That was just a point of clarity from us. Apologies for the interruption.

Dr. Fatiaki: Just in the way of a clarification, my comments on all the issue of rights has to do with every single right is a single one-liner, and that's subsequently sometimes they'll have a two or three if it's, for instance, right to employment. But after that there's a basket of seven or eight qualifiers, and it's obviously been written for the specific purpose to make your right meaningless, because the first one, if you were to read every instance in which they could enact a law to limit that right that they just gave you, it encompasses everything. I mean, it's not just emergencies, it's public health, it's public health, it's everything.

You could fit it in there, and my complaint about it, I mean, I didn't have that as my task work. I mean that Ami Kohli other lawyer and he was to look at the Bill of Rights, and when he asked my opinion, I said remove all the qualifiers and keep them one-liners. And then if there's a dispute about limiting your right, then they can go to court and the courts can decide that.

But when you say a right and then follow that with seven lines about all the instances when that right can be limited, just in the way of clarification.

Secondly, in defense of the GCC, I'm not sure that they actually said anything about sex. I think they had an issue with gender. I didn't raise it because it's obviously, and I guess as an advocacy group that started as a Fijian women's right movement, I wondered when you included the gender component to it, whether you did yourselves any service by so doing, because, you know, one of the arguments that they gave was, you know, exactly what is the gender in 73 or 72 at last count. How does that, I don't think anyone's going to argue about whether a woman and a man should have basic rights. When you start extending it to the prediction, I take that point. Likewise, you know, the prediction of minorities and that. They were concerned with that. And I think in fairness to them, I don't think they said anything about removing sex.

Dr. Gounder: I think, sexual orientation, sorry.

Dr. Fatiaki: Yeah, it was, I know that they talked about the gender part of it and the question of how do you define it and that part of it. And thank you.

Mr. Beg: No, just a point on practice of, you know, the practicality of all these things that we discuss, you know, and the point about TVET. I'm pleased to say that in our office, we have 55% females and 45% men. So, it starts really in the workplace down there as a model. So, in the space that you Ms. Imrana has brought up, I think it's great, you know, to see more of that. And if that could be a whole meal on practices like us, we're now considering that because we don't see people as male and female. We see them as equal. So, I just wanted to finish with those words. Thanks.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ladies, I cannot thank you enough. Thank you very much indeed. That brings us to the end of our consultation session this afternoon. If I may, have a good weekend.

40 YEARS OF BALANCING THE SCALES
FIJI WOMEN'S RIGHTS MOVEMENT
1986 - 2026

Fiji Women's Rights Movement (FWRM)

Submission on the Review of the 2013 Constitution of Fiji

Introduction

For forty years, the Fiji Women's Rights Movement (FWRM) has worked to advance women's human rights in Fiji based on the principles of democracy, feminism, human rights, constitutionalism, and the rule of law. Throughout this time, FWRM has remained independent of political parties and governments and have consistently opposed coups and unconstitutional transfers of power. FWRM's work has centred on ensuring that governments uphold their obligations to women and girls, who make up half the population of Fiji.

FWRM has contributed significantly to legal reform, public policy, feminist leadership, and regional movement building. We have supported campaigns that contributed to reforms in rape laws, women's citizenship rights, family law, workplace protections, and anti-discrimination protections. We advocated for equal rights provisions in the 1997 Constitution, including protections against discrimination on the basis of sex, gender, and sexual orientation. We played a central role in the 12-year campaign leading to the Family Law Act 2005 and contributed to national discussions on sexual harassment, women's labour rights, and women's representation in leadership.

FWRM has consistently engaged with Fiji's obligations under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), including through independent reporting and monitoring. We have also contributed to building feminist leadership in Fiji and across the Pacific through mentorship, youth leadership, intergenerational organising, and regional coalition building.

This submission is therefore not only about constitutional law. It is about protecting democratic governance, strengthening accountability, safeguarding human rights, and ensuring that future generations inherit a constitutional framework that is inclusive, just, and worth defending.

1. International Human Rights Law Must Be Binding in Constitutional Interpretation

s. 7(1) b.

The 1997 Constitution required courts and tribunals to apply international human rights law when interpreting the Bill of Rights. This reflected Fiji's commitment to international treaties, including CEDAW, and ensured that constitutional rights were interpreted consistently with international human rights standards.

The 2013 Constitution weakened this protection by changing the requirement from "must" to "may," making the application of international human rights law discretionary rather than mandatory.

This change undermines Fiji's obligations under international law and weakens legal protections for women and marginalized groups. International human rights treaties should not be treated as optional guidance but as binding commitments.

We recommend restoring the mandatory obligation for courts and tribunals to apply international human rights law in constitutional interpretation.

2. Limitations on Rights Must Be Reasonable and Justifiable in a Free and Democratic Society

Bill of Rights (BoR) S6.(5) c.
Limitations on Rights and Freedoms S.174(3)

The 2013 Constitution permits limitations on rights where considered "necessary" and includes provisions that restrict judicial review of certain laws and actions.

This significantly weakens constitutional protections and reduces the ability of citizens to challenge unjust limitations on rights. The standard contained in the 1997 Constitution — that limitations must be "reasonably justifiable in a free and democratic society" — is a well-established constitutional standard that requires evidence, proportionality, and accountability.

Courts must retain full jurisdiction to review all laws and government actions affecting constitutional rights. Ouster clauses and provisions limiting judicial oversight undermine the rule of law and democratic accountability.

We recommend restoring the 1997 constitutional standard and removing all provisions that prevent courts from reviewing laws or government actions.

3. Equality and Protection Against Discrimination Must Be Retained and Strengthened

s. 26

As of 2017, 85% of constitutions globally explicitly guarantee equal rights or prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex and/or gender, including Fiji (World Policy Centre).

The current constitutional prohibition against discrimination on the basis of sex, gender, and sexual orientation represents a major achievement in Fiji's constitutional history. These protections were secured through years of advocacy and remain essential for substantive equality.

Removing these protections would expose women and marginalized groups to discrimination across employment, wages, political participation, housing, education, inheritance, access to finance, family law, and public life.

The Constitution must continue to explicitly prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, and other protected grounds.

Temporary Special Measures and Gender Quotas

Women continue to face historical and systemic barriers to equal participation in political and public life. Despite constitutional guarantees of equality, women remain significantly underrepresented in Parliament, public bodies, corporate leadership, and decision-making spaces.

Temporary Special Measures (TSMs), including gender quotas, are internationally recognized mechanisms for achieving substantive equality and correcting historical disadvantage.

The Constitution should explicitly permit affirmative action measures and enable legislation establishing minimum quotas for women in Parliament, public boards, commissions, statutory bodies, and leadership positions. These measures are not discriminatory against men; rather, they are necessary tools for achieving a level playing field.

4. Public Interest Litigation and Legal Standing Must Be Expanded

Section 44 of the 2013 Constitution limits constitutional litigation primarily to individuals directly affected by rights violations. This creates serious barriers to justice for vulnerable groups who may be unable to pursue legal action due to poverty, fear, stigma, geographic isolation, or fear of retaliation.

Civil society organizations (CSO's) and non-governmental organizations (NGO's) play a critical role in supporting victims, advocating for vulnerable communities, and holding institutions accountable.

The Constitution should be amended to explicitly allow NGOs and CSOs to bring constitutional and human rights cases in the public interest on behalf of affected individuals and groups. Access to justice should not depend solely on an individual's ability to litigate alone.

5. Separation of Powers Must Be Strengthened

The separation of powers between the executive, legislature, and judiciary is fundamental to constitutional democracy and the rule of law.

The 2013 Constitution concentrates excessive authority within the executive branch, particularly through the office of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General currently exercises influence across multiple institutions and constitutional processes, weakening institutional independence and accountability. The role of the Attorney-General should be clearly limited to avoid overlap between political, legal, and executive functions.

The constitutional role of the President should also be clarified as ceremonial, acting only on the advice of a lawfully elected government. Clear constitutional separation between institutions is necessary to prevent concentration of power and maintain public confidence in democratic governance.

6. Strengthening the Fiji Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission

s. 45

The Fiji Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission plays an important role in promoting and protecting human rights. However, the constitutional framework limits the Commission's powers and independence.

The Constitution should:

- Explicitly authorize the Commission to make recommendations not only to government, but also to tribunals, statutory bodies, private sector institutions, and other entities. (as it did under the 1997 Constitution)
- Empower the Commission to monitor compliance with its recommendations.
- Permit civil society organizations to file complaints and trigger investigations on behalf of vulnerable groups.
- Require the Commission to report directly to Parliament rather than the executive branch in order to strengthen its independence and accountability. Currently, section 45 is silent on who the Commission reports but references the Human Rights Commission Act 2009 to articulate this. The Act states that the Commission reports to the President in Section 44 (1) and must submit a copy to the Prime Minister.

An effective national human rights institution must be independent, adequately empowered, and accessible.

s. 131 (2)

The military should not function as a political or governance institution. The inclusion of broad language relating to the "well-being of all Fijians" in the constitutional mandate of the Republic of Fiji Military Forces creates ambiguity and risks legitimizing military involvement in civilian governance.

The Constitution should explicitly state that the military is at all times subordinate to civilian authority and limited to external defence, disaster response, and functions authorized under law.

We recommend including a clear constitutional clause affirming that the military is subject to the direction and control of the civilian government at all times. We recommend that Section 131 (2) should contain an explicit clause that: "The RFMF is at all times subject to the direction and control of the civilian government."

8. Immunity Provisions Must Not Be Repeated

The immunity provisions relating to the 2006 coup undermine accountability and the rule of law. While historical events cannot be reversed, constitutional frameworks must not entrench impunity or create precedents for future unconstitutional actions.

No future constitution should permit immunity for the overthrow of democratic government. Accountability is essential for constitutional legitimacy, democratic stability, and public trust.

9. Anti-Corruption Institutions Must Be Independent and Non-Political Corruption must be addressed through independent and impartial institutions. Concerns have been raised regarding the politicization of anti-corruption mechanisms and selective enforcement. Anti-corruption processes must be insulated from political influence and operate transparently and independently.

We recommend that corruption prosecutions be returned to the authority of the independent Director of Public Prosecutions, rather than being exercised through a separate entity vulnerable to political misuse.

10. Judicial Independence Must Be Fully Protected

s.107(2); s.114(3); s.120 (2)

Judicial independence is essential to the rule of law. The 2013 Constitution requires consultation with the Attorney-General in judicial and tribunal appointments, creating a perception of executive influence over judicial processes. The involvement of political office holders in judicial appointments and removals undermines public confidence in judicial independence.

The Constitution should restore the model contained in the 1997 Constitution, where judicial appointments and removals were managed through an independent Judicial Services Commission without involvement from the Attorney-General. Judges and magistrates must be protected from both actual and perceived political interference.

Conclusion

This submission is not simply a technical legal analysis. It is a call to restore democratic constitutionalism, strengthen accountability, and protect the rights and freedoms of all people in Fiji.

We submit that Fiji's constitutional future must be grounded in the following principles:

- Human rights must be real, enforceable, and justiciable.
- International human rights obligations, including CEDAW, must be binding.
- Courts must retain full jurisdiction to review constitutional violations.
- The military must remain subordinate to civilian authority.

Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC)

Fiji Trade Union Congress
Date: 20-04-2026
Time: 10.05am-12.00pm

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, Mr. Anthony, Ms. Jyotika, good morning to you both. After my opening, we will be giving you the time to make your submissions to the commission. So as of now, I want to welcome you. Thank you very much for turning up here this morning. I believe the invitation has come across. And we appreciate your acceptance of the invitation to come and be part of this important exercise in the review of the 2013 Constitution.

In front of you, you have four commissioners. There are seven commissioners in total. We've got four here and three are not with us this morning. One is in Australia, I believe. Having said that, we welcome you. I'm sure you would know the commissioners sitting here, if not all, some of us.

Mr. Beg is on my far right, Dr. Fatiaki is closest to me, and Dr. Nilesh Gounder on my left. And I'm Sevuloni Valenitabua, the chairman of the commission. Our task is just to collect submissions, thoughts, views from our citizens, from our people.

Views and submissions which we may use in the Constitution. It is up to you whether you can suggest or whether you want to suggest this should go into the Constitution. This part of our submission should go into the Constitution.

We believe that this provision in the Constitution should be changed or should be removed completely. We are here to listen and to record what you want to tell us. If you have written submissions, so much the better.

If you don't have your written submissions here this morning, we ask that when you return to your office, you can then have a written submission prepared and sent to us. Now with those few words, we welcome you again, and we now give you the mics for you to use to address us. Thank you.

Mr. Felix: Thank you, Chair and Honorable Commissioners. We recognize the huge task that you have before you. When it comes to the Constitution of Fiji and the work that needs to be done to ensure that people's voices are heard and taken into account when the review is carried out.

Let me on the outset try and encourage the Commissioners to also revisit the submissions that were made to the Yash Gai Commission on the Constitution. I think there was a fairly widespread views that were stated at the time, which we still believe may be relevant today. And more particularly in relation to ensuring that we have true democracy in this country.

And so, I will start with that, but let me then go on. What we have done, Chair, is that we have just made some dot points, but we take your point that we can then write in and give a full submission to you. Chair, on the current Constitution that we have, there are certain areas of concern that we have, which we will highlight to you and see how we can better this Constitution moving forward.

We will refer to Chapter 5 of the current Constitution that deals with national identity. I think that's the first bit. And we will support a clear common identity for all Fiji citizens.

These identities must not be based on race or traditions or customs. They can be dealt with otherwise. So, we submit that we retain that provision that is in the current Constitution. It's Section 5, I think. Yeah.

I will move on, Chair, to the Bill of Rights. It's quite comprehensive in the current Constitution. What we see is that while we support the Bill of Rights, what concerns us is that there is a widespread exception being given, the huge extent of exceptions that are given in the Bill of Rights. That makes it discretionary on part of government whether to actually give those rights or those rights can be exercised.

And I will just give you a couple of examples why we say that. You will recall with the previous government, we made about eight or nine applications for a march in Suva, freedom of assembly, and all those rights were denied. All those applications were denied and we were not free to march.

No reasons were given. So, if we were to look at the freedom of assembly, which is Section 18 of the current Constitution, the rights are there, stated. But then you have this law may be limited or may authorize limitation of rights mentioned.

Then you have A to F, which basically gives the government discretion to say, we will deny you those rights. And this is not what, you know, if it's a right, it should be a right and it should be exercisable, not being denied for no reason. And of course, the more recent, just last weekend when we had some people unhappy about the new incinerator being put in Vuda, they applied for a march. And they were denied without reason, without reason as to why that was denied. That is not what a democratic society should look like. The other reason I give is freedom of speech.

I think we've learned quite a number of lessons from how the previous government worked under this Constitution. Freedom of expression. I personally spoke on behalf of 2,000 workers who were summarily terminated by WAF in 2019. I was locked up and I was charged for causing anxiety. Yeah, that was the charge. I caused anxiety because I spoke up for those terminated workers under the freedom of speech.

Now, how does that work in a democracy? When we talk freedom of speech, we must give that freedom to people. Of course, the responsibility is that we speak responsibly and not make false allegations. But those were the examples I thought I'd give you to understand why we say that all the exceptions in the Bill of Rights in the Constitution needs to be seriously looked at.

And it should not be discretionary on part of government to interpret that and deny people those rights. I think that is very important in any democracy. Government can disagree with the views of the people in some cases, but that does not justify the denial of those rights.

So, that's the point that we're trying to make is freedom and freedom of association as well. We have the same issue on workers being entitled to join trade unions for that matter. And we face a lot of opposition from employers in this regard.

And again, there is no real recourse to that in the Constitution itself other than saying you have the freedom of association except ABCDEF. So, that's on section 19, is it? Freedom of association, but then you have all these limitations again. So, I want to point that out.

Then we go on to section 24, subsection 4 on employment relations. We have trade unions and employers have the right to collectively bargain. We have this right.

But on the other hand, the government imposes individual contracts on people. That is in direct contradiction to the right to collective bargaining.

If a worker decides to say I want to join a union to collectively bargain, that is a right he must be given.
But then you have government going to impose individual contracts where that right is taken away. The worker has no right to negotiate or bargain for an individual contract. He basically signs on to what is given. If he wants the job, he signs on. If he doesn't want the job, he doesn't sign on. That's how it works.

So, again, you know, we've got those limitations there in five. In the interest of national security, public safety, public order, blah. It goes on to F again. So, on one hand you give these rights, on the other hand you take it away. Make the constitution look good. That's all it does.

But those rights don't seriously exist on the ground. Then on section 23 of the constitution again, political rights. And if you look at section 23, it talks about every citizen has the freedom to form joint political parties. It goes on. Except those citizens, this may limit if, for the purpose of this relating who are not eligible to contest or place parliament office or political set. These are office holders, right? Public office holders.

Right. And then when we go further back in the constitution, the unions, the trade unions are classified as public office holders. Yeah. And if I can, if I can just section 57, if we went on to section 57 of the constitution in comparison to that. And if we looked at the sub-section, section 57, 3F, G and H, any trade union official, yeah, office of registered trade union or any federation, congress, which means the Fiji Trade Union Congress, if I'm an officer of the FTUC or I'm affiliated to any or such organization, I cannot partake in the political life of this country. I'm excluded.

I don't, my rights are taken away. Right. And that is in contradiction to the previous section 23 of the constitution itself. Let me just say the trade unions is, it's not a public office. It's not funded by government or the taxpayers of this country. Trade unions are membership-based organizations and it's the membership that pays. It's similar to a social club, for instance. The defense club or whatever. You pay to become a member of that club.

So, it's not a public office as such. It's a membership-based organization and should never be classified as a public office. And more so not the officers or workers employed by the trade unions must never be classified as public officers and be denied their political rights. There's simply no justification for that other than trying to shut up the unions in this country. That we can't talk about anything that's politics.

Right. And the fact is that anything in the political arena, everything in the political arena affects workers in this country. It affects workers.

It affects in all their terms and conditions of employment. Like for instance we just, a while ago we were talking to the ministry of finance about minimum wage.

That has to be a political decision that has to be taken at some level. And even in parliament. Why are we not given that right to speak about these issues openly? So, we say that that should be totally removed. In fact, it was never there prior to this constitution itself. Yeah. It was never there.

This is the first time that we've seen this has come in. And this was an effort by the previous government to shut up the trade unions in this country. So, we urge the committee to have a serious look at that.

Then we go to section 33 of the constitution. Which talks about the right to work and adjust minimum wage. Again, I mean if we were to read this, this is not being complied with currently.

What is a just minimum wage? A just minimum wage is a living wage. That's what it is. That people don't live below the poverty line. That they live, you know, with some dignity and respect. But we have total wrong compliance with that. And every time that a decision is made on the minimum wage, it has to be a political decision rather than ensuring that it's just.

And just to who? Just to the workers of this country. But that right, not only that. That the state must ensure reasonable measures are taken within its available resources to achieve a progressive realization of right of every person to work and to adjust minimum wage.

That's what it says. And if the state can't do that, in number two it says, the state must show that they don't have the resources available. We don't have that here. It's never been complied with. So, we need to ensure that this provision is made a bit stronger to ensure that people listen. It says the state must.

It doesn't say may. It says must. And we've pointed this out to the Minister of Finance this morning as well. That they need to comply with this provision. And we don't see compliance with that today in this country. We have a $5 minimum wage in this country, Chair, which is well below the poverty line.

We believe that the poverty line is much closer to $8 an hour in this country today. So, the $5 minimum wage cannot be said to be just to the worker. It's not just to the worker.

Chair, we'll move on to Section 53 of the Constitution. Section 53 of the Constitution. This is to do with our electoral system.

I think this entire Part B on the composition of Parliament and all that. We submit, Chair, that we ought to revert back to the previous electoral system that we had in the country. And that is by constituencies.

And that we make our members of Parliament accountable to the people that elect them. Unlike now, there is absolutely no accountability. We have people in Parliament with, you know, very little number of votes.

But they ride on the popularity of the leader of the party. Yeah? And that does not make them accountable to the people that actually vote for them. Yeah? I myself have been a member of Parliament before.

And we fought elections based on constituencies where we had our own areas that we were responsible for. And we were answerable to those people. We were made responsible to ensure we delivered for the people who actually voted for us.

That is not the case anymore. Yeah? And it doesn't give any credence to have members of Parliament who sit there with 500 votes or 600 votes. Yeah? We in the trade unions get more votes than they do.

But they are elected to Parliament and they are supposedly representing us in Parliament. Right? So, we need to seriously reconsider the current electoral system that we have. Because we believe that the previous system made members of Parliament accountable to the people who actually elected them.

The second part of that is that we also believe, from experience that we saw with the previous Parliament, is that we need to reinstate the Senate in the electoral system as a check to what the lower house does. And I was also a member of the Senate as well in the past. And this is something that I think also made government more accountable itself.

That they were aware that there'd be a second layer of review of whatever is passed in the lower house of Parliament. If we were to look at the experiences of the previous government, Section 51 was used to just, you know, hammer through any piece of legislation that they wanted. Total disregard for the opposition. Total disregard for what the people wanted. You know, they had absolute power. Whichever party has the majority had absolute power.

All they had to do was make sure their members were sitting in the house on the day of the vote. That's all. And that is not what a democracy ought to be. That is not what the people expect. The people expect their voices to be heard. And that there'd be checks and balances along the way when this is done.

And the Senate provided that. And there was no assurance in the Senate that they would always support government in its legislation. And when I was there, I think there were the number of times where we returned the bill back to the lower house for reconsideration or amendments.

And that was the check and balance that we had. So, you don't have this Section 51 where you can just hammer through anything you want in Parliament. So, we will submit that the committee seriously, commission seriously considers that as well.

Okay, I'll move on to Section 56, G and H, Chair. Yeah, this is to do with candidates for elections in Parliament. The current provision said that if you had a conviction, you can't stand for elections for eight years.

We don't believe that this is fair in any regard. I think that the eight years provision is too long. And I think we need to have a real look at that provision as well.

You know, this unfairly actually, you know, even for minor offenses where the jail term is more than a year, you can be disqualified for standing for elections. And we've seen some real experiences in this regard where people get booked for driving offenses or things like that where the jail term is a year or more. Even though they were, you know, given lesser punishment, they were disqualified from standing for elections.

We don't believe that that is fair. We can understand if there were some serious convictions, you know, for fraud, then those exceptions should stand. But not for minor offenses, despite, you know, jail terms are normally, you know, one year or more.So, everyone gets caught in that. So, we'd want the committee to have a look at that.

Chair, we move on to Section 81 of the Constitution. And this has to do with, I think, the position of the President. Yes, 81, to do with the President. We submit, Chair, that the position of the President should be an elected one and not one appointed by the government of the day as it is now. It's a formality, I think, in Parliament that you put up a name. The name that the government puts will automatically win in Parliament and becomes the government's nominee and he becomes the President. And of course, whatever the government passes in Parliament, he becomes the rubber stamp in the process.

So, what we're saying is that the President must be independent and also that in his own right, he has the right to either sign off a piece of legislation or to refuse to sign it. And not only that, but there is an element of accountability in that position as well and should be an element of accountability in that position. That's something that we believe is important and more so with our history of this country where we've had all the coups.

And we've had Presidents who were in positions who actually were not in a position to do much to try and save democracy in this country as well. So, I think we need to submit that we need to seriously have a look at this and ensure that the office of the President is given some teeth and just not a position that, you know.

Chair, we will move on to Section 120. That's to do with the Public Service Disciplinary Tribunal. 120, this is the Public Service Disciplinary Tribunal. We believe that this is a provision that's an employment matter and it ought to be tripartite.

We agree that there ought to be a judge that chairs this as the government nominee, but what we propose is that it should be tripartite. There should be an employee representative on that tribunal as well since it's an employment issue and it has to do with discipline within the civil service as well.

Chair, we move on to Section 127. This is to do with the position of permanent secretaries. Chair, this is something that again an employment issue that we would like to submit is that previously the Public Service Commission dealt with all recruitments, all industrial relations matters within government itself. This was divested to individual ministries by the previous government where the permanent secretary actually took charge and made decisions in their ministries alone including all industrial relations matters.

And so, this meant every ministry has to have a human resource manager and his subordinates as well. So, we believe that there's a duplication. This case poses a duplication across all the ministries.

Quite apart from that the inconsistencies in decision making when it came to discipline and appointments and promotions and all that. And what we're suggesting is that we revert back to the old system where it's centralized and for the sake of consistency to adhering to policies and appointments and transfers, promotions and so forth. And not only that but for salaries and other benefits as well.

So, currently this constitution, this provision gives those powers to the individual permanent secretaries in each of these ministries. If you were to look at 127 at number 8, subsection 8, A, B, C and D that's where what I'm actually talking about there. Section 131 chair, there's been considerable debate on this issue more recently and in the past as well and there are various interpretations when it came to section 131-2 which means it shall be the overall responsibility of the Republic of the Fiji military forces to ensure at all times security, defense and well- being of the people of Fiji.

And this is one provision that's caused much debate in the country, continues to do so and we believe that there needs to be more clarity in this provision as to what is meant by overall responsibility. Does this mean that they can take over the role of government and replace government in doing so or would they be subject to civil authority or a civil government? This provision needs to be clarified and we believe that any military forces must report to a civilian government. That's how it would work in a normal democracy.

We don't know of any democracy where the military takes over. And there's one interpretation here is that if the military does take over it would be quite legal for them to do so because the constitution allows them to do so. So, we won't have any more illegal coups in this country.

It will be all legal. That's one interpretation that we've been told. So, every day we get a new version of it but we believe that this is a critical one and needs clarity.

Normally the military would report to the Minister of Home Affairs. That's been the normal thing. And we believe that should be made and be accountable to the government of the day.

We move on to section 138. We are talking about the human more particularly while all those other organizations are there. We are particularly concerned about the Human Rights Commission and Anti-Discrimination Commission.

Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission. We believe that this commission must be entirely independent. We haven't seen much of that independence of this commission in the past and I think we need to have further provisions within the constitution that actually gives them that power and remain independent and not be subject to government directives.

And we haven't seen the Human Rights Commission defending human rights in this country under the previous government as well even though this is their constitution. So, I think there is room for improvement in that area and this is a very important organization. If we are to ensure democracy in this country, real true democracy by the people, this commission I think plays a very critical role and should play a critical role.

I move on to section 146 chair. It talks about public monies be accounted for. This provision while we agree that all public monies must be accounted for, it doesn't say by when.

There is no time frames in this. Often, we hear in parliament of annual reports being submitted some years later. You know four or five years later even more. And by the time it is submitted to parliament for examination it becomes irrelevant. It's too old. It's gone.

We believe that there must be a time frame where all government owned enterprises and public officers must be given a deadline to say within six months of the year ending that the reports must be submitted to parliament for examination. Something like that. Not five or six years later.

No one is interested in those reports after five or six years. They become irrelevant. So, the accountability aspect of that lapses. So, we believe that something must be done to ensure that reports are submitted on time. And this is more so when it comes to even municipal councils where the reports are years old and submitted. Chair we move to 156 This has to do with immunities.

Again, I am sure that there has been much talk about this one as well. This provision merely actually encourages future schools knowing that you know there will be immunities given. Immunities given for all three before. All two before. Anyone doing the same thing in the future will also be given the same immunity and sends a very wrong signal to people. Again, we must do away.

There must be zero tolerance for any military coups in this country. Period. And the constitution must say that. No one can come and throw this constitution out just like that because it suits them. And I think we need to make that very clear. And we are not doing that with the immunities clause in the constitution.

This only encourages someone else who thinks we will get away with immunity again. Sir if we can go to section 150.- freedom of information. Again, we have noted that there has been non-compliance with this provision. There has been a bill in parliament I understand on freedom of information but it is languishing there for some reason or the other.

Again, I think this is very important. And Chief I may submit that all these provisions that the commission looks at the provisions of this constitution with a view to strengthening democracy, accountability and transparency within the government itself, the public officers and all the other statutory bodies that we have. That must be the overall view of the commission to ensure that we live by the principles of democracy and true democracy, not half democracy.

And we state that elections itself does not qualify Fiji to be a democracy. There is more to democracy than just elections. Chair we will stop there. I think that those were the observations we made from the constitution but we are happy to put all that in writing in way of submissions to the commission at a later date.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much Mr. Anthony. It is a very good submission from you this morning having to go through those provisions of the constitution one by one and giving your views in relation to them and what can be done in order to improve the provisions.

Dealing with rights, we have heard a lot about the limitations, the qualifications. Like you said, leave a right on your right hand and remove it with your left hand. Eventually we have no rights whatsoever.

We usually ask questions to persons who appear before us to make submissions. I am now going to ask my colleagues, fellow commissioners whether they have any comments to make or any questions to ask. So we will be asking questions from the commissioners.

Mr. Felix: Happy to answer sir.

Mr. Beg: I suppose I have been tasked with the first question. Thank you very much. Very enlightening perspective. I made a few notes. One of it is in review of the constitution. I was tasked with chapter 6, quite interesting, the state service commission. You make some very compelling arguments and also the rest of it but I will just focus on one which you make a point about centralization of the state service. I would like you to clarify that because when you say centralization, it could mean, are you saying it is with PSC or with government or do you want that independent? I wasn't too sure how you were framing that.

That is just a question and I am sure I have others as well but if you can enlighten me, please.

Mr. Felix: Thank you for that question. Chair, if I may.

Mr. Valenitabua: Please, carry on. Yes, in the past all industrial relations matters, human resource matters were dealt with the public service commission. There was one central HR body at the PSC that actually dealt with it across all ministries.

What happened with this change, this constitution, each ministry then had to have their own human resource departments to deal with any issues that arose, both human resource, industrial, everything. So, what I am saying is this duplicate this whole thing in all departments and what we see is the inconsistencies that arise because different departments, different ministries would have their different standards, different policies and this causes a bit of a problem for consistency. What we are saying is we should revert back to the public service commission and have a centralized human resource department that can be consistent and deal with all human resource matters altogether and so we avoid duplication. Thank you. It might save government some money as well.

Mr. Beg: Through you Chair, thank you Mr. Anthony. In that response are you saying that in back to the PSC it needs to be independent as well, so any negotiations, you talked about salary, contract agreement, how does it fit in the framework because it's interesting how you framed it but I was trying to understand it a bit more from the trade union perspective in your instruments of how you operate.

Mr. Felix: Thank you. Yes, in the past where we had any issues regarding workers, for instance like you say wage negotiations or any terms and conditions, the unions would deal with the PSC directly, that's it, one stop.

We would not have to go to different ministries and talk to another 10 or 15 ministries on the same subject. So, everything was centralized and the PSC was independent, yes, and it actually made decisions of course. They had a chairman and their own board, how they sort of work and they would make one decision that would apply across the board.

So, it was also easier for trade unions to deal with government when it came to wage or working conditions or any of these issues. Thank you very much.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Commissioner Beg. Thank you Mr. Anthony for your submission you have taken us in a chronical order from first page to last page. Thank you very much for that. My question is similar to what Mr. Begg mentioned, the centralized system which is section 127.

So, I'm just, I just want to ask how will it work in practice for example the appointments or how it used to be in the past. My apologies for not knowing the previous system. This afternoon I will be in a panel in one of the ministries for an appointments committee meeting.

So, this is organized by the ministry where they have two people from the ministry and a third from an external member which is IAM. So, if this is centralized how will the system work in contrast to what is happening now?

Mr. Felix: If it's centralized then the PSC will actually carry out the process of recruitment. They would advertise, they have the MQRs whatever and they would then conduct the interviews and make appointments.

That's how it used to work before. Those powers were never given to the permanent secretaries to make appointments. So, the ministry may well say this is what we need, these are the MQRs and you know the PSC would then act on that and do that.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. And will we need to then relook at any part of the Employment Relations Act if these changes are made here? It would not affect the Employment Relations Act if these changes were made, no.

Mr. Felix: The Employment Relations Act mainly just covers the minimum conditions and the process that needs to be followed but that was done quite well with the PSC before.

I don't quite understand why they actually changed it to individual ministries.

Dr. Gounder: I take your point about the cost issue when it comes to having an HR section within every ministry. Centralization would actually help.

Mr. Felix: I think consistency is also very important when it comes to implementing policies and you don't have different ministries having their own policies, different standards. I think it's important that there's one rule that should cover across all ministries. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Something interesting, section 57. Candidates who are public officers. It talks about a person who holds a public office, right? Then, subsection 3, for the purpose of this section, public office means any office in a trade union registered under the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007. It might be the Act now, Employment Relations Act. So, any office in a trade union registered under that Act.

If we go to section 163, this is the definition or interpretation section of the Constitution. Section 163, right at the back, is the interpretation section of the Constitution. Public office is again interpreted there and it says office created by or continued in existence under this Constitution, an office in respect of which the Constitution makes provision, an office of a member of a commission.

Do you see that? An office in a state service, an office of a judge, an office of a magistrate or an office in a court created by written law, an office in or as a member of a statutory authority, or an office established by written law. Do you see a trade union?

Mr. Felix: Written law. Written law.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, that is under the Promulgation Act.

Mr. Felix: The office of a trade union officer is under the Employment Relations Act. I see. Yeah. And before, under the Ministry of Labour, we report to the Registrar of the Trade Union.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, that last one there, an office established by written law covers the trade unions. Thank you.

Mr. Felix: Section 56 is also very clear in what it says. In fact, if you were to read section 56, no, I'm sorry, 57 G and H. If you look at G and H, it talks about even any person who receives remuneration salary allowances, which means my gardener also can't take part in politics because he's been paid. You, see? If you look at G. So, you know, that we say is just, yeah.

Mr. Valenitabua: You mentioned that Section 81 has got to be modified or changed. This is the provisions we deal with the President of the Republic of Fiji.

And you stated that he has to be elected. Could you please enlighten us further on how that election is to proceed?

Mr. Felix: It will have to be, excuse me, it will have to be a national election. Where he is elected nationally by the people. Yeah. One man, one vote. And, you know, if there's a contender, then there's a contest. But I believe the people should elect and not the government of the day. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Chairman, through you. In saying that, Mr. Anthony, just because you're saying it's elected process, then there's some constitutional powers. As you're saying previously or currently, powers of non-existent.

So, if we're going through an elected process, as you said earlier on in your presentation, that there'd be some powers for the President to review any instruments before him or her, and the right to refuse or provide recommendations back, either back to the government or those who are providing advice back to the President. Is that the line of thinking?

Mr. Felix: See, the current system makes the President subservient to the government. I put it in simple terms. And I'll give you an example. When the government imposed in this country the essential industries decree, which basically took away the powers of the trade unions, took away the powers of the workers, and the workers were not even allowed to raise any grievance unless the claim exceeded $5 million, the President signed on to that legislation.

And that was not in keeping with the Constitution, the Bill of Rights. But the President signed because he's an appointee of the government. It doesn't give... He can't stand up on his own and say, I'm sorry, I refuse to sign this, because it's not in keeping with the Constitution of the day. It's not in keeping with democratic principles. He doesn't have that power. Because if he were to stand up, he won't be President for too long. Right? Let's face it. Right? But an election would give him that legitimacy to say, no, this is in contravention of the Constitution. We can't go down this road. So that forces the government to behave, to make sure it follows the Constitution. Yeah? Right now, there's nothing. There's nothing.

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much.

Dr. Fatiaki: Firstly, thank you, Felix and Vika, for the presentation. I think you'll find that most of us are very sympathetic to the plight of workers, insofar as particularly in respect of this Constitution, which I won't accuse it, but seemed to take away a lot of the fundamental rights of workers that existed under previous Constitution bargaining rights. And obviously, we're now in the process to review this and can address some of those.

I have some general comments that touches on a number of the things that you brought up. But I'll speak to first this issue of the President. Now, I value what you suggested, but it's almost like we're going to vote for a President like the President of the United States, where the whole country votes for an individual.

The logistics of that, obviously, you know, how does it get nominated? I mean, a thousand people can put their names up to be President. Obviously, another election is a big, expensive exercise. And I guess what I'm asking is, really, is it an issue of how the President got elected, or that we've taken away his powers? Because, I mean, he might be appointed, but if we made it so that he was not subservient, then we could use the current sort of scheme by removing the necessary provisions that made him subservient, for instance.

We've had various people, for instance, get concerned about the consolidation of power in this Constitution, such as, given as an example, in this Constitution, the AG is mentioned 66 times, and he is required to be consulted for the appointment of judges, I mean, just about everything. So, if you remove that requirement, then he no longer has a role, for instance. I mention this because, obviously, the idea of everybody voting for a President is like an American system, and that is, you can see how technically difficult that would be to put into a constitution, because you're basically rewriting the entire electoral system, and how we govern.

But I think your point is taken. I think the President should be able to exercise independent decisions. And although, yes, he might be appointed by a government in power, like they currently do, it doesn't necessarily mean that once he's there, that he should be forced to concur, and that he becomes a rubber stamp.

And I think you can change that in the Constitution by giving him more powers, you know, once he's appointed. So, yes, the appointment process may be dominated by the current party that wins. That may be the case.

But once he's appointed there, maybe we should then give him the discretionary power that he doesn't have to rubber stamp everything that comes as per this Constitution. So, that's just, you know, a reflection on what we're discussing, because I think the idea of... Yes, you know, it appeals, but I think the idea of anybody being able to do that or implement it is really beyond the pale as far as practicality. But I think as we work on this basis, I see what you're asking for.

I think I agree completely with you. Just as the Senate, in your suggestion for a bicameral House, I mean, yes, senators are appointed by different political parties, but you've sat in Senate, I've sat in Senate, I can tell you very rarely does anybody vote on party lines. You know, you might be appointed by the party, but you don't need to vote on party lines.

And I think that's what we want in the president. We want someone who is independent in the sense that they can, you know, at the highest level, put a restriction or whatever it is that he might play in terms of his thoughts about a particular legislation or whatever.

I only have one other question in respect of, you know, touching upon the issue of the electoral system. You like the idea of constituencies, which I agree. I think people want to see the person they voted for, and if they know that you stood for Ba rural, you know, seat, then all the people who voted for you, you're accountable to them. I have another question, which has been raised at various consultations, including with the recent Electoral Commission.

The one thing people seem to be coming out and telling the Electoral Commission or the electoral review body that just completed its task a few months ago was they wanted it simple. You know, this Sudoku 250 numbers with no name, no picture, no party, they didn't like. And the thing that seemed to come through was this, that they liked the first-past-the-post system.

The simple, you know, very simple name, representation part of it. I just wondered whether you had a thought on that. The actual way that you vote, not the constituency part of it, not the composition of parliament, but the actual voting system.

Because right now, the one that we are using, I don't know how many people really understand it, how it works. I mean, you alluded to difficulties in terms of the representation. Obviously, it's not representative.

And I think the constituency is a good example. But how do you actually want that voting system? And that's really the question I'm asking because the first-past-the-post, we know that municipal council can still do that. It was in 1970.

I think it was in the previous elections all up until, I think, 1997 was the 2001, was on a proportional basis, proportional representation. Still constituency, but proportional, not first-past-the-post. And then the 2013 made this, I won't even try to pronounce the name.

Just for general information, I think there are only 22 countries in the world that have used some form of that system out of the world. So given there's 200, it shows how popular it is. I wouldn't, I know that people talk about representation in terms of, you know, the proportion will be much more representative.

But let me just point out that the U.S., most of the U.S., the U.K., Canada, to this day, still uses the first-past-the-post. So, you know, the idea that it's not, you know, practiced, those are some countries, and India still use that system. Your thoughts, please?

Mr. Felix: Yeah, thank you for that. Yeah, no, I'm in no way advocating the first point you made that our president ought to be something like the U.S. president. No, yeah. All I'm trying to say is that the president ought to be independent on his own, yeah, and with some legitimacy that the people have voted.

You talked about how will those voting's take place. It can take place with the general elections. You just have another ballot paper for the president.

Yeah, that's how it should work. So, I don't believe it's too much of a cost, really. But, you know, if we were to retain the current provisions, then you are limiting the choice of president to the elected government of the day, no matter how you see it.

At the end of the day, if the government likes someone, that's the man who's going to become president, period. So, what we're saying is that we need to move away from that system. On the voting system that you talked about; I'm still inclined to suggest that we have constituencies rather than a national first-past-the-post.

Why constituencies? Accountability to the voters. At the moment, if I live in Lautoka, if I have a problem, which MP do I go to? Unless I have a friend in Parliament or a minister that I know. But I don't have an MP to go to say, this is the problem we have in Lautoka.

Previously, we could do that. And, you know, if the MP didn't perform, we'd have the chance to make sure he doesn't stay there too long. That sort of thing.

But if we had a national first-past-the-post, then we don't have that connection. We lose that connection, the MP and the people.

Dr. Fatiaki: Sorry, just a correction. The first-past-the-post would apply to the constituency. So, you know, if there are five people competing, the one with the highest votes wins in that constituency. It's not a national one .

And I ask that because the other thing about first-past-the-post is, one, it's very visible, you know, you're counting it. Two, you get the results immediately. Once you proportionalise it, then you have to sort of wait and then count your second choice and third and then combine it and then you put in computers and you get glitches.

So, I mention this because you brought up that part of it. Constituency, yes, but how do you vote in the constituency? Do you want five photos? You know, the five people, your name, your photo, your party, and the person just ticks one, you know.

Mr. Felix: You see, this voting system must be made as simplest as it possibly can, right? I mean, I haven't been to school, but I know who I want to vote for, yeah? Because the picture's there, yeah? That sort of thing.

Yeah, I can't even read his name, but I know his face, yeah? So, I'll vote for him. That should be what voting ought to be, right? And the current system, numbers, you know, it means nothing to a lot of people, yeah? And I don't believe that many people actually, those particularly, they'd simply told this number, yeah? They don't know the person, but number, yeah? And that's not, I think, the way to go.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Felix. Just one clarification. Section 120, the PSC disciplinary tribunal, you mentioned about the members of the commission. You would like to see a rep from the union to be part of the...

Mr. Felix: An employer. Rep from the union and an employer.

Dr. Gounder: Employer to be part of the three members. Yes. Okay, thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: The election of a president, as you have submitted, in elections we have candidates. The current practice is that you have appointments whose names are put to parliament. Appointees whose names are put to parliament to vote in parliament.

Now, if we were to take the practice of getting candidates and then having an election to appoint a president from those candidates, how do we appoint the candidates in your view?
From parties or what is your view?

Mr. Felix: Well, Chair, I think this is something that needs to be thought through. I don't really have an answer to that as to how the candidates qualify to be candidates.

It could well be political parties or it could be independents who put their hand up to say, I want to be a candidate. But there could be provisions like to qualify, they would need a certain number of signatories to nominate them to qualify. But I think we need to think through that process to ensure that we get what we want.

Mr. Valenitabua: I see. Thank you. Thank you for that.

Dr. Fatiaki: I have just one other question and this relates to the Bill of Rights and the issue that you rightly point out and has been brought up by other people is this, I give you the right but, and then there's more qualifiers than there were rights. And I notice that you sort of suggested that we should look at it carefully. I'd like more of a commitment from you in terms of exactly what you'd like us to do because the reason I say that is obviously we'll have people, you know, scoping it.

The impression I have here is that if you give someone a right, you should not scoping it. When we talk about Bills of Rights, we're talking about, you know, almost like God-given rights. So, when you give it, you don't qualify it.

And if that way, if somebody wants to question that right in the context of an emergency, then they go to the court and the court adjudicates it. But if you put, you know, 7A to G, as you cynically or rightly pointed out, you can fit everybody into it once you put those qualifiers. And I think, you know, then it demeans the meaning of a right.

When you say it's an alienable right, what you're suggesting is something that we all just have. And you'll notice that many of these rights are actually written as one-liners, you know. And then after the right is given, then you have the, we may limit these rights by a law that is enacted for the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. And I guess, again, there will be other people making submissions.

You know, one of the ways to approach this, remove all qualifiers. You would take off probably that many pages from it. But I think in principle what you've said is obvious to us and has been raised by other people. Thank you.

Mr. Felix: What I'm basically saying is, yes, remove those qualifiers. Only to say that in exercising those rights, you don't deny others' rights. Yeah, that's basically it. Or any other written law, like, for instance, the crimes decree or whatever, you know, that should be it. You don't break any other law in exercising your rights.

Let me just say, Chair, that most of these rights here are part of international conventions as well. Yeah. Which Fiji has ratified, like the Isle of Convention on Freedom of Association. Convention 87. Yeah. Collective Bargaining Convention 98. All this Fiji has ratified and signed into. So, they are obligated to comply with those conventions. Yeah. And those conceptions don't fit in to those conventions.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Anthony, there seems to be no more questions or comments from the commissioners. Unless there is something else you would want to add.

Mr. Felix: Just one question. What is the kind of timelines that you are looking at with this review process?

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. We have been given six months. And that six month expires on the 31st of August this year, 2026. So, this exercise that we are now undertaking is being undertaken, taken, with the objective of completing it on the 31st of August. After that, we will write a report with recommendations on what should go or what should not go into the constitution.

And that report will be forwarded to His Excellency the President. And then from there, the process will be followed where it goes to Cabinet and then to Parliament. We might, not we might, our recommendation will be accompanied by an amended constitution, a draft one.

That is where we are going. However, the constitution is not our, you know, drafting the constitution and all that. We are not looking at that now.

The important thing which we are now doing is to get submissions from the members of this nation on what they believe, what they want, what they think should be included in the constitution. There has been a lot of talk about the 2013 constitution being made without any consultation with the people. And that is what we are trying to remedy here.

If we have to have an amended constitution, it has to be a constitution which has received wide consultation and the most possible submissions from members of this country. That is our task. And back to your question, we have six months to complete that and the due date is the 31st of August, 2026.

Mr. Felix: Thank you, Chair. I thank you for that clarification and I certainly hope that when we say we the people on the first page, it truly means we the people. Yeah?

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. If I may just add a few comments in respect to this. One is we've given ourselves a month and a half, two months in here where we basically reviewed the last four constitutions and we've been doing that as an ongoing exercise and consulting with people who have been invited, NGOs, religious bodies, unions and this is what we're doing in the first phase. We have two months of very intense, I mean very intense public consultations.

I think on Saturday's paper there was a notice of where we went and then we have two months after that to work with the experts, the drafters and then to physically write up the report. In any situation, more time is better. Okay, so some took a lot more, some took a lot less.

Let me just say that we and it alludes to something that you brought up earlier. We know that lots of consultations happened from 1997. We have access to that.

We also know that lots of consultations happened on the citizens constitutional forum I think that ended up in the Yash Gai. We have access to that too and so I suspect that as part of this process, we may not reinvent the wheel.

We will also look at that and see what people said. So, although it might not be face to face for this particular lot, that will also be taken into consideration when we start crafting something that belongs to and I rightly, I've emphasized that also to my colleagues on a number of occasions. It says we the people give ourselves this constitution and it's important that we recognize that that's what it is. Thank you.

Mr. Felix: Thank you Chair and thank you members of the Commission. May I wish you all the best in your task. I know it's not an easy one, but I wish you all the very best and we certainly look forward to your report and for better days ahead for Fiji as a whole. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Mr. Anthony. Could we have, would you be able to prepare a written submission? Please. The email address, Jyotika, the email address is with the staff on your left, on your right. If later, if we could have the email address given to Jyotika and we will welcome written submissions. Just email them across. Thank you.

Key points for Constitution Review Committee from Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC)

The FTUC raises the following concerns:

1. Chapter 1 Clause 5: Citizenship – Citizenship 5.—(1) All citizens of Fiji shall be known as Fijians.
   – We believe that all citizens retain the right to be called Fijians irrespective of race or religions. That is our main basis of identify as being born or achieved the citizenship status. Dividing us by race and origin may not well reflect that we all are Fijian citizens.

2. Chapter 2: Bill of Rights - Labor Relations: there are many restrictions and exceptions/limitation to freedom for expression, movement, assembly etc.
   S18 Freedom of Assembly
   S19 Freedom of Association
   S20-2- Employment relations- Non compliance of the clause 20 (4) - Trade unions and employers have the right to bargain collectively. This needs to be strengthened to be applied in practice. This does not happen. Employers make it difficult to practice this though it's a constitutional right.

3. S21- 7 is limitations again. It is given right but then the limitations are used to hold back on rights that can be given with safeguards if there is a concern.
4. S23- Political rights (1) Every citizen has the freedom to make political choices, and the right to— (a) form or join a political party; (b) participate in the activities of, or recruit members for, a political party; and (c) campaign for a political party, candidate or cause.
   This must be changed. It is a breach of human rights to deny trade union staff and officers form this right to express or engage in political activities.
5. Section 33: Right to Work and Just minimum Wage- (1). Right to work and a just minimum wage minimum wage. Fiji does not have a just minimum wage and its formulation is on a ad-hoc basis, solely reliable on tripartite debate and on the political will of government mostly tilted towards the employers' needs and preferences and not a just one based on cost of living and the ability to meet basic needs of life.

6. Section 53: Contest elections- 8 years is a long time to hold a person back from elections. Sometimes charges are very minor but they should not connect 8 years to that, a minimum of 2 years is sufficient.
7. Section 57: 3f- Office of Trade Unions – Public officer. TU must be excluded from definition of public officer.
8. Section 56 (g) (h) – Conviction of 8 years is too long.

9. Section 81- the Country's President should be elected. He should not be used a rubberstamp to government laws an must be independent to make his own decision.
10. S120: Tripartite composition – Employer- Employee rep with the Judge as Chair.
11. S127- Permanent Secretary makes all the terms and conditions of employment . This power must be shifted to the PSC a sit was earlier- a central unit in charge of the hire, development and disengagement of civil servants.

12. S131- (2)- Military Forces- there should be an oversight by the Minister. Republic of Fiji Military Forces 131.—(1) The Republic of Fiji Military Forces established under the State Services Decree 2009 continues in existence. (2) It shall be the overall responsibility of the Republic of Fiji Military Forces to ensure at all times the security, defence and well-being of Fiji and all Fijians.

13. S138 – Human Rights Commission must be independent
14. S141 f - Timeframes- is old and irrelevant.
15. S154- Part B—FREEDOM OF INFORMATION Freedom of information agencies. Still not enacted.
16. S156- Immunities: This must be removed and serves for protection for future coups.
17. Parliament must have a senate.
18. Elections- we revert to the constituency systems. MPs will be held accountable and will enter parliament on their right and on popularity vote of their leader.

Time:2.00pm-3.20pm
Date:21-04-206

Leighton: Bula Vinaka. Members of the Fiji Police Force, on behalf of the Chair and the Commissioners, I welcome you. Thank you for attending this session today. Before we start, just a few housekeeping matters. If you wish to speak, you will have to press the right side of the mic to turn the mic on, and then press it again to turn it off when you are making submissions. Also, there is an attendance register, if you can fill it in when the session is finished. The Chair will introduce the Commissioners and the team. I will then request if you can also introduce yourselves after the Chair's introduction, just for the transcriber's recording.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Leighton. Gentlemen, good morning. We welcome you to Level 9 Suvavou House. We are sitting here as the Constitutional Review Committee, or Commission, and we are happy to receive you this morning. You will be the first of the three teams that will come before us today. Before I move on, we've got four Commissioners before you this morning. I'd like to ask the Commissioners to introduce themselves, starting from my right, on the far right. Thank you very much, Chair.

Mr. Beg: Good morning, officers from the Police Force and Honorable members. My name is Conway Beg. I am an architect by profession. I am one of the Commissioners on the Board, and I look forward to hearing your comments this morning. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good morning, gentlemen. I am Dr. John Fatiaki, 'Vuniwai', a medical practitioner by profession. I run a medical clinic in town, and I will resume. Vinaka.

Dr. Gounder: Good morning, members of the Fiji Police Force. My name is Neelesh Gounder. I am an academic and economist at USP, and I look forward to your submission this morning.

Mr. Valenitabua: Good morning, gentlemen. Sevuloni Valenitabua is my name. I am a lawyer, and I have a private practice. I am happy to meet with you this morning. Just a matter of introduction. You are appearing before the Constitution Review Commission. It is now a general knowledge that it is a commission which has been established on the calling of His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji. There are seven commissioners altogether.

We have been very fortunate, honored to be appointed to do or to carry out this huge task of reviewing the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji. Not with us today are Professor Unaisi Baba of the Fiji National University, Merewalesi Nailatikau, and Mr. Ami Kohli, who is flying from Labasa this morning. In any event, despite their absence, we shall continue with the consultation or submission this morning.

Once again, we welcome you. Our task is to listen to submissions from members of the public, including government ministries and government departments. We have been running this consultation here at Level 9 for the past three weeks.

From the 1st or 2nd of May, we shall be going out to the rest of Fiji. We'll be visiting villages, we'll be visiting cities, we'll be visiting towns and settlements in rural areas. The task before us is to gather as much information as possible to hear the people, to hear their submissions, and then later on, collect all the facts or all the submissions and then compile them into a report which is to be forwarded to His Excellency the President for further action or for further processing towards creating an amended 2013 Constitution.

That is the objective. But before we get to the amended Constitution, it is our job, it is our task to hear the people of Fiji with their submissions on what should be included in the Constitution, what should be removed, and what should stay. That is what we are here for.

So once again, we welcome you. I will now pass the mic to you, gentlemen. We'd like to hear your introductions first so that we can note down your names. Thank you.

Mr. Soko: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Very good morning to a good self. On behalf of the Commission of Police, we bring greetings from the Fiji Police Force to the Commission and members of the Constitution Review Commission. Introducing our team this morning. On my left is the Director Legal of the Fiji Police Force, Senior Superintendent Rajesh Krishna.

And on my right is a Senior Research Officer at our Strategic Planning, Policy Research and Development Unit, Mr. Koresi Davui. Both are legal officers as well. I'm Acting Assistant Commissioner of Police in charge of Planning, Policy and Doctrine. Name is Viliame Soko. Mr. Chair, before I commence, allow me to present to you our written submission this morning. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr. Soko. Thank you for this written submission, Mr. Soko. We're ready to hear you.

Mr. Soko: Honorable Chairperson of the Constitution Review Commission, distinguished commissioners, on behalf of the Commission of Police, we present the Fiji Police Force submission grounded in operational experience, constitutional responsibility and informed by international best practices. The Constitution of the Republic of Fiji 2013 is the supreme law of our nation. It protects the rights of our people while defining the authority and limits of institutions entrusted with maintaining law and order.

For policing and criminal justice system, one principle must guide us. Strong rights protection must be matched with clear, practical and enforceable operational frameworks. Across Commonwealth jurisdictions, this balance is achieved through constitutional safeguards, supported by clear, enabled legislation, defined institutional rules and independent oversight.

Since the adoption of the Constitution, Fiji has made commendable progress in strengthening democratic governance and protecting fundamental rights. However, from an operational policing and criminal justice perspective, several challenges have emerged. Ambiguity in operational application of certain rights provisions, limited enabling legislation to support constitutional intent, application of the use of force, gaps in independent oversight mechanisms and emerging threats not fully contemplated with existing frameworks.

These challenges highlight the need to refine, not replace, the Constitution, ensuring it remains fit for purpose in a modern and evolving security environment. Some of the key areas on operational clarity in rights provisions were referred to Section 24 of the Constitution, which guarantees the right to personal privacy, a cornerstone of democratic society. However, in practice, this presents challenges in digital investigations, surveillance operations, intelligence gathering and cybercrime enforcement.

Without clear enabling legislation, law enforcement faces either oppression limitation or legal vulnerability in court proceedings. When we compare to Commonwealth jurisdictions in the United Kingdom, we have the Investigatory Powers Act of 2016. It provides lawful authority, judicial oversight and strict thresholds for surveillance.

In New Zealand, Certain Surveillance Act 2012 clearly defines police powers with judicial authorization and safeguards. Honorable Commissioners, jurisdictions such as the United Kingdom and New Zealand demonstrate that privacy is not weakened by clarity, it is strengthened by it. On strengthening accountability and oversight, public confidence depends on credible and independent oversight.

Commissioner of Police intent is to win back the respect, trust and the confidence of the people of Fiji. In UK, the Independent Office of Police Conduct. In New Zealand, Independent Police Conduct Authority both provide civilian-led independent investigations into complaints and serious incidents.

Independent oversight does not weaken policing, it legitimizes it. On emerging threats and future readiness, Fiji faces evolving threats including transnational organized crime, drug trafficking, cybercrime and maritime and border security risks. In comparison to Commonwealth jurisdictions, we compare to Singapore, they have a strong legislative backing for cyber and organized crime.

For Interpol standards, which we have been a member of since 1971, intelligence-led, coordinated global policy. Fiji must be constitutionally enabled to respond to modern threats with clarity and confidence. Why reform is necessary.

Without reform, operational effectiveness may be constrained. Criminal networks may exploit legal ambiguity, institutional accountability gaps may persist and public confidence may decline. With reform, we believe that policing becomes more consistent and professional, justice outcomes improve, public trust strengthen and Fiji aligns with international best practices.

Mr. Chair, the guiding principle for reform on submitting this recommendation to the Constitutional Review is based on the following. One is balance. Rights and enforcement must co-exist.

Two is clarity. Remove ambiguity, contradiction in law and rules to ensure the consistency in our operational to make it more effective. Three, accountability, strengthen oversight mechanism to ensure we are in line, integration, aligned police and military and future readiness is to address the evolving threats that we are facing.

Recommendations on specific sections, Mr. Chair, on Section 11, Subsection 3. Proposal for limited exception to Section 11.3 for mandatory drug testing within the Fiji Police Force. Section 11.3 of the Constitution states that every person has the right to freedom from scientific, medical treatment or procedures without an order of court or without his or her informed consent or if he or she is incapable of giving informed consent without informed consent or lawful guidance. The proposal for constitutional amendment in Section 11.3, the rationale is the proposal seeks to introduce a specific narrow exception to Section 11.3 of the Constitution.

The objective is to empower the Fiji Police to conduct mandatory drug testing of its personnel. This amendment is essential to ensure the integrity of the law enforcement, protect public safety and maintain the right to security of the person for the broader Fijian population. The current challenge in Section 11.3 provides an absolute right to freedom from medical procedures without informed consent or a court order.

While this is a vital human rights protection, its broad application creates a legal vacuum for disciplined services. For personal risks, officers under the influence of illicit substance pose a direct threat to public safety and the rule of law. Institutional integrity, the inability to mandate testing hinders the Fiji Police's ability to purge internal corruption and drug-related criminal influence.

On the legal impasse, relying on voluntary testing or individual court orders for every instance is administratively impossible and legally fragile. We propose that Section 11.3 be amended to include a proviso or a new subsection 4 which may be drafted as follows. Not withstanding subsection 3, a law may provide for the mandatory medical testing of members of the Fiji Police Force and officer disciplined forces for the presence of illicit substance provided.

Provided that such testing is conducted in accordance with prescribed regulations to ensure accuracy and privacy and the necessary proportionate for maintenance of public order, national security and the integrity of disciplined force. For justification and safeguards, to ensure this amendment does not lead to abuse, the proposal is built on the following pillars.

One, public interest limitation. Under international human rights law, certain rights may be limited if the limitation is prescribed by law and the necessary in a democratic society. Policing is a high-stake profession where sovereignty is a functional requirement. On procedural fairness, the exception would not be blank-checked.

It must be supported by a revised Police Act that outlines strict protocols for how samples are taken, handled and contested. For deterrence, explicit constitutional authority sends a clear message that the Fiji Police is a drug-free institution, restoring public confidence in the police. Amending Section 11.3 is not a removal of rights, but a balancing of rights.

The right of an individual officer to use a medical procedure must be weighed against the right of the Fijian public to be protected by a sober, disciplined and reliable police force. I urge the Commission to consider this amendment as a critical step in modernizing the Fiji national security framework. Mr. Chair, on Section 24.1, the right to privacy is to enable to conduct a digital covert surveillance with judicial oversight.

It seeks to balance the fundamental right to privacy with the operational necessity of modern intelligence-led policing. The primary objective of this proposal is to transition the Fiji Police from a reactive model to an intelligence-led policing framework in an era where criminal activity ranging from cybercrime to transnational organized syndicates operates at a speed of light. To achieve this, the law must provide the tools necessary to intercept threats before they manifest.

By establishing a clear constitutional basis for digital covert surveillance, we ensure that policing is effective while remaining firmly anchored in the principle of judicial oversight. Under the current interpretation of Section 24.1, there is a perceived lack of clarity regarding the boundaries of digital interception and financing tracking. This creates two significant hurdles.

One, operational stagnation. Law enforcement is often hesitant to utilize advanced proactive tools, in this case the digital surveillance communication interception, due to the high risk of legal challenge or breach of rights litigation. Evidently lost or evidentially lost, the current legal landscape does not sufficiently account for the volatility of digital evidence.

The time required to secure a judicial warrant often results in the permanent concealment, encryption or destruction of critical evidence. The Fiji Police proposes an amendment to Section 24.1 of the Constitution to explicitly allow for lawful surveillance and emergency interventions. A police officer may exercise the power to arrest or search without warrant when the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that action is immediately necessary to prevent the concealment, loss or destruction of anything connected with an offense.

Furthermore, the state shall have the power to conduct digital covert surveillance and communication interception, provided such actions are conducted under the judicial warrant or meet strictly defined national security and public safety threshold. The proposal is a police officer may exercise the power to arrest, search without warrant when the officer has reasons to believe that it is necessary to do so in order to prevent the concealment, loss or destruction of anything connected with an offense. On the justification of the proposal, the inclusion of these powers is justified by the evolving nature of the modern crime scene.

Prevention of Frustrated Justice the Search Without Warrant Clause is designed specifically for exigent circumstances. If an officer must wait hours for a warrant while a suspect is actively deleting digital ledger or flashing physical evidence, the judicial process is defeated before it begins. Modernization of the State Explicit constitutional recognition of digital surveillance removes the legal grey area, providing officers with confidence to use modern technology to track financial crimes and terror threats.

For public safety, in matters of national security, the ability to intercept communication can be the difference between preventing a crime and merely investigating one after the damage is done. For safeguards of this proposal, to ensure the powers do not infringe upon the democratic spirit of Fiji, the following safeguards are integral to this proposal. The Reasonableness Test Any warrantless search or arrest must be able to withstand judicial scrutiny post facto.

The officer must document and prove that the risk of loss or destruction was immediate and genuine. Mandatory Judicial Oversight Except in cases of immediate fiscal danger, digital covert surveillance must be predicated on a warrant issued by a member of the judiciary. For strict thresholds, national security and public safety must be narrowly defined by supporting legislation to prevent mis-encrypt into the private lives of law-abiding citizens.

Accountability Mechanisms Any measures of these powers should result in the inclusion of evidence in court and disciplinary action against offending officers, ensuring that the right to privacy remains a respected pillar of Fijian law. Section 1296 The Minister responsible for the Fiji Police Force may, from time to time, issue general policy directions to the Commissioner of Police, and if such a direction has been issued, the Commissioner of Police must act in accordance with it. This proposal addresses the structural independence of the Fiji Police.

It seeks to align the operational autonomy of the Commissioner of Police with established democratic principles, ensuring that law enforcement remains a neutral instrument of law rather than a subject of political administration. Mr. Chair, the fundamental rationale for this amendment is the doctrine of police independence. In a robust democracy, the police must operate as a neutral instrument of law, accountable to the Constitution rather than the shifting priorities of the executive branch.

True independence ensures that, one, neutrality, investigative decisions, and resource allocations are based on objective merits and public safety. Professionalism, personal management and operational tactics remain free from political influence over the perception of such influence and the trust. Public confidence is bolstered when the citizen perceives the police as an impartial body serving the state, not the government of the day.

The current framework under Section 1296 creates a mandatory obligation where the Commissioner must act in accordance with the ministerial directions. This presents several critical challenges. One is the institutional inconsistency.

There is a stark discrepancy between the Fiji Police and other enforcement or security bodies. The Republic of Fiji Military Forces under Section 131, the role of the Commander is very clear. The Fiji Dependent Commission Against Corruption under Section 115, the role of the Commissioner is very clear. In the Office of the Director of Public Prosecution under Section 117, the role of the Director of Public Prosecution is very clear. All enjoy high degrees of personal autonomy. The Fiji Police, which interacts most frequently with the public, lacks this level of protection.

Second, perception of politicalization. The mandatory language must act risks undermining public trust. As it suggests, policing priorities can be dictated by political agendas.

Under operational interference, general policy directions can inadvertently drift into operational matters, complicating the Commissioner's ability to exercise professional command and control. Our proposed amendment, the Fiji Police propose the repeal of Section 1296 and the introduction of new provisions that align the Fiji Police with the independent morals of the FICAC and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecution. In the exercise of each of the powers and the proposed acts and functions, the Commissioner of Police shall not be subject to the direction of control for any person or authority, except as provided by this Constitution or by an Act of Parliament.

Two, overall responsibility of the Fiji Police Force shall be the maintenance of law and order, the preservation of peace, the protection of life and property, the prevention and detection of crime, and the enforcement of all laws and regulations, with which it is directly charged and shall be entitled to have an arm's reach for the performance of any such duties to carry arms. The Minister may issue general policy guidelines regarding the strategic priorities of the Force. However, the Commissioner shall have the final authority on operational command, including investigations, deployment, and internal administrations.

Mr. Chair, in justifying this proposal, the institutional parity, it is logical and necessary for the Fiji Police to have the same constitutional standing as the Commissioner of the FICAC and the Director of the Office of Public Prosecution. As the primary body responsible for criminal investigations, the Fiji Police must be independent as the body that prosecutes those crimes. Alignment with our national security standard, granting the FPF a similar arrangement to the FMF or RFMF, ensures a consistent national security framework where professional heads are empowered to lead based expertise and statutory duty.

Strengthening the rule of law, removing the meditative direction clause, reinforces the principle that the police serve the people and the law, ensuring that no individual or political office is above the legal process. On the safeguards of this proposal, the FPF recognizes that independence is not isolation. From accountability, to prevent the abuse of power, the following safeguards remain integral.

Constitutional oversight. The Commissioner remains accountable to the Constitutional Officers' Commission regarding performance, conduct, and appointment standards. On parliamentary transparency, the Commissioner will continue to submit an annual report to Parliament providing full transparency on how the force has met strategic objectives and utilized its public budget.

On the judicial review, all decisions made by the Commissioner remain subject to the oversight of the High Court. This ensures that independence is exercised within the bounds of the law. On strategic consultation, the Commissioner will maintain a consultative relationship with the line minister.

This allows for the alignment of policing with national security goals through guidelines and cooperation rather than directives and mandates. On the use of force, this proposal outlines the Fiji police submission regarding the constitutional regulation of the use of force. It seeks to codify the principles of necessity and proportionality within the Supreme Law or to provide clear legal protection to officers while ensuring the high standards of human rights and public accountability.

The State holds a monopoly on the legitimate use of force to maintain public order and protect the lives of its citizens. The rationale for this proposal is to establish a unified constitutional standard for the use of force. By grounding these powers in the constitution rather than solely supporting legislation like the Police Act, the Fiji police ensures that every application of force, from fiscal restraint to the use of arms, is balanced against the fundamental right to life and the right to free from cruel and degrading treatment.

Our current challenge, currently the specific thresholds for use of force are largely defined in administrative standing orders in the Police Act, which can be subject to varying interpretations in the Court of Law. This creates two primary challenges. One is the legal vulnerability of officers in high-stakes tactical situations.

The lack of explicit constitutional seal regarding the lawful use of force can lead to hesitation, potentially endangering the lives of officers and the public. Inconsistency in accountability without a clear constitutional mandate on proportionality, judicial and internal reviews of police conduct may lack a consistent benchmark, leading to public mistrust or perceived impunity in cases of alleged excess.

Proposed amendment, the Fiji police propose the insertion of the new subsection under the provision resulting to law enforcement or the Bill of Rights, to explicitly govern the use of force. We propose that a police officer or any person authorized by law may use force as is reasonably necessary and proportionate in the circumstances for the purpose of effecting a lawful arrest or preventing the escape of a person in legal custody. Protecting any person from unlawful violence, preventing the commission of a serious criminal offences or suppressing a rape or insurrection. The use of lethal force shall be permitted as a last resort where there is an immediate threat of death or serious injury to the officer or another person. In justifying the proposal, standardization of conduct, codifying necessity and proportionality ensures that every officer understands the legal sealing of the authority it removes impunity regarding when force is justified.

Aligning with international law, the proposal aligns Fiji's constitutional framework with the UN basic principles on the use of force and the firearms by law enforcement officials enhancing Fiji's standing in the international human rights community. On public and officer safety, clearer laws lead to better training and more decisive action in crisis situations such as active shooter, scenarios of violent civil unrest where delayed action can result in the loss of life. One of the safeguards to this proposal is to ensure this power is never abused.

The following safeguards are proposed as constitutional requirements. Mandatory reporting. Any use of force resulting in injury or death must be subject of a mandatory written report and an automatic internal investigation.

Proportionality to test. The constitution shall require that the force used must be the minimum amount necessary to achieve the lawful objective. If a lesser means was available and discarded without reason, the use of force is deemed unlawful.

Independent oversight. In cases involving the discharge of firearms or serious injury, the Fiji Human Rights and Antidiscrimination Commission or an independent police oversight body must have the power to conduct a parallel investigation. The duty of care amendment will include the requirements that once a person is subdued or in custody, the police have an immediate constitutional duty to provide medical assistance if force was applied.

On the delegation of powers, the rationale for this proposal is to safeguard the common integrity of the Fiji police force. This is for the Deputy Commissioner. The Commissioner of Police, as the professional head of organization, is best positioned to determine which senior officer possesses the specific operational readiness and leadership competence to manage the force in his absence.

By establishing this as a sole prerogative, the Fiji police ensures that leadership continuity is a matter of professional judgment rather than administrative or political appointment. Current challenges, external interference, without an explicit sole prerogative clause, the process of naming an acting Commissioner, even for short duration, can become susceptible to external influence or office of the Minister through the directives.

Operational ambiguity, if the selection process is not clear, defined as Commissioner's personal mandate, it can lead to internal joking of uncertainty among the Deputy Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner ranks, which undermines the single line of command essential for national security.

The limited scope of acting appointment, current framework often treats acting roles as mere placeholders. This lacks the constitutional weight required for a delegate to take decisive legal actions across all relevant legislatures. We propose that the Constitution explicitly recognizes the Commissioner's exclusive authority to designate a temporary successor.

So, the proposal is that the Commissioner of Police has the sole prerogative to select and designate, in writing, a Deputy Commissioner of Police or an Assistant Commissioner of Police to exercise the full powers and functions of the Office of the Commissioner during any period of the Commissioner's absence or temporary incapacity. The officer so designed shall have the authority to act and execute all statutory duties, discretions and powers vested in the Commissioner by this Constitution or any other written law, notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in such law. This power of selection is an internal command function and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority.

In justifying the proposal's reinforcing independence, this amendment is a practical application of the doctrine of police independence. If the Commissioner chooses their own delegate, it prevents the Executive from installing a preferred officer during the Commissioner's absence. Leadership Trust Effective policing requires a seamless transition of trust.

The Commissioner must be able to delegate officers they trust most with sensitive intelligence and ongoing high-level investigations. Legal Efficiency. By granting the delegate powers to act, not just endorse, across all legislation, the Fiji police eliminate the risk of legal challenges in the High Court regarding the validity of warrants or orders signed by an acting Commissioner. On safeguards to this proposal, on rank-limited delegation, the sole prerogative is restricted to the Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner ranks only, ensuring that power never falls below the constitutionally vetted level of seniority.

Documentary record. Any such delegation must be made via a formal written instrument provided a clear legal trade for the judiciary and the public, to know who holds authority at any given time. The prerogative applies only to temporary absence. In the event of a permanent vacancy or long-term incapacity, the standard constitutional appointment process via the Constitutional Officers' Commission would still apply.

Continued Accountability. The officer exercised the delegated power remains fully accountable to the law and the Constitutional Officers' Commission for any actions taken during the acting period. Mr. Chair, Members of the Commission, in conclusion, the proposals submitted by the Fiji police today are anchored in a singular non-negotiable principle, the doctrine of police independence. For democracy to remain resilient, the police force must function as an institutional cornerstone that is shielded from the shifting currents of political administrations.

We do not seek to operate outside the law, but rather to ensure that we are governed only by the law. The Fiji police is the primary interface between the state and the rights of the citizens. Therefore, it is a constitutional necessity that the commission of police be granted the same structural autonomy already afforded to the Republic of Military Forces, Office of the Director of Public Prosecution and the Fiji Independent Commission against Corruption.

By removing the mandate for ministerial direction and clarifying the commissioner's sole prerogative in matters of command and delegation, we ensure that the policing decisions, from tactical operations to the use of force, are made with professional integrity and objective merits. This submission is a call for institutional maturity. We are asking for a constitution that empowers the force to be a neutral instrument of justice, accountable to the people of Fiji through the judiciary and the constitution rather than a subject of executive policy.

In doing so, we strengthen the rule of law, safeguard the fundamental rights of every Fijian and ensure the Fiji police force remains a professional, a political and trusted guardian of our nation. Mr. Chair, we thank the commission for this opportunity and members of the commission, we thank the commission for this opportunity and we stand ready to provide further technical and legislative support from my colleagues from what we have presented this morning and thank you for your indulgence.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Mr. Soko. First, I'd like to thank you and your colleagues and the staff who prepared this written submission. It's very clear and it will assist us a lot. Thank you very much for that. And secondly, thank you for the oral submissions that you have, that you will give us after this. It's now time, since you have been reading through, our commissioners have been taking notes. There might be questions which are arising and we will now be asking you some questions to clarify matters that have been raised in your submission this morning.

And we invite you, we ask you to answer the questions which you will be asked. There might be just some comments. I hope you will take the comments. This submission may not be the last one. I say may because we are giving you the opportunity. In the event you wish to add more, please do so.

You can put the additional submissions in writing and send them to us by email. You can collect the email address from the girls on your right and then send us whatever additional submissions you may wish to make. But for the time being, I will now ask fellow commissioners if they have any questions or comments in relation to your submission this morning.

Dr. Fatiaki: Vinaka Mr. Soko and your team. Thank you. I just want to echo the sentiments of our commissioner, our chair, in terms of the presentation.

It's quite clear and you've gone through it in great detail. I'd like to just bring a number of comments and possibly questions in respect of separate areas. I'll allude to one first and then maybe leave it to my other commissioners to allude to others to try and arrive at a point where we can be more concrete about exactly the nature of what you are asking for.

So, I'll take you first to section 11.3. That is the area that pertains to, for instance, mandatory drug testing. At the outset, let me say that the constitution has got to be a document that is supreme but all-encompassing but we don't want to get it too bogged down with too many details. One of the criticisms that people have had in the Bill of Rights, for instance, yesterday we had the Fiji Trade Union Congress was that people would give you a right and after that they would then have a provision of 14 qualifiers where they can take your right away.

And the idea was give the right and then if, for police reasons or whatever, you needed to take that right or limit that right, then you took it to court because that was the safeguard. That way you had the overall right rather than limit it all because if you limited it all, we found, for instance, that almost every single right could be cut in if we limited it. So, there was a general principle that when we write the Bill of Rights in the constitution it should be all encompassing and not too detailed and that's where I come to the question and your submission in respect of section 11.3. I think the issue of mandatory drug testing, for instance, is a recognized one. There are many occupations. I can tell you I was a doctor for pilots. No pilot gets on a plane without mandatory drug testing.

And that's applied universally in many areas across the world. As I look at it, if I were to read it to you, every person has the right to freedom from scientific, medical treatment or procedures. In this case it's a procedure.

And it says without an order of the court or without his or her informed consent. The point I'm making is with the pilots, if you want to continue to work for the airline, you sign the consent. The people who work in the boats that we do drug testing for, these are the crew.

Part of their employment requirement is to sign the consent and if they sign the consent, then this provision in the constitution would not apply to them and therefore we would not need to change the constitution. Now I don't know what the situation is with the police force, but I would presume that you could probably incorporate into your police act or into your employment contract that every person who agrees to become a policeman signs a consent to have mandatory drug testing conducted on him as part of his acceptance. And obviously if he doesn't want to sign it, then he doesn't become a policeman or a pilot or the captain of a cruise liner.

Now, I say that because if we were to use this, then you wouldn't need to change the constitution, but you can test every policeman. The thing though is you would need to then incorporate it as part of your workplace requirements and for us that would be an easier job rather than specify that section which you, you know, all the conditions where we would mandatorily test it and put it into the constitution applying only to the police force. You understand what I'm trying to suggest there? Because it says with informed consent you can test everybody and they would be excluded from this, which means that if they signed and I say this from experience because we do drug testing on the boat, on the cruise of the boats, the cruise boats, on behalf of an external agency and on behalf of pilots that fly.

And I can tell you that part of that is they consent to it and if they did not consent, then I would not do the test and then it's up to, I can tell you that for the cruise liners, they will take them off at the port, whether it's a captain of the boat, the first officer, they'll take them immediately off the port. They will stop working immediately. They will be flown back to their country of origin and a new captain will take over.

So, that is the requirement. It is informed consent, but it means that the person signs it and I, you know, this could be instituted from the very beginning. If you want to introduce that as a mandatory thing and I understand the rationale.

I don't think there's any dispute about the fact that you want your officers not to be taking drugs or have any traces of drugs in their system. My suggestion is really as to the mechanism. I could take the entire section that you've amended and try and insert it into this constitution.

We can make it very bulky and, you know, if the police came, I mean the army came and asked for the same thing and the nurses and the doctors, it would become difficult. But I can see straight out here that if you were to apply that, then, you know, I don't think any person would dispute that this is not an unreasonable provision for a policeman that the police force requires that you undergo random mandatory drug testing whenever required. That's just my suggestion in respect of that particular request for amendments to the constitution. I leave it to my colleagues. They might want to address others.

Mr. Valenitabua: One question, Mr. Soko. Currently, is drug testing carried out on police officers?

Mr. Soko: Mr. Chair, it's through consent. Officer has to consent. That is our policy. That is what we doing.

Mr. Valenitabua: It's a policy. Is it in the Police Act?

Mr. Soko: It's a policy direction that we are using to ensure that we are in line with what is required. But again, consent is the issue. So, the commissioner does not have the power to direct, understand the point raised by the doctor.

Dr. Fatiaki: Mr. Soko, with the pilots and the captain of the cruise boat that comes on Saturday, if he is listed, he doesn't even have the list. We do 50 tests on their crew. It's sent to us the day before the boat arrives. As soon as the list is released, all 50 are put into a designated area where they have to stay and be tested. If you refuse to undergo the test, you get off the boat. That's it. What I'm saying is, yes, it's the consent. But if a policeman were to refuse to consent, I'm sure that the police has within its powers the ability to terminate his employment. Or if he doesn't have it currently, it could incorporate it into the signing up part of it. So, I presume there's a contract offered to a person.

Part of that contract, it would require that in the nature of the profession, mandatory drug testing may be required and we require that all candidates for employment as police officers sign it. I don't think that's an unreasonable expectation. Technically, I don't think it would be a difficult thing to do and it may be easier for us to do it that way than to do it this way. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: There is a question. There is a question. Under section 11, subsection 3, it talks about scientific or medical treatment or procedures. Can we include drug testing into that? Medical? We just have to think about that. Because I'm sure when the 2013 Constitution was, or I believe when the 2013 Constitution was enacted, there would not have been any thoughts in relation to drugs to the level we are facing now.

I might be wrong. So, are we just looking at injections for COVID, injections for TB, injections for whatever other sicknesses out there and operations and so forth, those which require the consent? Now, drug testing. You have brought this submission in to ask that this particular procedure, if we can call it drug testing, is to be included in the Constitution. Do we understand you? Is that what you're asking us?

Mr. Soko: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Alright.

Mr. Valenitabua: What if, what if, I've been told by my friend, my fellow commissioner, that drug testing is a procedure, medical procedure. What if you just include it in your legislation, the Police Act? Is there a disadvantage there? Which has caused you to bring this submission to the Constitution Review Commission?

Mr. Rajesh: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The guidance is well noted from the chair. The Police Act which does not have the provision the one on the draft stages and the Honorable Ag's office I believe it does include.

And the reason most probably why we thought of having it in the Constitution is we understand the process of Acts of Parliament being amended, and whilst it's in the Constitution, the issue of it being amended, it may take a little time of process to have it amended at the whim of most probably the future governments.

But then again, another reason for that was what we had considered was the individual right versus the public right. Of course, in general, we are talking about public rights. Here we are considering the individual officer's right versus the public right, where the commissioner does want to have an authority to be able to direct the officer to go mandatory drug testing. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. Just in terms of clarification, I can see that what you're really asking us is there's a conflict in the commissioner and the police's mind as to whether they can mandatorily test a person for drugs, given this particular bill, I mean this particular right, which is 11.3 that says every person has a right to freedom from scientific or medical treatment or procedures, for which a mandatory drug test is, it's a medical procedure. Okay, so this says that every person has the right to be free from that. And what they're bringing to us is that, well, they'd like to be able to test the policemen if they're suspicious of it.

And like I said, we understand that. I give you those two examples that currently exist and are practiced. Okay, so nobody disputes whether Fiji Airways can test its pilots as to whether they are under the effect of alcohol or any drug. They can do it mandatorily. As you walk into the plane, they pull them aside. All airlines have that.

So, all I'm suggesting is what you're recommending is I understand the difficulty. This says the Bill of Rights, the Supreme Law says you can't do it. You can't take it away, except with informed consent.

And that's what I meant when I said I think this is how Fiji Airways gets around it and other employers in dangerous occupations. You know, if you're going to climb up onto the top of the scaffolding, I presume that if you're the owner of that building company, you might want everyone who's climbing up there to be completely sober. And you may make it a workplace requirement for which you would require informed consent.

And I think the process of asking a person to sign it, whether you did it at the beginning of the job, as part of the employment part of it, he raised the issue of whether that may conflict with the Employment Act. I don't think so. I think you'll find that there's provision that in certain occupations, if it's deemed unsafe for people to be operating it, if they're under the influence of drugs or alcohol, then there is automatically provision for them to be tested. And I hope that helps clarify it.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Dr. John. I think on the same note, soccer players are also selected at random for drug testing. Even if they refuse, they're not allowed to play the game. So, if it can happen in other professions and areas, you may want to explore whether that is possible within the police force without the need to change the constitution. We will take this on board, but you can also explore the possibility of doing that without the need to change the constitution, because as Mr. Dr. Fatiaki has highlighted, it is happening in other places and it may not actually contradict your personal right with the constitutional provision, if that is the case.

I'm not saying. I want to take this opportunity to thank you, Mr. Soko and the police force for the very comprehensive submission today. You not only talk about the rationale for the reform you are suggesting, you are also proposing the actual text, you are giving the justification and the safeguards.

So, if you are empowered with the new provision, you not only talk about the benefits, but also the accountability from your side, which is very refreshing and a very positive sign from the Fiji police force. So, thank you very much for this very comprehensive submission. I think this is, in my view, the best submission that we have received.

One of the best that we have received so far in terms of the comprehensiveness. So, thank you very much for this. I just have a clarification. Your delegation of powers number 10. There is nothing in the constitution at the moment regarding the delegation of powers that you have talked about in your submission today. And in the same spirit as the other commissioners, my argument is whether it will be suitable to have this here or in the police act.

Because the constitution contains broad provisions, but the acts and legislations then hound down very specific provisions for different aspects of the regulations that we are making for various areas. So, I am just seeking your view whether this would be better suited for the police act. And as I understand, the police act is currently being reviewed?

So, the timing is also perfect for you to consider having this provision in the police act. Because basically it is talking about if the police commissioner is away for a very short period of time, the appointment of the acting commissioner and the powers which the acting commissioner will then have. So, it is the delegation of powers to the acting commissioner.

That is basically what you are talking about. Usually, the delegation of powers are contained in a policy framework or if you want more authority, you can have that in the police act rather than the constitution. So just a clarification from our side so that when we are discussing about this later, we have more clarity.

And also, to throw something back at your team to consider the possibility of having it in the police act rather than in the constitution. So, thank you. I am happy to hear your views on this.

Mr. Soko: Thank you, sir, through the chair. The reason we bring it up was inconsistent with what we have been referring to the role that was stipulated under section 117 and section 115. It also includes the deputy commissioners of FICAC and the deputy director of public prosecution and the delegation in absence of office.

That is missing in section 129. And we were thinking that is why we brought it up and if you are good self-taught, otherwise your guidance is well noted on that.

Dr. Gounder: The provision that you are recommending is available for FICAC and DPP?

Mr. Soko: Yes, sir.

Dr. Gounder: And you would like to have similar provisions in the constitution for the police force?

Mr. Soko: That is correct, sir.

Dr. Gounder: Okay, thank you. I hear you now clearly. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: I was going to say that since you are reviewing the police act. You are careful that the police act aligns with the constitution because any legislation or any act which is inconsistent with the constitution would be invalid. You are looking at that, Mr. Krishna.

So, I was going to ask you the question whether that was why you wanted to have this drug testing specifically and delegation specifically included in the section 115, is it? Or section 123? 129. That was your reason. Have it in the constitution first before you complete your review of the police act so that the provisions of the police act will be right. That is what you are looking at here. We have referred you to a number of sections, particularly for medical section 11.3. Now you have raised the point in relation to FICAC and DPP.

Do you think that is sufficient? This is why I am asking this. You are not the first one who has raised issues in relation to delegation. Even the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal came to us and said could we have another provision added to the constitution where the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal could nominate other judges to stand in their state with the JSC.

That is coming from the two most senior judges. Now here you are asking us to do the same thing also. To try and have your drug testing issue and the other issues which you have raised included specifically in the constitution so that it aligns with your act. I guess that is what you are getting at.

Mr. Krishna: That is correct Mr. Chair. That is our intention and that is our request.

Mr. Valenitabua: Even under section 7 subsection 3 which deals with other procedures, you believe that that is not sufficient to cover your police officers. Is that right? That is correct.

Mr. Krishna: Section 7 of Police Act I believe that is what you are referring to.

Mr. Valenitabua: No, I mean 11.3. I am talking about 11.3.

Mr. Krishna: That is correct sir. We wish to have these provisions included in the constitution.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, we get you. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: And the rationale was that in applying mandatory testing they would be conflicting with the Bill of Rights in respect of that. And so, the suggestion was that instead of us putting four more paragraphs because your submission requires you to put four paragraphs into it specifically for the police which will make this book very thick if we were to do that.

Our suggestion was to take the fact that you can have informed consent as the basis on which every police officer has to be mandatorily tested. Now where you put it, whether you put it in the Police Act, whether you put it as part of the employment contract, that every policeman before he signs the recruit, before they sign to get their full-time employment, it says there as part of the conditions that they will require just as you have uniform requirements, you have haircut requirements, I mean you have certain mandatory requirements. I can't imagine, personally I would not want a policeman to be a recruit, to become a policeman if he were not willing to sign thing that says I am willing to be tested whenever you feel like. I mean I don't want that policeman. And I think if he doesn't join after recruit, he can go back to wherever he came from.

So, the point I am making is we support you completely in it. How you achieve that, I think that it will be bulky and cumbersome for us to put it into the constitution because this is something only for the police and it already applies to people. I gave you examples of the pilots and that is not in the constitution but they don't have a problem because it's written into their job, their pilot contract that they must agree to that and if they don't agree to it, then they don't get the contract signed off.

I just want to take you back so I am very clear about this and I appreciate very much your, shall I say your courage in suggesting that you needed the independence of operations.

Just in principle, I think that you have made a very cogent argument for it. It is difficult to be tied to an administrative or executive directive that may not align with operational processes and I think, let me just make sure that I am clear. You have asked that we repeal section 129 subsection 6 which is the minister responsible for Fiji police force may from time-to-time issue general policy directions and if such direction has been issued, the commission of police must act in accordance with it.

I think that that is, you know, we have one of the mandates that we were asked to address in terms of the, what do we call them, the deficits, the democratic deficits. One of them was the consolidation of too much power in certain offices and I guess what I read in this is a requirement or a request that we keep the commission of police's operations independent of directions from other people who may not be aware from the operational point of view. Is that correct?

Mr. Soko: You correct Sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. Okay. Along similar lines and related to what was brought up in terms of the delegation of power, obviously we want accountability, we want separation of powers so that we have independence but inherently that is the need for accountability which means who does he answer to if he doesn't answer to the minister and I presume that in the case of his appointment, he is appointed by the constitutional officer's commission.

In the case of appointing his successor, I might suggest that one of the things that we might consider is that maybe the constitutional officers commission should be involved in the appointment rather than for the same argument that you have about keeping him independent and not allowing the executive to select somebody else that they may favor or be partial to. The same argument could be that if the police commissioner were to appoint someone else, then maybe it would be someone that he personally is favoring partial to and just as he can't appoint himself as the commissioner of police when the commissioner of police is from the constitutional officers commission, maybe the constitutional officers commission should be the people to appoint his replacement given that the person that replaces him acting temporary or whatever jurisdiction will have the same powers as the commissioner. Just something for you to think about as an alternative to having the commissioner appointed and that would be the argument for it and maybe you can modify the submission to maybe give us that kind of latitude.

Because I can tell you, we agree that you need that operational efficiency and independence. Our minds haven't been made up. We'll be discussing this amongst ourselves, but at the same time, the issue of delegation of powers, your argument is that you don't want to be influenced by waiting for the executive to direct you to do it.

The same argument can be then if you allow the commissioner of police to have the prerogative, then he might put his cousin brother or whoever. That would not be desirable and just as he can't appoint himself a commission of constitutional officer's commission does it, maybe they can be the ones to appoint the successor on his advice. I guess most of these are always done in consultation with. Thank you.

Mr. Krishna: Through you chair. All the suggestion are taken note of. We are still waiting for a deputy commissioner to be acting in his place for a Temporary absence from the office. In comparison with the other two authorities, which is FCAC and DPP, which is also consistently recognized where the appointment of the deputy is provided for.

Thanks very much for the guidance which you have given, the doubt which was raised that the commissioner may appoint somebody. I believe the commissioner, once appointed, is of that caliber and is under scrutiny of all the decisions he or she will take to ensure that the appointment is legitimate and also all the procedures have been followed. Under the constitution, I believe the commissioner should be able to recognize the right person to relieve him in the brief absence from the office. Thank you very much, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Conway.

Mr. Beg: In section 1.26, all I hear is the Minister can direct the commissioner. In that framework the issue is all I here is that the Minister can direct the commissioner on the evidence that he or she must act in accordance with language So, there is a constitutional gap. You are saying that it compromises operational independence. That is what I am hearing. So, the direction is to remove the mandatory direction clause? Correct?

Mr. Soko: That is correct, sir.

Mr. Beg: Thank you. So going on, the second issue is inconsistency with other institutions. You mentioned DPP, FICAC and RFMF military are more independent, right? So constitutional gap is there is uneven institutional design.

Isn't that cohesion? Is that correct? So, the direction is you are saying that the police or you wish or your suggestion or proposal is align the police with the independent bodies. That is from what we have discussed. I am just trying to tabilize it. And lastly, the public perception of pollicization is the undermining trust. I think that is the evidence. So, the trust from the public.

In the constitution, very weak public trust. Very weak. So, you are saying replace this with a policy guidance only. Sorry, that is the direction that you want us to consider. But yeah, just reinforcing those points. And then the delegation of commission of powers, I agree with the comments that we are saying and there is a lot of evidence.

I mean, particularly risk of external interference. I think that we have been seeing a lot of that at the moment. And constitutional gap, there is no explicit constitutional clarity. Well, at least to my opinion. I mean, from what I see. So, the direction is to allow the commissioners to appoint the delegate. Is that correct? From what I am hearing.

Second issue, under the delegation of commission of powers, command continuity and risk in this area, right? So, the evidence is the leadership is very uncertain. Is that what I am hearing? A lot of it is coming through this is uncertainty in the direction of leadership.

And then the gap in the constitution is there is no guarantee of like authority of chain of command in this. I mean, that is what I am seeing. But they have reinforced it and I agree with that.

The other point that I think that concerns me is you brought up the use of force. Now, the use of force, there is no explicit constitutional standard that I can see around the world. But you have mentioned New Zealand and the UK.

What about Australia? But the evidence is defined only in the police act and administration orders. Where does that sit? Is that what you are asking for that to sit in the constitution? So, I am saying is that something for us to consider? Two, is the legal risk to the officers. Now, hesitation in critical situations, that kind of risk is also safeguarded, is imposed back onto the officers.

So, that in the constitution, there is a lack of protection framework. So, what you are asking for us to consider that or look at that in that retrospect? Yeah, the direction for us is we need more legal threshold to consider that in my opinion. Then the public mistrust under this force act is the perceived excessive force by the police.

That is the perception of the public. But in the constitution, there is no unified benchmark. But I assume that in your submissions, you may want to include that.

So, that is something for us to look at and consider because we need to be fair. We need to look at best practice policies. But I hear you.

I mean, I thank you for your presentation along these matters. I can go on, but I think most of it is probably the other one was the digital framework. I think you were talking about the digital space there.

Sorry, if I can just go back to my notes. You talk about digital surveillance unclear, right? So, the evidence that you are providing before us is the cyber-crime and the encrypted data challenges that you face, right? So constitutional gap in here is that they are very silent on digital interpretation. Is that what you are asking for us to consider? So that is something we need to look at and discuss amongst ourselves.

The evidence of loss, like loss risk, like the, I guess, you know, the delay in warrants you talk about leads to the destruction of evidence quite clearly. You have presented this as something that I have heard and it is affecting your operations and your work. Again, the constitutional gap, no emergency or interceptions or things are provided in these provisions.

Then there is the legal uncertainty, you know, that the officers are hesitating to act. You know, they are clear on these directions. Again, the constitutional gap here is that the risk of evidence is exclusion in the court.

So, you have to be careful how we present this. So that is something our commission needs to look at and how we present that. But I thank you for your wonderful submission and I agree with my fellow commissioners.

There is a lot to chew on and I don't, it is a thankless task out there that you are going through and I appreciate your service to the country and to the people of Fiji. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Just a quick one. I just realized this when Commissioner Beg was speaking. On the right to privacy, you know, the proposed amendment that you mentioned, say, for argument's sake, this wish is granted, sir, this wish is granted, where will the safeguards appear? How will you ensure us that these safeguards are written and available? So, the three safeguards that you mentioned, where will they appear? And how will they be linked? And how will they be enforced?

Mr. Soko: Mr. Chair, on the safeguards, it can be included in the Police Act to make it more operational and it is rightly linked, as you mentioned earlier, that we want to link all our work to be effective, to align with the Constitution and also in terms of policies to make sure that there is no abuse.

And ensure the privacy of the general public in terms of ascertaining those evidence. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Gentlemen, I believe we have come to the end of our consultation this morning. You have made excellent presentations this morning and your written submission. You have heard questions from the Commissioners. You have also heard comments from the Commissioners, comments which point you towards particular matters which need to be discussed by the Police and which we have to consider in our deliberations regarding the 2013 Constitution.

We have heard you. It was our duty to hear from you and record what you say and please entertain, receive and think about the comments that have been made. If you wish to make further submissions arising from the comments which you have heard from the Commissioners, please do so and send those additional submissions to us. But all in all, it has been a wonderful session. We get your point. We get your point.

You want the legislation not to be in conflict with the Constitution. So, we will look at that very carefully. Drugs, privacy, there is a right to privacy and people always shout that out whenever the police officers want to do surveillance, want to enter into compounds.

I understand because those are what are challenged in court most of the time. So, we will have a good look at the matters that you have raised this morning. And I take this time to thank you very much and regards to the Commissioner of the Police and I hope the Fiji Police force well in your duties. Thank you.

Submission to the Constitution Review Commission
By the Fiji Police Force

Honourable Chairperson of the Constitution Review Commission, Distinguished Commissioners,
Esteemed members of the public,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

1. Introduction

On behalf of the Commissioner of Police, we present the Fiji Police Force's (FPF) submission grounded in operational experience, constitutional responsibility, and informed by international best practices.

The Constitution of the Republic of Fiji 2013 (the Constitution) is the supreme law of our nation. It protects the rights of our people while defining the authority and limits of institutions entrusted with maintaining law and order.

For policing and the criminal justice system, one principle must guide us: Strong rights protection must be matched with clear, practical, and enforceable operational frameworks.

Across Commonwealth jurisdictions, this balance is achieved through constitutional safeguards supported by clear enabling legislation, defined institutional roles, and independent oversight.

2. Context and Current Challenges

Since the adoption of the Constitution, Fiji has made commendable progress in strengthening democratic governance and protecting fundamental rights.
However, from an operational policing and criminal justice perspective, several challenges have emerged:

- Ambiguity in the operational application of certain rights provisions
- Limited enabling legislation to support constitutional intent
- [redacted]
- Application of the Use of Force
- Gaps in independent oversight mechanisms, and
- Emerging threats not fully contemplated within existing frameworks.

These challenges highlight the need to refine not replace the Constitution, ensuring it remains fit for purpose in a modern and evolving security environment.

3. Key Areas for review and Reform

3.1. Operational Clarity in Rights Provisions

3.1.1. Section 24 of the Constitution guarantees the Right to Personal Privacy, a cornerstone of democratic society. However, in practice, this presents challenges in:

- Digital investigations
- Surveillance operations
- Intelligence gathering
- Cybercrime enforcement

Without clear enabling legislation, law enforcement faces either:

- Operational limitation, or
- Legal vulnerability in court proceedings

Comparative Jurisdictions

- United Kingdom – Investigatory Powers Act 2016:
  Provides lawful authority, judicial oversight, and strict thresholds for surveillance
- New Zealand – Search and Surveillance Act 2012:
  Clearly defines police powers with judicial authorization and safeguards

Honourable Commissioners, jurisdictions such as the United Kingdom and New Zealand demonstrate that privacy is not weakened by clarity it is strengthened by it.

3.3 Strengthening Accountability and Oversight

Public confidence depends on credible and independent oversight.

Comparative Jurisdictions

- United Kingdom – Independent Office for Police Conduct (IOPC)
- New Zealand – Independent Police Conduct Authority (IPCA)

Both provide civilian-led, independent investigation into complaints and serious incidents.

Independent oversight does not weaken policing, it legitimizes it.

3.4 Emerging Threats and Future Readiness

Fiji faces evolving threats including:

- Transnational organized crime
- Drug trafficking
- Cybercrime, and
- Maritime and border security risks

Comparative Jurisdictions

- Singapore: Strong legislative backing for cyber and organized crime
- INTERPOL Standards: Intelligence-led, coordinated global policing

Fiji must be constitutionally enabled to respond to modern threats with clarity and confidence.

4. Why Reform is Necessary

Without reform:

- Operational effectiveness may be constrained
- Criminal networks may exploit legal ambiguity
- Institutional accountability gaps may persist
- Public confidence may decline

With reform:

- Policing becomes more consistent and professional
- Justice outcomes improve
- Public trust is strengthened
- Fiji aligns with international best practices

5. Guiding Principles for Reform

5.1 FPF is submitting recommendations on the Constitution review based on the following:

1. Balance – Rights and enforcement must coexist
2. Clarity – Remove ambiguity, contradiction in law and roles
3. Accountability – Strengthen oversight mechanisms
4. Integration – Align Police and Military, and
5. Future-readiness – Address evolving threats

5.2 Recommendations on specific sections

6. Section 11(3)

Subject: Proposal for a Limited Exception to Section 11(3) for Mandatory Drug Testing within the FPF.

Section 11(3) of the Constitution of Fiji, states that

> "(3) Every person has the right to freedom from scientific or medical treatment or procedures without an order of the court or without his or her informed consent, or if he or she is incapable of giving informed consent, without the informed consent of a lawful guardian."

Proposal for Constitutional Amendment: Section 11(3)

a) Rationale

This proposal seeks to introduce a specific, narrow exception to Section 11(3) of the Constitution. The objective is to empower the FPF to conduct mandatory drug testing of its personnel. This amendment is essential to ensure the integrity of law enforcement, protect public safety, and maintain the "Right to Security of the Person" for the broader Fijian population.

b) The Current Challenge

Currently, Section 11(3) provides an absolute right to freedom from medical procedures without informed consent or a court order. While this is a vital human rights protection, its broad application creates a "legal vacuum" for disciplined services.

i. Operational Risk: Officers under the influence of illicit substances pose a direct threat to public safety and the rule of law.
ii. Institutional Integrity: The inability to mandate testing hinders the FPF's ability to purge internal corruption and drug-related criminal influence.
iii. Legal Impasse: Relying on voluntary testing or individual court orders for every instance is administratively impossible and legally fragile.

c) Proposed Amendment

It is proposed that Section 11(3) be amended to include a proviso or a new subsection (4), which may be drafted as follows:

> "(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), a law may provide for the mandatory medical testing of members of the Fiji Police Force and other disciplined forces for the presence of illicit substances, provided that such testing is:

a) Conducted in accordance with prescribed regulations to ensure accuracy and privacy; and

b) Necessary and proportionate for the maintenance of public order, national security, and the integrity of the disciplined force."

d) Justification and Safeguards

To ensure this amendment does not lead to abuse, the proposal is built on the following pillars:

- Public Interest Limitation: Under international human rights law, certain rights may be limited if the limitation is "prescribed by law" and "necessary in a democratic society." Policing is a high-stakes profession where sobriety is a functional requirement.
- Procedural Fairness: The exception would not be a "blank check." It must be supported by a revised Police Act that outlines strict protocols for how samples are taken, handled, and contested.
- Deterrence: Explicit constitutional authority sends a clear message that the FPF is a drug-free institution, restoring public confidence in the police.

Amending Section 11(3) is not a removal of a right, but a balancing of rights. The right of an individual officer to refuse a medical procedure must be weighed against the right of the Fijian public to be protected by a sober, disciplined, and reliable police force. We urge the Commission to consider this amendment as a critical step in the modernisation of Fiji's national security framework.

7. Section 24(1) Right to privacy

Subject To enable the conduct of digital covert surveillance with judicial oversight.

It seeks to balance the fundamental right to privacy with the operational necessity of modern, intelligence-led policing.

a) Rationale

The primary objective of this proposal is to transition the Fiji Police Force (FPF) from a reactive model to an intelligence-led policing framework. In an era where criminal activity ranging from cybercrime to transnational organized syndicates operates at the speed of light, the law must provide the tools necessary to intercept threats before they manifest. By establishing a clear constitutional basis for digital covert surveillance, we ensure that policing is effective while remaining firmly anchored in the principle of judicial oversight.

b) Current Challenge

Under the current interpretation of Section 24(1), there is a perceived lack of clarity regarding the boundaries of digital interception and financial tracking. This creates two significant hurdles:

- Operational Stagnation: Law enforcement is often hesitant to utilize advanced proactive tools (digital surveillance, communication interception) due to the high risk of legal challenge or "breach of rights" litigation.
- Evidentiary Loss: The current legal landscape does not sufficiently account for the volatility of digital evidence. The time required to secure a traditional warrant often results in the permanent concealment, encryption, or destruction of critical evidence.

c) Proposed Amendment

The FPF proposes an amendment to Section 24 of the Constitution to explicitly allow for lawful surveillance and emergency interventions.

The Proposed Text:

"A police officer may exercise the power to arrest or search without warrant when the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that such action is immediately necessary to prevent the concealment, loss, or destruction of anything connected with an offence.

Furthermore, the State shall have the power to conduct digital covert surveillance and communication interception, provided such actions are conducted under a judicial warrant or meet strictly defined national security and public safety thresholds."

d) Proposal: A police officer may exercise the power to arrest/search without warrant when the officer has reasons to believe that it is necessary to do so in order to prevent the concealment, loss or destruction of anything connected with an offence.

e) Justifications

The inclusion of these powers is justified by the evolving nature of the modern "crime scene":

- Prevention of Frustrated Justice: The "search without warrant" clause is designed specifically for exigent circumstances. If an officer must wait hours for a warrant while a suspect is actively deleting a digital ledger or flushing physical evidence, the judicial process is defeated before it begins.
- Modernization of the State: Explicit constitutional recognition of digital surveillance removes the "legal grey area," providing officers with the confidence to use modern technology to track financial crimes and terror threats.
- Public Safety: In matters of national security, the ability to intercept communications can be the difference between preventing a crime and merely investigating one after the damage is done.

f) Safeguards

To ensure these powers do not infringe upon the democratic spirit of Fiji, the following safeguards are integral to the proposal:

- The "Reasonableness" Test: Any warrantless search or arrest must be able to withstand judicial scrutiny post-facto. The officer must document and prove that the risk of "loss or destruction" was immediate and genuine.
- Mandatory Judicial Oversight: Except in cases of immediate physical danger, digital covert surveillance must be predicated on a warrant issued by a member of the Judiciary.
- Strict Thresholds: "National Security" and "Public Safety" must be narrowly defined by supporting legislation to prevent "mission creep" into the private lives of law-abiding citizens.
- Accountability Mechanisms: Any misuse of these powers should result in the exclusion of evidence in court and disciplinary action against the offending officers, ensuring that the right to privacy remains a respected pillar of Fijian law.

8. Section 129*(6) The Minister responsible for the Fiji Police Force may from time to time issue general policy directions to the Commissioner of Police and, if such a direction has been issued, the Commissioner of Police must act in accordance with it.*

Subject – Structural Independence of the FPF

This proposal addresses the structural independence of the (FPF). It seeks to align the operational autonomy of the Commissioner of Police with established democratic principles, ensuring that law enforcement remains a neutral instrument of the law rather than a subject of political administration.

a) Rationale

The fundamental rationale for this amendment is the Doctrine of Police Independence. In a robust democracy, the police must operate as a neutral instrument of the law, accountable to the Constitution rather than the shifting priorities of the executive branch. True independence ensures that:

- Neutrality: Investigative decisions and resource allocations are based on objective merit and public safety.
- Professionalism: Personnel management and operational tactics remain free from political influence or the perception of such influence.
- Trust: Public confidence is bolstered when the citizenry perceives the police as an impartial body serving the State, not the government of the day.

b) Current Challenge

The current framework under Section 129(6) creates a mandatory obligation where the Commissioner "must act in accordance" with ministerial directions. This presents several critical challenges:

- Institutional Inconsistency (Asymmetry): There is a stark discrepancy between the FPF and other enforcement or security bodies. The Republic of Fiji Military Forces (RFMF) under Section 131, the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption (FICAC) under Section 115, and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP) under Section 117 all enjoy high degrees of operational autonomy. The FPF, which interacts most frequently with the public, lacks this level of protection.

- Perception of Politicization: The mandatory language ("must act") risks undermining public trust, as it suggests policing priorities can be dictated by political agendas.
- Operational Interference: General policy directions can inadvertently drift into operational matters, complicating the Commissioner's ability to exercise professional command and control.

c) Proposed Amendment

The FPF proposes the repeal of Section 129(6) and the introduction of new provisions that align the FPF with the independence models of FICAC and the ODPP.

The Proposed Text:

(1) In the exercise of his or her powers and functions, the Commissioner of Police shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority, except as provided by this Constitution or by an Act of Parliament.

(2) The overall responsibilities of the Fiji Police Force shall be the maintenance of law and order, the preservation of the peace, the protection of life and property, the prevention and detection of crime and the enforcement of all laws and regulations with which it is directly charged; and shall be entitled to have armories for the performance of any such duties to carry arms.

(3) The Minister may issue general policy guidelines regarding the strategic priorities of the Force; however, the Commissioner shall have the final authority on operational command, including investigations, deployment, and internal administration.

d) Justifications

- Institutional Parity: It is logical and necessary for the FPF to have the same constitutional standing as FICAC and the ODPP. As the primary body responsible for criminal investigations, the FPF must be as independent as the body that prosecutes those crimes.

- Alignment with National Security Standards: Granting the FPF a similar arrangement to the RFMF ensures a consistent national security framework where professional heads are empowered to lead based on expertise and statutory duty.
- Strengthening the Rule of Law: Removing the mandatory "direction" clause reinforces the principle that the police serve the people and the law, ensuring that no individual or political office is above the legal process.

e) Safeguards

The FPF recognizes that "independence" is not "insulation" from accountability. To prevent the abuse of power, the following safeguards remain integral:

- Constitutional Oversight: The Commissioner remains accountable to the Constitutional Offices Commission (COC) regarding performance, conduct, and appointment standards.
- Parliamentary Transparency: The Commissioner will continue to submit an Annual Report to Parliament, providing full transparency on how the Force has met strategic objectives and utilized its public budget.
- Judicial Review: All decisions made by the Commissioner remain subject to the oversight of the High Court. This ensures that independence is exercised within the bounds of the law.
- Strategic Consultation: The Commissioner will maintain a consultative relationship with the Line Minister. This allows for the alignment of policing with national security goals through "guidelines" and "cooperation" rather than "directives" and "mandates."

9. Use of Force

This proposal outlines the FPF's submission regarding the Constitutional Regulation of the Use of Force. It seeks to codify the principles of necessity and proportionality within the supreme law to provide clear legal protection for officers while ensuring the highest standards of human rights and public accountability.

a) Rationale

The state holds a monopoly on the legitimate use of force to maintain public order and protect the lives of its citizens. The rationale for this proposal is to establish a unified constitutional standard for the use of force. By grounding these powers in the Constitution rather than solely in subordinate legislation (like the Police Act), the FPF ensures that every application of force from physical restraint to the use of firearms is balanced against the fundamental right to life and the right to be free from cruel or degrading treatment.

b) Current Challenge

Currently, the specific thresholds for the use of force are largely defined in administrative standing orders and the Police Act, which can be subject to varying interpretations in a court of law. This creates two primary challenges:

- Legal Vulnerability of Officers: In high-stakes tactical situations, the lack of an explicit constitutional "shield" regarding the lawful use of force can lead to hesitation, potentially endangering the lives of officers and the public.
- Inconsistency in Accountability: Without a clear constitutional mandate on "proportionality," judicial and internal reviews of police conduct may lack a consistent benchmark, leading to public mistrust or perceived impunity in cases of alleged excess.

c) Proposed Amendment

The FPF proposes the insertion of a new subsection under the provisions relating to Law Enforcement or the Bill of Rights to explicitly govern the Use of Force.

The Proposed Text:

"(1) A police officer or any person authorized by law may use such force as is reasonably necessary and proportionate in the circumstances for the purpose of:

- Effecting a lawful arrest or preventing the escape of a person in legal custody;

- Protecting any person from unlawful violence;
- Preventing the commission of a serious criminal offense; or
- Suppressing a riot or insurrection.

(2) The use of lethal force shall only be permitted as a last resort where there is an immediate threat of death or serious injury to the officer or another person."

d) Justifications

- Standardization of Conduct: Codifying "Necessity and Proportionality" ensures that every officer understands the legal ceiling of their authority. It removes ambiguity regarding when force is justified.
- Alignment with International Law: This proposal aligns Fiji's constitutional framework with the UN Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, enhancing Fiji's standing in the international human rights community.
- Public and Officer Safety: Clearer laws lead to better training and more decisive action in crisis situations, such as active shooter scenarios or violent civil unrest, where delayed action can result in loss of life.

e) Safeguards

To ensure this power is never abused, the following safeguards are proposed as constitutional requirements:

- Mandatory Reporting: Any use of force resulting in injury or death must be the subject of a mandatory written report and an automatic internal investigation.
- The "Proportionality" Test: The Constitution shall require that the force used must be the minimum amount necessary to achieve the lawful objective. If a lesser means was available and discarded without reason, the use of force is deemed unlawful.
- Independent Oversight: In cases involving the discharge of firearms or serious injury, the Fiji Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission or an independent police oversight body must have the power to conduct a parallel investigation.
- Duty of Care: The amendment will include a requirement that once a person is subdued or in custody, the police have an immediate constitutional duty to provide medical assistance if force was applied.

10. Delegation of Powers

a) Rationale

The rationale for this proposal is to safeguard the Command Integrity of the FPF. The Commissioner of Police (COMPOL), as the professional head of the organization, is best positioned to determine which senior officer possesses the specific operational readiness and leadership competence to manage the Force in their absence. By establishing this as a sole prerogative, the FPF ensures that leadership continuity is a matter of professional judgment rather than administrative or political appointment.

b) Current Challenge

- External Interference: Without an explicit "sole prerogative" clause, the process of naming an Acting Commissioner even for short durations can become susceptible to external influence or "office of the minister" directives.
- Operational Ambiguity: If the selection process is not clearly defined as the Commissioner's personal mandate, it can lead to internal jockeying or uncertainty among the Deputy Commissioner (DCP) and Assistant Commissioner (ACP) ranks, which undermines the "single line of command" essential for national security.
- Limited Scope of Acting Appointments: Current frameworks often treat "Acting" roles as mere placeholders. This lacks the constitutional weight required for a delegate to take decisive legal actions across all relevant legislations.

c) Proposed Amendment

The FPF proposes that the Constitution explicitly recognize the Commissioner's exclusive authority to designate their temporary successor.

The Proposed Text:

"(1) The Commissioner of Police has the sole prerogative to select and designate, in writing, a Deputy Commissioner of Police or an Assistant Commissioner of Police to exercise the full powers and functions of the Office of the Commissioner during any period of the Commissioner's absence or temporary incapacity.

(2) The officer so designated shall have the authority to act and execute all statutory duties, discretions, and powers vested in the Commissioner by this Constitution or any other written law, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in such law.

(3) This power of selection is an internal command function and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority."

d) Justifications

- Reinforcing Independence: This amendment is a practical application of the Doctrine of Police Independence. If the Commissioner chooses their own delegate, it prevents the Executive from "installing" a preferred officer during the Commissioner's absence.
- Leadership Trust: Effective policing requires a seamless transition of trust. The Commissioner must be able to delegate to the officer they trust most with sensitive intelligence and ongoing high-level investigations.
- Legal Efficiency: By granting the delegate the power to "act" (not just "endorse") across all legislation, the FPF eliminates the risk of legal challenges in the High Court regarding the validity of warrants or orders signed by an Acting Commissioner.

e) Safeguards

- Rank-Limited Delegation: The "sole prerogative" is restricted to the DCP and ACP ranks only, ensuring that power never falls below a constitutionally vetted level of seniority.
- Documentary Record: Any such delegation must be made via a formal written instrument, providing a clear legal trail for the Judiciary and the public to know who holds the authority at any given time.

- Time-Bound Nature: This prerogative applies only to temporary absences. In the event of a permanent vacancy or long-term incapacity, the standard constitutional appointment process via the Constitutional Offices Commission (COC) would still apply.
- Continued Accountability: The officer exercising the delegated power remains fully accountable to the law and the COC for any actions taken during the acting period.

11. Conclusion

Honourable Chair and Commissioners,

The proposals submitted by the FPF today are anchored in a singular, non-negotiable principle: the Doctrine of Police Independence. For our democracy to remain resilient, the Police Force must function as an institutional cornerstone that is shielded from the shifting currents of political administration. We do not seek to operate outside the law, but rather to ensure that we are governed only by the law.

The FPF is the primary interface between the State and the rights of its citizens. Therefore, it is a constitutional necessity that the Commissioner of Police be granted the same structural autonomy already afforded to the Republic of Fiji Military Forces, the ODPP, and FICAC. By removing the mandate for ministerial direction and clarifying the Commissioner's sole prerogative in matters of command and delegation, we ensure that policing decisions from tactical operations to the use of force are made with professional integrity and objective merit.

This submission is a call for Institutional Maturity. We are asking for a Constitution that empowers the Force to be a neutral instrument of justice, accountable to the people of Fiji through the Judiciary and the Constitution, rather than a subject of executive policy. In doing so, we strengthen the Rule of Law, safeguard the fundamental rights of every Fijian, and ensure that the FPF remains a professional, apolitical, and trusted guardian of our nation.

We thank the Commission for this opportunity and stand ready to provide further technical and legislative support to see these vital reforms realized.

Vinaka vakalevu and God Bless our Beloved Fiji.

Fiji Medical Association (FMA)

Fiji Medical Association
Time: 2.00pm-2.45pm
Date: 21-04-2026

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Vakamocea, on behalf of my two colleagues, I welcome you to the Constitution Review Commission this afternoon. First, we thank you very much for your attendance, following the invitation that was sent to the FMA. We are glad that you, thank you for the written submissions which we have just received.

The Constitution Review Commission is being tasked with reviewing the 2013 Constitution. It comments in relation to it, for and against. Despite that, we are moving forward in relation to the review.

And part of the review, or towards the review, is listening to citizens of this country, or people of Fiji, to come and give their views in relation to the 2013 Constitution to this commission. Our task is to collect submissions, collect views, collect ideas, and so forth. After which, we will consider those submissions, and if need be, try to put them into a report.

But that is at the end of the line. As for this afternoon, it is just our task to listen to you. With me this afternoon are two of the commissioners. In total, there should be seven of us. Two have just gone to the FBC for a broadcast session there. We are trying to reach as many people as possible around Fiji.

In addition to this, for the past three weeks, we have been doing consultations here at Level 9, Suvavou House. From the first week of May, we will be going out to the country. We are trying to come up as large an area as possible, and speak to as many people as possible.

We understand that this Constitution, one of the critical points, which has created a lot of criticism, is that we did not know about it. There was a lack of consultation, public consultation, and that is what we are trying to remedy here. Before amendment, let's get these views from the people.

So, we are glad to have you. We've got Mr. Conway Beg on my right, and Dr. Fatiaki, as you would well know, here on my left. I'm told that, no, I won't go into that. So, with those few words, I invite you to please make your submissions to the Commission. Thank you.

Dr. Vakamocea: Thank you. Yes, on behalf of the Fiji Medical Association, I'd just like to thank the Commission for the invitation to come and participate in this very important consultation. So, I bring you salutations from the Fiji Medical Association, representing the President and the Executive Committee. So, just in summary, the Fiji Medical Association, under the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act, we represent the voice of all doctors in the country.

And we have decided to word our submission to the Commission today around the sections that are particularly of importance to the medical fraternity in the country. We have intentionally decided to stay away from discussions around some of the more controversial bits of the Constitution, like the identity. For us, we feel that's almost a non-issue, regardless of what identity or ethnicity anybody holds dear to them, we will treat you the same.

So, things like that we have decided to stay away from and just focus on the important issues that we feel need to be strengthened in the Constitution. So, basically, we have just five things to discuss.

The first is, particularly under Section 38, the right to health. While the current Constitution guarantees this, we feel that there's some strengthening that could be added to it, and that is mostly around the resourcing. So, the current section talks about the right to health, including access to health services and conditions necessary for good health. The proposed strengthening that FMA would like to suggest is that it includes that the state has a responsibility to maintain competent, ethical, and a supported medical workforce.

And also, to look at professional bodies like the Fiji Medical Association or the Fiji Nursing Association as not merely just stakeholders, but partners. And this would improve things like information sharing between the ministry and these professional bodies. So, that's the first thing, just around Section 38.

The second one is looking at professional independence and clinical autonomy. So, this is with reference to Sections 1, 16, and 38. And our submission is, basically, that the Constitution recognizes that health professionals need to be able to exercise their independent clinical judgment, while ensuring consistency with law and professional standards, without being influenced by administration.

So, at times, what we've seen on the ground is that even though we have a particular clinical decision, or we've made a clinical judgment, sometimes we get pressure from the administration to adjust our clinical judgment. And we feel that that's something that our doctors, our medical staff on the ground need to be protected against. And we saw a lot of this, some of this during COVID, and there's been many other examples where clinicians have been asked to adjust their decision by administration. So, that's one of the areas that we would like to see a bit more protection around.

The third one is around statutory councils, like, for example, the Fiji Medical Council, and ensuring that they are able to perform their functions, again, independently. A particular reference here is in one of the amendments to the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act, 2010.

It gives the Minister for Health almost veto powers. So, for example, if an application for registration of a doctor comes into Fiji from, say, from an external country, and the council does its due diligence, and does background checks and everything, and at the end of that process, it says that this person cannot be registered according to the standards set by the council in Fiji, the minister then has veto powers according to the Act to overrule that. And that's something that we feel should be protected in the constitution, that statutory professional councils be independent from their ministers.

I mean, obviously, there'll be certain caveats, like, you know, if the issue has a legal issue, or if there's procedural fairness that's there, then obviously the minister should be able to contest that decision. But, yeah, we just want to make sure that those professional councils are protected from issues like that, that can arise. And then this is one you're probably also going to hear from other bodies in health, like the nurses, for example.

And it's around human resources. And what we'd like to see strengthening is reasonable measures being taken by the government to ensure that safe, humane and sustainable work conditions exist for health professionals. And so, like, we've seen this on the ground many times where our staff need to work, you know, not just long hours, but sometimes even without electricity and water.

And those are, like, basic things that you need in health in order to be able to deliver a standard service. So, we want to ensure that this is enshrined in the constitution, that the ministry needs to ensure, that government needs to ensure the protection of its workers, especially when they get posted out into the health sector.

And the last one is another interesting one. So, under the Act, the Fiji Medical Association has the responsibility of expressing its views to the public when there's issues with the health system. And also educating the public on matters of national importance when it comes to health. Now we feel that at this point, a lot of our doctors are inhibited from being able to discuss this without getting the prior permission of the Permanent Secretary. And we feel that as doctors, this should be a basic right, that we're able to do these kinds of professional advocacy without having to keep securing permission.

So, doctors should have the right to speak responsibly on issues that affect healthcare delivery without having to seek permission from the Ministry of Health. Because sometimes there's a bit of a conflict of interest.

A good example of this is a recent memo released by one of the Permanent Secretaries, which basically tells medical staff to refrain from discussing issues at CWM. And these are important issues that affect patient safety and quality care. Things like that shouldn't be included in the constitution.

So, we'd like to make sure that our medical staff on the ground are able to speak responsibly about issues that affect the public without having to seek permission. So, commissioners, in summary, it's those aspects that we'd like tightened up. And yeah, you have the submissions in front of you. And we'll be happy to take any questions that you have.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Alipate and Michael. It's a pleasure, first, to have you both here. I thank you on behalf of the commissioners for the work that you do on behalf of the profession. And I thank you for taking the time and the effort to prepare a formal submission to the commission. I declared a conflict of, I wouldn't say a conflict of interest, but I declared the fact that I was very close to you folks in more ways than not, and that I might not be asking too many questions.

Having said that, I think that all the things that you've incorporated here have in various ways been brought to us by some of the other submittees. This morning, we had the Fiji police force. I understand from my daughter that there's a picture of me looking very animated this morning. She said, who are you attacking, Dad? That was sent to me at lunch hour. And I said, I think that was the Fiji Police Force. And it was an animated discussion.

But we were coming, and sorry, I relate this to yours, and I have a personal thing because I was in the medical council when the issue, for instance, of the registration of doctors in Fiji was taken away from the independent professional body that is not only tasked with, but has the absolute right to, and the expertise to make determinations about whether somebody should practice in Fiji or be given a medical license. I have no doubt that this raises bells with you, Conway, as a professional architect. I'm sure that you would feel that your professional body should.

And the idea that we went to a point where basically there was a committee of permanent secretaries who could decide that in the interest of the nation, they could approve doctors to practice in Fiji, send that list up to the Fiji medical council, and expect us to then say, rubber stamp, yes.

So that aspect of keeping the independence of the profession was something that the police force brought up as a constitutional office of not having to be told by the minister to do this or to do that, given that the minister is a political appointee. And that they should be, after they've been appointed under the Constitutional Officers Commission, be given the opportunity to operationalize their work without these looming overheads.

So, this issue of independence in the Constitution, I noticed that there is very specific mention of these Constitutional Officers Commission's appointments, of the Commission of Police and others. I looked under the public service, which was allocated to my colleague. I didn't have that section, but I noticed that there isn't any specific to the profession.

There is about the public service and public servants, because a lot of the issues that you have raised are pertinent. And as a professional, as a doctor that deals with life and death decisions, I know that we make decisions every day that are hard and difficult, not easy to make, whereas bureaucrats in government offices will often make decisions that don't look at the matter the way that a doctor sees it. My comments really relate to the fact that I couldn't agree with you more.

Given the gravity of the written stuff, I, as an aside, I always tell my Constitutional Commission, when it comes to the Bill of Rights, we found that a lot of them had one line, this is your right, and then about eight qualifiers that basically took away your right, or gave the government the ability to enact a law to take away your right. In this instance, though, I want to suggest to my fellow commissioners that we look at actually including some of your submissions into the right to health. So, where it says right to health, right now they talk about, I think, 1, 2, 3, subsections 1, 2, 3, the reasonable measures within the available resources.

I refer you to subsection 3, they say, well, if the government says they don't have the resources, they must prove, they must provide. It's the responsibility of the state to show that the resources are not available, which means that they can't use, oh, we don't have the resources, therefore we're not providing accommodation for the nurses or the doctors. But I take, like I say, I take back from what I always suggest for the Bill of Rights, because I can't find any other place in the Constitution that I would put it in.

And despite the fact that I refer a lot of the people who bring things to the Constitution commission to include, I tell them, look, you'd be better handled if you put it into your respective acts. For me, this is so important, that some of this can be incorporated under your Right to Health. And I would like to assure you that we will consider that seriously.

I think you've put it in a way and in a form that allows us to selectively, we will have expert drafters who will draft this, that we will caution them about not making this over-encompassing. But I can't see that anything you've asked for could not be included under the right to health and be encompassing. You know, if we included the nurse's body, the FMA, I'm sorry, the Fiji Medical Council, Fiji nurses, and we put them into it as the recognized bodies represented, I'm sure that we can do that as one-liners.

That somehow makes it extremely difficult for the PS to direct doctors to the blanket, don't talk to anybody about it. I mean, you already have it under the right to information and the right to free speech, but if it's put there specifically for health, I think that's important. I don't, now that the media is here, I don't want to, but the fact that we got a pathologist report released in the last three days that says, you know, I mean for us doctors, we know, you know, it's say at your peril, but I think all of us salute him for writing what he found.

And I think the public of Fiji, when it comes to issues of health and personal well-being, would take the attitude that this, I want to trust you doctor. I want to trust you with my life, and I want to trust you with information and the disclosure of information. So, there's an example where this aspect of, and like I say, I assure you that we will be looking in the context of the right to health, the corporate components of this stated in the constitution.

I don't think anyone would disagree with us. This is not a thing that people will argue over. You know, it's not a right to life or abortion or something. These are things that every person would support, and I think the constitution as a supreme law can afford us the discretion, the protections that I hear you asking for. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you very much for that presentation. Again, I echo the same sentiments of my commissioner. I guess, you know, he's a subject matter expert here. I'm just the architect.

I see things through the lens of an architect. So, you know, I always reference in our discussions the constitution is the architecture of state, you know, so we always have these conversations. But I listened carefully to your points and the right to health- section 38, and it says, you know, from what I hear from your presentations, it lacks, and again, this is resonating through the previous submissions, lacks enforceable system obligations.

If I'm correct. I mean, the evidence is it needs the workforce support, ethics, resourcing, resourcing is an issue. I think that's a rule. Again, whether it's constitutional or it becomes an operational thing, but I'm astonished to hear from my learned friend, Left here about your medical council. I would have thought that, you know, as an architect, we have our own act, by the way, and the act is very explicit and very clear and defines the qualification of a registered architect, and it's very, very clear. No one else has any, no minister or whatever has any interference with it.

So, I'm really surprised that the medical that I'm hearing this is conflicted with this. I guess, and I'm trying to understand, maybe perhaps you can give me an example of where this is occurring, because I had a client as well who was willing to come and help. I won't mention his name, but he's quiet, he's a surgeon, very well-known surgeon, was willing to help in the medical system, but on the grounds of applying was rejected. All he wanted to do was to help and contribute. But that's neither here nor there. I'm just asking when you're talking about resources and the facilities that you operate in.

I think we also heard from your colleagues, the Nurses Association, yesterday, was it, or the day before, the same sentiments about going out in the workforce, protection for those workers in the state, providing medical, private and state are two different options, or providers. So, the same sentiments are being echoed there. And I like your, the fact that you mention the need to come together as bodies, Fiji Medical Council, Fiji Medical Association, the Nurses Association.

I think that's kind of, is it, from what I'm hearing, is it disjointed? I mean, I'm asking the question. Is it disjointed, or is it unorganized, or is it organized chaos? I don't know, so I'm kind of, but I think the problem comes back to your, when I was looking at the clinical independence of administrative control, right? So, administrative interference in clinical judgement, and there's evidence, like for example, the recent COVID we had, the expertise in that area. I guess you were involved, but whether or not executive control, and I think Dr. John, my fellow commissioner, was talking about that earlier on. Maybe you want to reiterate that point again afterwards, John?

Dr. Fatiaki: Just in the way of clarification, fellow commissioner, and I have no doubt that this will be supported by Alipate and Michael. There are two areas that need to be considered. One is that unlike architects, where, what is the percentage, 80% of doctors work for government, so they're government employees, and not only do they have to consider their professional opinions, but they also have to comply with the requirements of the civil service.

That's an area that is difficult, particularly when it comes to, for instance, directives. I keep emphasizing the profession is, I used to say that the only thing closer to God than the profession is the priest, or the pastor, because our work is very similar to them, and it, you know, when a doctor makes a decision about your health, he has to go beyond the directive from a PS, and many times it will actually conflict with the directives of the PS of the employer, but it's a matter of almost like conscience, and as a professional, you know, we take a, I think we're the only one that actually takes an oath, the Hippocratic oath, that actually, do architects take an oath? I'm not sure, but we actually do, and there is meaning to this.

Mr. Beg: Oath to what? Which oath? Yeah, the medical,

Dr. Fatiaki: All medical doctors all over the world, I think, to all intents and purposes, still practice that, and in that oath is a commitment to a patient, you know, with guidance from God and Greek gods or whatever at that time, with specifically that, you know, you entrust to me your life, I promise you I will tell you the truth, for instance, and it's that part of it that I think often conflicts, because most, many doctors are in the civil service, and do worry about things like that, and that's why their right, for instance, to advocate on behalf of their patients, should be almost constitutionally protected, I think that's what's been asked for.

Mr. Beg: Yeah, I think, but I was, so you're suggesting the constitutional gap is the professional independence with the state services, is what Dr. John or my fellow commissioner, sorry, Chairman, having this bouncing argument, and you, sorry about that.

Dr. Fatiaki: So that's one of it, the independence fund, but all the other parts in terms of sufficient funding, I've alluded to that, they've talked about that in the current act, but in areas like, you know, the need that when you post the doctor or nurse out somewhere, that you actually provide them something to, a place to live, not only the hospital, those kind of things, which they've alluded to at different parts over here, I think are areas that we can certainly address.

Mr. Beg: I just have a couple of more, if you don't mind me, Dr. John, sorry. Sorry, Chairman. I was looking at the independence of the statutory professional bodies, ministerial veto over the Fiji Medical Council decisions, like there's evidence that you're presenting, you know, overrides registration decisions. Constitution, is it an operational?

Dr. Fatiaki: No, you're very kind. It didn't override decisions, it made the decision, and then sent it to you to comply with it. So, they decided who the doctors were that could be registered, and let me say in fairness to government, they were trying to address issues, for instance, they suddenly had a situation where, with our consultation with the medical profession, they sent lots of students on scholarships to Georgia, Cuba, and you know, China, Vietnam, nothing against their respective medical schools.

But the point was, because they didn't send them there, when they finished and came back, we expect them to go through the normal process of looking at their qualifications, the degrees of study, how much hours they spent, and then at the end of it, they go into an internship, and then at the end of that, they get their full qualification. In that process, it found, for instance, I was there when the first Cuban doctors came, and of the cohort of doctors that came, I think none of them passed the internship. Zero out of 12 or 14.

Not because these are not good students, but the medical standards that they received, and the medical training they received, were more along the lines of what I would consider a nurse practitioner might have now. It was, you know, you can post to Africa, and the Caribbean, and places like that, without necessarily maintaining the, I guess, Australian, New Zealand, British standards that we had inherited. And so, the idea was that that was the case. We didn't want to modify that to just accept them into the system, so I think we accommodated them by making the internship a two-year program.

In the process of doing that, we tried to address it. Government then took it upon itself, as with the powers that they had, to then make modifications to the Medical Practitioners Act, to say, okay, we're forming a committee of PSs that will look at professional qualifications, and we will assess that, in the interest of the nation, we need these, then we will approve it, and you guys give them the certificate to practice.

I think, in a summary, I'm very acutely aware of this, because we were there. I said I would not agree to that. I'm sorry. I would resign from the FMC before I did that. And, you know, to hand, it didn't matter, because my term expired anyway. But that's how strongly I felt about it.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, thank you, Dr. John. The other one was the point that you made about working conditions. I think we addressed that with the Nurses Association under Section 38.

So, if you, I think, Jane, we wrote a little instrument there to the nurses. We gave them some hint, so maybe we can share that, but you probably want to look at that when making some suggestions. I strongly feel a lot about this subject, because it's in my chapters. Dr. John said, I'm looking at that. Sorry about that.

And then the last one was freedom of professional expression. I like that thought where you stand tall and face rather than going through executive power. So, to control, I do like that a lot. Thank you for that.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, Dr. Vakamocea and Dr. Solomoni. Thank you very much. We appreciate the submissions. Our job here is to, you know, get submissions and then try to add them into the Constitution, like Dr. Fatiaki has said. He was championing not adding too much into the Constitution. Now maybe because he's got a medical background, he's now saying that we should add more to the Constitution. Anyway, we will talk about that.

We have been talking about rights, rights, rights under the Bureau of Rights. So many associations, so many people have come before us talking about rights. This morning, we had the Fiji Police Force. They were worried about rights when they are undertaking their duties, duties of arrest, duties of search, duties of drug testing for their police officers. Now all those require very careful judgment and very careful application of discretion.

Now you stated in your opening submission that health officers to exercise their personal discretion without interference from administrators. I understand that. I do medical negligence cases. I've read medical negligence cases. Now, most of those cases would follow discretionary decisions by the doctors. It's not easy to be a doctor.

I understand that, yes. Now when you are dealing as a doctor, when you are dealing with a patient, let's say with due respect to Jehovah's Witnesses, Jehovah's Witnesses, they don't have blood transfusions. Could you give us an idea of how you as a doctor would go about handling that? I know that patients must give consent.

Now Jehovah's Witnesses, they do not. They do not agree to any blood transfusion at all. In the exercise of your discretion, like police officers, they don't have much discretion.

They have to follow the regulations and all that. But in your case, as in the case of other professions, how do you go about exercising your judgment and your discretion in that instance?

Dr. Vakamocea: Thank you, sir. That's a very specific example and it's actually, it's a little bit, so you divide them into two. You have the adults who have the authority to make a decision on their health. So, for those people who decide, and after we have explained all the medical issues, medical reasons why we need to give them blood, if they still refuse, we will accept their power of autonomy.

For children, it's different. For children, under the Child Welfare Act, we can, through the, I think it's permission from, I can't remember, don't quote me, it's the Minister or the Permanent Secretary, we can, as doctors, become the wards of the child and make the decision on their behalf. Even if the parents are Jehovah's Witnesses and they sign against, we will treat the child, we will take responsibility and do what is in the best interest of the child. So basically, we make the decision on behalf of the child. And if that requires blood, we've usually given that. So that's under the, we have to fill in a child welfare form, something to that effect. So that's the difference.

For adults, we allow them to make their own decision. For children, we sort of take over the rights of the child.

Mr. Valenitabua: So that is the legal, that is the legislation you rely on in relation to children.

Dr. Vakamocea: Correct.

Mr. Valenitabua: And for adults, it's up to the adults.

Dr. Vakamocea: They are, yeah, they are their own power of attorney.

Mr. Valenitabua: Is there any other legislation which regulates that? Not to my knowledge. So, they must be in the right frame of mind for them to be able to make their decision. But yeah, I think that's all we have at the moment. I'm happy to be corrected by Dr. John.

Mr. Valenitabua: Section 11.3 of the Constitution. Section 11 deals with freedom from cruel and degrading treatment. And subsection 3 says every person has the right to freedom from scientific or medical treatment, medical treatment, or procedures without an order of the court or without his or her informed consent. So, for every, for every medical treatment, do you get consent? For every medical treatment. Or there's discretion, apart from the job of surgery?

Dr. Vakamocea: Not for every procedure. Like for major procedures like surgery, for example, we would take consent. But not necessarily for every, like we have minor procedures like cannulation where you're given a drip or things like that. We don't usually secure consent. It's usually verbal, if any. It's usually verbal. Not written consent. Written consent is usually for major procedures.

Mr. Valenitabua: So that is after considering the rights under the Bill of Rights?

Dr. Vakamocea: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, there's so much trouble, you know, in relation to the Bill of Rights. And we know that we have to hit a balance somewhere. Yeah. Because we've got rights here, and then you've got, like Dr. Fatiaki just said, there's a right and then there are qualifiers or limitations. And we have to be careful about that. When we are adding whatever else, we're going to add into the Constitution.

Dr. Fatiaki: I might just address this in two ways. This is specific to Section 11.3, Subsection 3, which says every person has the right to freedom from scientific or medical treatment or procedures without an order of the court or without his or her informed consent or if he or she is incapable, you know, giving informed consent without the informed consent of a lawful guardian, like a child. Now, I think this raises two issues.

One is the issue of taking away this right and giving it to the state. Because this is the Bill of Rights, and the Bill of Rights says that you can't do that. Obviously, there is a law that allows the children to become a ward of the state, essentially, and therefore takes this right away from you.

Now, I wonder whether anyone's actually challenged it, but I would be very concerned about myself as a doctor if I took that right away, now that I'm aware of it, from the parent, and say, because I think this is the best thing for your child, I'm going to do this because I can see a good lawyer will sit here and say, how dare you? This is the supreme law.

The second area, and this is the exact counter-argument of this, is as doctors, we should also be able to exercise your individual freedom. And there's no question, you as a scientist know as well as I do, that there are many cases where the decision-making process differs, and we come to a consensus as to how we progress.

I say that in the context of this, for instance, this would then, basically, if there is a law written to that effect, not this supreme law, then what it does is it forces the doctors who may, you know, consciously object to this, to not be able to do it. because administratively they've been told, you give the transfusion because the current feeling is the child needs it, and you take it away from the parent. That is something that, I mean, I struggle with.

At a personal level, I would not obey the law. If the parents did not want me to give the child that, I would not take that right away because I know that they have the right under the Bill of Rights. So, I would not do that, even if I'm being pressured.

The other area, also, in terms of decision-making, Chair, if I might allude to, I think you heard very clearly, Dr. Vakamocea is very clear with his words, the clinical people do not like the administrators to tell us what to do. So, what he's saying is it's like the Architects don't want Ministry of Engineering, PWD, to tell them what to do. That's what the doctors are saying.

They will discuss with other doctors what to do, but don't someone from the head office tell us what to do. That's what he was saying when he said administrators because right now, where there is a hierarchy and you work in the government department, then you have to listen to the administrators. And the decision is a clinical one and I think that's what they're trying to emphasize is he didn't say other doctors, he said administrators, which means, I mean there's no question about it, any decision that's made on a patient is made by many doctors, from the registrar, the intern, the junior resident, even the sister and the consultant. And the decision is made there. And I don't think that's a dispute. No one would dispute that. I think he has an issue if the where administration tells the doctors what to do. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you Dr. John. I would have thought that that kind of practice at the end of the day would come back to the subject matter expert. I mean you have the authority under the rights in the constitution to challenge that executive control under the constitution because you do not have and that's what I'm thinking. My chair is a good learner in legal and mining so I have to be careful what I say.

But I agree with you Dr. John. I think it's quite an interesting one. But just really quickly looking at Australia and New Zealand systems under the consent, New Zealand is quite interesting because New Zealand says here it's under the care of children's act.

They have a children's act in New Zealand. And New Zealand, well New Zealand doesn't have a constitution so statutes of law and then comes their bill of rights is protected under that.

Australia is kind of slightly different. Can consent, parent primarily authority if the child is not competent so the parent has the final say. Then the doctors has assessment for the competence of that but that decision or the competence certificate regardless of what the parent says whether they don't consent or don't consent is done for the purpose of for court for special medical procedures. So maybe that's something we could look at Dr. John. I don't know if I'm talking out of league here but I just want some clarity around that because it's something we're hearing in this space quite a lot especially in public hospitals and state services. Thank you.

Dr. Vakamocea: If I may be able to give another example. So, I had a patient who the child, I can't remember, is less than one years old. They had malnutrition and they suffered from a burn. It was like a 40% burn.

CWM was full and I had admitted the patient at Navua. Had come to check on them in the afternoon and the mother had taken the child back to the village to go and get massaged and so I used that particular part of the act and went and got police, removed the child from the mum's custody, brought her back to the hospital and treated them. So that's another way that it can be used.

I was acting in the interest of the patient overruling the family based on medical science, I mean obviously. So that's probably another way, for lack of a better word, a more appropriate way of using that legislation.

Mr. Beg: Yeah, I think that's great because then that empowers the medical expertise to act accordingly. I think. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Is there any Is there any provision in any legislation which covers doctors from negligent claims?

Dr. Vakamocea: No. Not to my knowledge, Chair.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may respond to that. So, there are two provisions. One is if you work for government you're covered collectively by the government professionally for cases of negligence. If you're working private you have insurance. So, in both instances you are covered.

Let me state though that I think as far as the profession is concerned that's not to suggest that you're not guilty of it. We want and all cases of negligence will be argued by professional witnesses on either side. And the point I'm making is the only way you're going to convict somebody of negligence is if other doctors, professionals who did fell below the required standards or the required practice and therefore you were then negligent by that.

And so, it is the profession taking care of what they know best. But in terms of cover you're covered if you work in government by the government and if you're in private you're covered by legislation that requires you to get insurance.

Mr. Beg: And that chair if you answer that the question is prevalent in all professional bodies professional indemnity covers applies to us, engineers and everyone else.

Mr. Valenitabua: And you're only under cover if liability is proved.

Dr. Vakamocea: Sorry. So, there's two ways. One is through the civil method through the court and that's where you get your professional indemnity. The other way is through the medical council. So, there's a subcommittee of the council called the conducts committee and basically at the end of that pathway you can get struck off the registry if you are proven to be negligent and a couple of other things.

Mr. Beg: Chair, while you're waiting for that I'd just like to use that example that you used because New Zealand had a case very similar to that. It was called Marion's case. Are you familiar with that? Where the parent couldn't decide and the doctor's advice was final and it required court authorization.

I'd like to use your example maybe as a founding principle to this because I find it's important because your passion and your first... I consider you under Chapter 6 we have disciplined services and I think Dr John was saying this along the similar lines and I think you were talking about it. You know why you couldn't be considered as a disciplined force but you're frontline forces are not explicitly defined in the Act because the nurses have the same issues. The medical practitioners I like to use the word medical.

I think maybe perhaps I'm hearing this and I want to have this debate with our fellow group. I can guarantee you when we talk it's heated arguments but nice heated arguments. I would like to think it's really good but the question is whether you are considered frontline workers so it's... but I'd like to think that we can improve that space where you're empowered as a professional practitioner and the question about assessment for discipline and conduct, I think that's equally important that it comes back to the medical profession for assessment and not back to executive power which I've alluded earlier on in my assessment. But yeah, thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, I believe that brings us to the end of our consultation this afternoon. We thank you very much. We will consider the contents of the submission and with the guidance of our good doctor commissioner on my left we shall see to what we can do with it. Apart from that, thank you very much and we wish you a pleasant evening. Thank you.

Fiji Medical Association Constitution Review Submission

Executive Summary

The Fiji Medical Association (FMA) submits that constitutional protection of the right to health is inseparable from the independence, standards, and wellbeing of the medical workforce and the integrity of professional governance institutions established under the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act (MaDPA).

- Strengthen Section 38 (Right to Health) to expressly recognise the health workforce and professional standards as enablers of this right.
- Affirm clinical independence and ethical practice and protect evidence-based clinical judgement from undue interference.
- Recognise the constitutional importance of statutory professional councils and representative professional associations in health governance, standards-setting, and accountability.
- Frame workforce welfare (safe and sustainable working conditions) as a health system requirement relevant to the realisation of the right to health.
- Protect good-faith professional advocacy and whistle-blowing in the public interest.

3. Requests to the Committee 8

4. Conclusion 8

1. Background

Fiji Medical Association is governed by the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act (MaDPA) and is:

- A statutory body explicitly continued by law[1]
- Mandated to protect both the medical profession and the public[2]

Formally embedded in national health governance, including:

- Representation on the Fiji Medical Council[3]
- Nomination to the Professional Standards Committee[4]

This gives the FMA legitimate constitutional interest in:

- How the right to health is framed and protected
- How professional autonomy, standards, and ethics are safeguarded.
- How clinicians can discharge their public-interest duties without political interference

[1] Part 12 Medical and Dental Practitioners Act
[2] Section 105 of the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act
[3] Section 5 of the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act
[4] Section 13 of the Medical and Dental Practitioners Act

2. Key constitutional issues relevant to the FMA's mandate

2.1 Right to Health (Section 38 – Constitution)

Section 38 establishes the progressive realisation of the right to health, including access to health services and conditions necessary for good health.

FMA submission position:

The right to health is constitutionally guaranteed, but its realisation is impossible without safeguarding the professional standards, independence, and welfare of the health workforce.

Proposed constitutional strengthening

Explicit recognition that:

- The State's obligation under s.38 includes maintaining a competent, ethical, and supported medical workforce.
- Professional standards bodies and representative associations are partners in realising the right to health, not merely stakeholders.

2.2 Professional Independence and Clinical Autonomy (Sections 1, 16, 38 – Constitution)

Under the MaDPA, the FMA has responsibilities to:

- Maintain standards of conduct and competence.
- Promote integrity and status of the profession.
- Protect the public in matters incidental to medical practice.

Constitutional concern:

Currently, the Constitution is silent on clinical independence, despite recognising:

- Lawful, rational, and proportionate administrative action (s.16)
- Human dignity and personal integrity (s.1)

FMA submission position:

Clinical decision-making must be protected from improper political, commercial, or administrative interference, as such interference directly undermines patient safety and constitutional health rights.

Suggested constitutional consideration

- Explicit recognition that:
- Health professionals must be able to exercise independent clinical judgement, consistent with law and professional standards.
- State policies and administrative directives must not compel clinicians to act contrary to professional ethics or evidence-based practice.

2.3 Role of FMA in Standards, Governance, and Accountability

Standards-setting and regulation

Although regulatory authority sits with the Fiji Medical Council, the MaDPA deliberately embeds the FMA in:

- Governance (Council membership)
- Standards development (Professional Standards Committee)
- CPD frameworks and ethical guidance

FMA submission position:

The Constitution should recognise that independent professional institutions are essential components of good governance in health.

This aligns with:

- Section 1 on separation of powers, transparency, and accountability
- Section 97 which requires State institutions to be protected to function effectively.

Suggested constitutional reinforcement

Statutory professional councils and recognised professional associations, established to regulate health professions, shall exercise their regulatory, standards-setting, and disciplinary functions independently, free from undue executive or political direction, except as provided by law for general oversight, appeal on points of law, or procedural fairness.

2.4 Workforce welfare as a constitutional health system issue

Workforce wellbeing and retention (Sections 20, 31–38 – Constitution)

The MDPA explicitly makes the FMA:

- The negotiating body for public sector doctors
- Responsible for welfare and integrity of the profession

FMA submission position:

Workforce welfare is not an industrial issue alone; it is a constitutional health system issue.

Poor conditions, burnout, and attrition:

- Undermine the right to health.
- Threaten continuity and quality of care.
- Create inequitable access, especially in rural and underserved communities.

Suggested constitutional framing

Recognition that the State's duty under s.38 includes:

- Reasonable measures to ensure safe, humane, and sustainable working conditions for health professionals.
- Engagement with representative bodies (like FMA) in health workforce policy

2.5 Freedom of professional voice and advocacy (Sections 17, 18, 19 – Constitution)

Under MDPA, the FMA is mandated to:

- Represent the views and interests of the medical profession.
- Advocate on matters affecting public and professional health.

FMA submission position:

Professional advocacy in the public interest is a protected constitutional activity, not political misconduct.

Risks to flag:

Chilling effects on:

- Speaking out about patient safety
- System failures
- Resource shortages or policy harms

Suggested constitutional principle:

- Affirm protection for good-faith professional advocacy, whistle-blowing, and evidence-based critique in matters of public health.

3. Requests to the Committee

The FMA respectfully recommends that the Constitution Review consider:

1. Strengthening Section 38 (Right to Health)
    - To explicitly recognise the health workforce and professional standards as enablers of this right
2. Affirming clinical independence and ethical practice
    - As necessary to protect life, dignity, and patient safety.
3. Recognising statutory professional bodies and associations
    - As part of the governance architecture supporting constitutional rights
4. Enhancing safeguards for administrative justice
    - In matters affecting professional practice, registration, and employment.
5. Protecting professional advocacy
    - Where undertaken in good faith and in the public interest

4. Conclusion

The Fiji Medical Association submits that a constitution that protects the right to health should also protect the people, standards, and institutions that make that right effective in practice.

Submitted by Dr Alipate Vakamocea on behalf of the Fiji Medical Association.

Seventh Day Adventist Church
Date: 21-4-26
Time -10.00am-11.30pm

Leighton: Thank you for attending. Before the chair introduces the members of the commission, just a few housekeeping matters. Ask if when you speak, just press on the right side of the mic. It will come on, then you can speak. Once you have spoken, if you can press the same side to turn it off. Also, there is an attendance register. After you have finished, if you can fill that in. Our chair will now introduce the team. And after he has introduced the commission and the role of the commission and its members, I also request that before you make your submissions, if you can also introduce yourselves. Let's follow the record so that for the transcription, we can record your submissions. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Waqa, Mr. Tuima, thank you very much for attending before us this morning. Thank you for accepting the invitation to come and give submissions on behalf of the Seventh-day Adventist Church before this commission. Our task is to collect views and submissions from the members of the public for the purpose of reviewing the 2013 Constitution. So, we will be sitting here. We will listen to your submissions. Know that this may not be the end for you. We will be asking you questions. And the comments pass from the table on this side. And if you need to make any other submissions later on, and we suggest that they be written submissions, please do so. Write your submissions and then send them to us. You will be able to get the email address from the girls on your right. So, we welcome you. We'll be all ears to listen to you this morning, listen to your submission. Now, before we proceed further, I'll ask the commissioners to introduce themselves to you so that you know who they are. Starting from my right. Thank you very much, Chair.

Mr. Beg: Thank you for coming in. My name is Conway Begg. I am an architect by profession, and I'm serving on this commission. And as the Chair said, we're appointed by the President. And thank you for appearing before us this morning and look forward to your submissions. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good morning, gentlemen. I am Dr. John Fatiaki, medical practitioner, runs the Epworth Clinic in town. I am a brother-in-law to Fonua, Pastor Fonua Hoffa.

Dr. Gounder: My name is Nilesh Gounder. I'm an academic at USP. I look forward to your submission today. When I was the Chairman of Sangam Education Board, we used to work together with the SDA. Because like you, Sangam also owns a number of schools, so we used to liaise and work with the SDA. Good to see the reps. And we look forward to your submission. Thank you.

Mr. Kohli: Good Morning, my name is Ami Kohli and I look forward to the submission.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, and lastly, I'm Sevuloni Valenitabua, Chairperson of the commission. May I ask you gentlemen to introduce yourselves and later make your submissions to the commission. Thank you. Good morning, Mr. Chairperson, and also to the commissioners this morning.

Mr. Waqa: Good morning to all of you, and also Bula Vinaka. My name is Senitiki Waqa, I'm a steward of the Seventh-day Adventist Church as the General Secretary of the Fiji Mission for Fiji and also Rotuma. Vinaka.

Mr. Tuima: Good morning, Mr. Chair and members of the committee. My name is Michael Tuima from Oneata in Lau. And I am serving in the Media and Communication Department for the Adventist Church here in Fiji. So, I'm in the support of the General Secretary here today, and it's a privilege. And thank you for allowing me to be part of this program.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. You may proceed now.

Mr. Waqa: Honorable Chairperson, we sit before you today carrying the hopes and prayers, conviction of all the Fijians, Seventh-day Adventists. We as a people, members who may never enter this room, but whose faith shapes the heartbeat of this nation. And Mr. Chairperson, and also to colleagues of commissioners this morning, thank you for this opportunity to present on behalf of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Fiji. We come with deep respect for this process, and with a sincere desire to contribute to the shaping of a constitution that reflects the values and spiritual foundation of our nation.

Fiji is a nation of faith. In our homes, our villages and communities, people tend to God in times of need and in times of gratitude. Because of this, we respectfully affirm that the constitution should continue to acknowledge God, as the source of moral guidance, while upholding full respect for all beliefs.

We strongly uphold freedom of religion. Every citizen must have the right to worship freely, to practice their faith without fear, and to share their beliefs in a respectful and peaceful manner. This freedom must be protected for all people equally, because true faith cannot exist where there is cohesion.

So, sirs, this morning as a Seventh-day Adventist from the Seventh-day Adventist Church, we humbly highlight the importance of the Sabbath. Observe from Friday, sunset, to Saturday, sunset. For us, this is a sacred commitment.

We respectfully request reasonable accommodation so that individuals are not forced to choose between their faith and their work, education, or national responsibilities. A just society makes room for conscience. In practical terms, we humbly request that constitutional protection ensures that no individual is disadvantaged because of the observance of the Sabbath, Saturday.

This includes protection for students who, in good conscience, are unable to attend classes or examination schedules on Saturdays. Protection for employees who seek reasonable accommodation to refrain from work during Sabbath hours. An assurance that opportunities for employment, education, or advancement are not denied on the basis of faithful Sabbath observance.

For many of our members, the Sabbath is not a preference, it is a conviction. And no citizen should be placed in a position where they must choose between obedience to God and participation to society. True religious freedom must include the right to live out one's faith fully, without penalty or discrimination.

Honorable Commissioners and Mr. Chairperson, behind these requests are real people. Students who miss out exams, workers who lose jobs, faithful citizens who quietly carry the cost of their convictions. We are not asking for privilege; we are asking for protection.

As Seventh-day Adventists, we also affirm the importance of family. The family is the foundation of a strong nation. We encourage provisions in the Constitution that protect and strengthen families, promote moral values, and safeguard the well-being of children.

When families are strong, Fiji is strong. The Seventh-day Adventist Church continues to serve Fiji through education, health services, and community outreach. Our work is grounded in values that uplift lives and build character.

We respectfully encourage continued recognition and support for faith-based organizations as partners in nation buildings. We also emphasize the protection of freedom of conscience, the right of every individual to live in harmony with their deeply held beliefs. No one should be compelled to act against their conscience, especially in matters of faith.

In education, we advocate for the inclusion of moral and values-based learning, while allowing faith-based schools in our church to operate in alignment with their beliefs within national standards. Finally, as we know that Fiji is a diverse nation, we encourage a Constitution that promotes unity without uniformity, where all people are respected and diversity is seen as a strength. Honorable Commissioners, the Seventh-day Adventist Church remains committed to praying for our nation and supporting its development.

We humbly submit that a constitution grounded in faith, freedom, family, and dignity will secure a strong future for Fiji. Sirs, the decisions you make here will echo far beyond this room. They will shape the conscience of our nation and the future of our children.

I quote. If we protect faith, we protect hope. If we protect conscience, we protect dignity.

If we protect families, we protect the very heart of Fiji. As a Seventh-day Adventist member, we humbly appeal to you. Let this Constitution not only be legally sound, but morally strong.

Not only structurally firm, but spiritually grounded. May God guide your decision, and may God continue to bless our beloved nation of Fiji. Vinaka Vakalevu.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Vakalevu Mr. Waqa, that is your final submission, or Mr. Tuima making an additional one?

Mr. Waqa: Mr. Chairperson, that is the submission, final submission for this one.

Mr. Valenitabua: From the SDA?

Mr. Waqa: From the SDA.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. For that submission, and you will be asked questions, or you may be asked questions. And you may be given some comments, you may hear some comments from the people up here, from the commissioners. So now I'll ask the commissioners if they have any comments or any questions to ask you and Mr. Tuima.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, gentlemen, for the submission. And I'm not sure that I have very specific questions, but I have some, I call them reflections, relating to your comments. And it is in that context that I address you.

Your first statement, which was that we are a nation of faith, and an acknowledgment of God for moral guidance. That is an issue that we as commissioners have discussed, we have been through various constitutions. As a matter of fact, every constitution that has been made for this country, from the beginning, until 2013, incorporated the word God in the first part of the constitution, usually the preamble, I think in 1997 in the compact as well. But there was that acknowledgment, it was stated.

I can state categorically that in the 2013 constitution, it is not stated. The word specifically in terms of the nation, aspects of faith, aspects of moral guidance, is not there. And so, we have a basis on which to look at how we frame this constitution, particularly from the first page, from the outset.

And I thank you for your submission. It echoes what we have heard from other submittees. It reflects what has been written into three other constitutions prior to this one.

And obviously, the framers of that constitution recognized it. At a personal level, and again I am speaking personally and this is just a reflection, I think we lose part of our collective soul when we don't acknowledge it. Particularly, and I thank you for acknowledging it in a very generic sense, and by that I mean very inclusive.

You did not state, I am a Christian, I am a Catholic, but you did not state that Catholicism or Christianity was the God. Because as my friends here are, they have God too, but they are not the same God. I am surprised that this last constitution, well surprised or not surprised, did not have any mention of God as the basis of our values and our moral guidance.

Because, I think if I walked out of here onto the street and asked every person, do you believe in God? Do you believe in God? I suspect that probably 99% of people are going to say yes. Whether he is a Muslim, Hindu, Sikh, Catholic, whatever, Shintoist, Buddhist, I think 99% of the people who live in Fiji actually believe in God or some form of divine entity. So, the idea that we would not have it or we would take it out of the previous constitutions and not include it in this one, I guess states it is ungodliness. No pun- intended.

The second aspect of it relates to the aspects that you allude to in respect of attempting to practice your faith. And in your particular instance, it is the Sabbath, hence the seventh day belief.

This is an interesting one because obviously this is the area that when we talk about freedom of religion, conscience and belief, it attempts to say that no person should be compelled to do anything, to act in any manner or take an oath that is contrary to the person's religion or belief. I am grateful to you for bringing to our attention obviously things that are affecting day to day activities such as going to school, being forced to sit an exam on a Sabbath day, when we could sit it five other days or four other days. So, bringing it to our attention is important.

You might not be a massive majority, but I am sure we could easily accommodate it in the four other days that no other religion, I say that because obviously many Christians use the Sunday as their day of worship. Correct me if I am wrong my friends, but Friday is an important day for the Muslims for instance. And there may be that instance and I would hate to think that we can't accommodate for instance the holding of examinations the other four days so that we don't infringe on anyone and force them not to sit the exam.

This is a particularly important thing because there are instances like you say when you can't get bus transport and so these things are important for us to factor in and consider. But I think in principle the Bill of Rights is there to protect the individual's right and the right to religious choice and the practice of your freedom. Not only in the practice but in the way the state addresses it.

I remember a while ago that there were lots of conflicts amongst our Catholic schools where we wanted a Catholic principal for instance to be the principal because it was in the culture of the school. I noticed that this constitution actually says that the government must not like force you to, it allows you to make your own schools with a religious component to it. It does guard it by saying that you can't force other people to attend the religious classes but it balances it.

I know that different governments apply that rule willy-nilly and , in some they come down with a very heavy hand and don't allow the religious institutions to have input into the selection of the principal for instance in terms of how they adjust. So, I'm grateful to you for bringing that to our notice. I think these are important practical things that apply to for instance the people who practice the Seventh Day Faith and for that we're grateful because I'm sure that in our discussions and deliberations we will address it. Thank you. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you very much for your presentation. On behalf of the commission, I want to thank SDA not only for their work in the area of religion and faith but also in the area of education and management of schools. And I've noted your points about the importance of families within the society and your point about moral values, they're important. We have received that from some other submissions as well and the importance of faith-based organizations.

And you also mentioned about the Saturday Sabbath one and from a personal perspective I want to assure you that at USP where I work if there's any exam that falls from Friday to Saturday students are given a choice. We don't hold exams. If an exam has to be held for some reason then the student will be given an exam on another day as well. A separate paper has to be prepared.

So as an institution USP takes that flexibility and provides that flexibility to students and for other religious reasons and background as well. But I guess a lot of these things will have to be the way it works within societies, within organizations and the more we discuss the more enlightened we will all become.

But it's absolutely clear that respect for other religions and the beliefs of others is really important to create a more cohesive society. And I want to thank you for your submission today. Thank you.

Mr. Waqa: Thank you Dr. Garber.

Mr. Beg: Through you chair, thank you very much for your enlightening presentation and I echo the same sentiments of my fellow commissioners in what they're saying. I probably just to add to that I understand that the relevant section is 22 of the constitution as commissioners have highlighted the freedom of religion.

I suppose when I looked at it there's a gap of practical enforcement. Like you highlighted employment in educational context but I believe my fellow commissioner who's in the education system has acknowledged that. But for one who's grown up through the educational system, my own conviction and my own journey, this was very prevalent in schools where there was always acknowledging.

I went to a boarding school where we observed the rights of these religions or the school and the institution. So, I think it's something what you're trying to say is, I'm trying to understand in the last few years hasn't really been enforced or practiced. So that's the understanding that I'm trying to feel because as we've grown up, as most of us through our journeys, we've been accommodating.

But as you probably tried to highlight is there in the reinforcement of this in the constitution or in through employment, schools, institutions, etc. has not allowed that process to take place. I'm just hearing from you if there are any examples or things that you've experienced that you may want to share with us or share with... Is there an experience that... Because I feel, I think it's accepting but from our point of view as commissioners, addressing the constitution is that it's very weak in the constitution.

Practical enforcement in the constitution is weak. But we're guided by the practicality of acceptance in the institutions. So maybe, can you share or you don't have any examples of where this has happened? If you could... Sorry if I'm being very bold in my request. Thank you.

Mr. Waqa: Thank you. Commissioner Beg. I'd like to acknowledge the contribution made by the other two commissioners today. We have certain instances where our members are denied opportunities. A typical example is employment.

When there is a job interview that has been conducted where certain questions have been asked. You can work, you'll be given if you're willing, if you're committed. But when the response comes that because of... I rest on the Sabbath, on Saturday.

And then basically they share with me could see that the reception is not good during the interview. They tend to feel that just because of that they are denied the opportunity to be given the employment opportunity. Some instance, some of our students, I come through it, where there are Saturday classes being given.

And some of our young people are missed out on those opportunities. That is basically where the Church, the Seventh-day Adventist Church, needs to be addressed. Here in the Constitution.

I know that the Constitution protects freedom of religion, of the faith. I concur what you said, it's just a reinforcement of it. Which is still in the grey areas. Vinaka.

Dr. Fatiaki: Along similar lines, if I may just address that and take you specifically to section 22, subsection 2. Where they try to address this freedom of religion. And they say, sorry, subsection 3. Every person has the right not to be compelled to act in any manner that is contrary to the person's religion or belief.

You see, that basically says you can't be compelled to. But it doesn't tell the rest of society to say that we must not discriminate against you on the basis of your belief. I need my two lawyers, commissioners, to tell me if I'm stating this incorrectly.

So, what I'm saying is this says, every person has the right not to be compelled. Indirectly, if you have to go to class on Saturday, you are being compelled. And that's against your belief.

But in a way it's not being compelled in the sense that you're not being forced to go. You're given the choice. And I think we may be able to reword this section to say that you may not be discriminated against.

Because if they're forcing you to go to class on Saturday or forcing you to work on Saturday against your religious belief. Then they are in fact discriminating against you. And maybe this compelling part doesn't address it in total. I'm not sure whether you could apply the fact that you were forced to go to school on Saturday as being compelled to do something against your belief. They'll say, well it's your choice. You don't go, you don't attend classes. But that's not the case. They should not discriminate against your consideration. Sorry.

Dr. Gounder: Just to add to that. I think the Ministry of Education has a policy which they implemented many, many years ago. For this reason, not to discriminate Sabbath on Saturday. These classes are all optional. And no new curriculum will be discussed or taught or revised on Saturday. Just a revision. And nothing new will be taught. So, to provide flexibility to SDA students. As far as I know.

I'm not sure whether the practice still continues or not. But half of my family are teachers. And from them I know that this practice continues. No new curriculum is taught on Saturdays to provide optional. So that's optional. Sorry.

Mr. Beg: Sorry Commissioner. Just to interject there. Is that option available? Because what I'm hearing you saying is that. Is that afforded the same equal right that you are carrying out that class on a Saturday? Is it afforded to those who are missing out on another day?

Dr. Gounder: This is optional. This is optional. So, whoever may wish to come can come. It's optional, yeah. Yeah. So, if it's optional it does not discriminate against anyone. And the constitution has provisions. I may be guided by my two lawyer colleagues. In my view. That nobody should be discriminated on religious grounds. So, for a job interview for example. Cannot discriminate a person based on his religious affiliation. Or preferences. And if there are cases then they can always raise it. So yeah. I just wanted to let you know. And so, is there anything more we could do? Over and above what is already in the constitution. To prevent discrimination on religious grounds. In the labor market. And the provisions follow through. In the employment act for example. The discrimination issues. So, if you think there should be anything more than what is there. We are happy to hear you. Thank you.

Mr. Waqa: Thank you very much. Commissioner Gounder. What I'm basically trying to share with the team on the table is. The constitution of the law is very clear. What's down there. The reality is basically totally opposite with the. It's not all but some of the practices that has been ongoing. Which our members of the church have been discriminated. And those are real experiences. That have been shared with us. And I need that to be addressed. And shared with you on this honorable table.

It is very clear. Everybody knows about freedom of religion and no discrimination. But how it has been executed and implemented down there. That is basically where the reality where the problem is solved. That is where the church is coming from. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. I just want to reiterate the comments. I think the principles that you are espousing. We understand clearly. What we're going to try and do is look at the current bills. And sorry the Bill of Rights in terms of the freedoms. And see whether we can maybe word it in ways. That takes care of those. That strengthens it and makes it so that the people enforcing. My mind is running between different things right now.

I want to compliment the SDA church. Just as he did in respect of education. In respect of the area of health. I mean I'm a medical doctor by profession. And I can say that your denomination. Is the one that promotes healthy living. And has always done that. To the benefit of your members. And unfortunately, there's not enough of the general public that listen. You know I almost feel like saying.

You want to know how to live healthy. Go and ask your friends who are SDA people. Because it's been a practice. So, I thank you as far as your contribution to the country's health. I wish you would make your voice much louder. And across the whole country.

So that the basic guidelines that you've always observed. In terms of you know sunlight, exercise, eating styles. And things like that. The basic principles I think that you apply for religious reasons. No alcohol, smoking. The areas that the medical profession actually supports. That's one.

The second area and I stress this. In respect of what my colleague Dr. Nilesh has pointed out. And what you've pointed out brightly. Which is that sometimes what we say in principle here. In the supreme law. Does not translate into action on the ground. I give you an example. Under this you know freedom of religion. Some people refuse to get the COVID vaccine. As a choice. Under their belief.

Now there is provision here. Given that in the interest of public health. Governments can enforce. The enforcing of the vaccine. I couldn't come back from Rotuma to Fiji unless I got it. Even though I didn't want to get it. I wanted to come back to Fiji. So, I got it. But having said that.

I noticed that they even took it a step further. And they punished you. Punished people on employment grounds. So not only did they say you have to get it. But if you don't get it. You don't go to work. I mean I understand that some employers. Well government. Now to me that's taking. This provision. That allows us to protect public health. Beyond.

The pay off. And this is you know the issue of. What we say here in terms of the Bill of Rights. And how they actually practice it. You can see the difference. To me that was an inappropriate action. You know it's well and good to say. Choose up to you. Take it at your own risk. If you don't want to take it. Don't take it. But do they punish you if you don't take it. Then I'm not giving you the choice. And that's you know. That's to me taking. What you are saying. Which is the principle of giving people. The ability to be in charge of their bodies. And their rights. And forcing them into a position where. If you don't do it.

I understand the reverse. Because afterwards they found that the indications. They had for doing it. Didn't actually require it. But that's in hindsight. But again, thank you to the SDA church. For your submission. And thank you very much for the work that you do. For the health. What I would like the media people to do. I notice you have programs. Whole programs and that. I watch it occasionally. I would suggest that you get that onto the mainstream media. So that more of your messages. Like I said. He used to be a very avid advocate. And a practicing physician. He used to work in my clinic. Many years ago. He's a good voice. And you need lots of those voices. Resonating. In addition to the Ministry of Health. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, there you are Mr. Waqa and Mr. Tuima You've heard the comments from my fellow commissioners. Section 22 of the Constitution is there. It talks about freedom of religion, conscience, and belief.

And our rights, our freedoms in relation to religion and belief and conscience are set out there. It may be incomplete. Just hearing your submission and hearing my fellow commissioners comes to mind that the right to religion or the freedom of religion is to be taken with the right to education, to be taken together with the right to employment, and all those other rights.

So, it's a balancing act. What we can put in the Constitution we will have to discuss if there is any extra provision which is needed to take care of your concerns. We understand, respect, you respect freedom of religion, the importance of the Sabbath, or the importance of the Sunday, or the importance of Lent, and so forth. We have different religions, different beliefs, so all those have to be considered. But we get your point. We get your point.

If a student wishes not to attend Saturday classes, then that's a choice. It can't stop the other students from attending Saturday classes because they have the freedom of religion. Same as employment and so forth. We've got to weigh all those. Thank you very much. You heard from us. We have heard from you. We have recorded what you have said. Everything is taken down there. I mean it's recorded by the girls. So, we will consider your submission. Thank you very much.

Mr. Waqa: Thank you, Mr. President. Also, to the team of commissioners, this morning on behalf of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, we would like to say thank you for listening to our submission this morning. And also, your reflections in regards to the submission. May the Lord continue to bless all of you, and also the work that you are doing for the nation of Fiji. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: If there's anything else you want to add, put it down in writing and email it to us.

Mr. Waqa: Vinaka Vakalevu Sir.

CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMISSION

Submission – Pr. Senitiki Waqa (General Secretary)

"Honourable Chairperson, we stand before you today carrying the hopes, prayers, and convictions of ordinary Fijians— Seventh-day Adventist - people who may never enter this room, but whose faith shapes the heartbeat of this nation."

Thank you for this opportunity to present on behalf of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Fiji.

We come with deep respect for this process and with a sincere desire to contribute to the shaping of a Constitution that reflects the values and spiritual foundation of our nation.

Fiji is a nation of faith. In our homes, villages, and communities, people turn to God in times of need and in times of gratitude. Because of this, we respectfully affirm that the Constitution should continue to acknowledge God as the source of moral guidance, while upholding full respect for all beliefs.

We strongly uphold freedom of religion. Every citizen must have the right to worship freely, to practice their faith without fear, and to share their beliefs in a respectful and peaceful manner. This freedom must be protected for all people equally, because true faith cannot exist where there is coercion.

As a Seventh-day Adventist Church, we humbly highlight the importance of the Sabbath, observed from Friday sunset to Saturday sunset. For us, this is a sacred commitment. We respectfully request reasonable accommodation so that individuals are not forced to choose between their faith and their work, education, or national responsibilities. A just society makes room for conscience.

"In practical terms, we humbly request that constitutional protections ensure that no individual is disadvantaged because of their observance of the Sabbath. This includes protection for students who, in good conscience, are unable to attend classes or examinations scheduled on Saturdays; protection for employees who seek reasonable accommodation to refrain from work during Sabbath hours; and assurance that opportunities for employment, education, or advancement are not denied on the basis of faithful Sabbath observance.

For many of our members, the Sabbath is not a preference—it is a conviction. And no citizen should be placed in a position where they must choose between obedience to God and participation in society. True religious freedom must include the right to live out one's faith fully, without penalty or discrimination."

"Honourable Commissioners, behind this request are real people—students who miss exams, workers who lose jobs, faithful citizens who quietly carry the cost of their conviction. We are not asking for privilege—we are asking for protection."

We also affirm the importance of family. The family is the foundation of a strong nation. We encourage provisions that protect and strengthen families, promote moral values, and safeguard the wellbeing of children. When families are strong, Fiji is strong.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church continues to serve Fiji through education, health services, and community outreach. Our work is grounded in values that uplift lives and build character. We respectfully encourage continued recognition and support for faith-based organizations as partners in nation-building.

We also emphasize the protection of freedom of conscience—the right of every individual to live in harmony with their deeply held beliefs. No one should be compelled to act against their conscience, especially in matters of faith.

In education, we advocate for the inclusion of moral and values-based learning, while allowing faith-based schools to operate in alignment with their beliefs within national standards.

Finally, Fiji is a diverse nation. We encourage a Constitution that promotes unity without uniformity—where all people are respected, and diversity is seen as a strength.

Honourable Commissioners, the Seventh-day Adventist Church remains committed to praying for our nation and supporting its development.

We humbly submit that a Constitution grounded in faith, freedom, family, and dignity will secure a strong future for Fiji.

"Honourable Commissioners, the decisions you make here will echo far beyond this room—they will shape the conscience of our nation and the future of our children.

If we protect faith, we protect hope.
If we protect conscience, we protect dignity.
If we protect families, we protect the very heart of Fiji.

As a Seventh-day Adventist we humbly appeal to you—let this Constitution not only be legally sound, but morally strong… not only structurally firm, but spiritually grounded.

May God guide your decisions, and may God continue to bless our beloved Fiji.

Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption
Time-12.30pm-1.50pm

Leighton: Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva, thank you very much for accepting the invitation of the Constitutional Review Commission. On behalf of the Chair and the team, my name is Leighton Fatiaki. I will just be going through some housekeeping matters. Just with regards to the mics in front of you, if you wish to speak, you can just press on the right side of the mic, and once you've made your submission, you can just press it. Also, I'll now hand over to the Chair to make the introductions to the Commissioners. Please also, once the Chair has finished, for the transcribers, our recording purposes, if you can also introduce yourselves.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka. Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva. Good morning to you both. We welcome you to the Commission this morning. I echo what Mr. Fatiaki has said. Thank you very much for coming here on our invitation to make submissions to us. Before I proceed further with you, may I also welcome the members of the media, gentlemen and ladies of the media, who have been covering submissions during the consultations we've had for the past three weeks. So, members of the media, we welcome you. We thank you for the good work you are doing.

You are covering all these submissions and publishing them, broadcasting them, telecasting them, and we have very good responses from the members of our nation, citizens of our nation, not only here in Fiji, also overseas. So, thank you very much. Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva, as chairperson of the Constitutional Review Commission, I thank you kindly for accepting our invitation to appear before the CRC today.

The commissioners of the CRC welcome you warmly. The CRC is an independent commission. We are tasked with reviewing the 2030 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji.

As you might know, the commission was established and my fellow commissioners and I appointed Vice Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji. And that appointment was made in accordance with the decision made by the Cabinet on 6 March 2026 and pursuant to Section 2 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act 1946. By way of introduction, your commissioners are starting from my right, my far right, Mr. Conway Beg.

Next to me is Dr. John Fatiaki. On my immediate left is Mr. Ami Kohli. I'm sure he's well known to you. And on the far left is Dr. Neelesh Gounder of USP. Two commissioners are not with us today. They're both overseas.

That is in Dr. Unaisi Baba and Merewalesi Nailatikau. As a commission, we are tasked to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into the 2013 Constitution and to consult widely with the people of Fiji while undertaking that task. The resulting objective is the preparation of a draft amended Constitution based on submissions from the people of Fiji, which reflects people's values, their needs, and their aspirations.

At the end of our commission, we are to submit our findings and recommendations derived from the submissions made to us to His Excellency the President. In accordance with our terms of reference, your commissioners have embarked on and are undertaking a nationwide consultation process. In the process, members of the public are invited to make written and oral submissions to the CRC. You are here today to present such submissions before us, your commissioners. We have been receiving submissions and doing consultations for the past three weeks, and we will go out to the country beginning in May. We are trying to get as much consultations, as many submissions as we can get all over the country.

We are interested in and wish to hear submissions from the people of Fiji about their views of the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji. We look forward to hear your submissions on which provisions you want to be preserved or maintained in an amended Constitution of Fiji. In addition to that, we'd like to hear what provisions you want to be changed or amended and what your aspirations are for the amended Constitution of Fiji, particularly on FICAC, not forgetting your individual views in relation to that.

We need to consult widely. That is our task. We rely on the media to provide wide coverage, and I thank them this morning, as I have done, of the consultations and the contents of the submissions made during the consultations.

We are engaging closely with the media in the belief that they play a vital role in publicity, in promoting transparency, and in fostering open dialogue among the people of Fiji regarding how they wish to be governed under a constitution. The CRC encourages everyone to express their views openly, with civility, and with mutual respect, in support of meaningful and constructive dialogue. With those few words, I thank you for appearing before us this morning. We now hand over to you to present your submissions to us, the commissioners. Thank you.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair and commissioners. I am here with the Manager of Complaints and Governance. The premise of our submissions this morning is specifically with regard to Section 115 of the Constitution, which is the establishing section of the Commission. But before I start with my submissions, I would like to advise the commissioners that judgment by the High Court of Fiji will be delivered here in Suva on the 24th of April, which is two days from now, at 2.30pm, on the question of the leadership of collateral, a challenge to the leadership at FICAC.

That was by way of a stay application by three persons, and the decision will be delivered by the High Court on Friday at 2.30pm. I'm conscious of the imminent decision, but these submissions that we'll be making this morning is on a different footing, and I believe I could say that it stems from the problems that we are currently encountering as a country in terms of the leadership at FICAC. I thought I'd put this out to the commissioners first before I start with our submissions. For ease of reference, we have provided some paperwork that I will go through.

What the Commission of FICAC proposed to do this morning is talk about the current problems that we are facing, the gaps in the current constitutional provisions, and we have provided, hopefully, some recommendations in terms of the proposed amendments to Section 115. If the Chair could allow, I have made copies for the members. Please.

Mr. Valenitabua: Please continue, Ms. Rokoika.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair. As I've said, the way FICAC proposes to make the submissions would be to identify the... maybe do a comparative analysis between Section 115 and Section 117.

117 is in relation to the establishment of the DPP's office. The reason why we believe there needs to be a comparative analysis between these two sections is because of the nature of the work that both institutions do. The only slight difference is that FICAC does investigation and prosecution.

DPP, on the other hand, as both the Chair and Mr. Kohli will know, are just prosecutorial work. So, I believe because of the nature of the work that is conducted, the good comparative analysis would be with the DPP's office. I will not go specifically into sections by sections.

You will note that I have provided that at... I apologize, it does not have any numbering. After page 5, there is a comparative analysis there between the office of the DPP and FICAC in tabular form. The table, as you will see, on the fourth column is the comparative analysis between the two institutions.

Both the two provisions, 115 and 117, they establish both the two offices and that is on equal footing. The next one is the core function. The core function of the DPP's office and FICAC are both provided for in terms of institution of proceedings, transferring of proceedings and discontinuation of proceedings.

The problem with the current provision is that it does not specifically focus on corrupt actions. They both talk about the same thing. So, I think there needs to be clarity there in terms of the role of FICAC. It talks about general offences, the institution of proceedings, but it does not specifically state in relation to corrupt offences. So that is the first gap that we have identified. And that goes on to the third area about the core functions. They relate to the same thing that I have just discussed. It is not specific to corrupt related offences. In terms of the independence of both the offices, they have similar provisions. Both inform word for word in 115 together with 117.

The overall independence, which is the next one, there is clear independence in terms of the work of the DPP's office. The work of FICAC, though, is then transferred to a new written law, which is the FICAC Act of 2007. The DPP, as you can see on the status of it, the DPP version is the stronger version in terms of independence. Going down, there is a provision in subsection 9 of the FICAC Act that talks about mandatory reporting to the Attorney General. Comparing that with the DPP's office, there is no equivalent to the DPP's office.

That, we believe, weakens the independence of the commission of FICAC. The next one is the appointment framework. The DPP's provision, it has an express provision in terms of appointment. The 115 in relation to FICAC does not have the appointment provision.

The next one is acting appointment. DPP's office has acting appointment. FICAC does not have acting appointment. In terms of qualifications, DPP's office has qualifications. A person needs to be qualified as a judge. FICAC does not have that provision.

In terms of tenure, DPP's office, I've looked at other jurisdictions. I have not been able to find the basis of the seven years, but we are not talking about seven years.

Our submission is there needs to be a term that is defined in there. Three years is the general position in terms of Australia and New Zealand. There is no basis for us to go for the seven years like the DPP's office.

In terms of the removal protection, DPP's office has specific provisions in terms of removal. FICAC does not have that. Prosecutorial authority, DPP's office is more clearly defined.

In terms of the delegation of powers, we have the same exact subsections. Staff control, same provisions for both the two institutions. Funding, we have both the funding sections in both the two.

Accountability, again, I've talked about the Attorney General. I will deal with this specific provision when I'll talk about the proposed amendments or our submissions on amendments. The DPP's office has a structured appointment framework in place. FICAC does not have that. I thought that I'd start with that in terms of the differences between the two entities.

Next, I would like to talk about the gaps. Over the page, there is section 115 that is the heading of that particular table. Again, this covers section by section the matters that I've just raised earlier on. The issue that we have with section 115 is that a lot is referenced to a written law, which is the FICAC Act of 2007.

Right now, there is no problem with that reference because it deals with operational matters. The issue that we believe needs to be made clear is the institution itself. We agree that there is a provision that entrenches the establishment of the institution, but just on its independence leadership, that is an issue that we presently face, which I believe that everybody is aware of.

That is the basis of the current proceedings in court. What we've done on this section 115 table is just identify the current provisions and the proposed amendments and the justification on the right-hand side, the justification on the reasons why we believe it is important that this is entrenched into the Constitution instead of just under an Act of Parliament. Over the page, Commissioners, you will note that I have put in there a whistleblower comparison.

I've touched on several jurisdictions, which I believe is important for the purposes. I've touched on Australia, Singapore, Hong Kong and Canada. All these jurisdictions do not have whistleblower protection in their constitutions.

The reason why I'm raising this is because whilst the CRC is mandated to provide for the amendment or doing work on the amendment of the Constitution, maybe it would be an opportune time to have this included just for the purposes of being robust, and so whistleblowers or informers are guaranteed that protection. I know that it's not part of other jurisdictions, but I've left it there for the Commission. You can use it as you please.

The final part of FICAC's submissions, Commissioners, through the Chair, is at page 2, our proposed amendments. What I propose to do is go through clause by clause so that the Commission is fully aware of the basis on which we are making the proposal for the amendment.

Subsection 1 that we have included in there, that's the standard continuation provision. It's currently in the Constitution right now and that needs to be kept in there.

The next one is the composition of the Commission. It talks about the Office of the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, and all the other officers within the Commission.

Subsection 3, our proposal is to incorporate the specific offence, which is corrupt-related offences. The institution and the taking over, which is B and C, are currently in the Constitution.

In terms of subsection 5 on the independence, you'll note, Commissioners, through the Chair, that we have removed references to the Attorney General. The basis of that proposed removal is because we believe that if there is supposed to be an investigation against any of the executives, for instance the Attorney General, that might pose difficulties with the Commission. So, if you see the proposed amendment, we are stating that reporting is to be done to Parliament as a whole, not to a particular office holder, in this instance Attorney General. That is the basis on which we believe that the reporting of the Commission's work is to be in direct line to Parliament and not the Attorney General, just to safeguard the institution.

Further down is the appointment. As I've indicated earlier, the Office of the DPP, the Director Hema herself, is appointed under the Constitution. We do not have the same provision under section 115, and they re-analyze the problem. That's why we have current proceedings in court. So, we believe that the appointment provision for a FICAC Commissioner is to be entrenched in section 115, similar to that of the DPP's office.

Over the page, Chair, I know that there has been, I'm aware that there has been discussions in terms of should the appointment be done by, recommendations be done by JSC or COC. I leave that to the Commission. But there is a new provision in there that I've said that any form of appointment or recommendation needs confirmation by Parliament. The reason why we are proposing that, because for all the states in Australia, this is done by Parliament.

And they've done it in a way that it has, not that I'm aware of, challenges to the leadership. So that is the basis on which we thought that Parliament would be the best institution or body to look after or to scrutinize. I think the best word would be to scrutinize.

To scrutinize the appointment of the Commissioner. The basis of that is because when we have our elections, we elect our members of Parliament. There's 55 Honorable members of Parliament.

So, it's on that basis that we are basing these recommendations for it to go to Parliament. When it goes to Parliament, like everything that is debated in Parliament, they'll be debating and if there be subcommittees, however it's done, at least there'll be some form of scrutiny in terms of the proposed appointee from JSC or COC. The basis of that is that there is another scrutiny level, so to speak, before the appointment is done.

In terms of further down, we've talked about the qualifications of the Commissioner. Like the DPP's office, we believe that it needs to be a person who is qualified as a judge. There is no equivalent provision currently in section 115.

We've also included in our recommended amendments a dimming provision that's at subsection 9. The reason why we have included a dimming provision in there is so that it can narrow down the time frame in which it's confirmed or it's verified by Parliament. To bring certainty, maybe closure to the appointment, that's the basis of that dimming provision. Further down, at 10, we've talked about, that ties in line with the reasoning that I've just given previously, Chair, the validity of the appointment.

It can only be questioned in terms of lack of constitutional qualification or fraud, and that's the standard way in which appointments are done in similar institutions in other jurisdictions. I've included in there, at subsection 11, the term. We're not going full seven years like the DPP's office. Three is the standard in other jurisdictions, and that is sufficient. And the appointment of an acting Commissioner, same process as the Commissioner above, but the current section 115 does not make provision for an acting appointment.

At subsection 13, we've talked about the removal, and because there is no current removal provision in 115, we've said that it's to be in line with the current section 112, the removal of judges. They have a system in place under section 112, and that can be followed instead of us reinventing the wheel.

In terms of subsection 14, that is currently provided for, but we've just put in the extra provisions 15 and 16 there to ensure the sufficiency of funding. This is an issue that we believe needs to be entrenched this particular way because it'll go to our statutory mandate or our objectives and our functions, so it needs to be specifically done in the way that we have proposed at 15 and 16.

In terms of accountability at 17 and 18, that is currently being done reporting to Parliament through the Office of the Attorney General, but this is the proposal that we've come up with. The main feature of 17 and 18 is the requirement, because right now, the way the accountability or reporting is done, it's done internally, so in terms of reporting to Parliament, and that is that. There is no public-facing aspect of this accountability, so the proposed provisions of 17 and 18 takes into account our accountability to the people of Fiji, hence the way it's drafted, 17 and 18.

And for 19 and 20, at the moment, we have provisions that the Commission, FICAC, needs to work in line with UNCAC because of our UN obligations that is provided for in the current constitution, but the way we've done it here so that it is clearer in terms of what needs to be done. It also takes into account our regional cooperation because we have signed a memoranda of understanding with a few of our Pacific neighbor's, and we thought that this is something, because we are doing it as an arm of government, it would be proper for it to be reflected in the proposed amendment at 20.

Over the page, I've just discussed the effect of the proposed amendments that I've discussed when I was going through the proposed amendments. We have also included in their conclusions. The main focus from the part of FICAC is that the institution itself is provided for under the constitution, but what we need is for it to be properly secured and protected in terms of our prosecutorial functions. Because right now, because of the challenges to the validity of the leadership, we are being stopped from moving ahead with our constitutional function.

Unless there are any questions from the Chair and the Commission, those are our submissions from FICAC.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Thank you, Commissioner. Thank you very much indeed for the submission that has been presented to the CRC this morning. Thank you for the written submission too, in addition to your submission. It makes things easy for us when we see and we read material in writing, and that would become handy when we sit and deliberate on the submissions, the total submissions that we will receive from citizens of the country.

Now, your Commission has not been without, what I might say, problems or accusations or queries as to its establishment. I know that neither of us, not one of us, was involved in this 2013 constitution, and that FICAC was established by the previous government, and it was in use for 16 years. There have been comments from citizens of this country or people of this country in relation to the appropriateness, if I may say, of FICAC, considering that the DPP's office is in existence.

The submission this morning, I see that you as Commissioner, and I believe your office also, your staff and Deputy Commissioner and all staff for FICAC, would be of the view that FICAC continues. And you are asking us that provisions be entrenched in the constitution in relation to your administration and the powers, the appointment and so forth. Now, could we hear from you in relation to two things?

One, a continuity. I know that you have said that, but with members of the public, with people of this country and high-level people like that, saying that FICAC is a duplicity of the DPP. Should we transfer these powers and functions of the Commission to the DPP's office? That is my first question. And the second question is why we should not. Thank you.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair. The way in which the question is asked, I believe I will just answer it with one response. In terms of the current work with the Commission, FICAC's position is that it should remain with a specialized entity like FICAC and not be transferred to the DPP's office. Through the Chair, you will note that I've used the word specialized because it focuses on anti-corruption only. The FICAC Act talks about anti-corruption conduct and it only branches out in terms of the electoral offences.

Apart from that, it's focused entirely on corrupt activities or corrupt conduct by public officers. And it's on that basis that we believe that it is specialized in nature and therefore it needs to be kept separate from the work of the DPP's office, with respect.

Mr. Valenitabua: In relation to offences, Section 2A of the FICAC Act, it lists the offences for which FICAC can prosecute. We see that includes any offence under the Penal Code, any offence under the Crimes Act, any offence under the Cybercrime Act. Could you explain to the Commission how these are tied up to corruption?

Ms. Naliva: Thank you Chair for the question. Just to answer your question, you're correct in identifying that Section 2A of the FICAC Act, it applies to offences to which the Act applies to. And while Section 2A gives the Commission the powers to investigate and prosecute all other offences, our major area of focus is to investigate and prosecute specifically on specialized areas of corruption, bribery and fraudulent conduct.

I understand, that with some of the fraudulent conduct offences, while it's stipulated under our Prevention of Bribery Act, it's also stipulated under the Crimes Act. For example, we also focus on investigation and prosecution of the offence of abuse of office for those who sit in positions of authority. While the abuse of office offence is not stipulated clearly, it's not given out at all in the Prevention of Bribery Act, we refer to the Crimes Act under Section 139.

Mr. Kohli: Through you Chair, if I may, if you look at the FICAC Act as it is, it is too wide. Even though you may be selective in your prosecution regarding corruption under bribery and abuse of office, do you not think that it is only fair to have corruption defined in the FICAC Act and then list the sort of offences you can deal with, rather than giving an all-encompassing power to prosecute under the Crimes Act, for example? Because you are specifically targeting corruptions and there should be a definition of corruption in the FICAC Act.

Ms. Rokoika: Yes indeed. That is an operational matter. It needs to go into the legislation, our respectful submissions, that it should not go into the Constitution, which is what the CRC is doing at the moment, but we acknowledge that. Maybe a point further in terms of what Ms. Naliva has talked about, is in terms of, to respond to the issue that was raised, the preamble of the Act itself, and the specific reference to our UNCAC obligations under the Constitution is the basis on which we operate only on anti-corruption matters and not generally on everything.

You will note, Mr. Conway, through the Chair, that the powers or the functions of the DPP's office and FICAC Act, it's word for word the same thing that's written over here and it's written over there, but there is a specific provision, a subsection of 115 that aligns our work with anti-corruption work UNCAC, our obligations, international obligations to UNCAC, hence our role being focused on anti-corruption work only.

Mr. Valenitabua: The appointment under, sorry, the FICAC is established under the Fiji Independence Commission Against Corruption Promulgation Act 2007, according to the Constitution, that has become an act. It does not spell out the mechanics or the machinery of the appointment. At the moment, could you enlighten us on how the appointment is done? Is it through JSC?

Ms. Rokoika: Yes, Chair. As I had indicated earlier, we do not have under Section 115 any appointment mechanism like the DPP's office, hence our submissions for the incorporation of that because of the similarity in our functions. Right now, it's under the FICAC Act. The FICAC Act states that the appointment needs to be done by the Judicial Services Commission and the recommendation has to be consultation with the Attorney General before it is signed off by the President. That's in the FICAC Act and it talks about consultation with the Attorney General and there's nothing of that sort, equivalent consultation in the DPP's Section 117 appointment.

Mr. Valenitabua: If I hear you correctly, you are proposing to this Commission that the appointment has to be scrutinized by Parliament, which is not happening now, and which I don't think happens in any other Commission.

Ms. Rokoika: Correct.

Mr. Valenitabua: It doesn't happen in any other Commission and what I'm hearing is that FICAC has to go through that scrutiny. What is so special about that?

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair. I had anticipated the word special in the question. The reason why we believe that there has to be a scrutiny by a third party, and in this instance, we are recommending Parliament, just so that we can avoid the problem that we are having now. Maybe there's another mechanism that the CRC or the Commission believes is the better or appropriate body to do the scrutinizing, but we believe that there has to be scrutiny done so that the person that actually takes leadership of the Commission is one that has been vetted by any machinery of government because of the nature of the work, we are affecting people's lives because of our obligations to the people, the accountability concept that we have by virtue of the Commission, FICAC. So, we believe there has to be scrutiny done.

Maybe the CRC believes that there's another body that can do it well and good, but the fact that it goes to the Attorney General, noting that this was done in 2013, that in itself causes a problem in our respectful submissions. So, we believe that it should not, because the current wording is consultation, maybe not consultation or scrutiny, just some sort of scrutiny from a third party before the appointment is deemed complete or finalized by the appointing authority. That's the basis on which we are making the submissions.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Does any one of the Commissioners wish to?

Dr. Gounder: Thank you Chair and thank you Commissioner for your presentation this morning. I also want to thank your colleague with whom I work together on the National Development Plan and the issues around FICAC have been captured in the National Development Plan as well.

My question is regarding the point you made about removal from office, given the similarity of your office with the DPP and the removal of DPP in the Constitution 117.6 talks about inability to perform the functions of user office, whether arising from infirmity, faulty mind or any other cause of a misbehavior. It may not otherwise be removed. But I see that you are asking for removal, section 112 of the Constitution which relates to the removal of judicial offices.

So, may I understand what is the reason for differing in this case while so far you have been trying to maintain some level of similarity with DPP?

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you Commissioner through the Chair. The basis on which we have formulated it that way was because we did not want to reinvent the wheel as I had said. I leave it out there for the Commission to decide which one they would prefer to use.

Everything lock, stock and barrel from the DPP's provision, that's fine. Or if it's just removal by virtue of 112 as judicial offices are removed. But there has to be a provision in the proposed amendment for some sort of removal. I leave it with the Commission. I've just incorporated that in there because there's nothing presently available for the removal of the leadership at FICAC.

Dr. Gounder: That's very clear. One more question Chair. This is on funding and administration. The submission says Parliament shall ensure that the Commission is provided with adequate, stable and independent funding to enable to perform its functions effectively.

I'd like to understand better about independent funding because if we do take this into account, it may have implications on the budgeting process and also for the act relating to financial management. If you can clarify that, that would be great. Thank you.

Ms. Rokoika: It was of to mind when we were doing the submission in in terms of word independent. At the moment we get our funding from Parliament and that has to be maintained. If it needs to be removed, it needs to be removed, the word independent. But I was thinking of independence of funding exactly the way the Commission is asking. We are currently being funded by Parliament so we can't have the word independent removed from there. Through you Chair. Commissioner and Manager of Governance.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva, we have to excused Mr. Kohli, he is flying back to Labasa. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Firstly, let me say thank you very, very much for the submission. I think the aspects of the Constitution that apply to FICAC in Section 115 and its comparison to Section 117 and other constitutional offers is clear and may serve us well in terms of deciding what amendments need to be done. Having said that, I'd like to take this back a little further and when I say further, I mean nothing to do with you two and nothing to do with us, which is that this body was promulgated in 2007 by decree by the previous government.

It was continued in that form by the current, the last government as well in 2013 under that Constitution, which was also promulgated and is the reason why, as Chair has rightly pointed out, why we have been asked to review it. I think the term was that there is a democratic deficit in the 2013 Constitution in terms of the fact that it did not come from we the people and I guess by extension that will apply to the promulgation and the decree that enacted FICAC. And I guess having said that then what I want to bring to you is what we the people talk about whenever you read about FICAC.

I ask these questions again from the point of view of the people given that we will be going out to widespread consultations with the public and I suspect that we will get questions related to the institution of FICAC under promulgation because the same questions that were raised about the 2013 Constitution and the need for the review are the same things that apply to the FICAC promulgation. I have three specific questions in respect to that.

One is an accusation that we read about often as to the weaponization of FICAC. Now the first question I want to ask is do you think that is an issue or do you think it is not an issue?

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you Chair through, thank you Commission through the Chair. For us working within the Commission that is not an issue but the issue lies with the public perception. And that in itself is a concern for us because it puts us in terms of accountability and international ratings in terms of what the public perceives as weaponization.

But to answer your question from within and the way that the work is conducted within the Commission it will be very difficult for a person to be able to make a decision by being assisted or promoted from outside because we have a lot of mechanisms in place within the Commission itself that safeguards the officers. And that is in terms of the way complaints are handled and then when it comes up to the Office of the Commissioner when it goes down to investigations there are layers of people within the Commission itself that undertake the work from investigators to the team leaders, chief investigators to the managers and then it comes to the Office of the Commissioner and then it goes down again. There's a lot of layers within the institution itself that prevents a person from being able to make decisions on their whims.

I don't do that in terms of the way decisions are made. There are several officers within. It comes up to the manager and then it comes to me and then it goes down. I'm not the only one that is making the decision in there. And the decisions that are made by the Office of the Commissioner needs to be based on investigations, what the law says. There's a lot of layers within. So, within the Commission, to answer the question, no, it will be very difficult for it to be weaponized. But the issue that we have is the public perception and that we are hoping to be able to improve and that's the work of governance in terms of awareness and outreach to the people so at least it can move up the public confidence in the institution itself. I'm sorry, did I answer your question?

Dr. Fatiaki: You actually, thank you. You have, but you actually answered what was going to be the second part of my question which is if so, what can we do?

I, again, I ask that because and I'm not so liberal and I don't want to use the word presumptuous in assuming that the public perception is not a consideration because, again, I emphasize this Constitution, this document has got to be what we the people want and if we the people think that, and again, this doesn't relate to your tenure either, either of you, I'm talking about the history of FICAC from 2007 until now and the fact that it has come out of promulgations and decrees which, you know, democratically a deficit and we are trying to address that and therefore the question, I guess, should have been historically, are there cases, if you were to reflect, that the public perception of the weaponization of FICAC would be valid, for instance, or shall we take it that they're all the perception of weaponization by the public in its inception to today is completely just that they've misinterpreted everything that's happened or are there cases in your mind, I don't, I'm not asking for specifics, that there may have been reason for the public perception of weaponization, that's the question.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Doctor. What I'll do is I'll just give a short response and then I'll give it to Manager Complaints and Governance to respond to the public perception aspect that you've raised.

First, in terms of the decree or the promulgation of the 2007 decree, I do not have it at the tip of my fingers but I understand that subsequently in 2014 it was, that there was an amendment that was actually passed in Parliament that was, that in effect, but that was, I believe that that was just a Band-Aid amendment, if I, maybe I shouldn't have said that, in terms of it being a, changed from being a decree to an act, I think there was a 2014 act that was passed. I'll give it to Ms. Naliva to talk in terms of public awareness, public perception.

Ms. Naliva: Thank you. I look after a unit that actually goes out or undertakes the roles and duties of conducting education and prevention training programs to the whole of government and to the whole of society. Through our experiences on the ground, when we go out to conduct our session, there is a, there is a misunderstanding and lack of knowledge in the work of FICAC. They don't really, they are not empowered in the roles and functions of FICAC, our purpose, so we take it down to the grassroots level and we really educate and empower them on the work that we do, the problem of corruption and how corruption is a bedrock to all social ills.

So, in terms of public perception, there is a 50-50, while our, through our education training programs and our workshops to the whole of government and whole of society have actually had some good impacts because we tend to receive a lot of training requests from the communities as well from the grassroots level for our sessions and our programs to be taken to them. There's still some institutions, some areas where they still are not quite receptive to the work that we do, but nevertheless we continue to do our work in order to change the public's perception towards us. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Manager Governance. I appreciate your answers, very much so, and again, I try to couch these questions in a very generic role because, again, this is not directed at you individually. I appreciate that you have to be candid in your responses because you're employed by government, but I have to ask these questions in the interests of we the people.

If there were no weaponization, in your opinion, or any examples of it, it's just the perception that the public has, then I have a question to ask. How is it that three separate FICAC commissioners could find differing, I'm not going to get specific to the actual cases, but come up with different outcomes? First, one FICAC commissioner decides we should prosecute. Within the space of a replacement commissioner being appointed, we decide within one day that we should dispense with them, not prosecute, no case to answer.

And then within a month, we have a re-institution of the case. Same cases, three different commissioners, three different perceptions and outcomes and rulings. Now, I don't know how you would call that.

I wouldn't call it public perception. That's the reality of what happened. And if that's the reality of what happened, what I'm really asking is, how do we, how do you reassure the public that that kind of thing doesn't keep happening? Because I don't want to name the ones, but I think we're all familiar with what I'm talking about.

If it were as, like you say, you have systems and checks and balances and assessments that are made by professional people, I have no doubt your staff are coming to decisions. How is it that we get three separate decisions by three separate commissioners in the space of three months or four months for the same case? Again, that's a reflection. That's not a question. But you see where I'm coming from when I ask that question for the public.

Secondly, the issue of duplicity. I think that's, again, something that I hear in the public. And I guess my question is, is there anything that FICAC does that the office of the DPP can't do? That's the first question. Straight yes or no. I'll repeat that. Is there anything that FICAC does that the office of the DPP cannot do?

Ms. Rokoika: The answer to that, Doctor, is yes. The basis of that answer is our obligations to UNCAC on the ratification when the government of Fiji did that in 1994, it was. One of our obligations, international obligations, when we ratified the convention was awareness.

And that's something that we specifically do that is focused on anti-corruption conduct. In terms of prosecution, which I believe is the basis of the question, everything that we can do, the DPP's office can do.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for that. And the third question, I guess, relates to the second question, which is, given that FICAC has been in place since its promulgation in 2007, do you have any data to demonstrate that it has achieved the desired effect in terms, for instance, of our ranking with the corruption perception index, our ranking as a country in terms of, is there any data that you have that it's actually served the purpose for which I presume it was instituted?

Is there any data that demonstrates, for instance, that corruption is much better now than it was in 2007? Because obviously as a constitutional body looking and reviewing this, that's one of the things I'd want to know. Now, if this didn't exist before 2007, and it was brought in in 2007, and in 2026, corruptions almost disappeared from Fiji, or is improved by 50% or 70%, then I'd be interested to know. And I would think that anybody that's doing any work in that field would want to know that too, that you have concrete data that says we are actually succeeding at what we do.

I appreciate your answer to the question, incidentally, in terms of the differences. For me, that's not much of an answer, because complying with international bodies is hardly what I'd want our constitution to do. I'd want our constitution to address our needs and hopefully achieve solutions to them, rather than comply with the requirements of whatever the international treaty or alliance or body that addresses corruption. I mean, I think the education part is useful. Again, I think for us it's the prosecutorial part that is important, and I think you answered that in your second part of your question. But again, I go back to the issue of data.

Is there any concrete data that you have or that the office has that demonstrates that actually corruption has been improved? Because again, perception is everything, and the public perception, I dare to suggest, may be that we're actually as corrupt, if not more corrupt, now than we were in 2007. I can tell you, I'm old enough to know, we're certainly more corrupt than when we got independence in 1970. Your thoughts?

Ms. Naliva: In terms of the data, we have the Corruption Perception Index that's done by Transparency International, and I believe for Fiji as a country, if I can remember correctly, there was one done in 2022. There was another in 2023 and 2024. I think already, in terms of our ranking, I think we had ranked from 55, and then we had improved with, there was a 50th ranking as well. We were ranked against 180 countries, so that was the only international measure that we had.

Nationally, we don't have any measure, but as part of our national development plan, one of our project activities is to establish or is to actually have or conduct a national anti-corruption survey. We've already started the groundwork and preparatory work on that by having consultation meetings with the Fiji Bureau of Statistics. So that is the only international data that we have, and apart from the Corruption Perception Index, we also had a report that came out, I can't remember the correct year, but it was a global barometer report. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. Let me just clarify this. You say that we are ranked 55 out of 185 countries.

Ms. Naliva: 180. 80, in terms of our corruption perception. The higher the number, the better, or the lower the number?

Ms. Naliva: The lower.

Dr. Fatiaki: Okay. And comparatively, what were we before?

Ms. Naliva: I believe in the first year, it was around 55, and then for the second year that the Corruption Perception Index was done, it went to 54, and then the third year, it kind of went back to, I believe, 55.

Dr. Fatiaki: And we're talking about between 2007 and 2026?

Ms. Naliva: Yes, because the Corruption Perception Index, if I can remember correctly, annually, yes.

Dr. Fatiaki: So, I guess my question is, it should be easy to access this data, I just don't want to be doing it right now. So, check what our ranking was in 2007, and check it right now in 2026 or 25, and just tell us that. Thank you.

Ms. Rokoika: Yes, thank you Vuniwai. We'll be able to provide that to the Commission through the Chair. In terms of data within the Commission, we have that within the office itself, it's reflected in our annual reports in terms of convictions and cases pending in court. We will be more than happy to provide that to the Commission through the Chair if that is required. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Please do that.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you again, ladies. Thank you very much for the answers. I know these were not the easiest of questions, and again, I emphasize, these were not directed at you individually. These were just comments that relate to FICAC and its role, and I guess the reason for us to address it, given that it was promulgated under decree, and subsequently in 2013 put into the Constitution and continued. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you very much for your presentation, and I think FICAC Commissioner and your colleague, Ms. Naliva, I think the points, my first question is the clarity of your services is very clear that it's corruption that you're dealing with in your section 115 versus 117, which is prosecution by the DPP in those roles. And then also in the corruption side, that also includes financial corruption. So no, it's just corruption. I think my commissioner to the extreme left there, again, I just was wondering whether that includes financial.

Ms. Rokoika: Yes, that includes financial in terms of procurement tender processes. That's all a part of the work that we do at FICAC, and our investigators are trained in that field in terms of forensic accounting.

They are trained in the field in terms of investigation, and recently our focus has been on procurement and tender processes.

Mr. Beg: Okay, thank you for that. And also on your scale, Fiji is sitting sort of like between 55 at the moment, which is mid-range, top of the number, 85, so New Zealand is looking very low in their index corruption, so is Australia at 75. So, we're sitting at moderate. In terms of improvement, I can't answer that question. I guess the data will probably show that.

But yes, I think it's important that the role that you're doing, I guess as long as it's defined, and that's what I want to hear. And obviously the public perception that my colleague Commissioner Fatiaki is talking about, we just want to hear from the public on that. But I think your presentation and recommendations based on your lived experiences through that is something we will take on board and look at quite clearly and address the areas that you feel strongly about.

But yes, I think I was just trying to understand how better positioned our FICAC is in our current role, because there's a layering of so much in our systems and obviously powers and the delivery of decisions. I think that's what's worrying. But I guess we would need to listen through our consultation process to understand that better. But thank you very much.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I think for the purpose of discussion, I just wanted to add to the discussion on the perception index. I'm not a very big fan of the perception index. The name suggests it's based on experts' perception. So, it is useful in some cases, but not totally useful.

So, I'd like to caution the complete use of that by the media present here today. If we are looking at the effectiveness of FICAC, perhaps we can look at the cases as the Commissioner has highlighted, look at in totality how they perform in terms of the issues they have looked at in the cases. Perhaps that would be a better way to go.

And for that reason, for the national development plan, we requested FICAC to come up with a local index that would be more relevant for our purpose rather than the global perception index. Although it's useful in some cases, it's used, it's based on experts' perception, and in many cases I am the expert who provides perception-based data to these indexing agencies. So useful in some cases, but we need to look more deeper than the perception. Thank you.

Ms. Naliva: Chair, if I may, through you, just to add some clarity on the corruption perception index as well. It doesn't only focus on corruption. It also takes into account other areas, like law enforcement and climate change. So, all that affects that overall rating for the country. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, hence the whole idea of ensuring that the various bodies are working together as one to try and achieve a better way to work in this space, if I can use that word, Chair. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva, one of the issues which the commissioners, CRC commissioners, have been sort of discussing is how bulky this constitution is. There are so many things included into the provisions, one section, and then you have so many subsections and so many subsections. Now I'm going to refer you to Section 115, and I'm going to ask you to give me your views on this. For Section 115, subsection 6, it says that in the performance of the functions and exercise of authority, the commission shall be independent.

That is understood. And it shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority, except by a court of law or otherwise prescribed by written law. We've got the independence, and then there's a limitation or qualification, or a proviso, although it does not say or expressly say that.

Now, when we go down to subsection 9, Section 115, subsection 9, the commission shall provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney General on any matter relating to its functions and responsibilities. That we might call a written law. Right? We might.

It depends on how it is interpreted. Then we go to Section 5 of the FICAC Act. Section 5 of the FICAC Act, subsection 5, the provision says the commissioner may seek the assistance and input of the Attorney General. Or has this been amended?

Ms. Rokoika: It's still there.

Mr. Valenitabua: Still there. Right, my point is this. Independence, and then it says in paragraph 9 something else, advice of the Attorney General, and then in Section 5, you may seek the assistance and input.

Now, in your view, first of all, is that not full duplicity, but it's some sort of duplicity? Secondly, does that not take away the independence of the office, independence of FICAC? If we can remove one or two of these, you know, then we can reduce the provisions that are given in the Constitution.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair. As the commissioners will note, the proposed draft that we have provided to the commission does not make any reference to the Attorney General specifically for that purpose.

I believe that our proposed amendments that we've inserted reportedly is supposed to be done to Parliament. I believe that the Auditor General's office has something similar. So, we had seen that, and the response to the question was the way we've actually drafted our proposed amendments, the removal of that basically because they are conflicting in terms of this side is saying independence and this side is saying reporting and assistance and advice.

So, both of them cannot work together as being independent whilst the Attorney General reference is specifically provided in the current Section 105. So, I'm sorry, did I answer your question, Chair?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, I think you were suggesting that we might have to amend the three provisions, Thank you.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, Ms. Rokoika and Ms. Naliva, thank you very much for your attendance this morning. We've had an enlightening consultation session, and in case there's anything else you would like to have an additional submission written, you may email them to us. With those words, I thank you, and on behalf of the Commissioners, I wish you well.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, Chair. Maybe this is something not for the record of the media.

I was hoping to make reference to a particular work that I had done in my previous life when I was a private practitioner. I was appointed the Chair of the review of the NLC legislation, and we had made some recommendations in there, so maybe that's something that I probably could discuss outside of my work as Commissioner or maybe informally.

Mr. Valenitabua: Are you suggesting that you deal with that now?

Ms. Rokoika: No, no, no, maybe just informally in terms of, yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Very well. Thank you. We take note.

Ms. Rokoika: Thank you, sir. We'll be in touch, or otherwise, email us when you are available. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you.

SUBMISSION TO THE

CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMISSION

Re: Section 115 – Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption

Prepared by:

Lavi Rokoika, Acting Commissioner

22 April 2026

A. INTRODUCTORY POSITION

The Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption ("Commission") approaches this submission mindful that a decision of the High Court of Fiji in Suva is expected on 24 April 2026 on the present questions surrounding the office of the Commissioner. These submissions are therefore advanced in the context of the current position and are not intended to pre-empt or undermine the authority of that decision. Rather, they proceed on the footing that, regardless of the outcome, there is a clear need to clarify the constitutional framework governing the Commission to remove ambiguity, secure institutional certainty, and protect the integrity of its prosecutorial mandate. The present circumstances have exposed structural vulnerabilities within section 115, and it is in that context that the proposed amendments are advanced.

B. PROPOSED AMENDED SECTION 115 — FIJI INDEPENDENT COMMISSION AGAINST CORRUPTION

115. (1) The Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption, established by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption Act 2007, continues in existence as an independent constitutional body.

(2) The Commission shall consist of a Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, and such other officers as may be appointed in accordance with this Constitution and the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption Act 2007.

Core Functions

(3) The Commission shall have the constitutional function to;
a. investigate corruption and related offences;
b. institute, conduct, and discontinue criminal proceedings in relation to corruption offences; and
c. take over and continue investigations or proceedings relating to corruption offences commenced by any other person or authority.

(4) The powers of the Commission under this section shall not be limited or abrogated except by amendment to this Constitution.

Independence

(5) In the performance of its functions and the exercise of its powers, the Commission shall be independent. It shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority, except by a court of law.

(6) Without limiting subsection (5), no person or authority shall direct or control the Commission in relation to any investigation or the institution, conduct, or discontinuance of proceedings.

Appointment

(7) The Commissioner shall be appointed by the President

a. upon the recommendation of JSC or COC established by written law, following an open, transparent and merit-based selection process; and
b. upon confirmation by Parliament within 28 days

(8) A person shall not be qualified for appointment as Commissioner unless that person is qualified to be appointed as a judge of the High Court of Fiji.

(9) Where the confirmation process under subsection (7)(b) is not concluded within the prescribed period, the nominee recommended by the JSC or COC shall be deemed to be appointed.

(10) The validity of an appointment made under this section shall not be questioned in any court except on the ground of lack of constitutional qualification or fraud.

(11) The Commissioner shall be appointed for a term of 3 years and is eligible for re-appointment, and shall not be removed except in accordance with this Constitution.

(12) The appointment of an Acting Commissioner shall be pursuant to this section.

Removal

(13) The Commissioner may be removed from office only for inability to perform the functions of office or pursuant to s112 of this Constitution.

Funding and Administration

(14) The salaries, benefits and allowances of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner and staff shall be a charge on the Consolidated Fund.

(15) Parliament shall ensure that the Commission is provided with adequate, stable and independent funding to enable it to perform its functions effectively, and any material reduction in such funding shall be justified to Parliament.

(16) The Commission shall have control over its own administration, staffing and internal procedures.

Accountability

(17) The Commission shall submit annual and special reports to Parliament. It shall ensure that such reports are made publicly accessible in such manner as may be prescribed by written law, to promote transparency and public confidence.

(18) The Commission may provide information to any State authority where necessary for the administration of justice.

Standards

(19) In exercising its functions, the Commission shall be guided by international standards relating to anti-corruption, including the United Nations Convention Against Corruption.
(20) The Commission may enter into cooperation arrangements and joint initiatives with regional and international anti-corruption bodies for the purpose of fulfilling its functions, consistent with the obligations of the State under international law.

C. EFFECT OF THE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

The proposed amendments to section 115 address the structural deficiencies identified in the current framework. However, the Commission's experience also demonstrates that additional constitutional safeguards are necessary to ensure that the anti-corruption framework operates effectively in practice.

First, the continuity of the Commissioner's office is essential to the uninterrupted exercise of prosecutorial powers. The absence of an acting appointment mechanism within section 115 creates a real risk that, in the event of vacancy or incapacity, there may be no legally authorised person to exercise the Commission's functions. This exposes ongoing investigations and prosecutions to delay and challenge. By incorporating a provision analogous to section 117(4), the Constitution ensures continuity of authority and protects the integrity of proceedings.

Second, the absence of qualification thresholds and tenure provisions undermines both the legitimacy and stability of the office. Unlike the Director of Public Prosecutions, whose qualifications, term of office, and removal protections are clearly defined, the Commissioner's position lacks equivalent constitutional provisions. The introduction of minimum qualification standards and a fixed term of office enhances the institution's credibility and ensures that leadership is both competent and free from undue influence.

Third, public accountability must extend beyond formal reporting to Parliament. While the Constitution presently ensures institutional reporting, it does not guarantee public access to that information. The inclusion of a requirement that reports be publicly accessible strengthens transparency and aligns the Commission's work with the broader constitutional principle of accountability to the people.

Finally, the Commission's engagement in regional and international cooperation is an established and necessary aspect of modern anti-corruption work, particularly where corruption transcends national boundaries. While the current section 115 (7) recognises international standards, it does not expressly protect the Commission's operational cooperation with external bodies. Constitutional recognition of this function ensures that such cooperation remains protected and cannot be restricted by future legislative or policy changes.

D. CONCLUSION

The Constitution recognises the importance of accountability institutions, but section 115, in its current form, does not fully secure the Commission in the exercise of its mandate. The proposed amendments do not expand the Commission's powers; they clarify, stabilise, and protect those powers within the constitutional framework.

The present circumstances demonstrate that ambiguity at the constitutional level translates directly into uncertainty in practice. The amendments proposed are therefore intended to ensure that the Commission's authority is clear, its independence is preserved, and structural deficiencies do not compromise its role in the administration of justice.

The issue is not whether the Commission exists. It is whether it is constitutionally secured in the performance of its function.

FICAC v DPP
Area	Section 115 – FICAC	Section 117 – DPP	Status	Legal Significance
Constitutional Status	Commission established and continued (s115(1))	Office established and continued (s117(1))	Equivalent	Both are constitutional institutions
Core Function	Investigate + prosecute, but not specific corruption offences & subject to written law (s115(3)-(4))	Prosecute, clearly defined (s117(8))	DPP Stronger	DPP has clearer and more self-contained constitutional mandate
Dependence on Written Law	Core functions prescribed by written law (s115(3))	Core function constitutionally defined	FICAC Weaker	FICAC's mandate is variable; DPP's is stable
Independence Clause (Form)	General independence clause (s115(6))	General independence clause (s117(10))	Equivalent (Form)	Wording is similar in both provisions
Operational Independence (Effect)	Qualified by "written law" and structural context	Clear independence in prosecutorial decisions	DPP Stronger	DPP less exposed to indirect control
Attorney-General Role	Mandatory reporting to AG (s115(9))	Only consultation in appointment/remuneration	FICAC Weaker	FICAC structurally aligned to Executive; DPP is not
Appointment Framework	Not provided within s115	Express constitutional process (s117(3))	DPP Stronger	DPP appointment is structured and insulated
Acting Appointment	Not addressed	Express provision (s117(4))	DPP Stronger	Ensures continuity of office
Qualification Requirement	Not specified	Must be qualified as a Judge (s117(2))	DPP Stronger	Higher constitutional legitimacy threshold
Tenure	Not specified in s115	Fixed 7-year term (s117(5))	DPP Stronger	DPP has security and predictability of tenure
Removal Protection	Not specified in s115	Judicial-level removal (s117(6)-(7) via s112)	DPP Stronger	DPP removal highly insulated; FICAC less tailored Prosecutorial Authority	Yes (s115(4))	Yes + defined exclusivity carve-outs (s117(8))	DPP Stronger	DPP role more clearly structured within system .
Delegation of Powers	Express delegation allowed (s115(5))	Express delegation allowed (s117(9))	Equivalent	Operational parity

Staff Control	Full control (s115(10)-(11))	Full control (s117(12)-(13))	Equivalent	Both administratively autonomous
Funding – Salaries	Charged to Consolidated Fund (s115(13))	Same (s117(14))	Equivalent	Equal constitutional protection
Funding – Operations	Parliament to ensure resources (s115(14))	Same (s117(15))	Equivalent (Structural Weakness)	Both exposed to budgetary pressure
Accountability Structure	Reports to Attorney-General (s115(9))	No reporting obligation to Executive	FICAC Weaker	Executive linkage vs institutional independence
Finality of Appointment	No constitutional closure mechanism	Structured appointment reduces risk	FICAC Weaker	FICAC more vulnerable to challenge and uncertainty

SECTION 115 OF THE CONSTITUION
Area	Current Section 115	Proposed Amendment	Justification
Core Functions	Functions largely left to "written law" (s115(3))	Functions entrenched in Constitution (investigate + prosecute)	Prevents Parliament from altering core mandate; aligns with need for constitutional certainty
Independence	General statement of independence (s115(6))	Expanded to prohibit direction in investigations/prosecutions	Aligns with NZ SFO model; removes ambiguity in operational independence
Appointment	Not specified in s115; fragmented elsewhere	Independent panel + parliamentary confirmation + deeming clause	Mirrors Australian models; ensures legitimacy and removes executive dominance
Finality of Appointment	No finality mechanism	Deemed appointment if process stalls + limited judicial challenge	Prevents uncertainty and collateral attacks on prosecutions
Removal	General constitutional removal provisions	Express tribunal + parliamentary removal	Aligns with Australian ICAC and judicial standards; protects against retaliatory removal
Attorney-General Reporting	Mandatory reporting to AG (s115(9))	Removed; replaced with reporting to Parliament	Eliminates executive proximity; aligns with independence principle
Funding	Salaries protected; general funding obligation (s115(13)-(14))	Adds operational funding protection + justification requirement	Prevents indirect control via budget cuts
Accountability	Reporting to AG	Reporting to Parliament + committee oversight	Aligns with Australian parliamentary oversight model
Administrative Control	Internal staffing control present	Retained and clarified as constitutional control	Ensures operational autonomy
International Standards	UNCAC reference present	Retained and strengthened	Maintains international compliance framework

Ministry of Fisheries and Forestry (MFF)

Ministry of Fisheries n Forest
Time: 2.00pm-3.20pm
Date: 22-04-2026

Leighton: On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I welcome the Honorable Minister of the Fisheries, Madam Bainivalu. Just before we begin, I just have a few housekeeping matters. With regards to the mics that are in front of you, if you can press on the right side of the mic to turn it on. And once you've spoken, if you can just tap the same side to turn the mic off. Also, there's an attendance register which will be passed around, if you can also fill that as well. The Chair will then proceed to introduce the Commissioners and the team and the work that they will be undertaking with regards to the review. Also, kindly request after he's made the introductions, if the Honorable Minister and the team can also introduce themselves. This is for the transcription record, Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: The Honourable Minister for Fisheries and Forests and gentlemen, officers from the Ministry. We welcome you this morning, or this afternoon, I should say. We welcome you for attending to this consultation this morning, Madam. The Constitution Review Committee is, as you see, sitting here. The Commission is comprised of seven Commissioners. There are four of us here. We have three others who are in other commitments, so they cannot be present.

I would like to, before I go on, I'd like to ask my fellow Commissioners to introduce themselves to you. And we shall start from my far right at the other table. Thank you, Chair, and welcome, Honourable Minister and delegates of your team.

Mr. Beg: My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession working in the private sector. What's an architect doing on a Constitution Committee? It's a challenge, but I see things slightly different. I'm hoping to really make some impact in that area, and I'm happy to sit on this Committee and listen to the public and yourselves in your submission. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Madam Minister and your team, my name is John Fatiaki. I'm a medical practitioner by profession in the private sector, previously in government, and I'm Rotuman and welcome you and look forward to listening to your submission.

Dr. Gounder: Good afternoon, Honourable Minister and colleagues from Ministry of Fisheries and Forestry. I'm Neelesh Gounder. I'm an academic with USP, and you may also know me from Ministry of Finance where I was Chief Policy Advisor from 2023 to 2025. We look forward to your submission. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Madam Minister, Minister, gentlemen. I'm the Chairperson Sevuloni Valenitabua from Rewa.I've had the opportunity to meet with one of your officers appearing here today in relation to fisheries in Rewa. Welcome. First, I would like to introduce you to the Commission itself. The Commission is an independent body. We were appointed by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji. It was the President who gave us this Commission, and I believe that was established in accordance with a decision made by Cabinet, and pursuant to Section 2 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act 1946. Our task is to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into the 2013 Constitution.

We are to travel around Fiji. We are to take submissions from the population of this island, or the adult population maybe I should say, and get submissions on what our people would like to have in their Constitution, or what is to be removed from the 2013 Constitution, or what is to remain in the 2013 Constitution. The ultimate objective would be for us, after our six months' timeline, which expires on the 3ed1st of August 2026, to prepare a report together with an amended Constitution and present those to His Excellency.

And then His Excellency and the Government will take, will follow a process from there, in order, if they think so, to have another, a new, not new, an amended Constitution for the Republic of Fiji. That is our task. We have been receiving submissions during the last three weeks from Government Ministries and other private associations.

And this afternoon we are receiving the Ministry of Fisheries and Forests with you, Madam Minister, and your gentlemen staff members. We welcome you. We hope that it will be a good session, and that you would enlighten us on what affects the Ministries, the two Ministries, in relation to the Constitution.

What you want changed, what you want improved, what you want removed, and so forth. With those few words, I welcome you, and I now take the time to pass on the mic to you for your submissions, if you may. Thank you, Mr. Chairperson.

Hon. Bainivalu: A very good afternoon to you and the Commission members that are present this afternoon. I am Alitia Crikiyasawa Bainivalu from Nabalabala Saivou, in Ra. And here with me this afternoon are colleagues from the Ministry of Fisheries and the Ministry of Forestry.

To my right is the Acting Permanent Secretary for Fisheries and Forestry, and to my right are the senior officers of the Ministry of Forestry. We are two separate Ministries, two separate heads of expenditures, but we have one Minister and one Permanent Secretary. So, this afternoon we will be making two different submissions, and I will probably give the floor now to the Minister of Forestry to present this submission on behalf of the Ministry of Forestry, before I give the floor to the Acting Permanent Secretary to deliver this submission from the Ministry of Fisheries. Thank you.

Mr. Tulele: Thank you very much. I am the Chairperson of the Constitutional Review Committee and the Honorable Members. My name is Ilaisa Tulele. I am from Sawaieke, Gau. I currently head the Emission Reduction Program for the National Program that is being managed by the Ministry.

I have this great privilege to present to the Committee some of the proposed or the recommended changes to the Constitution. I would like to ask if you have copies of the submission.

Mr. Valenitabua: We can make photocopies if you don't mind. Later, please. Please proceed. Thank you, Honorable Chair.

Mr. Tulele: As you can see from our submission, we have provided the recommendations by sections and it has been in tabulated form. Just to give you some description on the sections that we wish to be reviewed, the first section is on the Environmental and Natural Resource Rights Framework. The proposed amendment is the inclusion of an explanatory provision which states, the state shall ensure the sustainable management, protection, conservation, and restoration of Fiji's forests, biodiversity, watersheds, and other natural resources for the benefit of the present and future generations, while safeguarding the rights and interests of customary landowners and ensuring equitable economic and livelihood benefits to communities dependent on such resources.

The explanatory notes, this amendment seeks to strengthen sector-specific clarity for forestry and natural resources without diluting current legal protection. It emphasizes the state's duty to balance conservation with the rights of customary landowners and community livelihoods.

The second section on Legislative and Regulatory Framework, the inclusion of a supporting clause. Parliament may enact legislation and establish regulatory frameworks for the effective administration, monitoring, licensing, enforcement, and sustainable use of forest resources, including timber and non-timber forest products, climate-related forest services, biodiversity protection, and ecosystem restoration. The explanation, this provision provides an explicit constitutional mandate for Parliament to regulate modern forestry needs, including climate-related services and ecosystem restoration, supporting the expanded mandate under the Forest Act of 2035.

Honourable Chair, as you probably be aware, the Forest Act has been reviewed and is enacted, the Forest Act of 2025. The agenda for this Forest Act is the modernization of forests, forests and its management. We are now moving into an era where carbon trade, emission reduction is very prominent in the world. So, the reviews for the additionalities that we want for the Constitution is to support the newly enacted Forest Act.

We are currently, over the next two years, we'll be developing regulations. So that is the reason why I would like this additionality to the current provisions under the Constitution.

Thirdly, on institutional and regulatory clarification, the inclusion of a recognition clause. Relevant state agencies and statutory bodies may be empowered by law to exercise inspection, compliance, enforcement, and regulatory functions necessary for the protection and sustainable use of natural resources. The explanation, this provides stronger constitutional backing for frontline enforcement and technical administration. It specifically supports licensing systems, seizure powers, and the protection of forest reserves.

Honourable Chair, this additionality is to allow under the Forest Act of 2025, we are looking at also including forest resource owners to be part of our monitoring. And so, this aspect, this inclusion will provide that coverage for the regulations to be developed.

We also have summary recommendations, Honourable Chair. At the bottom of the table, to ensure the effective governance and clear separation of powers within the Fijian Civil Service, the following recommendations are made based on our proposal.

First of all, the decoupling of administration from political authority. The minister remains the head of the ministry and the primary policy decision maker, while the permanent secretary serves as the key advisor and implementer. However, the employment, employment, and organizational staff must remain strictly within the PS purview to prevent political interference.

Secondly, the legislative realignment, move the functions of the permanent secretary from the constitution to the Civil Service Act of 1999. This allows for a reviewed framework that maintains the permanent secretary's autonomy and clearly defines the relationship with ministers without returning to full control by the PSC.

Thirdly, to protect meritocracy, by removing the constitutional requirement for ministerial agreements, the Civil Service can better manage its size and cost while ensuring that employment decisions are made through an open, transparent, and competitive process.

Fourthly, to strengthen resource stewardship, retain and strengthen existing constitutional foundations, Sections 1, 28, 29, and 40, to provide greater clarity for technical agencies charged with natural resource governance.

Fifth, formalize technical mandates, expressly recognize the authority of state agencies to conduct inspections and enforcement to protect forest reserves, biodiversity, and watersheds.

Sixth, align with modern forestry objectives, ensure constitutional support for the expanded mandate of the Forest Act 2025, including non-timber products, forest health, and climate financing mechanism.

And lastly, Honorable Chair, balance development and rights, and we reformers continue to protect customary land rights and ensure economic benefits from natural resources that reach dependent communities. Honorable Chair, that concludes the submission from the Ministry of Forestry.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Mr. Tulele. May we hear from all of you and then we'll ask questions later.

Mr. Tauvoli: Bula Vinaka, the Honorable Chairman of the Constitutional Review Committee and members of the committee. First of all, I just want to explain myself. My name is Saimone Tauvoli. I'm from Naiserelagi in Ra, currently acting in the position of the Department Secretary for the Ministry of Fisheries and Forests.

My duty today is just to add on to the presentations that have already been presented by the Ministry of Forestry through their senior executives. I'll present on behalf of the Ministry of Fisheries on the presentations on issues that we need to be considered from the committee in looking at the proposed constitutional amendments that's currently taking place. I hope what I present today, on summary, some have been presented by the team from forestry, which I basically want to try and elaborate further on for this afternoon.

I will request that I move straight to the sections that we've identified that need to be amended to make sure there's alignment in the processes specified in the Constitution to try and streamline work within the government, especially in carrying out duties of the respective divisions of work within the government.

We will look at the first one that's on Section 126.1 a and b of the Constitution, which basically looks at the functions of the Public Service Commission. The proposal from the Ministry of Fisheries is to remove the text with agreement of the Prime Minister sitting under Section 126.1 a and b. I request that the body represented in Section 125.2 be the main selection governing body for permanent secretaries.

The reason being, we've noted that the Prime Minister is already the Chair of the Constitutional Officers Commission, which sits and decides on the appointment of the Public Service Commission through its submission to the head of state for the criminal state to nominate the Chair and the members of the Commission. So, it's already in there, and when we want to have separate powers, make sure that the Commission operates independently in making decisions on the role that's been assigned to it, basically in the appointment of former secretaries. So, if it remains as it is, it duplicates the role.

On one side, it's deciding on the appointment through the concurrence of the head of state, and on the other side, when it comes to the personal organization of the Commission on the appointment of the permanent secretary, it's again making a decision on the other side. So, we are looking at if we can remove that clause from Section 1261a and b.

Secondly, on Section 127.1.3 on permanent secretaries, the proposed amendment is to remove the tax, the permanent secretary of a ministry is responsible to the minister concerned for the efficient, effective, and economical management of the ministry or any department under the ministry. What we've noted is this text contradicts Section 127.1.2, which places administration under the permanent secretary.

The current wording suggests that the minister is administering the ministry, how we look at it. So, it's like it's duplicating that role again. That's how we look at it under what's in the constitution.

So, both the minister and the permanent secretary are doing the same role without any classifications on what needs to be done. When we have the intention, it's already there in the appointments within the ministry and the department's concern. We also noted under the third one, it's under Section 127.1.4, permanent secretaries, still on permanent secretaries, to remove the text with agreement of the prime minister, since we've noted the explanation that it's to be consistent with the first point that we've raised from the first one.

The prime minister already exists as the chair of the Constitutional Officers Commission. So basically, we are just looking at that, if that can be clarified or it can be made sure that there's no duplication of work or reporting or approval on those issues. Looking at Section 127.1.6, still on permanent secretaries, if we can remove the text following the agreement of the prime minister, we already noted the Public Service Commission's role in this capacity should be sufficient without the additional of the prime minister's agreement on appointments. We still noted on those ones.

Section 127.1.7 and 127.1.8, still on permanent secretaries, remove the text with agreement of the minister. Still, we noted again that it's Section 127.1.2 regarding the administration of the ministry.

It incorrectly implies the minister is responsible to day-to-day operations. So basically, that's how we are looking at how those two sections of the Public Service Commission, also the appointments of the permanent secretaries, that we are presenting this afternoon. So, on the summary recommendations, to ensure the effective governance and clear separation of powers, we noted that there needs to be some alignment within what's written in the Constitution.

Within the Fijian Civil Service, the following recommendations are made. Strengthen institutional independence. The amendment seeks to empower the Public Service Commission and the body represented in Section 125.2 as the primary authorities for the selection and management of permanent secretaries.

Secondly, to clarify administrative boundaries, a recurring theme is the removal of limits that suggest the minister administers the ministry. This is intended to resolve legal contradictions with Section 127.1.2, firmly establishing that the permanent secretary is the administrative head while the minister maintains a policy-oriented role. And the third one is to streamline executive approval by removing requirements for the prime minister's specific agreement in various subsections.

The amendments aim to reduce redundancy, noting that the prime minister's influence is already sexually present as the chair of the Constitutional Officers Commission. So, basically, Mr. Chair, that's basically what we, ministry officers, have noted that we presented this afternoon to the committee to consider on the proposed amendments on the sections that I've already highlighted. And this submission is still in alignment to some of the issues that have been presented by the Ministry of Forestry on the administration as reflected in the Constitution, the current Constitution that's currently available today. I believe that's all the submissions from the ministry officers, and I thank you for your attention.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr. Naseralagi. If I may ask, is there any other submission, madam?

Hon. Bainivalu: No, Mr. Chairman. I think that's the submission from the two ministries.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka?

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. The chairman has given me the go-to-go first. So, thank you, Madam Minister and colleagues from the Ministry of Forestry and Fisheries. Thank you for your submission. I must say this is a very bold and honest submission coming from senior civil servants. So, thank you very much for bringing the submission to the CRC. This is for clarity purposes. First is to my colleagues from the Ministry of Forestry. And I agree to your point regarding biodiversity. Fiji has signed international conventions on biodiversity. And so the point about inclusion of an explanatory provision regarding sustainable management, protection, conservation, restoration, etc.

Ideally, if that is a proposed amendment, in this form it will appear in the preamble of the constitution. So, the preamble already contains a provision which I'd like to read to you now. Declare our commitment to justice, national sovereignty and security, social and economic well-being, and safeguarding our environment.

So, do you think that is not sufficient for this purpose and would you like to see more than what's here?

Mr. Tulele: Honourable Member, basically that's the intention. The way things are currently worded, we would like to see that it's understood by those that read rather than interpreted. That it's clear, there's clarity.

Because some of the wordings, when you say environment, it could mean a lot of things. But for forestry the most important thing is the conservation of biodiversity, the protection of forests that are very important to sustaining the growth of forests. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: I get your point about the need to have biodiversity in addition to the wood environment. Thank you for your clarity. On the second point, the legislative and regulatory framework that you mentioned, and it's good to know that the Forestry Act has been revised, which is one of the KPIs in the National Development Plan as well.

Given that we have, in my view, a very good Forestry Act, do we still need a provision in the Constitution that requires an enactment of legislation and establishing regulatory frameworks for monitoring, licensing and enforcement? Do we still need that provision in the Constitution? Because one of the things we have been discussing at length is how do we sharpen our Constitution and reduce the number of words and pages that are in the current Constitution. I'm just seeking your views, I'm not disagreeing with you, but I just want your views. Because we already have a good Forestry Act, do we still need to have something like this?

Mr. Tulele: Thank you, Honorable Member. Our apologies, we're not lawyers or legal persons.

Dr. Gounder: I'm not a lawyer either.

Mr. Tulele: So we, when we were given this opportunity, we thought we'd like to come in and express ourselves.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, thank you for doing that. That is fine. Thank you, I get your answer as well. Okay, if you want to add more?

Mr. Tulele:c No, that's basically what I wanted to say. Thank you, I got your answer.

Dr. Gounder: Yes, Madam Minister.

Hon. Bainivalu: Thank you, Dr. Gounder. If I may just probably seek clarification on your question. You don't want it to be repeated again on the Constitution?

Dr. Gounder: Yes.

Hon. Bainivalu: The need for the legislative framework?

Dr. Gounder: Yes, the need to enact specific legislation to explicitly appear here, because you already have a good legislation in place. So I'm just wondering the purpose for it. Usually if you don't have an act, then you put this clause in the Constitution which will force the government in the future to enact a written law in regard to something of that kind.

So, because you already have the Forestry Act, whether we need to have that provision in the Constitution for the need to have a written law relating to those provisions, which is already contained in the Forestry Act, which we have now.

Hon. Bainivalu: Thank you, Dr. Gounder. I think we have a very comprehensive Forest Act. The previous Forest Act of 1992 that had been reviewed, so it had been finally enacted as the Forest Act of 2025. And right now, before the Parliamentary Standing Committee is the Mahogany Bill of 2026, which we hope to enact soon, and that should probably cover the other areas of forestry that is yet to be covered and be recognized by the Ministry and by the nation as a whole. So, I think it should sufficiently, those legislations should sufficiently cover everything about the forest sector.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have two more questions on the fisheries. Thank you, Acting PS, for your submission and Madam Minister.

Dr. Gounder: Your point about the agreement of the Prime Minister is completely understandable. I don't have any issues with that. I have one question regarding Section 127, Number 2 and 3 that you spoke about.

So, your argument regarding 3 contradicts 2, I see it slightly different, and I'll give you, I'll tell you why. My take is that 3 talks about accountability to the Minister in line reporting, whereas 2 talks about the administration. So, I may be wrong, but I have a good lawyer with us, our chair, who I will concur with during our discussions, but I just wanted to take you through that.

And so, I just have the view that 3 is to do with responsibility in terms of accountability. So, it may not necessarily mean that PS is responsible for the Ministry in 3, but is accountable, so to say. So that's something that, but if you want to add to what I've said, please feel free to do that. This is just my point.

Mr. Tauvoli: Thank you. I think that's understandable, Mr. Governor. What we're looking at is the wording that's coming out. Talking about the word administration, it's mentioned that's the role of the Prime Minister when it comes again to the Minister. It's more like there's no clear area where the administration component is, whether administering the administration on behalf of the Ministry, on the operations, or looking at from a policy level. That's how you were presenting on that.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. If I may ask one more question regarding this. So, for the National Development Plan, Chapter 9 of the National Development Plan talks about robust monitoring and evaluation system and the existence of KPIs.

So, one of the tasks during that exercise was, when I was with the Ministry of Finance, was to assign KPI's to Permanent Secretaries. But one of the challenges was, is to link the performance of Feminist Secretaries through the KPI's to the PSC. So, which is a challenge we face because of this particular section, number 3, section 127.3, is the interpretation at that time was that the PSC is responsible to the Minister in terms of accountability.

So, therefore, PSC found it difficult to assign the KPIs that we put in the NDP for the Ministries as the KPIs for the Feminist Secretary. So, for example, contract renewal, which is done through the PSC, by the PSC, they couldn't really assign the KPIs.

So, that challenge was there. So that's when, this is how it was interpreted, but that's something we can look at. I think this provides a golden opportunity, the review, to look into your issue, which I am not totally sure about, and the other issue as well. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Through you chair. Madam minister and colleagues. Thank you for presentation. Firstly, Fiji Forestry is all about sustainability and that is great. But if I compare that to Forestry Act is moving really well, the fisheries act is a way back in 1941 which is Outdated? I haven't heard anything about that at this stage, but it's alignment back into, I noticed it dusted on Chapter 6 quite well and I've taken on board those and I don't have any issues with that. I think that's a great submission, but I'm more interested in the Acts because I'm finding how that aligns.

Because what we're trying to find out whether the Constitution overburdens itself with some of the operational instruments that sits in the Act, and that's what I was trying to understand. So, these are sort of my initial comments, and I think that I'd just like to hear something more along those lines from, I think, the forestry submission. I really welcome, as an architect in the space of environment, I'm an environmentalist.

I have a different view on climate change, so that's different. I'm not here to preach about that, so let's not talk about that, but I'm more interested in the fisheries because that's sort of, 1941 was still a weak position. I noticed that we've had things that have come in.

How does that sit? I haven't heard that any alignment in the Constitution. I recognize there are gaps, like in the sustainable forestry management, for example, Section 8 state obligations. These are items that, like I said, introduce the sustainable marine resource.

Where is that? Is that coming in the Fisheries Act, or how is that covered? But again, someone who's trying to understand our Constitution and listen to your voices, I want to hear a bit more about that, if you don't mind, sir. Thank you.

Mr. Tauvoli: Thank you, Mr. Beg. Thank you for raising that issue regarding fisheries. We've understood that the current legislation in the Fisheries Act can't be violated. It's 1941, 1942, that's sitting in.

That's something that we're working on. I know that it's part of the national plan to try and review all the current legislations of the Ministry. So far, we've passed the Eco- Culture Act that's already in place.

The current, as you mentioned, the existing Fisheries Act, 1941. There were some amendments that were done this year to try and make sure that it has teeth that can make sure that some of the things, enforcement and monitoring and all those things can be taken on board to make sure that we can do our work. But it doesn't take away the need that we need to review all those.

We already have the Offshore Fisheries Management Act that's already in place. We have the Agriculture Act that's already in place with the supporting agriculture development plan with regulations that we are coming up with. We're still on the consulting stage at the moment.

The third one that's on the table of the solicitor-in-chief is the new Inshore Fisheries Development Act that's basically for this year that can align all those two words currently in the constitution to make sure that whatever is in the constitution we always align and make some sort of alignment. And looking at the different boundaries of operations where the fish is what's in. So that's basically what we have.

I'm sorry that there was nothing in the submissions in reference to the current developments on the legislation at the moment. But that's where we are at the moment. Just in response to the questions that you presented to us.

Mr. Beg: Through you Chair, thank you so much PS. I know it's a erroneous task as you're dealing with a lot of very complex layering issues. And I don't envy you for that. But coming back to the constitution in your, under chapter 6, sections 126, 127, very, very enlightening. We can see the same trends occurring from previous submissions. It's nothing new but it's nice and it's refreshing to hear that. So, thank you for that. I appreciate that.

Mr. Valenitabua: Honorable Minister, gentlemen. I'm hearing that there is a new act, the Forest Act 2025. There is a new one. It would have been enacted last year. Right? 2025, right? It's the Forest Act 2025. When that act was being prepared, you would have had your lawyers consulted.

And this constitution was in existence. What we're hearing now is that you want these amendments or additions to be made to the constitution. Now the purpose of that might be, now I'll rephrase it, I'll rephrase it.

The constitution is the supreme law of the country. All legislations which are made have got to comply with constitutional provisions. Because as Madam Minister would know, anything that is inconsistent with the constitution becomes invalid.

Now the Forest Act 2025 has been enacted. While that was being prepared, what provisions of the constitution was the Ministry of Forest using in order to align this new act, the Forest Act 2025, with the constitution? Would you be able to assist us on that? If not, you can go back and then inquire and then send it to us. Because you are coming to us for new provisions to be added to the constitution whilst a new Forest Act was enacted last year, 2025.

Now what was your guideline? Because the constitution is supposed to be a guideline. Otherwise, someone would end up in court and say this provision of the Forest Act 2025 is unlawful, it is ultra-virus, which is the word for it, for unlawfulness. It does not comply with the constitution.

It does not comply with the section so and so of the constitution. So, my question is, if the new Forest Act 2025 has been enacted, it would have been enacted considering the constitution. What sections of the constitution were being considered so that that Forest Act and its provisions could be in line with the 2013 constitution? That is the question. Because otherwise then we will have to find a way to put these provisions in. We would like to know that first.

Hon. Bainivalu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate if we can come back to the Commission on that please.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Madam.

Dr. Fatiaki: Madam Minister and gentlemen, P.S. Thank you very much for your presentation. I only have two general comments that I would like to make and I guess inherently that would be a question. Our terms of reference given to us in our appointment to the Commission are very specific in terms of particular areas that we have been asked to address and I will read to you term of reference J. because I think this comes into the gamut of the Ministry of Fisheries and the Ministry of Forestry.

And one of the terms of reference specifically stated in our review process is the protecting, guaranteeing and securing under the constitution land and fishing rights and resources of indigenous Fijians and Rotuman's and assuring that registered owners of native lands and customary fishing rights have an equitable share of the income derive from the exploitation of the resources beneath and above the surface of their land, the seabed, rivers, etc.

It's a long one. If you want me to read it again I will but I think you got the general idea. And so, my question to you is now that you're aware of what one of the terms of reference that's been given to us is I would like to invite you to go back, read that provision of the terms of reference because that's an important one and I don't see anything in your submission that attempts to address that.

And I'd like to think that we will be able to put together, particularly because you're a government department, areas very specific for us to include in the constitution that achieves the stated terms of reference that I referred you to. I think there are areas there that allude to it, they wishy-washy and when I say they wishy-washy they just say oh we look at the protection of but they don't actually tell you how. They don't actually tell you how for instance the owners of the land get more income from it.

They don't tell you how the owners of the fishing rights are supposed to actually get income from it. And I think that's a mandate that we've been given as a term of reference and because they relate to fisheries and forestry, maybe you weren't aware of that and I ask you, I mean we accept submissions until the end of June. I ask you please go because you are the people mostly that know as far as putting a meat onto the bone of this suggestion so that we can put it into a way into this constitution that ensures that this term of reference is in here as a supreme law of the country upon which subsequent acts under your different ministries will need to comply with or at least consider when they're making their appropriate laws. That's the first thing.

The second issue really relates to submissions by UPS in respect of fisheries and I appreciate this because this has been brought up by different departments. Okay, so the commissioner under the constitutional officer's commission, the commissioner of police's role was that they didn't want the minister to say that they must do this operationally.

They wanted the independence as rightly pointed out to you. I guess my counter argument and something for you to maybe think about is obviously the need to refer to the prime minister I agree with you completely. I think that that was one of the democratic deficits in the previous constitution is it consolidated too much power in the hands of the prime minister and AG so I support you in terms of removing that need.

Having said that, the minister for the various ministries, their stated role is obviously policy in terms of giving you the direction and guidance. My question is if they don't have an input into how you operationalize it or implement their policy, then if you choose not to, they are actually acting upon the mandate of the people in terms of their stated manifesto, their stated plans or policies and if you do not implement it, then by virtue of you don't want to implement it, you don't like it, you don't think it's workable, then how do the mandate of the people in selecting and electing their minister play out in terms of what you subsequently do?

Because yes you operationalize it but I think there's no question about it when a government comes in, they come in with different policies and it may be completely different to the policies of the previous government. So, you can't continue to do the same thing. You have to do something different according to the minister's desires or the party's desires or the government's desires and so if you separate the minister and now you're no longer accountable to the minister except to the PSE, then I don't see how the minister's policies can be guaranteed to be implemented.

Because I think the whole purpose behind an election is that the people are voting in people to implement the policies that they want and therefore I think there's a danger in removing the minister whether it's, you know, you can use language like say in consultation with or in agreement with, you don't need to say you must do this but I would be concerned if you were to remove the minister because the minister is the director of policy.

I understand the removal of the Prime Minister. I don't see why the Prime Minister should be interfering with decisions made by fisheries and forestry. In every case you have to refer to him and like you rightly pointed out, it's already there in the Constitutional Officers Commission. He's the chair and he has the ability to influence the public service and by so doing he has the influence on the PS.

The minister for policy, I think there's a danger in removing that because that is the link between what the people want and what you do and if you remove it and you do whatever you want to do, maybe do what the previous government directed you to do, then there's no recourse for the minister to ensure that the policy that she's promised to her electors or the electorate is subsequently implemented and I would be concerned that the removal of the minister in any language in the Constitution because that becomes the supreme law and I'm fearful for that.

Those are just my reservations. Again, we invite you to look at your submissions again, maybe in a different light and see the argument against the separation of powers that you rightly point out but at the same time I ask the question, your job is to implement what the minister wants and what the minister wants is what the people want because they elected her or him there. Just some general thoughts, thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Madam I note that Ministry of Fisheries reference section 127.3. NA the suggestion is the removal of 127.3. Am I reading you correctly? It says section 127, subsection 1, 3. Remove the text, the permanent secretary of the ministry is responsible to the minister concerned for the efficient, effective and economical management of the ministry or any department under the ministry. This is a general provision for all ministries in the government. And then on the explanatory notes, it says this text contradicts section 127, 1, 2 which places administration under the permanent secretary.

So, how I'm reading this is that subsection 3 is to be deleted. Right?

Mr. Tauvoli: Mr. Chair, I think how it's presented is a bit contradicting each other. Basically, what we mentioned in the explanatory note, when you mentioned that the administration of the ministry is under the permanent secretary, how the wording is made in the proposed amendment is the permanent secretary is administration.

And again, it's written that the permanent secretary of the ministry is responsible to the minister. And the presentation is too clear. If one is administration, the ministry is at policy level, that's nonsense.

Mr. Tauvoli: As I mentioned, Mr. Fatiaki, that mandate of the people is still in there. So, this would be some wording made so that there's alignment to clearly identify the roles that they play so that there's a flow in working within the ministry. I think when you said remove the tax, that can be, not remove the tax, but the wording that's been used to be clear so that you identify the roles as a policy maker or a policy decision maker with an operational area that the permanent secretary works in. I think that's where the section 127, 1, 3 basically wants to talk about on this.

Mr. Valenitabua: Subsection 2 is all right. Is it?

Mr. Tauvoli: Yeah, subsection 2 is mentioned that the administration is under the permanent secretary.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yeah, what about the responsibility? The administration of the permanent secretary responsible for the office of the prime minister?

Mr. Tauvoli: Minister.

Mr. Valenitabua: Of the prime minister. One, two, seven. Am I missing something?

Mr. Tauvoli: I think that's on the second, 127, 1, 3.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, subsection 2 is all right. Yeah. Only subsection 3 is to be amended.

Mr. Tauvoli: Yes. Not removed, it's amended. To clarify the roles that they play in those.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, through you, if I might be as bold to suggest and you rightly point out but you don't actually come to a conclusion and that is the respective roles, I would suggest to you that the idea behind reporting to the minister and making them is that they are in charge of the ministry.

They're in charge of the ministry and the sole job of the civil servant is to implement the policy that the minister brings. I don't think that discretion should be given, that operationally you just do whatever you want to do because if it doesn't concur with the policy that the minister directs should be implemented, which is reflective of the election results, then you are not really operationalizing it.

And I think if you're asking who heads the ministry, I have no doubt in my mind that the purpose is that the minister heads the ministry because the minister is representative of the people and the people's wishes and the mandate of the people and the manifesto is what they want implemented by the operational people. Okay. And I think they don't want any misinterpretation there as far as authority is concerned. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, thank you Dr. Fatiaki. We got your point, Madam Honorable Minister. We have heard you. Like I said in my introduction, we will be assessing the submissions. We will deliberate on them so that we can write a report later on and also an amended constitution. We will deal with the provisions that you have raised today. In relation to my point earlier, please send me that. What was the provision in the constitution which the ministry used to enact provisions of the Forestry Act so that we know that there is no inconsistency? The word used in the constitution is inconsistency.

The constitution is the supreme law of the country and any provision in any law which is inconsistent with it is invalid' *koya kau kerea ke rawa ni vakau ga mai me keitou raica',*and then we will decide on how to deal with this one that you have suggested. Thank you very much, Honorable Minister.

We have come to the end of our consultation. Pardon us if we have dug into your questions, but I think that is the task that we have been given. We have to get submissions, clarify things, and write our report later on.

Hon. Bainivalu: Mr. Chair, I would also like to thank you and the team for having us this afternoon. I thank you for your very constructive comments. Thank you very much.

I also would like to thank my colleagues for making very honest submissions. I did not want to interfere with the submissions they made, but I am thankful that they were honest to present these submissions this afternoon.

We will probably go back and discuss what we have discussed this afternoon. Again, I thank you for your comments on that, and we will get back to you on some of the questions that you have asked of us. Would you want us to come and do another submission, or we can just have a written submission?

Mr. Valenitabua: You may just write it and send it to us in email. You have got our email address, because you have been communicating. Thank you, Mr. Chair and members of the Commission.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair, if I might. Madam Minister, I should point out that you are the first Minister to have graced this Commission with your presence in person. We appreciate that very much. We cannot say the same for the Ministry of Agriculture, who cancelled their appointment this morning at the 11th hour. Your presence this afternoon has made up for that. I thank you and I thank your colleagues for being here in force. We do appreciate it, because you are the first Minister to physically take the time to provide the importance to our work, and we thank you for that.

Hon. Bainivalu: Thank you.

----------End of Session [22-4-2026]----------

Proposed Constitutional Amendments: Ministry of Fisheries

Section	Proposed Amendments	Explanatory Notes
Section 126 (1) (a) and (b): Functions of the Public Service Commission	Remove the text: "with the agreement of the Prime Minister."	Requested that the body represented in Section 125 (2) be the main selection/governing body for Permanent Secretaries. Note that the Prime Minister already Chairs the Constitutional Offices Commission (COC).
Section 127 (1)(3): Permanent Secretaries	Remove the text: "The permanent secretary of a ministry is responsible to the Minister concerned for the efficient, effective and economical management of the ministry or any department under the ministry."	This text contradicts Section 127(1)(2), which places administration under the Permanent Secretary. The current wording suggests the Minister is administering the ministry.
Section 127 (1)(4): Permanent Secretaries	Remove the text: "with agreement of the Prime Minister."	Consistent with the first point; the Prime Minister already acts as the Chair of the COC.
Section 127 (1)(6): Permanent Secretaries	Remove the text: "following the agreement of the Prime Minister."	The Public Service Commission's role in this capacity should be sufficient without additional Prime Ministerial agreement.
Section 127 (1)(7) and 127	Remove the text: "with the agreement of the Minister	This text contradicts Section 127(1)(2) regarding the administration of the (1)(8): Permanent Secretaries	responsible for the Ministry" in both instances.	ministry. It incorrectly implies the Minister is responsible for day-to-day administration.

Summary Recommendations

To ensure the effective governance and clear separation of powers within the Fijian Civil Service, the following recommendations are made:

- Strengthen Institutional Independence: The amendments seek to empower the Public Service Commission (PSC) and the body represented in Section 125(2) as the primary authorities for the selection and management of Permanent Secretaries.

- Clarify Administrative Boundaries: A recurring theme is the removal of language that suggests a Minister "administers" a ministry. This is intended to resolve legal contradictions with Section 127(1) (2), firmly establishing that the Permanent Secretary is the administrative head, while the Minister maintains a policy-oriented role.

- Streamline Executive Approval: By removing requirements for the Prime Minister's specific agreement in various sub-sections, the amendments aim to reduce redundancy, noting that the Prime Minister's influence is already structurally present as the Chair of the COC.

Proposed Constitutional Amendments: Ministry of Forestry

Section	Proposed Amendments	Explanatory Notes
Environmental and Natural Resource Rights Framework	Inclusion of an explanatory provision: "The State shall ensure the sustainable management, protection, conservation and restoration of Fiji's forests, biodiversity, watersheds and other natural resources for the benefit of present and future generations, while safeguarding the rights and interests of customary landowners and ensuring equitable economic and livelihood benefits to communities dependent on such resources."	This amendment seeks to strengthen sector-specific clarity for forestry and natural resources without diluting current legal protections. It emphasizes the State's duty to balance conservation with the rights of customary landowners and community livelihoods.
Legislative and Regulatory Framework	Inclusion of a supporting clause: "Parliament may enact legislation and establish regulatory frameworks for the effective administration, monitoring, licensing, enforcement and sustainable use of forest resources, including timber and non-timber forest products, climate-related forest services, biodiversity protection and ecosystem restoration."	This provision provides an explicit constitutional mandate for Parliament to regulate modern forestry needs, including climate-related services and ecosystem restoration, supporting the expanded mandate under the Forestry Act 2025.
Institutional and Regulatory	Inclusion of a recognition clause: "Relevant State	This provides stronger constitutional backing for frontline enforcement and Clarification	agencies and statutory bodies may be empowered by law to exercise inspection, compliance, enforcement and regulatory functions necessary for the protection and sustainable use of natural resources."	technical administration. It specifically supports licensing systems, seizure powers, and the protection of forest reserves.

Summary Recommendation

To ensure the effective governance and clear separation of powers within the Fijian Civil Service, the following recommendations are made based on your proposal:

- Decouple Administration from Political Authority: The Minister remains the head of the Ministry and the primary policy decision-maker, while the PS serves as the key advisor and implementer. However, the appointment, employment, and organization of staff must remain strictly within the PS's purview to prevent political interference.

- Legislative Realignment: Move the functions of the Permanent Secretary from the Constitution to the Civil Service Act 1999. This allows for a reviewed framework that maintains PS autonomy and clearly defines the relationship with Ministers without returning to full control by the PSC.

- Protect Meritocracy: By removing the constitutional requirement for Ministerial agreement, the civil service can better manage its size and cost while ensuring that employment decisions are made through an open, transparent, and competitive process.

- Strengthen Resource Stewardship: Retain and strengthen existing constitutional foundations (Sections 1, 28, 29, and 40) to provide greater clarity for technical agencies charged with natural resource governance.

- Formalize Technical Mandates: Expressly recognize the authority of State agencies to conduct inspections and enforcement to protect forest reserves, biodiversity, and watersheds.

- Align with Modern Forestry Objectives: Ensure constitutional support for the expanded mandate of the Forestry Act 2025, including non-timber products, forest health, and climate financing mechanisms.

- Balance Development and Rights: Any reform must continue to protect customary land rights and ensure economic benefits from natural resources reach dependent communities.

Office of the DPP
Time:12.30pm-1.50pm
Date: 23-04-2026

Leighton: Ms. Tikoisuva, and Mr. Vosawale, on behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I take the time to thank you for accepting our invitation and attending this session this morning. Just a few housekeeping matters with regards to the mics. To speak, just press on the right side of the mic, and then you can also press the same panel to turn the mic off.

There's also an attendance register in front of you, if you can also fill that out. I've filled in what details I could. Chair will introduce the Commission, members who are present today, and also lay out the work that the Commission is undertaking. Following that, we also request if you can also introduce yourselves, just for the record, as this session is being transcribed.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Leighton. Ms. Tikoisuva, Mr. Vosawale, we welcome you this morning. Thank you very much for accepting the invitation and coming in this morning to assist us in this big task that has been given us. We've had delegates from various ministries, from various associations and organizations, and they've assisted us a lot. And we don't doubt that this morning your submission will also assist us.

In addition to you, I would also like to welcome the two members of the press, of the media who are here with us. They have been assisting us giving out news every day, informing the members of the public what is happening here, as you might have noticed. The CRC comprises of seven commissioners. You can see four of us here today. The other three are not with us. But we shall have this consultation proceed.

As you might know, the commission was appointed by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, for the purpose of reviewing the 2013 Constitution. We were to identify any democratic deficiencies in the Constitution and, more importantly, we are to hear submissions from people of this country in relation to what they reckon or they believe or they think should be included in the Constitution, what should be changed, what should be removed, what should be amended and whatever else adjective we can use there. There has been a lot of dissatisfaction in relation to the 2013 Constitution, so we are having this exercise, the review of the Constitution, in the hope that we can have an amended one which is agreed to or liked by the people of the country.

So, thank you very much for coming in this morning. Your position is an important position in the Government of Fiji, that of the DPPs, and we look forward to hearing from you in relation to what changes, what additions you would like to see in the Constitution. The commissioners in front of you, you might know them.

Before you came in, on my right is Mr. Conway Beg, the far right, and next to me on my right is Dr. John Fatiaki, and on my left is Dr. Neelesh Gounder of USP. I'm the chairperson. We've got three other commissioners, as I have said, who are not with us. Now, with those few words of welcome, I now pass on the mic to you, DPP, and Deputy, to make your submissions to us.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you very much, Chair, for the kind introduction of the members of the commission and the work that has been given to the commission to undertake for Fiji. My name is Nancy Tikoisuva. I'm the acting DPP for Fiji, and along with me is Mr. Meli Vosawale, who's the assistant DPP here in Fiji. We thank you for the indulgence and our request to make some submissions before the commission with respect to the role of the DPP's office, an important role that has existed over time.

Perhaps, if I may, we did have some written submissions put together, but given just five minutes before we entered, we just suddenly remembered another provision, and if you would allow us, we would make that written submission and collate it together and submit it after hearing from us this morning, if that would be all right with the chair and the members of the commission.

Mr. Valenitabua: That would be all right. Thank you.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you, Chair. Just by way of background, Chair and the members of the commission, the office of the DPP is an independent office by virtue of Section 17 of the Constitution. It was first established under the Fiji Independence Act in 1970 and the 1970 Constitution and has continued its existence and purpose in all various constitutions that Fiji has seen.

This year will mark the 56th year of its existence and service to our country and to its people, with 11 DPP's having served in the office. It has also been the training ground for some of the most great advocates in Fiji and litigators in the criminal justice system, some of whom have later joined the bench and also have taken up prosecutorial positions across the Pacific, including the role of the DPP in Vanuatu, Solomon Islands and currently the DPP of Nauru. A former chief Justice of Fiji was also a prosecutor within the office of the DPP.

From just seven prosecutors in 1970 to now 55 prosecutors, the ODPP has seen significant growth in professional capacity and now boasts as the largest prosecuting body in the Pacific, excluding Australia and New Zealand. Our submissions this morning is predominantly on the sanctity and independence of the office of the DPP and the functions and the roles of the office of the DPP. The sanctity and the independence of the office of the DPP has been one of the cornerstones of upholding the rule of law and maintaining confidence in the criminal justice system.

The constitutional safeguards for its independence has largely remained intact until now with the way in which the 2013 Constitution is being framed. Sections 117.8 of the Constitution provides for the general powers of the DPP.

If you do have a copy, and I see you can have a copy of the Constitution with you, I will take you to subsection 8 that says the DPP may institute and conduct criminal proceedings. Two, take over criminal proceedings that have been instituted by another person or authority. Accept proceedings instituted by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption. Thirdly, discontinue proceedings. Accept proceedings instituted and conducted by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption. And of course, intervene in any other proceedings that raise a question of public interest and that may affect the conduct of criminal proceedings or criminal investigation.

Further, in subsection 10, the exercise of the powers of the DPP shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority except by a court of law or as otherwise prescribed by this Constitution or a written law.

If I may take you to a similar provision that exists for the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption, particularly section 115.3, 4 and 6. The powers of the FICAC do not have the exception that exists in the same provisions in section 117.

The authority and responsibility of the Commission is prescribed by law and by written law similar to that of the Office of the DPP. And if you can see in articles 115.3 and 4, there are no exceptions that has been created for the functions of the Commissioner of FICAC.

Similar provisions in the exercise of the powers of the Commission is not subject to the direction or control of any other person except to the court of law. If you are to take the provisions as it is, it essentially means that FICAC can take over files or override the decisions of the DPP but not vice versa, creating an imbalance of the powers and functions.

Whilst the DPP has predominantly been viewed as not reporting to anyone except to the court of law in its independent function, the current provisions of the Constitution has created a pathway for possible political interference through the powers of the Commissioner.

The pathway is through article 115.9 of the Constitution where the Commissioner is mandated to provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney General on any matter related to its functions and responsibilities. We are not suggesting in any way that this has been done. However, in our view, the current provision threatens the independence of the Office of the DPP and leaves it vulnerable to political interference through the work of the FICAC that reports to the Attorney General.

No other provision exists for the Office of the DPP for regular updates to the Attorney General. It only exists in the function of FICAC. It is our humble submission in this important work that we ask that the Commission ensure that the exceptions created in its current form on the powers of the DPP is removed to preserve the sanctity and independence of the Office.

None of the provisions that exist currently in its form has ever existed in its years and in previous Constitutions. 2013 is the first Constitution that creates an exception for reporting and for its functions to be subject to another body outside of the Court of Law and any other written law. Before I move forward, are there any questions in relation to the first point of our submissions?

Mr. Beg: I do, but I think perhaps maybe we should wait until you... Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: We'll wait until the end.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you. Our second submission is in relation to the appointment of the DPP. And if in the course of your inquiry and reading of previous Constitution, the current Constitution, in our view, is, in our view, overreaching in the functions in which the appointment has been made. Section 117.3 in its current form says the DPP shall be appointed by the President on the recommendations of the Judicial Services Commission following consultation by the JSC again with the Attorney General.

As you would note, the JSC is constituted by the Chief Justice, President of the Court of Appeal, a legal practitioner who has been appointed by the President on the advice of the CJ in consultation with the AG, and a member of the public who has been appointed by the President on advice of the Chief Justice in consultation again with the Attorney General.

If the JSC is an independent body, isn't it sufficient that its functions and its decisions for the appointment of the DPP does not need to again be consulted with the Attorney General, if already that the members have already been placed there on recommendations of the Attorney General?

This is an overreach, again, onto the appointment process of the DPP and also subject to political interference. You would see that the appointment has multiple layers of influence, or it can be, at least danger of subject to political interference in the way it is structured. It is a humble submission that the Commission revisit that clause and look at 1997 Constitution that only states that the COC is the appointing body in consultation with the Attorney General. And we humbly ask that also 1990 Constitution be looked at, at least for the appointment of the DPP's office. That was our second point in relation to our submission.

Our final point is in relation to the interpretation provisions of Article 163 of the Constitution that has been recently tested through the courts, particularly on the definition of public service. The definition of public service under the Constitution says, the service of the state in its civil capacity, and it creates another exception, which is service in the judicial branch, service of the office of the member of the Commission, and service in an office created by or continued in existence under this Constitution.

In the course of some recent cases, we've had to ask questions as to why the definition appears to create an exception to some public service holders from criminal liability, particularly when it's been challenged and used as a defense in criminal proceedings. The definition in its current form is not tenable.

Although that the judiciary has the ultimate function to be able to interpret, the Constitution should not be ambiguous in the way that it's been framed. In the current form, it can also suggest that the state cannot be sued, especially when it says in its third name, by or continued existence under this Constitution, effectively meaning that the range of constitutional offices such as the DPP, FICAC, Fiji Police Force, and all other constitutional bodies that exist under the Constitution are exempted by the definition of public service. We are unclear as to the intention behind the exception from civil liability, but it also creates a problem in criminal liability is there is no clarity in this.

We did ask for a handsard report. Unfortunately, there is no handset report in this current Constitution, and it was unhelpful, at least in the briefing notes, as to why this particular definition was put in its form. The reason we say this is because in the offense of abuse of office, which is targeted towards those who hold public office, section 139 says those employed in the public service. There is no definition of public service in the Crimes Act. The only definition that exists, it exists in the Constitution.

In that, we humbly submit, and it is our submission, that the definitions be aligned to other legislation to provide clarity and to remove ambiguity, particularly if there was an intention to create an exception from any civil liability as intended to protect institution. So, if the exception was there to protect some institution, that has to be clearly provided.

This is the respectful submissions of the Office of the DPP, and we hope that in the course of our write-up that we will provide more clarity in relation to all the three points of submissions that we have made this morning. With that being said, Chair and the Commission, if there is any other questions in relation to what we submitted, we are happy to take them.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Acting DPP. We hope that we can have written submissions from you. We will welcome that to facilitate our consideration into the matters that you have raised this morning.

Now, you have raised comparison between FICAC and the ODPP, and we note that you have raised the powers of the two offices, the DPP and the Commissioner of FICAC. You are supposed to be independent, but then there is an exception, as you have stated. I note that there is an exception in 115, subsection 6, that in the performance of its functions, the Commission shall be independent and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person except by court of law or as otherwise prescribed by written law.

In 117, you have referred to subsection 10?

Ms. Tikoisuva: 8, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: 8. The Director of Public Prosecution may institute and so forth a takeover criminal proceeding, discontinue any proceedings and intervene in any proceedings. Now, how about subsection 10? In the exercise of the powers conferred under this section, the DPP shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority, which is the same as the FICAC Commissioner, except by the court of law, which is still the same, or as otherwise prescribed by this Constitution or a written law. Is there a difference there?

Ms. Tikoisuva: There is, Chair. It is our submission that there is a difference. The difference is this.

If you see the subsection 8. B and C, the DPP's office can take over criminal proceedings that have been instituted by any other person or body.

Mr. Valenitabua: As in private prosecution?

Ms. Tikoisuva: That is correct, or other ministries or other bodies, statutory bodies, that have taken over prosecution.

Mr. Valenitabua: You mean immigration and all?

Ms. Tikoisuva: Immigration. Everybody that wants to institute criminal proceedings, we have the power to take over those proceedings, except proceedings that have been instituted by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption. So, you see under the Constitution, you have subsection 10, that says we are not subject to the direction and control of any other person or body, unless otherwise prescribed by this Constitution. So, there is a limitation in the exercise of the powers, except for FICAC.

But the similar provision does not exist for FICAC, to create an exception that they cannot take over proceedings instituted by the DPP, or taken over by the DPP. Do you see my point, Chair, if you see Article 115?

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, through you, if you may.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, thank you. Yes, I think. I get it now. I'll hand over to Dr. Fatiaki.

Dr. Fatiaki: I am not a doctor of law, or constitutional law for that matter, but I think what you are suggesting is very clear. In terms of B and C, obviously it allows you to take over all prosecutions, except those that have been instituted by FICAC. When you look at 115, they are allowed to take over any other prosecutions, and they don't have any limitations as to...

Ms. Tikoisuva: That is correct.

Dr. Fatiaki: And I can understand that. I say this in the background of FICAC presenting yesterday to us, and using comparisons as to why they should have, for instance, more alignment with your office. I can see that there is obviously a discrepancy here, and certainly we can address that.

I have a comment about what you raised in respect of Section 115, Subsection 9, which is related to the independence of constitutional offices, particularly of the judicial branch, and that is in respect of having to report to the Attorney General. That is a requirement for FICAC, but it is not a requirement for the DPP's office.

Ms. Tikoisuva: It is not a requirement. It has never been a requirement since 1970.

Dr. Fatiaki: Just as an addition, I think I would have to go back to the submission, but I think the submission from FICAC yesterday was for us to get that repealed, to remove it. So, if that were to do it, it would address the issue that you raised.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Certainly.

Dr. Fatiaki: I agree, because I think if you read Subsection 6, and then you read Subsection 9 subsequent to that, you are saying, well, you are going to be independent of everything except the court of law or the Constitution, and then in 9 you say, well, actually you report to Attorney General's office.

Ms. Tikoisuva: That is correct. That is the gist of the concern, because it creates a pathway through the functions and powers of the FICAC Commissioner, because they can take over DPP's matters under the current form and report to the AG under its own functions under the Constitution.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. And to the other point where the Attorney General is required to be consulted in respect of the appointment with the JSC, I think, again, that is an understood point.

This has been raised by a number of different people, and we have been addressing it. It has become evident to us the issue of consolidation of power in the 2013 Constitution in two offices is excessive. People have quoted that there are 66 references to the AG in this Constitution, whereas it was, I think, 17 in previous Constitutions.

So, I think, though, that point that you've asked for in respect of that is an area that has been raised by other people, and I'm sure we will address when we review this. I have one last very generic question. I asked this of a FICAC yesterday, and that was the issue of duplicity, because that's a perception that the public have. Thank you for giving us your history, because that puts things in context. You've been there since 1970. FICAC's been there since 2007.

People can calculate the difference. But the point being, I asked them, you know, the issue of duplicity of services, is there anything that FICAC can do that you can't do? And I guess I'll ask that question of you, because I didn't get a straight answer yesterday.

Ms. Tikoisuva: I'll tell you the difference between the two bodies. The DPP's office is predominantly just a prosecutorial body. We do not investigate. We do not have a prevention measure.

If you see the functions of FICAC, and also globally in terms of functions of anti-corruption agencies, it has two major arms, preventative measure and the reactive measure. The preventative measure is through awareness programs and anti-corruption awareness programs to the members of the public. We do not have that.

That is not our function. We also have a reactive measure in two folds, prosecution and investigation. We do not investigate, have any investigative powers. We are purely a prosecutorial body.

And the work of, if I may say and be frank, the work that currently exists with the Anti-Corruption Commission has been the work of the DPP's office historically. I think there was, because we signed up to the UNCAC, is a recognition of a separate institution that deals predominantly with anti-corruption.

But there are many ways in which anti-corruption bodies can be set up. And some countries globally, if you see the structures, some only have preventative arms, separate from investigative, separate from prosecutorial. Some have both preventative and investigative, and they still submit to the DPP for prosecution. We have all three.

And so, it is up to the Commission and the government of the day as to what the structure should look like. And under our current constitution, yes, that function of prosecutorial body is also with the Anti-Corruption Agency.

And so, I think the hard question would be what does the government want it to look like? Because we have various forms and the various structures. And so, this is where your task, I guess, will be for you. So just to explain the difference, we do not investigate, we do not do preventative measure, purely prosecutorial body.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. That's very clear and lucid. I guess it begs the question of what did we do before FICAC? I presume that that role was carried out by DPP.

Ms. Tikoisuva: It was.

Dr. Fatiaki: The corruption existed for the last 50, 100, 200 years. So, was it inadequately addressed under the DPP's office prior to the formation of FICAC? I asked them also was it better addressed after FICAC was constituted from 2007 until 2026.

Again, I didn't get really an answer on that because they didn't have any data. Other than this Corruption Perception Index, which has not changed in 19 years. Thank you.

Ms. Tikoisuva: I was in the DPP's office in the early 2000's. And at that time, we were also trained on anti-corruption measures with a view that we were to take on the anti-corruption work with specialized units under the National Prosecution Service that was being piloted at that time. And this was a move where we would merge the Fiji Police Force Prosecutorial Arm, which is a police prosecution, under one umbrella of a National Prosecution Service.

It was piloted. It was successful at that particular time. Again, the brain behind it was former DPP, who is now High Court Judge Naigulevu.

And so, we had undertaken some groundwork to address the anti-corruption issues at that time. And again, with the change in government, we are subject again also with different policies, different priorities within the government. But that was how FICAC was birthed.

And also, to comply with our UNCAC obligations for an anti-corruption agency. And so, this is where, as far as I can remember back, but we were doing the work at the time. We were being trained.

We had gone to visit Hong Kong ICAC to see their model. And we were thinking around how the setup was going to be for Fiji. So, I only speak because from my previous experience as a prosecutor in the early years of 2000, if that is helpful in any way to the Commission.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Chair. Thank you and Assistant DPP, for your very pointed presentation today. Your presentation is very clear. I just wanted to clarify one of the points that you mentioned. And that is, obviously you don't do education and advocacy and the investigation aspect of what FICAC is currently doing. My simple question is, can you currently do all of the work regarding prosecutor work that FICAC is doing?

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you. And I think it's not new. When I had already made the submission, but in a different form, particularly with budget. In the years that we've been doing this work, I make a comparison with 2023, where we had over 50 prosecutors with a $6 million budget.

And FICAC had over 10 million with 14 prosecutors. And our work spans on all areas of prosecution and also civil forfeiture. So, from small crimes to big crimes, fisheries, maritime, environmental, law with Mr. Vosawale prosecuting the first one under the Frisson case.

So, with all those resources, we've been able to successfully prosecute cases, handle its load, and continuously do our work. So even as we are now expanding with a limited budget, we have been working and have been doing so for a number of years.

And so, there is, and I've said it again in budget, there is a disparity in the way that resource has been allocated to the DPP's office in comparison with the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption.

There is a disparity in the way the pay is structured and the load that each institution has. And so, we've continuously advocated for that at various forums. And because you've asked this question, I think we can safely say that it's not new to us in this continuous advocacy. Yes, we can still absorb the work of the Anti-Corruption Agency in addition to the additional other work that we do.

Having said that though, there are strategic ways in which we try to mitigate the load through the police prosecution and continuous training. We conduct basic prosecution calls and advanced prosecution calls with the police prosecution. And there's also a regulatory bodies training that we conduct for them, again, with the idea that they might want to take on some work themselves without oversight from the DPP's office, of course. So, for example, fisheries is conducting its own prosecution. And then we step in as and when they need assistance.

Other institutions have called upon us and asked if they can do prosecution. We said, yes, you certainly can. Undergo the training that we have, the packages that we have, and then continue and then we work with them in terms of their investigation and prosecution.

So, there are other ways, strategic ways, in which other bodies can absorb some of the work at different levels. But coming back to anti-corruption, that continues to be the work today. It's no different.

Dr. Gounder: So, I'll take that as a yes. And with some financial resources, support, you might be able to deal with the challenges that you have just outlined. One more question, and that is, you mentioned about the conflict between investigations work and prosecutorial work.

I'd like to hear from the office of the DPP, what is the exact nature of that conflict?

Ms. Tikoisuva: I didn't say conflict. We did not do investigation.

Dr. Gounder: I may have used the wrong word there, but the challenge in terms of one organization doing both investigation and prosecutorial work.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Oh, yes. The advantage of the anti-corruption agency, as I foresee at the current form, is they have a robust set of skill set that may be a challenge with the Fiji Police Force. So, you've got digital analysts, you've got accountants, seasoned investigators that are there in the anti-corruption agencies that we still have a struggle with the Fiji Police Force.

So, if I may take it as that we wish we could have the caliber of investigators that the anti-corruption agency has in the work that we do, particularly on serious fraud and corruption and asset recovery and the financial investigation aspect. So, with their resources, they have far more resources in terms of investigative tools as compared to Fiji Police Force, with due respect. That is our view. So, I hope that sort of addresses your question.

Dr. Gounder: Yes.

Ms. Tikoisuva: So, that's the advantage, that they can investigate with the vast resources that they have, whereas in Fiji Police Force, the investigators are also doing, they're giving evidence in court with everything, in addition to their load, policing and the various functions that they hold within the Police Force.

Dr. Gounder: So, that makes perfect sense from the financial resource angle. I was more focusing on the other aspect, which is what you mentioned earlier in your first presentation, that you don't do investigative, you just do prosecutorial. And you said that's a good aspect.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Yes.

Dr. Gounder: So, FICAC does both investigative and prosecutorial. So that's the angle I was coming from. Is there an issue with that?

Ms. Tikoisuva: There can be challenges.

Dr. Gounder: Yes.

Ms. Tikoisuva: There can be challenges if we do hold the probe, particularly when it comes to giving evidence, and particularly if you're an investigator receiving instructions from the same body that will, person that will make the decision in respect of charges.

So, the dual role in both investigating and charges is a very powerful role, and there is no separation. So that comes maybe in terms of institutional, how do they demarcate and ensure there's no conflict of interest, and so forth. So, with the DPP's office, we are removed from the investigative process.

We can make suggestions as to what evidence we were looking for, and police, they will do their independent work in that regard. So, I can see whether it's going to be an institutional challenge where you can separate the functions and have an independent investigation that is removed from the independent process of the decision-making for charges. So, you have a separate institution that just focuses on investigation and then passes the file to another independent body that then has its own process form.

With both under one army, yes, there can be abuse of those functions if it's the same person making directions of investigation, the same person that will make a decision on the charges.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. That's what I was looking for. Thank you. Up to you, Chair.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair, along similar lines, and that's a good point that you brought up and the potential conflict of interest that you have, I think we recognize that there are areas in the world where actually the two functions merge.

So, I'm thinking about the Americans where a state attorney's office will investigate as well as prosecute. That's commonly practiced. That's not an unheard-of scenario, and it works.

My question in our sort of setting is what will be required for the work that is done for the purposes of corruption, investigation, and prosecution to come under the DPP's office? Would that require a constitutional amendment, or could it be done at the level of administrative, structural adjustment laws from a practical point of view? Obviously, there's going to be a need for constitutional adjustments should that scenario arise.

I'm not talking about that part of it now. I'm talking about if one were to revert yourselves to the situation where you did, for instance, prosecute corruption cases in the past prior to the formation of FICAC, and had a dedicated unit to do it that permitted the unit to also investigate what would be required, constitutional additional powers to be given to the office of the DPP in the Constitution, or could you do that from a structural point of view in terms of how you structure the DPP's office?

Just as I know you have a sexual crimes unit and family law units and specialized areas. I'm not sure that they actually investigate, but I can't imagine that you who are going to be prosecuting would want to separate yourself completely from the police who will investigate it. I would presume you are separate, but you'd have to work hand in hand.

Ms. Tikoisuva: We do. Again, it comes down to ensuring accountability in all the processes related to the criminal justice system just as judiciary is independent of that process. So, coming back to your question in relation to constitutional amendment, it's not a suggestion that we have an investigative arm, and I would request that we remain in its main purpose, which is prosecutorial.

However, if there is a suggestion for, say, repositioning the Anti-Corruption Agency as a predominantly investigative body similar to Fiji Police Force, that is another pathway where they do specialized investigations to do with anti-corruption and financial crimes.

If the idea is to absorb all the prosecution done at the DPP's office, that is also another structure that exists also with the anti-corruption agencies across the world. And as you said, having two under one arm is not a new thing. At the end of the day, it is what we would like to see.

DPP's office can do the prosecutorial work, and if there is a suggestion to readjust the two institutions and to consider DPP's office as the sole prosecutorial body, then the other alternative is to consider Anti-Corruption Agency as a predominantly investigative body similar to Fiji Police Force.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I think for us it has worked well, the difference between prosecutorial, that is the role of DPP, and the investigative arm.

If something works well, there is no need to mandate. I know the American system, but it is currently under pressure if we do not have the right people at the helm. So institutional design, I think, is very important based on country context and society and taking into account cultural characteristics as well. So, I would not suggest that both should be under one organization, just for clarity.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Yes.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you very much. Sorry, I should address you in your own activity as Deputy Director of Public Prosecution and Assistant Deputy Public Prosecutor. I have learnt a lot in this space. I have a different... They talked about corruption perception index out there, but that figure is forced by other factors.

And I was interested in your view about the ICAC model that you studied in Hong Kong, or Australia as well, I think the other model. You said earlier that there was consideration for that being taken on board before ICAC came on board. I was really interested in your thoughts around that.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Yes, it is not a new thing for the separate anti-corruption work. At the time, again, the view was the National Prosecution Service as opposed to the DPP Service. So, it was going to merge all the prosecutorial powers that was given to the Fijian Police Force to also come under the DPP's office and not as a separate... So currently, you have DPP's office, you have police prosecutors still being paid for by the Fijian Police Force, but we give them the sanction to prosecute on our behalf or on behalf of the state.

So, the model was a National Prosecution Service to bring that out of Fijian Police Force under one umbrella and also with the UNCAC obligations, the different special divisions. So, in the DPP's office, we have specialized divisions that focus predominantly on areas of interest. For example, sexual crimes predominantly work with child sexual offences.

They do not do any other work. If they have spare time, they might get in a murder trial as well. We have the General Crimes Division led by Mr. Vosawale. They do most of the robbery cases, murder cases and manslaughter cases, serious crimes.

We have the Serious Fraud that predominantly do serious fraud, money laundering and asset forfeiture. And we also now have the Drugs Division headed by Mr. Deputy DPP John Rabuku, and they focus only on the serious drugs that we have.

If there's an overlap, the civil forfeiture will work with the drugs unit. And so, you'll have two different divisions working together on a similar case. Usually, the civil forfeiture will work with every other case, serious fraud, drugs and other offences.

So, we already have structurally organizational pursuit of different specialized areas. Anti-corruption was one of those at that time, and so we had undergone the groundwork for it. And we had gone to Hong Kong to see some models of how they've done it, and that was obviously cut short at that time.

But if there's a need for a separate division that will focus on anti-corruption work, absolutely. Currently we just have an ad hoc high-profile case division, and that's predominantly the work of the Assistant DPPs and myself, and Deputy DPP, for special high-profile cases involving high public officials. So, it can be done.

It's just that how do you want the office to function and work is a matter left to the public with their views, and also to the government of the day as to how we want it to be structured.

Mr. Beg: Thank you for that. I was leaning towards your comment about budget and resources earlier on. I was trying to understand how that... Because when I look at the Constitution, I see if I get 115, DPPs move back to 117, you know, I kind of feel the power of that...

Ms. Tikoisuva: Displaced.

Mr. Beg: Displaced. And I find that very fascinating. I don't want to preempt anything at this stage. Mine is to listen, observe, and also listen to the public view on this matter. But it's very, very interesting, and thank you for enlightening me. I appreciate the hard work that you do, and thank you for your service.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ms. Tikoisuva, Mr. Vosawale, thank you very much for the submissions this morning. We have no further questions. May I repeat, or please allow me to repeat the request, your written submissions, if they could be sent to us. You know the e-mail address? Just forward it to us so that then it can become part of our record and we use them for our deliberations. It has been a fine morning. We heard FICAC yesterday. We heard DPPs this morning. There is undercurrent for some consequences to happen, some access to fall, so we'll deliberate on that. Thank you.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you, Chair. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: May I? May I? Yes, yes. Does he want to ask a question?

Mr. Beg: Yes, yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: We've got Mr. Kohli online. He's online, so he might want to ask a question. Go ahead Mr. Kohli.

Mr. Beg: Can you hear me? Can you speak up a bit?

Mr. Kohli: Can you hear me? Can i go ahead? Hello?

Mr. Beg: Yes. Hello? Yeah, we can hear you.

Mr. Kohli: Can you hear me?

Mr. Beg: Yes. Can you speak up?

Mr. Kohli: I'm shouting.

Mr. Valenitabua: Go ahead, go ahead. Ask your question, please.

Mr. Kohli: I just wanted to ask you a question. Given the fact that you are doing all prosecutorial work and investigation done by the police, I can see that people who are doing investigation sometimes can make subjective assessments, whereas when the file comes to you, you always try to be objective. That being so, there is a demarcation between investigation and prosecution.

When it comes to FICAC, if they are doing both, and when they have whistleblower policy, do you think it is fair to the person who is being charged not getting the information as to who is making allegations against you, what the allegations are, so he can answer when he's being questioned in an interview? That's my first question.

Ms. Tikoisuva: If I may just repeat your question, Mr. Kohli and Bulu Vinaka, to you. Are you asking, in our view, is it fair to an accused person not to know who is making an allegation against you? Is that the question?

Mr. Kohli: What is the nature of it? Yes, definitely, that's the question.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Again, as a prosecuting body, our role also is to uphold the Bill of Rights under the Constitution, and this is where the structure of having a separation between the functions of the police force in investigating comes in, because if there is any issues of unfairness or any breaches of human rights that are protected under the Constitution. We can objectively assess and make a determination whether or not to proceed with the case, having looked at how the evidence was obtained, the manner in which it was obtained, whether there was any forced influence or suggestions being made to suspects that could influence their admissions or lack of admissions.

We scrutinize that as part of our objective assessment. I can see where you're coming from in terms of where the same investigative body, in terms of whistleblower, can at least not give the opportunity for accused persons to know what the allegations are, particularly where an accused person or suspect must know what the allegation is, and be able to give an opportunity to answer to those specific allegations.

I can foresee questions or tests on unfairness in that regard as well, Mr. Kohli, and that has been the same with the police. When that gets tested, we go to trial, we thrash it out, and of course we've seen some good outcomes where admissions have been thrown out, charges have been stayed because of that process. And so that's always the danger that the institutions such as FICAC will continuously face, and that is where the internal process is to ensure conflict of interest is addressed, the policies around it is maintained. For example, in the DPP's office we have a multi-layered process.

I got a question from one of the forums in Leadership Fiji, and the question was, how do you maintain independence and ensure that you are not conflicted? And my answer is that the level of scrutiny internally within the DPP's office, there is no way that you will be able to hide behind and have an influence over it, because the process is multi-layered.

One, we do not investigate, so we have no control over the type of evidence that has been collated and how they are obtained. Two, the level of scrutiny of legal advice and research comes up at different levels. So, if you make a decision that is contrary to the legal advice, it will be quickly identified and pointed out. And we also have, it's not a case where files get, say for example, files get hidden, or maybe a danger of files get hidden.

We have a database, and I believe we are the only institution that has a database where the files exist virtually also in our digital platform. So, the decision is locked into the system, and so if you are to go around it, yes, ultimately the DPP can overturn or overwrite investigative suggestions or legal opinions, but our process is heavily guarded with the multiple layers that we have internally.

So, for institutions that have both investigative and prescriptorial arm, the levels of scrutiny internally has to be safeguarded, and they have to have strong internal policies related to each and every layer of that process.

So, institutions have survived this American model, but it will come down to your internal processes to ensure that, and to avoid the conflict-of-interest situations. I hope I've answered your question, Mr. Kohli.

Mr. Kohli: Yes, yes, very, you've answered very successfully, and I'm happy with that. My other observation is that I have been doing criminal law for the last 42 years, and many a times the people who do investigation, because they are involved with investigation, they put in the hard work and hard hours, they feel very passionate about it.

They get emotionally involved, and they say, no, we should be prosecuted. But when we see from defense point of view and send it to DPP, we see that DPP is not involved in investigation, and they come up there and say, no matter how hard the work they've done, your chance of success is zero.

You are just wasting time, you're not proceeding, because they are not involved in investigation. They are not, what do you call, they are objective about it, not subjective. So that is one advantage I have seen over the years. Many of the cases, if proceeded on trial, would have consumed hours and hours of work. But because of the right advice from the DPP, they did not proceed for good reasons.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Yes, Mr. Kohli, and I believe that the DPP, this is where we've always said, is the gatekeeper as to what goes before the court and what doesn't.

And that's why the appointments has that level of scrutiny equivalent of a judge. And so, there are layers in which we have to make an assessment, guided by the prosecution code, on sufficiency of evidence and also public interest considerations. For example, recently, I don't know with members of the public, we've had a policy directive that all cases involving breaches of COVID restrictions to be withdrawn and taken off the court system, because it's no longer a public interest issue.

Yes, it was an offence at a time when we needed it to address a health issue. We are no longer in that time. And therefore, we had withdrawn cases, all the cases that are before the courts, in relation to public health consideration.

And that's where our role comes in, in terms of guided by the prosecution code for public interest. It is in the public interest to pursue this case.

Mr. Kohli: Thank you. Finally, my question is this. Through you, Chair, yesterday we heard from my team that even though there were wide powers to prosecute, their concentration was on corruption cases, which I think is correct, this concentrate on corruption cases.

Now, DPP has a wide range of prosecutions, on the crime set, on the various other acts, together with helping health, fisheries, you name it, they are there. My question to you is that, if I think it's only concentrating on corruption cases, if their expertise, their finance, is given to DPP, will we be able to handle it? Absolutely.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Absolutely. It's a yes, Mr. Kohli. We're already doing that work with our current prosecutors.

Mr. Kohli: Thank you. Finally, just through you, Chair, again, I think the question was posed whether, without changing the constitutional part of it, you can place the two together. I think that is impossible, because Whitehead is the creator of the Constitution, and we really have to change that section, because otherwise we will not be able to achieve. Am I correct in my interpretation of it?

Ms. Tikoisuva: Was the question is that, if to merge it we have to make some constitutional changes, was that the question?

Mr. Kohli: That's correct.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Yes, absolutely, because we are creatures of the Constitution. We exist by virtue of the Constitution, and so if the government and the stakeholder and the submissions have suggested structures, I would encourage the Commission to consider other structures that have been successful, and to see what has worked and what has not worked in other structures that exist globally.

That does not impede on, again, our obligations under the UNCAC for the Independent Commission Against Corruption agency. So, I hope that answers your question.

Mr. Kohli: It does, and finally, thank you very much indeed. It's a pity I couldn't be there. I would have loved to have made that talk with you more. Thank you very much, Chair.

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you, Mr. Kohli. We're no longer in trial, Mr. Kohli

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much. Thank you very much, Ms. Tikoisuva and Mr. Vosawale

Ms. Tikoisuva: Thank you.

----------End of Session [23-4-26]----------

CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMISSION 2026

SUBMISSIONS BY THE ODPP

BACKGROUND

1.1. The ODPP is an independent office by virtue of section 117 of the 2013 Constitution.

1.2. The ODPP was first established under the Fiji Independence Act 1970 and the 1970 Constitution; and has continued its existence and purpose in all the various Constitutions of the Republic of Fiji.

1.3. This year will mark the 56th year of its existence and service to our country and to its people with 11 DPPs serving in the office. It has also been the training ground for some of the most great advocates and litigators in the criminal justice system, some of whom have then later joined the Bench or have taken up Prosecutorial positions across the Pacific, including the role of DPP in Vanuatu, Solomon Islands and Nauru. A former Chief Justice of Fiji was also a Prosecutor with the ODPP

1.4. From just 7 Prosecutors in 1970 to now 55 Prosecutors, the ODPP has significant grown in professional capacity and now boasts as the largest prosecuting body in the Pacific, excluding Australia and New Zealand.

1.5. The ODPP has 11 offices across Fiji in the Western, Northern and Central-Eastern Divisions apart from providing services as and when necessary in the maritime areas on specific maritime court sittings.

1.6. The ODPP hosts a few specialized divisions in its headquarters in the Central Division which focuses prosecution on specific areas requiring special skills and training as follows:

a) General Crimes Divisions – which focuses on general serious crimes such as Aggravated Robbery, Murder/Manslaughter, Human Trafficking etc.
b) Sexual Crimes Division – focuses on prosecution of Rape and Sexual offences particularly on children.
c) Serious Fraud Division – focuses on serious fraud, money laundering, international cooperation and asset recovery.

d) Narcotics/ Drugs Division – focuses on prosecution of serious drugs cases.

e) Appeals Division – mainly focuses on appellate advocacy at Court of Appeal and Supreme Court.

1.7. Currently, a High Profile Unit (HPU) consisting of senior prosecutors are designated from the various units to conduct prosecution of high profile nature particularly on corruption related offences involving political persons.

1.8. The ODPP also has supervisory role over all other prosecutorial agencies and provide training and advisory support to departments and institutions that wish to prosecute its own cases, for example, Police Prosecutors (Fiji Police Force), Fisheries cases, LTA, FNPF etc. The ODPP provides various courses to regulatory bodies who wish to pursue its own cases.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW CONSIDERATIONS

Submission 1 – Ensuring and Securing the Independence of the ODPP

2.1. The sanctity and independence of the ODPP has been one of the cornerstones of upholding the rule of law and maintaining confidence in the criminal justice system.

2.2. The constitutional safeguards for its independence has largely remained intact until now with the way in which the 2013 Constitution is framed.

2.3. Article 117(8) of the Constitution provides for the general powers of the DPP as follows:

> (8) The Director of Public Prosecutions may—
> (a) institute and conduct criminal proceedings;
> (b) take over criminal proceedings that have been instituted by another person or authority (except proceedings instituted by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption); 71
> (c) discontinue, at any stage before judgment is delivered, criminal proceedings instituted or conducted by the Director of Public

Prosecutions or another person or authority (except proceedings instituted or conducted by the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption); and

(d) intervene in proceedings that raise a question of public interest that may affect the conduct of criminal proceedings or criminal investigations.

(10) In the exercise of the powers conferred under this section, the Director of Public Prosecutions shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority, except by a court of law or as otherwise prescribed by this Constitution or a written law.

2.4. A similar provision exists for the Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption in Article 115 (3), (4) and (6) except that the FICAC powers does not have an exception that exists in the powers of the ODPP as follows:

(3) The authority, functions and responsibility of the Commission shall be prescribed by written law, and a written law may make further provisions for the Commission.

(4) Without prejudice to subsection (3), the Commission may—

(a) investigate, institute and conduct criminal proceedings;

(b) take over investigations and criminal proceedings that fall under its responsibility and functions as prescribed by law, and which may have been initiated by another person or authority; and

(c) discontinue, at any stage before judgment is delivered, criminal proceedings instituted or conducted by it.

(6) In the performance of its functions or the exercise of its authority and powers, the Commission shall be independent and shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority, except by a court of law or as otherwise prescribed by written law

2.5. If we are to take the provisions as it is, it essentially means that FICAC can take over any files or override any decisions of the ODPP but not vice-versa. There is a disparity in the powers of the both institutions and the ODPP now being affected with FICAC having powers over ODPP functions.

2.6. Whilst the DPP has predominantly been viewed as not reporting to anyone except to the Court of law in its independent function, the current provisions of the Constitution has created a pathway for possible political interference through the powers of FICAC.

2.7. The pathway is through Article 115(9) of the Constitution where the Commissioner is mandated to provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney-General on any matter relating to its functions and responsibilities.

> (9) The Commission shall provide regular updates and advice to the Attorney General on any matter relating to its functions and responsibilities.

2.8. We are not suggesting in any way that this has been done, however, in our view, the current provisions threatens the independence of the ODPP and leaves it vulnerable to political interference through the work of FICAC that reports to the AG.

2.9. A historical analysis of the powers of the DPP over all the constitutions of Fiji from 1970, 1990 and 1997 Constitution indicate that the unfettered powers of the DPP over prosecution of all criminal matters in Fiji has remained intact. The 2013 Constitution is the first constitution where the unfettered powers of the DPP has been curtailed.

2.10. It has created and shifted the overall powers to the Commissioner of FICAC whose powers do not have any exceptions.

3. It is our humble submission that the Commission ensure that the exceptions created is its current form on the powers of the ODPP is removed to preserve the sanctity and independence of its office.

Submission 2 – The Appointment process of the DPP

4. It is our respectful submission that the involvement of the AG in the appointment process is excessive and creates opportunities to exploit for political gain.

4.1. Article 117(3) states the following with respect to the appointment of the DPP;

> The Director of Public Prosecution shall be appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Judicial Services Commission following consultation by the Judicial Services Commission with the Attorney-General.

4.2. The Judicial Services Commission (JSC) is constituted pursuant to Article 104 of the 2013 Constitution as follows:

i. Chief Justice as chairperson
ii. President of the Court of Appeal
iii. PS Justice
iv. Legal Practitioner appointed by the President on advice of the CJ after consultation with AG
v. Non-Legal person appointed by the President on advice of the CJ after consultation with AG

4.3. If the JSC is already prescribed as being an independent body already pursuant to Article 104(8) of the 2013 Constitution, then why is there a need to have the AG consulted again in the appointment of the DPP?

4.4. It is our view that this is excessive and contradicts the independence of the JSC in the appointment process.

5. OTHER LEGAL CONSIDERATIONS

5.1. The Interpretation provisions in Article 163 of the Constitution has recently been tested through the courts particularly on the definition of "public service" which provides as follows:

> "public service" means the service of the State in a civil capacity but does not include—
> (a) service in the judicial branch;
> (b) service in the office of a member of a commission; or
> (c) service in an office created by, or continued in existence under, this Constitution;

5.2. In the course of some recent cases, we have had to ask questions on why the definition appears to create an exception to some public service holders. The above definition has been used as a defense from criminal liability and perhaps even civil liability.

5.3. In its current form, it appears to create an inference in its meaning that the State cannot be sued, particularly, offices that are created "by or continued in existence under this Constitution". Essentially it means a range of offices such as the DPP, FICAC, Fiji Police Force and all other officers prescribed in the constitution.

5.4. We are unclear as to the intention behind the exception from civil liability but it also creates a problem in criminal liability as there is no clarity on this.

5.5. Whilst judicial interpretation is the independent role and function of the Judiciary, the task of providing jurisprudence is often left to the litigants.

5.6. The offence of Abuse of Office in the Crimes Act, Section 139 states a person "being employed in the civil service", however there is no definition of civil service in the Crimes Act. This word was later replaced with "public service" in 2016 however there is no definition of the same in the Crimes Act. The only definition is in the Constitution.

6. It is our humble submission that the meaning of public service is aligned to other legislation to provide clarity and to remove ambiguity as to any exceptions it was intended for to protect institutions.

RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS BY THE CRC DURING THE FACE TO FACE CONSULTATION

7. Can the ODPP take over the cases and load of FICAC?

7.1. Yes it can and it currently handles high profile corruption cases.

7.2. Historically, the ODPP has been prosecuting all the corruption related offences prior to 2007 when FICAC was setup.

7.3. With additional financial resources, the ODPP has the capacity and capability to undertake prosecution of corruption related offences.

8. What is the difference between the ODPP and the FICAC?

8.1. The ODPP is predominantly a prosecutorial body with no investigative functions and powers. ODPP heavily relies on investigative bodies for gathering and collating evidence but has oversight over the conduct of investigations to ensure the preservation of evidence.

8.2. FICAC has both investigative functions as well as prosecutorial functions. It also has a significant arm of Community awareness that the ODPP does not have.

8.3. Whilst there is advantages to having investigative powers, it is our respectful view that Prosecutorial bodies should ensure that its internal processes and governance procedures are robust to counter any dangers of conflict of interest and personal interests.

Budget and Disparity in allocations

8.4. The ODPP has seen disparity in budget allocations over the past decade between FICAC and ODPP. This disparity has not affected the commitment of the ODPP, however, it has impacted on its ability to grow, expand its work and services in the criminal justice sector.

8.5. A review of the budget allocations over the past decade is noted below with significant changes occurring upon our return to the ODPP in 2024 until now.

	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024
ODPP	$4M	$5.4M	$6.6M	$7.6M	$6.4M	$6.1M	$6.3M	$6.9M	$8.1M
FICAC	$4.4M	$8.2M	$8.4M	$7.8M	$7.4M	$7.9	$10.5M	$10.1M	$10.5M
TOTAL	$8.4M	$13.8M	$15M	$15.4M	$13.8M	$14m	$16.8M	$17M	$18.6M

An review of the above indicates the substantial amount of money invested in the prosecution body alone where the Staff ratio is also significantly different. The ODPP 55 Prosecutors vs FICAC 14 Prosecutors and where the ODPP serves ALL offences all over Fiji together with undertaking the Training of 80(+) Police Prosecutors with the Fiji Police Force.

We pray that the above submissions are considered.

Semi Tukana (Founder of SOLE Fintech Fiji)

SOLE FINTECH FIJI
Time: 11.35-1.50pm
Date: 23-4-2026

Leighton: Good morning Mr. Tukana and the team from SOLE. On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I would like to welcome you and thank you for accepting our invitation to attend this session this morning. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I just want to go through a few housekeeping matters with regards to the mics in front of you.

If you wish to speak, you will have to tap on the right tab in front of you to speak and then just tap it again to turn it off. Also, the chair will introduce the team, the commissioners and the work that they will be undertaking and then after that we also kindly request if you can introduce yourselves as well. This is for the transcription record.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Leighton. Mr. Tukana and the team from SOLE, welcome. We appreciate your attendance this morning and we are looking forward to hearing some message from you. The commission is comprised of seven members. You will receive four of us here this morning. On the far right is Mr. Conway Beg and next to me on my right is Dr. John Fatiaki and on my left is Dr. Neelesh Gounder. We sit here on behalf of the other three who were not with us this morning too.

The task that we have at hand is that we are to collect submissions and collect views from members or from the citizens of this country, from the people of this country on what they think we should have in our constitution, which ones should be removed and any changes so that in the end we would be able to prepare an amended constitution to the 2013 constitution.

The task here is a review of the constitution which might culminate in an amendment being made. So, we will be looking at constitutional provisions. We presume that when you make your submissions you will be referring to constitutional provisions which were changed or amended or removed completely.

There are some people who have been saying out there and members of the public that we should have this provision removed, even the whole constitution to be removed. Unfortunately, we cannot do that. So that is what our task is and we've had a number of associations, we've had a number of ministries of government and even individuals who have come here to Level 9 to give us their submissions and their views in relation to what they want to do or they want us to do with the constitution.

We will deliberate at the end whatever we record, are recorded for the sake of the deliberation, whatever is decided to be forwarded in our report to His Excellency the President, we will deliberate on that. So, the process would be after this, next week in early May, we will be going out to the country, to the rural areas, to the villages, to all over Fiji. We've got schedules for that and we want to hear their views too.

There was a deficiency in the 2013 constitution in relation to the participation of the people of this country. There's been a lot of complaint in that. So, we're trying to remedy that before we think of making an amendment.

We welcome you and now I'm going to hand over the mic to you Mr. Semi Tukana and your team so that we can hear your submissions.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you. Vinaka Vakalevu, the Chairman of the Constitutional Review Commission, the esteemed members of the Commission.

I wish to thank you for the opportunity given me to submit my views in regard to the document that some people refer to as the 2013 constitution, but as I personally refer to as the greatest injustice to the Fijian people.

First and foremost, I acknowledge the sovereign Judeo-Christian God of these islands of Fiji which our forefathers accepted on the 12th of October 1835 at the arrival of the first Christian missionaries to Fiji. Secondly, I wish to acknowledge the traditional owners of the land on which we stand today 'Na gone Turaga na Tui Suva' and the paramount chief of the province of Rewa Na gone Marama Bale na Roko Tui Dreketi.

Thirdly I acknowledge His Excellency the President of Fiji 'Gone Turaga Bale na Tui Cakau', the government of the day, to the Deputy Prime Minister, Cabinet Ministers and Members of Parliament. My name, by way of introduction and for the purpose of recording, this particular submission is made by me as the person, Semi Tukana. It is by no means a representation of SOLE, a fintech company, so it's my personal submission to the Commission and the people beside me are people who just come to be in support for this submission today.

At my far right is Ratu Seru Rokosuka. He hails from Nayavu, Wainimbuka, Tailevu. Christiana Ravusiru hails from Kadavu, Naikorokoro, Kadavu. And on my left, Alipate Gonerogo from Nabulini, Wainibuka. My name is Semi Tukana and I hail from a small island, a rocky island in the Lau group called Vanuavatu. One island, one village, Tovu Village Tikina Totoya .

I run three technology companies, all of which are software development companies, two in Fiji and one in Papua New Guinea, and the latest one is SOLE Fintech. So just to give you a background, 44 years in the area of software design and software development.

Today I stand before you representing my family and probably the silent voice of the many of the people and friends that I normally get in contact with. My submission to the Commission today are categorized into seven major topics. I just want to look at the preamble that are contained in the 2013 constitution, faith, identity, land and qoliqoli, electoral boundaries and constituencies, the reinstatement of the Senate or Upper house, and the Bill of Rights, something that concerns us, the rights to economic participation.

Just on the preamble of the 2013 constitution, in August 2025, Fiji's Supreme Court made a decision. In quote, while the court reaffirmed that the 1997 constitution was never lawfully abrogated, I noted that events have moved on, and the 2013 constitution has been the practical framework of governance for over a decade. Furthermore, the Supreme Court ruled the recognition of the 2013 constitution would not mean that we think the 1997 constitution was lawfully abrogated. It was not.

The decision by the Supreme Court based purely on the premise that events have moved on is unacceptable in terms of law, and more so in terms of the Bill of Rights of the common people and the indigenous people of Fiji. To me personally, it is a lazy judge's way-out approach, even though it is the law of the land.

The lame excuse is quite an insult to our people. The Supreme Court may have opted for this excuse in its attempt to adopt the doctrine of necessity. However, it lacks to address the preconditions that necessitate the formulation and promulgation of a constitution.

The doctrine of necessity is the most critical test to the legitimacy of the 2013 constitution. Mr. Chairman and esteemed members of the Commission, if you look at the 2013 constitution, it has failed all four tests. I'm not here to try and change whatever the Supreme Court judgment has made. This is something that I just want to let the Commission know. It has failed the test of legitimacy. Everybody knows.

I've got the details there. It has failed the test of evolvability, which brings to question this very Commission that is being set up, whether we do have the powers to actually change the constitution when it is quite clear that it requires quite a significant number of people and also members of Parliament in a referendum to make any single change. So that brings to question even this Commission.

So, I have outlined there the reasons behind the failed legitimacy, the failed evolvability, practicality, something that I have always said that even in the current Parliament, they only represent 30% of the people of the land. After the deregistration of the Fiji First Party, in practical terms, that means there is a failure in the very constitution and the law of the land that we are now operating under. And right at the end there, it failed the doctrine of necessity.

This doctrine of necessity only kicks in when there is real chaos and it demands or warrants a change in the constitution. But when you look at all the preconditions for the doctrine of necessity, we see the absence of criminal intent, there's necessity, proportionality. Proportionality is one of the preconditions that I see.

Does it really require the whole overhaul to throw out the total constitution and to bring up one whole new constitution? So, the question of proportionality is not there. So we'll go into the actual submission, Chairman and members of the Commission, in regards to the Christian faith. I might not be called a woke or relevant or up-to-date person, a progressive person. I'm a very conservative person.

For the 2013 constitution to declare that this nation is to be a secular state, it is saying that it is a godless constitution, which is godless. As representative, as one of the people here in Fiji knowing our history of the Christian faith that actually came, was accepted by our chiefs and our forefathers on the 12th of October 1835, I cannot stand and watch that this nation be termed as a secular state.

Secular simply means no god, godless. No. I stand before the Commission today to say that this is one of the recommendations that we are putting forward right there at the bottom, 23, that whatever changes that needs to be made, it must acknowledge the advent of the Christian faith, not just an open statement.

A Christian faith and its acceptance by our Fijian chiefs and forefathers from October 12, 1835 until today. The constitution, our proposal must explicitly state that the nation of Fiji is a Christian nation and that it does not limit the rights of other people to practice their own religion. No.

Freedom of religion is a must, provided that the religion or faith or sect does not abide under or conform under the doctrines that promotes forceful conversion by death or by payment of tributes, as is prevalent in some Middle Eastern countries as we see today. The legislation, our proposed addition to the constitution is legislation to safeguard against faith doctrines that promote extortion of monies and or radical teachings of conversion of face death. This is not negotiable.

The recommendations are the legislations need to be introduced to terminate the rights of a religious organization or religious sect that is actively guided by their holy book, which explicitly states and openly promotes the doctrines of conversion by force or face death or the payment of tribute by force. The legislations need to be introduced to identify and terminate the operations of a religious organization or religious sect which has been classified as a terrorist organization either by the United Nations or World Security Council or the United States of America or NATO member countries.

The new constitution is proposed that needs to be introduced to identify and deport members of religious organizations which has been classified as terrorist organization by the United Nations or World Security Council or the United States of America or NATO member countries.

On page number six, Chairman and Members, it comes to the element item on the Fijian identity and I put beside it, this is not negotiable. The contentious issue on the so-called common identity of Fijian was recently introduced and enforced in the 2013 constitution. That is a period of only 13 years, not 50 years, not 500 years, certainly not 3,500 years.

In fact, the contention has only been accentuated as more and more Fijians, especially those who live in remote villages are coming to learn about how their identity as Fijians has been removed and how everyone has been assigned the Fijian identity. As of today, Fijians, the Kaiviti's, are still calling themselves and being referred to as Fijians. Rotuman's, the Kai Rotuma, are still calling themselves and being referred to as Rotuman's.

In fact, I have two Rotuman's in my company, sorry. Both of them don't want to be called Fijians. They just want to remain Rotuman's.

Indians, the Kaidia, are still calling themselves and being referred to as Indians or Indo-Fijians. Chinese, the Kachina, are still calling themselves and being referred to as Chinese. Europeans, the Kaivalagi's, are still calling themselves and being referred to as Europeans.

In the 1997 Constitution in Chapter 3 regarding our citizenship, the ethnicities were very clearly implied within the sections and subsections of this chapter. Our common identity is Fiji citizen. Fiji citizen.

The 1997 has clearly identified us as Fiji citizens. The 2013 Constitution introduced the term iTaukei as the ethnic identity for the Fijian people. And this has introduced a lot more confusion amongst the Fijian people and even the non-Fijians.

The term iTaukei is an abstract noun that we use in our own Fijian language to refer to ourselves in the vernacular. On its own, an It being an abstract noun becomes an empty term. You can refer to someone as the 'Taukei ni valenitoa, Taukei ni Koli, Taukei ni Bulumakau, Taukei ni Sitoa, Taukei ni vale'.

When in Australia, I was asked what was my ethnic origin, my answer was iTaukei. The next question they ask, where is that? But if I had answered Fijian or Indo-Fijian or Chinese Fijian or Euro-Fijian or Afro-Fijian, there would be no further need for clarifications. So being called a Fijian has deep linkages to the land ownership, language, culture, traditions, food, drinks, and history.

The term Fijian is anchored to the land. Taukei is not anchored. Taukei of what? Taukei of ni Valenitoa, ni valenivuaka.

When you say Fijian, it anchors my identity to this land, ownership of the land. No longer an abstract noun like iTaukei, which is an empty term that is floating in the sky. The 1997 constitution clearly recognizes the right of every Fijian, every citizen to be called Fijian citizen.

And I quote, the quotes are there, recognizing the descendants of those who chose to make their homes in these islands, form a multicultural society, affirm the contributions of all communities to the well-being of that society and the rich variety of their faiths, traditions, languages, and cultures. Taking pride in our common citizenship and in the development of our economy and political institutions.

Committing ourselves anew to living in harmony and unity, promoting social justice and economic, social advancement of all communities, respecting their rights and interests, and strengthening our institutions of government.

Re-affirming our recognition of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all peoples and groups, safeguarded by their adherence to the rule of law and our respect for human dignity and the importance of the family, end quote. That's from the 1997 constitution. So, your right as a Fijian citizen are not jeopardized at all, in any way or form, by being called Indo-Fijian, Chinese-Fijian, Euro-Fijian, or Afro-Fijian, or any other name.

Fiji is the more richer when all ethnicities hold on to their language, cultures, and traditions, and their identities. So, the recommendations are there, Mr. Chairman and esteemed members of the commission, that all citizens of Fiji to be called and referred to as Fiji citizens. The ethnicities of the Fiji citizens must reflect their own ethnic origins, rich ethnic origins.

Fijians refer to the indigenous Fijians. Indo-Fijians refer to Fiji citizens of Indian ethnic origin. Chinese-Fijians refer to the Fiji citizens of Chinese ethnic origin. Euro-Fijians refer to Fiji citizens of European or Caucasian ethnic origin. And Rotuman's refer to Fiji citizens of Rotuman ethnic origin.

Mr. Chairman, we shall go into the next item in regards to native land and Qoliqoli ownership.

This is another non-negotiable. You'll be hearing about the non-negotiable because when the Yash-Gai Commission came along, the previous regime had given them a list of 13 or 9, 9 or 13 non-negotiables. So, the hands of Yash-Gai was tied. It's in the book. It's very clear. They were given 9 or 11 or whatever non-negotiables. And Yash-gai had to work around that. We the people, I as a representative of Fijians, I must say we must also have our non-negotiables. It is our right to also say that.

Ownership of the Qoliqoli. I'm addressing first the Qoliqoli, which are clearly demarcated at the Tokyo Land Trust Board or the Native Land Trust Board, just across the road, must be referred from the state to the rightful traditional owners of the Qoliqoli. Those who utilize these Qoliqoli include beaches, mangrove swamp, open waters, surf and reefs, must pay the rightful traditional Qoliqoli owners the appropriate compensation on a user pay basis.

Our recommendation. The state must release all rights over all Qoliqoli to the rightful traditional owners and appropriate powers to be handed over to the TLTB as trustees for the traditional Qoliqoli owners for the proper administration of the boundaries of these Qoliqoli, the setting up of the appropriate levy royalties to be charged for the use of these Qoliqoli, the collection of these levies, and the distribution of the royalties to rightful owners of the Qoliqoli. In the 1997 constitution, in chapter 4, section 40, item 1, on the protection against compulsory acquisition of property, it states that the need for compensation for land that has been acquired for state use.

Now, while land owners receive lease payments from government for land upon which hospitals and schools are built, the owners of the land where roads and bridge infrastructures are built for the general public use do not receive any lease payments. Now, why? My recommendation. Legislation must be drawn up for the documentation of leases and appropriate annual lease repayment, rental repayments to the land owners where land has been acquired for the profit of the general public, in particular attention to roads and bridges infrastructure.

That's land that has been acquired for the public use. When we go to the electoral boundaries and the reinstatement of constituency, it is of paramount importance that every Fijian citizen is fairly represented in the House of Representatives. Under the 2013 constitution, the notion of one man, one vote is also supported.

But the non-existence of the constituent representations defeats the very purpose of what it purports to support. As I mentioned before, the current situation in Parliament, only 30% of the whole population are represented in Parliament. 70% are unrepresented.

The 1997 constitution clearly lays out the electoral boundaries and the various constituencies and membership of the House of Representatives in Chapter 6 but to under House of Representatives. However, I am proposing that constituent boundaries to be redrawn with Parliamentary representations be based on population spread rather than ethnicity. So, it's a little bit different from the 1997 constitution.

With the total population count of Fiji being at 864,000 that's from the Bureau of Stats 2014-2019, the total number of seats in Parliament comes to 44. This is our proposal. Added to that number are 6 more seats representing Fiji citizens living abroad.

So that comes to citizens of Fiji, citizens residing in Fiji, 44 seats, New Zealand one seat, Australia, UK, Europe, Middle East, Asia, US, Canada and South America and Pacific Islands one seat each. That comes to a total of 50 seats.

Now you may ask, why do we need to include Fijians living abroad? It is important. The inclusion of Fiji citizens living abroad is important as it recognizes their contribution to the economy. With remittances up to 1.5 billion, we deal with remittances with SOLE. And we know that remittances are increasing every year.

So, they have a lot of contribution, major contribution to our economy. And as the population of Fiji increases, the number of seats is proposed to either increase or increase the denominator, which is the 20,000. Working on a 1 is to 20,000 ratios.

Now comes to the second last item in our proposal, Chairman and esteemed members of the Commission, the re-instatement of the Senate or the Upper House. Now what is the significance of the Senate? The Senate plays a critical role in major decisions that affects the major stakeholders of the island nation of Fiji. The 2013 Constitution removed the Senate from Chapter 3, Parliament Part 1, Legislative Authority and Part 2 composition. The 1997 Constitution includes the Senate in Chapter 6, the Parliament and Part 3, the Senate.

I propose the reinstatement of the Senate with a membership reflecting the proportion of land ownership owned by the sitting Senators. I propose that the national matters of importance that are sensitive to the stakeholders shall not be decided upon by members of the Lower House, but by the Senators.

If we take an example, let's take Fiji as a company. We can draw parallels between a small country like Fiji to a coffee shop like Starbucks. There are 381,000 employees of Starbucks worldwide, more than the number of employees in Fiji.

We are not a big country, nothing complex in this place. We are the ones who make it complex. In company terms, Fiji is a tiny company, comparable to a coffee shop, even though this particular coffee shop is global.

Now, a company has shareholders, board of directors, executive management and employees. When we draw a parallel, there is actually wisdom, wisdom by the colonialists, irrespective of whether we like them or not, there is great wisdom in the introduction of the Senate. They act as the board of directors for our company called Fiji.

Parliament, the Lower House, acts as the executive management. There are certain matters that only the shareholders must have the final decision on. Not on the Parliament, not the people who are hired, no, only the stakeholders.

And in this case, when we look at Fiji as comparable to a company, shareholders, what is the share? In a company, the amount of money you give, you contribute, you've invested. What is the share in Fiji? We don't have to look far. It is the land ownership.

And I've specified it there. Shareholders to the nation of Fiji are the land owners, including both native land, state land and freehold land. Therefore, the composition of the Senate must be based on the percentage ownership of the land in Fiji, not by the population numbers.

No, it is by land ownership. Why land ownership? Land is the only substantial platform or base upon which a country is founded. It is not imaginary.

Without land, you cannot have a country. Case in point, the founder of Facebook, Mark Zuckerberg, spent $88 billion to build an immersive digital world based on virtual reality called Metaverse. They encouraged users to log in and with virtual reality goggles they were able to take a tour of the virtual world and they actually can buy virtual real estate with real money to buy digital real estate.

It became one of the biggest flops for one country in the world of technology. You can't create a country out of thin air. Land is non-negotiable. Your ownership of the land dictates your number of members in the Senate or the Board because they represent the shareholders of Fiji as a company, as a nation. You need real land to have a country. You need real money to have a company.

The primary role of the Senate is to have oversight on the bills being debated and passed by the lower house of Parliament much like a board of directors in a company when they review management board papers being presented. Now, there are certain things that we would like only the Senate, the landowners, the freehold landowners, represented by one member the state landowners, represented by two members and the others, represented by twenty-two members.

Matters concerning faith, identity land and qoliqoli, immigration electoral boundaries and constituencies flag, national anthem, currency votes at the UN and our alliances to a block of nations must never be decided upon by the lower house.

That is a matter for the shareholders. The upper house or the Senate. The above matters may be debated on at the floor of Parliament or lower house but the final decision votes rest with the Senate with a passing vote of 75%.

So, our recommendation, Chairman and esteemed members of the Commission to re-instate the Senate. This is non-negotiable. We must have the Senate to represent the voices of the peoples that own the land on which we live on.

The composition, as I mentioned before, 22 to the native landowners because they own 90% of the land, 7% of two seats go to the government of the day and one seat go to the freehold landowners. And the bills that only the Senate can pass through a 75% vote are matters concerning listed there.

Chairman and esteemed members of the Commission you have come to the final part something that is probably not in line with the mandate given to you but I just thought I mentioned it because it affects me personally.

The Companies Act of 2015, I believe has a major flaw in that it could easily be weaponized by any sitting government. The flaw in the Companies Act of 2015 refers to the clause of the protection of the shareholders from unfair treatment or oppression. This clause gives the right to any shareholder to wind up a company even if he or she is a minority shareholder.

He or she can file an application in court to wind up a company a very successful company and this is something that is personal to me. It's very easily weaponized by a sitting government that you or your voice is not in line with their policies.

So, the recommendation I don't know how you can do this because this is referring to the Companies Act but this is going on the basis of the Bill of Rights of economic participation when a shareholder seeks court's relief for unfair treatment or oppression that shareholder must pay a bond equivalent to 10% of the value of a company then you file your application.

That will deter people from just filing applications left right and center to wind up a company that is successful no debt and they can file an application to wind up a company that has no debt 25 years no debt a minority shareholder weaponized by a sitting government can wipe up your company and an amendment must be made on that act whereby if anyone wants to wind up a company pay a bond 10% of the value of the company and get your fine. If you are serious pay the 10% of the value of the company and fight it in court.

Our last word Chairman and esteemed members of the Commission this is a watershed moment I hope that this Commission will actually carry through all the views of the people that will be brought to your presence as you go around the country and an opportunity for you to stand on truth right, things that are right and just for the people and for the nation of Fiji .Sir, I wish you and the Commission God's blessings upon your deliberations and the outcomes of your Commission. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much Mr. Tukana. Interesting submission you have given to us today your comparisons between the company's office and other matters in the submissions are really interesting we have never come across anything like it during the consultation sessions which we have undertaken so far you have raised very interesting points.

I am sure my commissioners would have questions to ask you in relation to your submissions later on. Just one point at first your paragraph 1.4 paragraph 14 on page 2 the 2013 constitution states in chapter 11 section 3 that it can only be amended through a referendum of 75% of registered voters in Fiji, maybe you would need to change that to amend it because the Supreme Court has ruled on that 75% and has reduced it to 2 thirds 2 thirds of the registered voters who voted.

Mr. Tukana: Yes okay, so if that has already been amended.

Mr. Valenitabua: Let me I've just had a comment from here please it's a simple majority. I read to you opinion D by the Supreme Court it says 2/3 of all members of Parliament 2/3 of all members of Parliament must support an amending bill at the second and third readings and majority of voters voting in a referendum in relation to the proposed amendments must vote in favor of the amendments. So, it's a majority 50 plus 1 of those who voted and those who voted would be registered voters.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you, excellent so 75% in terms of members of Parliament and for the referendum it's 50 plus 1.

Mr. Valenitabua: 2/3 members of Parliament in the first and second readings.

Mr. Tukana: What is 2/3 in terms of percentage?

Mr. Valenitabua: 66%.

Mr. Tukana: So, it's come down to from 75%.

Mr. Valenitabua: And it's the majority of voters

Mr. Tukana: That vote not registered

Mr. Valenitabua: So that has been amended there should be registered voters in order to vote but those who voted it's 50 plus 1.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Just something to add to your submission there is another point anyway there was another point that I had highlighted the amendment provisions of section 159 of the constitution. That is the amendment provision the supreme court has also rewritten in their opinion what that provision should be in section 159. It might be well I, suggest that you look at a copy of the opinion and read what the supreme court has written into the opinion to be how section 159 is to be read.

Mr. Tukana: How section 159 has to be read.

Mr. Valenitabua: I bring this up because you say that even our sitting here might not be legal did you mean that? so we refer to section 159 and the opinion of the supreme court.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you for that chairman I'll have a look at the opinion of the supreme court judgment

Mr. Valenitabua: Paragraph 236 of the opinion of the supreme court there is something for you to reconsider.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you chair Mr. Tukana thank you very much for your very candid and well-presented submission. I would just like to make some generic comments I think aspects of your comparison of the preamble in the 2013 constitution to the 1997 is very relevant. I think our commissioners have discussed it , it has particular interest to me because I was given chapters of the preamble chapter 1 in respect to the state.

I was the one who had to do the research and talk about it and compare it to not only the 97 but the 1970 constitution.

And it was very noted that any reference to God was removed from 1, 2, 3 and if you took the dee of session cession as the primary document that has any bearing legislatively on the country of Fiji then all 3 plus the deed of cession refer to God the compact, the preamble, the introduction only the 2013 removes it completely.

The issue of faith has been brought up in a multi religious country such as ours obviously where there is a significant number of people who are not Christian and I am a Christian the issue of making the state a Christian state that you have asserted we appreciate where you are coming from.

I guess as commissioners who listen to submissions from other people that is a consideration that we will have to consider carefully and as we go out and listen to the opinions of people. I am sure that we will come to some area that attempts to strike what I call the middle ground in terms of acknowledging god but maybe not to the extent that you would consider non-negotiable. I say that as a general comment because I think the recognition of the absence of God is very worrying to all, I won't say just to all commissioners but to the public at large.

I think when written in that context irrespective of your particular version of God I think that most people in Fiji if you walked out on the street have some belief in our supreme power a God, that actually guides our actions and morality and our values. I think acknowledging that is something that three constitutions and the dealer session have in it, the idea that it would be removed in the 2013 is a novel one, and I am sure that is an area that will look at and be accommodated and discussed and thought upon greatly over the next four months that we have. But that's in respect to the issue of faith.

If it's any assurance we also operate on the basis of the terms of reference and I just bring to your attention that in our terms of reference for this particular commission one term of reference there is a number actually but there is one in particular that alludes to indigenous rights. I will read it to you.

It says, responsibilities will include protecting, guaranteeing, and securing under the constitution. Land and fishing rights and resources of indigenous Fijians and Rotuman's and assuring that registered owners of native lands and customary fishing rights have an equitable share of the income derived from the exploitation of the resources beneath and above the surface of their land, the seabed, rivers, etc.

I read that to you because this is the terms of reference that will be given to operate under one of the terms of reference and I think that addresses some of the issues that you raised in your submission in respect of the land and the colony. Indirectly related to the issue of the bicameral house, the next terms of reference that I have here in front of me, says recognizing the role of the great council of chiefs in national affairs of the state under the constitution.

You'll be well aware that the great council of chief's role in the previous constitutions has been really in the composition of the senate and, so I guess that indirectly relates to the issue of the reinstatement of the senate of the bicameral parliament. Again, that is a stated term of reference under which this commission has been asked to operate and address and I think that addresses that aspect of your request.

I hand over to my colleagues who might want to make some comments.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you chair and thank you Mr. Tukana and your team for the submission. Thank you also for the very detailed written submission which is very clear.

I have a few questions, firstly I start from the last point that you made about the shareholders seeking court's relief should pay a bond equivalent to 10% of the value of the company.

The constitution broadly talks about access to justice as a fundamental right so requiring somebody to pay 10% value of the company before you can go to seek access to justice wouldn't that impinge on your rights to access justice?

Mr. Tukana: Good point, but what about the rights of the majority shareholders or the other shareholders. You are holding a company to ransom if you are 2% or 5% shareholding in a company and you want to wind up a company that has no debt, has been operating for 20 years, more than 20 years then what is the relief that's...

Dr. Gounder: It requires the courts and avenue to redress the very same argument.

Mr. Tukana: The only point I am raising Commissioner Gounder is there is a real danger in that people of authority may use and weaponize this particular clause in the companies act of 2015, and I can vouch for that it's happening not only to me but to other companies as well that have gone under. I am only here because we don't own any debt, we are debtless so, we need to protect everybody but if you want as a shareholder and you want to exercise your rights to apply to the high court to wind up a company on the basis of oppression not on debt payments, of oppression it's a dangerous term, because it's fairly vague. So, there is a clear danger in this particular clause being weaponized and I must say it was weaponized by the previous administration.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you I have noted your response The other point is number 60 where you talk about the senate making decisions regarding currency. I would like to understand what aspect of currency you are talking about, because under the current constitution and the 1997 constitution and the constitution we have had since 1970 those functions are given to the reserve bank of Fiji. And there are two things I as an economist should not give in the hands of politicians one, data collection and dissemination and monetary policy and the control and availability of credit in an economic system. What aspect of currency are you talking about?

Mr. Tukana: Excellent question. You note the flag national anthem and currency this is just in terms of the printing of the currencies and what is to be printed on the currency the senate must have the overall decision on what is to go and what is acceptable to the stakeholders of this company this nation of Fiji .Nothing to do with controls currency and foreign exchange controls we need to have controls on the flag, they wanted to change the color of the flag no, the owners of the company or the owners of the nation by basis of land ownership must have the final say.

So, that is just to clarify I was writing this very early this morning I couldn't expound we need clarification in some cases you have clarified it .

Dr. Gounder: And that is fine because that is the system we have in Fiji at the moment.

Mr. Tukana: So, in terms of currency it is what is printed just the design of the notes that is very clear.

Dr. Gounder: I just have one more question you talk about the Christian state I hear that a lot as well, I am not a Christian but I just want some assurance if you raise the state as a Christian, are you raising the Christian God over other God's?

Mr. Tukana: very good question basically these are foundational -foundational aspects when you go into a house you don't force your faith onto the owners of the house the house have a faith that they have established their family with in Fiji. In 1835 October 12 the Christian missionaries came them influencing our lives from cannibalism to what we are today.

Actually gave us the ability to accept people other religions to come into our land without being eaten so what I am saying is let's acknowledge the Christian God, nothing to do with the freedom nothing to do with the freedom of your worship, we must acknowledge the very reason why these people are here in Fiji is because the Christian missionaries that came into this land, sacrificed their families and their lives, proselytized the cannibalism that were with us to make it what we are today. And giving you the right to sit there, give us the right to build this building.

Foundational faith is so important we must recognize that we are not going to limit any worship of any other gods have the Hindus come to Fiji in 1835 and proselytize us we have to recognize this country as a Hindu country and Christians you are welcome provided the Hindus welcome the Christians and the Muslims , but it was the Christians that sacrificed their lives changed us and allowed us to accept you and other peoples to come freedom of everything, almost freedom of everything except for the amendments that I am putting on the chairman about any religious sect any religion act, any faith that follows a doctrine that forcefully converts people either by death or by tribute, payment of tribute those must be banned and deported. We cannot allow radicalism to come into our country in that regard.

Dr. Gounder: Yes, thank you, I think that is very clear I will also take your point about radicalism, I just wanted to understand what you mean you know one of the things about the 2013 constitution that people are talking about is in many cases tokenism. It is mentioned but it is actually not practiced on the ground where you don't see the impact.

Constitutional reforms must have an impact and it should not be tokenism so that is the angle I was trying to come from. So, if constitutional provisions are to have an impact what do you think are some of the principles for Christian state that you mentioned. What would be the intersection between the convictions of a state and political governance.

Mr. Tukana: You will recall when the 2013 constitution was promulgated the first thing was the parliament when they pray, they pray to no god they pray to the four winds or something like that no, we are not guided by the four winds. Somebody prayed I think the late speaker of the house prayed in the name of Jesus. The name that actually transformed our lives and she was she was called- that is not acceptable. That is the reason why when we look at the formulation of the senate those are the stakeholders of this land. Anything to do with faith not the parliament must be accepted by the shareholders, not the management and that is the reason why we are saying even prayers in school.

I was a chairman of Nabua secondary school the prayers was prohibited in the name of Jesus that was prohibited why are we doing this? this school is here because of that God. So, just simple things like this start with a prayer in the name of Jesus, acknowledging the God of the people that own the land the people that accepted Christianity into this country nothing else.

We don't prohibit any other worship, any other Gods but it's only that we must be clear on this if we say God nameless God, then people will be praying to the four winds. I'm USP I'm a USP council member, when I joined in 2017 Christian worship was banned for 4 years I didn't know, and I fought for it to make sure that it comes back on campus because I'm a beneficiary of the campus crusade for Christ. My life was changed because of that so, we are just saying let's be explicit, let's be clear by the foundational faith of the people that own the land.

If they decide, change if the senate decides, change then we change if they said, no, my forefathers the chiefs accepted this that remains.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, thank you chairman.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Tukana I've been listening to this recommendation in relation to legislation to introduce or terminate the rights of a religious organization or religious sects, this is paragraph 26 on page 5. Now, I'm certain that you know that the constitution has the bill of rights.

Mr. Tukana: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Now if this were to be put into effect that would mean that section 22 of the constitution will have to be amended or watered down or removed, because section 22 talks about freedom of religion.

Mr. Tukana: Yes sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Now, that I hear that you are a board member of USP what is your view in relation to removing that freedom which Fiji adopted after ratifying the universal declaration of human rights.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: That is one question that I'd like to ask you there are a few others, but let's hear that first.

Mr. Tukana: Chair, the reason I specifically mention this is the rise of radicalism that is happening in most western countries being infiltrated, radical. And if we look at the holy books of any new religion or sect that wants to come into Fiji, we must re-look at what their beliefs are and what they stand for and if there is anything in their holy books, that purports them to actually do active conversion or death, you either convert to them or they kill you.

That's not religion that's really bringing to question that particular provision in the constitution about the freedom, the bill of rights freedom to religion. They are coming under a cover of being religion but, when you look at their actual statement of faith or doctrine then your life, my life and the life of the nation of Fiji jeopardized. We cannot allow that under the cover of religion.

There must be ways in which you can amend the constitution whereby we re-look at all of this and if it sets up a doctrine of conversion active conversion or death active conversion or pay tributes, then those is unacceptable to this to this nation.

Mr. Valenitabua: And with section 22 in relation to freedom of religion freedom of religion

Mr. Tukana: You need to have subsections to that chairman because freedom of religion is there but then it needs to have some I don't know what you call it in legal terms because I'm a technologist I build systems. This is the last thing I ever look at all I know is do something that will limit any radical any radical faiths coming under the cover of religion, not to be practiced in this land.

So, many people have come under the cover of religion but in this case if it means death conversion or death conversion or pay tributes that's unacceptable to not only to me but to the people of this nation.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you for that your submission in relation to the membership of parliament. I know that you are suggesting that we redraw new constituencies new constituent boundaries. You're not the first person to have raised that we've heard that from a few other organizations a few other organizations so that we do away with one national constituency one constituency for the whole of Fiji. So, that is in our books that has been put to us.

Now in relation to the number of seats to be 44 in parliament as you propose or as you submit there are Fiji citizens residing in Fiji 44 seats. I'm concerned with the citizens living overseas how we know that there are citizens living overseas who are dual citizens. And there is a law which does not allow dual citizens to be members of parliament if I remember correctly. There's a law whether it's constitutional or legislative I can't just get my mind to it right now a dual citizen cannot be a candidate for elections to be a member of parliament in Fiji.

How do you suggest that has to be tackled considering that citizens of the country can hold PR over all this citizens of the country would have surrendered or renunciated their citizenship in order to become a citizen of another country. Some people once they are citizens of their other country then as we facilitated it our legislation facilitated it applied for dual citizenship and they were granted dual citizenship how do we tackle that the NEC people who are living British Army and so forth.

Mr. Tukana: Very good question.

Mr. Valenitabua: how shall we set boundaries how shall we set qualifications thank you chair that's a very good question in fact when I was writing this I was thinking about that as well for the 6 members of parliament representing our Fiji citizens living abroad we will need to for them only not for the 44 members of the 6. Only these people are allowed dual citizens so that doesn't give the freedom of anyone with dual citizenship living in New Zealand for 40 years to become a member of the Fiji parliament representing people which are constituent representatives here in Fiji.

Only for the 6 we need to have some provisions in the constitution that will allow these 6 seats to have dual citizenship it's important because we in my role as the founder of SOLE we go to the ends of the earth talking to people and a lot of things that they tell me would be best dealt with a representative that dwells amongst them rather than somebody, the minister for justice going and then saying yes come back, then you have to do all that .

But it's best represented by people who are residing with them and that's the reason why I said maybe make provisions for the 6 members only not the 44, 44 single citizenship Fiji citizenship the 6 members. Give them the freedom to choose their own representative from the nation they reside in.

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much Mr. Tukana for your presentation some very illuminating items that you presented I think my colleagues have covered quite a bit I just want to focus on point 40 of your presentation on native land and Qoliqoli ownership and customary land. I guess when I look at the constitution, I think this is in section 28 of the constitution are you my question to you is are you wanting an instrument in the constitution or do you want the TLTP Act to be more reinforced in this provision or this point that you're trying to make. I think that's in, if you look at the constitution the current constitution in section 28 and 27, those are the two sections that are impacted by your presentation.

I can think of how it could be put in but that's not my role, my role is to listen to you and take in your points of every relevant point the other one was because it covers. You made a very interesting point about roads bridges and so on, I think that's a very relevant point that, I think our body that sits across the road would have thought that would have been covered. So that's why I'm asking my question to you is do you think it should be enshrined in the constitution or in sitting as a statute of law in TLTB. I think that's about it for me I have some other questions but I'm sure my members would want to ask that. Thank you.

Mr. Tukana: Commissioner you know the reason I brought up, I'm saddened when I go to my islands and my people want to go and fish in a particular area they have to get permission. My ancestors go to that particular reef and fish in that place without any license. We need to revert this back to the ownership of the traditional owners but, the instrument in which we do the administration of royalties they have TLTB across the road.

Our system runs there as well they overlay, we store the coordinates and they overlay. They GIS on top of it the qoliqoli are clearly demarcated this qoliqoli belongs to this Mataqali. Why are we leaving fees for these people to go and fish in their own qoliqoli no, bring back the thing from the state, give it back to the people let the native land trust board minister administer the boundaries administer the levies, administer the payment and administer the royalty payments to the rightful owners.

They have all the data we help them storing the coordinates that's the question in regards to the road qoliqoli. In regards to the roads and bridges every time I travel through a village, I feel sorry for my people. Are they being paid for that road other people are profiting from that road. It's using up our land roads running through the village our people have died and run over on that road and yet that road is free under the cover of this.

What do you call this the protection against compulsory acquisition of property under that cover pay the lease, must be rightfully compensated where the bridge lies they will say, oh but the villagers really like the bridge no, other people are profiting from the use of that bridge they say, oh the road, the villagers no, it's actually disturbing the villagers. Pay the lease where the roads are going other people are profiting from that pay the rightful royalties to the people that own the land on which the road goes and the bridges are going. That's the reason why we need to make sure that this is enshrined in the constitution.

Mr. Beg: Thank you for that my question was, is it ok at the moment sitting there or do you want it in the constitution.

Mr. Tukana: However, you design it as I mentioned before you're an engineer, I'm an engineer as well I don't know these things all I know is when there's injustice we must fix the injustice however the legal eagles do their business let them do it in such a way that it compensates these people properly.

Mr. Beg: Thank you. much appreciated.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may address that Mr. Tukana, I'm looking at the section 27 that relates to the compulsory acquisition of property. And my understanding certainly for this constitution is that any land that's acquired for the road or bridge has to be adequately compensated. My question really is, are you asking this to be applied retrospectively because I presume that when the road was going through the village that they would have done the necessary consultations at that time you know, in 1940 or 1930 when Kings Road was built, that they would have consulted the villagers and agreed to the necessary compensation are you talking about. This as an ongoing exercise or are you talking about the fact that it's already been done and therefore that's the status quo.

Mr. Tukana: Not retrospective by means of only when these new roads come in that you do the proper thing, no, existing road networks, existing bridges throughout, new leases must be drawn up, but payments not to be gone retrospective, payments starting from the day in which the documentation of all the leases are perfected then the dispayment starts from there so.

I'm talking about the roads existing and the bridges existing leases must be paid on those but only from today, so I'm not saying let's go back and backdate the lease payments all the way back to 1940 from the point where we start implementing these leases, only from that point onwards, that we start paying for the leases.

Dr. Fatiaki: Practically speaking though that's effectively putting a toll on all roads in Fiji, in perpetuity forever?

Mr. Tukana: If you lease a land if you lease a land either for 30 years 99 years you pay a toll on that land. What's so different about that land to the land on which the roads traverse a bridge is built upon no difference, introduce a tax, a road tax or something like that give back the money to the rightful owners of the land they could be planting dal and cassava on that stretch of land, but they couldn't it's been used for the profit of the whole public, the whole nation pay lease money for that.

Mr. Beg: So, just to add to that Mr. Tukana, if you're suggesting that that applies to everyone no one is subjected or no one is relaxed to that provision this doesn't relate to that but just to answer the query that you raised earlier on.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair because part of my was to look at the Parliament set up for Parliament it says here categorically in section 56, subsection 2 subsection 2B sorry in respect of, ok sorry, subsection 2A it says a person may be a candidate for election to Parliament only if the person is a citizen of Fiji and does not hold citizenship of any other country.

Now that's the current situation with it which means that that would not apply and those seats could not be activated unless we change the constitution. My concern is if we were to change the constitution to make it so that you remove that section so that you could be a citizen of say two or three countries .

There comes complications that I can see in terms of for instance your oath of office if you're going to swear an oath of office when you get sworn into Parliament as a citizen of Fiji to uphold the constitution or whatever it is that the current oath is. How would you address the issue of a person swearing an oath of allegiance to Fiji but at the same time possibly swearing an oath of allegiance to another country because they're a citizen of that country.

And I presume when they get their citizenship they actually swear that on the bible that they will abide by the rules of that country and bear due allegiance so I guess my question is if we were to change the constitution to make it available and therefore accommodate the seats that you're requesting for the diaspora this issue may arise you know the question of where is your loyalty where is the issue of sovereignty in terms of your loyalty to a particular constitution or a particular country.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you Commissioner Fatiaki, I don't actually see any any problems with that except as I mentioned before in my answer to Chairman of the Commission is that this is limited only to the representatives of the countries that are allocated there.

This is not for general not for the 44 seats. 44 seats you have to you have to you have to live in Fiji you have to your oath here. So, it's only the representatives of the 6 seats from abroad and I don't see any problems with that. If you have provisions for them saying oath to 3 countries or 4 countries to me is okay, I don't see any limitations whereby' oh au sa kaiviti noqu oath qo au sa sega ni rawa tale ni ka' No. In fact you hold 2 citizenship you swore an oath there in Australia and you swore an oath here in Fiji so your allegiance is already being established and some of our values and principles are probably the same .

And so it's only the only the 6 representatives the 6 seats that represents the foreign countries that we allow them dual citizenship to be members of parliament.

Dr. Fatiaki: Just from a practical point of view if you swore allegiance to Fiji and you swore allegiance as a citizen of Australia and Fiji went to war with Australia. There would be questions about who you would serve and if you are serving in parliament as in the powerful governing sort of law-making body in a country. I would like to know that my representative in parliament thinks of Fiji first and foremost in everything he does and does not have any other side allegiance elsewhere because for me.

That's fundamental to issues of treason, sedition, those are crimes if you are operating for the enemy those are sort of the most serious crimes. So, the idea that you can swear allegiance to this country and I swear allegiance to that country you don't see that that can be an issue. I gave you the example of the 2 countries going to war are you a traitor for one and a patriot for the other or are you a patriot for this one and a traitor or a patriot to both or a traitor to both.

Mr. Tukana: God forbid we actually go to war but if the case arises, I don't know that's going to the extreme we will never go to war with this country we are a small coffee shop on the corner. To me let's look at the situation today these are the people that contribute maybe 10% to the economy to the whole economy every single year let's give them a say in the running of parliament if war arises between your 2 countries. I don't know we tackle that when we do come to that already they've swore an oath of allegiance there already they've swore an oath of allegiance here.

Already, it's not like they swore this one and they revoked that one they swore here they swore there they let's look at the situation at hand we solve this problem they are unrepresented in parliament. They have to wait for one minister to come after 6 months or after 7 months to come and address their issues. Why can't they address their issues directly with their representatives where they are.

So, I don't know how to answer the question of war God forbid that we don't actually enter into that all I'm saying is make provisions in parliament for citizens of foreign countries to be represented in parliament.

Dr. Fatiaki: And I guess I'm just pointing out the difficulties we face in terms of for instance the residency requirement that you are required to be a resident for 2 years. That makes it an issue obviously for many people who have lived away for a long time if we were to remove that though are they residents of Australia and New Zealand or are they residents of Fiji.

Mr. Tukana: No, residents of Australia and members of Fiji parliament.

Dr. Fatiaki: So, they would be commuting they have to commute here for which is

Mr. Tukana: how many times per year other than that they are looking after their constituents in Australia.

Dr. Fatiaki: I emphasize again they had issues here with parliamentarians from Vanua Levu being considered by FICAC and placed into jail because they professed to be representing the constituents and be resident in Vanua Levu in the village what you are suggesting is taking this much further than Viti Levu and Vanua Levu.

Mr. Tukana: They live where their constituents are they are giving money every year live and represent the people. But if they say they represent the people of Australia and live in England now that's the issue.

Mr. Beg: sorry through you chair on that point my fellow commissioner you make the point about boundaries Electrol boundaries who these people represent would they be part of the boundaries that we would have to redraw ?

Mr. Tukana: The boundaries have to be redrawn when you are drawing the boundaries you have to make sure that 20,000 is within the boundaries that you are drawing up you are using a ratio of 1 to 20,000.

Mr. Beg: My question was the overseas representatives these boundaries that I am talking about

Mr. Tukana: No, the boundaries are countries

Mr. Beg: So how do we, it varies every year how do we accommodate that ?

Mr. Tukana: One representative that represents the Fiji citizens in New Zealand one is to represent the Fiji citizens in Australia irrespective of the fluctuations in numbers. They represent the people that are there I am just trying to understand the constituents are actually all the Fiji citizens in Australia.

Mr. Beg: So, if they are representing constituencies or their members in New Zealand or the UK, how does that relate back to the constituencies in Fiji, where are they from?

Mr. Tukana: No, they are separate that is why I was trying to understand that

Mr. Beg: We put them as a separate boundary

Mr. Tukana: The 44 members here are represented on the boundaries on the 1 to 20,000 that live here in Fiji

Mr. Beg: So these boundaries so that is what I am trying to understand you define these 1,2,3,4,5,6,7 seats

Mr. Tukana: The constituent boundaries only applying to Fiji I know, that is right

Mr. Beg: Forgive me for this, I am an architect I am trying to understand the proportionality of this equation because they represent the voices of Fiji people outside Fiji so these boundaries will just be defined by seats that means

Mr. Tukana: There is going to be 44 constituents 44 constituents in Fiji you have to design it or draw it in such a way to make sure that there is 20,000 people recorded people living in that constituent. You are asking about the Fiji citizens abroad when you use the word.

Mr. Beg: Boundaries the constitution is for the people by the people the genius of the constitution is amendable by the people the stakeholders, the executive committee. So, I am nervous about that and I am trying to understand a bit more in that space I take on board your comments because if we look at the current constitution the composition chapter B under 53, we hear from our the electoral commission.

Under 53 is proportional representative system this is an area that we would have to look at based on your presentation how are we going to look at that whether it is defined as an electoral system or do we define it as something else that currently sits as proportional representation system.

Mr. Tukana: Yes, based on the population so I am trying to bring back the constituent boundaries in the 1997 but it is not practical, it is based on ethnic and there is four electoral roles that is quite complicated just represent the number of people 20,000 irrespective of ethnic background 20,000 here, draw the line vote for your member 44 boundaries, 44 constituents in Fiji,-the 6 additional ones are based on where you reside overseas.

Mr. Beg: My mind is working like an architect looking for how this would put it in systems thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: The qualification of land owners' qualification of land owners in the senate 22 seats for native land owners 2 seats, 7% from government of the day yes and 3% from freehold land owners which is one seat when you say native land owners do you include Rutuman's and Banabans

Mr. Tukana: Native land owners since the Rotuman's don't want to be called Fijians that was told to me and I was shocked this is land ownership chairman for the Fiji land the register of land owners.

Mr. Valenitabua: I understand, that was a question to direct you to Rotuman's and Banabana's

Mr. Tukana: In regard to the Fiji land ownership land ownership which is dictated by the register in the vola ni Kawa Bula

Mr. Valenitabua: And the 7% from government of the day what do you mean by that?

Mr. Tukana: The government owns 7% of the land they actually get to choose who are to represent them in the senate and the freehold somehow when we do hold the elections people actually stand for the senate freehold land owners. You actually vote for your representative in the senate one person.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay, thank you

Dr. Gounder : The last point is perfectly possible that there may be two people you may be voting for both native land and freehold yes,

Mr. Tukana: Only one you have to choose.

Dr. Gounder: As a native land owner, you also own freehold land in the city and then you also own crown land so you are entitled to three votes

Mr. Tukana: Good point; Good point you actually be able to vote you actually be able to vote because as a shareholder as a shareholder you have money in their money in their vote for either this one also vote for this one also vote for your representative on this one so you can vote three times if you own, like me I own native land and I own freehold land, I might buy a state owned land but I can vote for my representative I look and I say this guy, I like him he is going to represent us well as freehold land owners. I choose this guy so, there is nothing spectacular in that regard I see that it is very straight forward that systems can cater for it

Dr. Fatiaki: With all due respect Mr. Tukana I would like to differ greatly I appreciate the basis of what you are suggesting, I just see from a practical point of view and I am not an architect. But I think a bit like him the logistics of trying to put that into play will require a lot of time thinking processing to get it right I will give you an example if you say 22 seats, 90% of the land it sounds simple but then amongst the native land owners you may then have people saying we in Rewa own this amount therefore out of that 22 we want these many seats.

Then you start getting lots of disputes there between the land owners themselves under for instance the 22 seats that are native land unless, you are going to say that the GCC is going to do it if the GCC does it and you are working on the basis of per square foot of land determining your entitlement to a seat. Then you might find a lot of acrimony a lot of disputes amongst for instance the 22 seats that belong to the native of Fiji.

I understand the principle you are making and I think that is taken to heart the question of the country being based what is the country? The country is the land if you didn't have the land of Fiji, then you wouldn't have a country and that associates with your argument about the name.

Now the question of representation is the other question that you are bringing in whether it is right that representation is only determined by the land and the ownership of it or should it be a balance between that the number of people who live there. I am not saying which one is right or wrong, I am saying you have a particular line of thinking which I might not completely agree with it but I understand what you are coming from.

I just see though that if you were to try and implement it it's not like you say simple it will be very complex. I think the issue that he was alluding to in terms of for instance boundaries, where in New Zealand do you start and end what is the population of New Zealand in terms of Fijians who are entitled to vote in the Fiji elections for Parliament. Does that compare equally with the people in Asia and the Middle East and if not is it fair that so many tens of thousands in New Zealand of Fijians vote for one seat and only 500 in the Middle East and Asia vote for one seat That's the complicated part that would need a lot of machinations to bring into play the principles I take it.

I think your statement that leave it to the legal people for instance to sort it out. I am sure there are experts in electoral boundary things that can work those things but , I disagree with you and I think that it's not simple. It will be very complicated and will require a lot of time and resources but it's a refreshing it's another way of thinking about the allocation of seats and I appreciate your answer.

Mr. Tukana: Thank you Commissioner Fatiaki one thing I've always said to my people to my staff, my developers don't ever think that anything is complicated- No. Let me tell you our system that's here at the Native Land Trust Board has all the boundaries of the land in Fiji and we know how much land is in this particular province it's clear and we have the coordinates for that you can actually see the demarcation lines right down to the plot of land to the plot of land right down to that. It's clearly demarcated and the 'vola ni kawa bula' is interfaced to our system here which is called Lands of NCX.

We will know how many landowners owns this particular land we know and we can go by the proportionality of the land that belongs to the Marama Bale na Roko Tui Dreketi. We know the boundaries and we know the people the number of people that are there it must go, whatever we do it must go in proportionality to the size of the land which is your shareholding. Your shareholding into this company called Fiji.

We always complicate things, we think that things are complicated no, it's not complicated Fiji, as I mentioned before let's just take it down, there's only 864,000 people in here. et's not complicate things this thing, we know the boundaries, we know the land boundaries we know the boundaries for the, Gone Marama Bale na Roko Tui Dreketi we know the land boundaries for Rewa, Tailevu Namosi, Nadroga Navosa we know.

We clearly demarcate this land we know the proportionality of this land as far as the whole is concerned. So, I beg to differ with you with your different statement with me.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Tukana we have come to the end of the consultation session this morning just before I close off just looking through or going through your headlines this morning the preamble that is in our book, we can tell you that faith, they have been talking about secular state and particularly the introduction of the word of God into the constitution which is lacking in the 2013 constitution that is in our book.

The identity issue, we have heard in relation to that, the identity issue the land and Qoliqoli you have brought in, it's in the constitution you have brought in something new this morning that is for the lease for the roads and the bridges, first time I've heard about it, considering that bridges and roads are built on land which were acquired by the government for those purposes and compensation should have been paid immediately after acquisition. That is an issue that might have to be looked at together with the TLTB.

The electoral boundaries and constituencies, interesting we are now going by constituency by population if I can call it that. And reinstatement of the senate that has come before us from various submissions and the bill of rights, the rights of participation or economic participation. Those are your -the headings for your submissions this afternoon and we thank you for that.

Nova one in some respects no one would just have to deliberate on it and decide on what to do with your submission as compared to the other ones or as we will also do with the other submissions that have come in and that will come in.Thank you very much we will be going out of Suva from the 1st of May to listen to submissions from the members of the public out there in Viti Levu, Vanua Levu and the islands so we might get some views like yours but time will tell. Thank you very much

Constitution Review Commission

Date: 23 April 2026
Time: 12.00PM

Submitted by Mr. Semi Tukana, 287 Princes Road, Suva

INTRODUCTION

1. The Chairman of the Constitution Review Commission, and the Esteemed Members of the Commission, I thank you for the opportunity given me to submit my views regarding the document that some people refer to as the 2013 constitution or as I refer to as "The Great Injustice to the Fijian People"

2. First and foremost, I acknowledge the sovereign Judaic-Christian God of these Islands of Fiji, which our forefathers accepted on 12th October 1835 at the arrival of the first Christian Missionaries to Fiji.

3. Second, I wish to acknowledge the traditional owners of the Land on which we stand today, the Gone Turaga na Tui Suva, and the Paramount Chief of the Province of Rewa, Na Gone Marama Bale na Roko Tui Dreketi.

4. Thirdly, I acknowledge His Excellency the President of Fiji, Gone Turaga Bale na Tui Cakau. The Government of the day, to the Honorable Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, Cabinet Ministers and Members of Parliament.

5. My name is Semi Tukana and I hail from the Island of Vanuavatu, Tikina ko Totoya, Yasayasa ko Moala, Yasana vakaturaga ko Lau.

6. I run three Technology Companies, specialising in Software Design & Development with two companies domiciled in Fiji, and one in PNG

7. Today, I stand before you representing my family and the silent voices of many of my people and friends.

8. My submission to the Commission today are categorised into seven (7) major topics, and these are;
   - 8.1 Preamble on the 2013 constitution
   - 8.2 Faith
   - 8.3 Identity
   - 8.4 Land & Qoliqoli
   - 8.5 Electoral Boundaries & Constituencies
   - 8.6 Reinstatement of the Senate / Upper House
   - 8.7 Bill of Rights – Rights to Economic Participation

PREAMBLE ON THE 2013 CONSTITUTION – "THE GREAT INJUSTICE AGAINST THE FIJIAN PEOPLE"

9. In August 2025, Fiji's Supreme Court made this decision, "While the Court reaffirmed that the 1997 Constitution was never lawfully abrogated, it noted that "events have moved on," and the 2013 Constitution has been the practical framework of governance for over a decade.

   Furthermore, the Supreme Court ruled "The recognition of the 2013 Constitution would not mean that we think the 1997 Constitution was lawfully abrogated. It was not".

10. The decision by the supreme court based purely on the premise that "events have moved on" is unacceptable in terms of law, and more so in terms of the Bill of Rights of the common people and the Indigenous people of Fiji. It is the "lazy Judges way out" approach. This lame excuse is an insult to the people of Fiji. The Supreme Court may have opted for this excuse in its attempt to adopt the Doctrine of Necessity. However, it lacks to address the pre-conditions that necessitates the formulation and promulgation of a constitution. The Doctrine of Necessity is the most critical test for the legitimacy of the 2013 constitution.

11. The normal Villager and remote Dwellers comprising 30% of the population are unaffected by the current constitution. However, they remember the 1997 Constitution because they were consulted widely on its formulation. These people live their lives as though they were under the 1997 Constitution.

12. The 2013 constitution has failed all four tests:
    (1) Test of Legitimacy – Failed
    (2) Test of Evolving a living document - Failed
    (3) Test of Practicality - Failed
    (4) Test of the Doctrine of Necessity – Failed

13. It failed Legitimacy. A document of this importance should be a "Constitution for the people, and by the people". The Supreme Court in a statement made on the 26 April 2024 made it clear that the document was formulated by a "small group of officials" and imposed on the total population.

14. It failed Evolvability. The 2013 constitution explicitly states in Chapter 11 Section 3 that it can only be amended through a referendum of 75% of registered voters in Fiji. This will be impossible to achieve with only 70% The inability of evolving this document is supported by ANU's Constitutional Law Academic, Professor Anthony Regan, in a recent statement stated that it is impossible to change the current 2013 constitution.

15. It failed Practicality. Case in point: its inability to resolve the lack of representation of voters at Parliament level brought about by the deregistration of a major party in Parliament. The current Parliament only represents only 30% of the population.

16. It failed Doctrine of Necessity. The precondition for the Doctrine of Necessity are as follows:
    1. Absence of Criminal Intent: The act must not be performed with the intention to cause harm or violate the law.
    2. Necessity: The action must be necessary to prevent a greater harm or to protect the public interest.
    3. Proportionality: The action must be taken in a situation where there is no other reasonable alternative.
    4. Contextual Urgency: The action must be taken in a situation where there is no other reasonable alternative.
    5. Time Limit: The action must be taken as soon as possible without delay.

    The doctrine is only necessary when there is total disorder or anarchy in a Nation. No such events occurred in 2006. Everyone went about their business as though there were no "coup".

    There was no need to create a whole new set of rules, when all they could have done was to review and introduce amendments to the 1997 Constitution which was widely accepted by the populace.

    Everyone went about their business as though the 1997 Constitution was still in force. There were no such National disorder, violent protests or anarchy to warrant a change in constitution and, therefore, the applicability of the "Doctrine of Necessity". The 2013 constitution necessitated nothing, except for the injection of the agendas of the three or four people who designed it.

CHRISTIAN FAITH – NOT NEGOTIABLE

17. We strongly disagree with the Preamble Section of the 2013 constitution regarding the declaration of Fiji as a Secular State
18. To be Secular is to be Godless, and it disregards the Faith of our Forefathers who received Christianity and transformed our lives from Cannibalism to one of the most friendliest, tolerant and accepting peoples in the World.
19. Reference is hereby made to the Forewords to the 1997 Constitution 25 July 1997:

    "WE, THE PEOPLE OF THE FIJI ISLANDS, SEEKING the blessing of God who has always watched over these islands: RECALLING the events in our history that have made us what we are, especially the settlement of these islands by the ancestors of the indigenous Fijian and Rotuman people; the arrival of forebears of subsequent settlers, including Pacific Islanders, Europeans, Indians and Chinese; the conversion of the indigenous inhabitants of these islands from heathenism to Christianity through the power of the name of Jesus Christ; the enduring influence of Christianity in these islands and its contribution, along with that of other faiths, to the spiritual life of Fiji"

20. We cannot allow the Nation of Fiji to be Godless, as the very rights that is allowing us to review this constitution was gained through the sacrifices made by our Fijian Forefathers in receiving and accepting the God of the Judaic-Christians to the Lord and God of our Land, who in Hebrew, is Yeshua HaMashiach (Jesus the Messiah).

21. There is nothing wrong and no one will lose anything by stating that the Nation of Fiji acknowledges Christianity and the Judaic-Christian God as the God of our Islands.

22. The declaration that the Nation of Fiji acknowledges the Christian Faith of our Forefathers as the God of our Nation and our 333 Islands, is NOT NEGOTIABLE

Recommendations

23. Acknowledgement of the advent of the Christian Faith and its acceptance by our Fijian Chiefs and Forefathers from October 12, 1835 until today

24. The Constitution must explicitly state that the Nation of Fiji is a Christian Nation, and that it does not limit the rights of the people to practice their own Religion provided that the Religion does not abide under the doctrines that promotes forceful conversion by death or by payment of tributes.

LEGISLATION TO SAFEGUARD AGAINST FAITH DOCTRINES THAT PROMOTES EXTORTION OF MONEYS, AND/OR RADICAL TEACHINGS ON CONVERSION OR FACE DEATH – NOT NEGOTIABLE

25. The Constitution, though it promotes Freedom of Religion, it must not be used as a cover for the practice of faiths that has in its holy books clauses and doctrines that limits the rights of choice of the people;

Recommendations

26. Legislations need to be introduced to terminate the rights of a Religious Organisation or Religious Sect that is actively guided by a holy book which explicitly states and openly promotes the doctrines of Conversion by force or face Death or the payment of Tributes by force.

27. Legislations need to be introduced to identify and terminate the operations of a Religious Organisations or Religious Sects which has been classified as a Terrorist Organisation by the United Nations or World Security Council or the United States of America or NATO member countries.

28. Legislations need to be introduced to identify and deport members of Religious Organisations which has been classified as Terrorist Organisations by the United Nations or World Security Council or the United States of America or NATO member countries.

FIJIAN IDENTITY – NOT NEGOTIABLE

29. The contentious issue on the so called "common" identity of "Fijian" was recently introduced and enforced in the 2013 constitution. That is a period of only 13 years. Not 50 years. Not 500 years, and certainly not 3500 years. In fact, the contention has only been accentuated as more and more Fijians, especially those who live in remote villages, came to learn about how their Identity as Fijians was removed, and how everyone has been assigned the "Fijian" identity.

    As of today; Fijians, the Kai-Vitis are still calling themselves and being referred to as Fijians Rotumans, the Kai-Rotuma are still calling themselves and being referred to as Rotumans. In fact Rotumans don't want to be called Fijians.
    Indians, the Kai-Idia are still calling themselves and being referred to as Indians or Indo-Fijians
    Chinese, the Kai-Jaina are still calling themselves and being referred to as Chinese Europeans, the Kai-Valagi are still calling themselves and being referred to as Europeans

30. In the 1997 Constitution in Chapter 3 regarding our Citizenship. The ethnicities were very clearly implied within the Sections and Sub-sections of this Chapter:

    Our common identity is Fiji Citizen

31. The 1997 had clearly identified us as Fiji Citizens

32. The 2013 constitution introduced the term iTaukei as the Ethnic identity for the Fijian people. It has introduced a lot more confusion amongst the Fijian people and Non-Fijians.

33. The term iTaukei is an abstract noun that we use in our Fijian Language to refer to ourselves in the Vernacular. On its own, and it being an abstract noun, becomes an empty term. You can refer to someone as Taukei ni bai-ni-toa, Taukei ni koli, Taukei ni bulumakau, Taukei ni sitoa, Taukei ni vale.

    When in Australia, and was asked what was my Ethnic origin, my answer was "iTaukei". The next question they ask, where is that?

    But if I had answered "Fijian" or "Indo-Fijian" or "Chinese-Fijian" or "Euro-Fijian" or "Afro-Fijian" there would be no need for further clarifications.

34. Being called a Fijian has deep linkages to the Landownership, Language, Culture, Traditions, Food, Drinks and History. The term Fijian is anchored to the Land. No longer an abstract noun like iTaukei, an empty term, that is floating in the sky.

35. The 1997 Constitution clearly recognises the Rights of every citizen to be called Fiji Citizen:

RECOGNISING that the descendants of all those who chose to make their homes in these islands form our multicultural society:

AFFIRMING the contributions of all communities to the well-being of that society, and the rich variety of their faiths, traditions, languages and cultures:

TAKING PRIDE in our common citizenship and in the development of our economy and political institutions:

COMMITTING ourselves anew to living in harmony and unity, promoting social justice and the economic and social advancement of all communities, respecting their rights and interests and strengthening our institutions of government:

REAFFIRMING our recognition of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals and groups, safeguarded by adherence to the rule of law, and our respect for human dignity and for the importance of the family,

36. Your rights as a Fiji Citizen are not jeopardized in any way or form by being called Indo-Fijian, Chinese-Fijian, Euro-Fijian, or Afro-Fijian or any other name.

37. Fiji is the more richer, when all Ethnicities hold on to their language, cultures and traditions, and their Identities

Recommendations

38. That all Citizens of Fiji to be called and referred to as "Fiji Citizens"

39. The Ethnicities of the "Fiji Citizens" must reflect their own ethnic origins; Fijians refer to the Indigenous Fijians, Indo-Fijians refer to Fiji Citizen of Indian ethnic origin, Chinese-Fijians refer to Fiji Citizen of Chinese ethnic origin, Euro-Fijians refer to Fiji Citizen of European or Caucasian ethnic origin, and Rotumans refer to Fiji Citizen of Rotuman ethnic origin.

(4)

NATIVE LAND & QOLIQOLI OWNERSHIP – NOT NEGOTIABLE

40. Ownership of the Qoliqolis which are clearly demarcated at the Taukei Land Trust Board must revert from the State to Rightful Traditional Owners

    Those who utilise these Qoliqolis including Beaches, Mangrove Swamps, Open Waters, Surf and Reefs must pay the Rightful Traditional Qoliqoli owners the appropriate compensation on a User-Pay basis.

    Recommendation
    The State must release all Rights over all Qoliqolis to the Rightful Traditional Owners, and appropriate powers to be handed over to the TLTB as Trustees for Traditional Qoliqoli owners, for the proper administration of the boundaries of these Qoliqolis, the setting up of the appropriate levy royalties to be charged for the use of these Qoliqolis, the collection of these levies, and the distribution of the royalties to the rightful owners of the Qoliqolis

41. In the 1997 Constitution, Chapter 4, Section 40, Item 1 on the Protection against Compulsory Acquisition of Property.

    It states the need for compensation for Land that has been acquired for State use.

    While Landowners receive lease payments from Government for land upon which Hospitals, and Schools are built, the owners of the land where Roads and Bridge Infrastructures are built for the general public use do not receive any Lease payments.

    land acquired for public use

    Recommendation
    Legislations must be drawn up for the documentation of Leases and appropriate annual lease rental payments to the Landowners where land has been acquired for the profit of the general public paying particular attention to Roads and Bridges infrastructures.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES & RE-INSTATEMENT OF CONSTITUENCIESS

42. It is of paramount importance that every Fiji Citizen is fairly represented in the House of Representatives.

43. Under the 2013 constitution, the notion of one man one vote is also supported, but the non-existence of the Constituent representations defeats the very purpose of what it purports to support

44. The current situation in Parliament is a clear case in point that the one man one vote without Constituencies does not work. Currently the seating Members of Parliament represent only 30% of the total population, which had resulted from the deregistration of one of the major parties in 2024.

45. The 1997 Constitution clearly lays out the Electoral Boundaries and the various Constituencies, and membership of the House of Representatives in Chapter 6, Part 2 under House of Representatives

46. However, I am proposing that constituent boundaries to be redrawn with Parliament Representations be based on the population spread rather than Ethnicity.

Recommendations

Redraw new Constituent Boundaries. Membership of the Parliament must not be drawn on Ethnic lines but by Population spread. One House Representative for every 20,000 people in a specific Electoral Boundary.

With the total population count of Fiji being at 864,000, the total number of seats in Parliament comes to 44. Added to that number are 6 more seats representing Fiji Citizens living abroad.

Fiji Citizens residing in Fiji	44 Seats
Fiji Citizens living in NZ	1 Seat
Fiji Citizens living in Australia	1 Seat
Fiji Citizens living in the UK/Europe	1 Seat
Fiji Citizens living in Middle East/Asia	1 Seat
Fiji Citizens living in US/Canada and South America	1 Seat
Fiji Citizens living in other Pacific Island Countries	1 Seat
Total Seats in Parliament	50 Seats

The inclusion of Fiji Citizens living abroad is important as it recognizes their contribution to the Fiji Economy with Remittances receipted every year reaching close to $1.5 billion a year.

As the population of Fiji increases the number of seats will increase as well with the representations be worked out on the 1:20,000 ratio.

REINSTATEMENT OF THE SENATE OR THE UPPER HOUSE

47. What is the significance of the Senate?
48. The Senate plays a critical role in major decisions that affects the major Stakeholders of the Island Nation of Fiji
49. The 2013 constitution removed the Senate from Chapter 3 – Parliament, Part 1 – Legislative Authority and Part 2 – Composition
50. The 1997 Constitution includes the Senate in Chapter 6 – The Parliament, Part 3- Senate
51. I propose the reinstatement of the Senate with the membership reflecting the proportion of Land Ownership owned by the Sitting Senators
52. I propose that the National Matters that are sensitive to the Stakeholders shall not be decided upon by the Members of Parliament but by the Senators
53. Let us take Fiji as a Company. We can draw parallels between a small country like Fiji to a Coffee Shop like Starbucks. There are 381,000 employees at Starbucks globally which, I believe, is more than the total workforce in Fiji. We are not a big country and not complex. In company terms, Fiji is a tiny company comparable to a Coffee Shop.
54. A company has Shareholders, Board of Directors, Executive Management, and Employees
55. Parallel between a Company and a Country are as follows:

Company	Fiji
Shareholders	Landowners:
% of Funds invested	90% - Native Land
	7% - State Land
	3% - Freehold Land
Board of Directors	Senate - Upper House
Reflect the Funds invested	Reflect the % Land Ownership
Executive Management	Parliament – Lower House
Employees	Public Servants

"proportion of land ownership. Only landowners in Senate.

56. "Shareholders" to the Nation of Fiji are the Landowners including Native Land, State Land, and Freehold Land. Therefore, the composition of the Senate must be based on the percentage ownership of the Land in Fiji.

A.

57. Why Land Ownership? Land is the only substantial platform or base upon which a Country is founded. It is not imaginary. Without Land you cannot have a Country.

Case in Point: The Founder of Facebook, Mr. Mark Zuckerberg, spent $88billion to build an immersive digital world based on virtual reality called Metaverse. They encouraged users to login and with virtual reality goggles they are able to take a tour of the virtual world, and users can buy virtual real estates with real money. It became one of the biggest flop for one company in the world of Technology.

You need real Land to have a Country. You need real money to have Company.

58. The primary Role of the Senate is to have Oversight on the Bills being debated and passed by the Lower House (Parliament). Much like a Board of Directors in a Company.

59. Senate have explicit powers to decide on the following which are sensitive matters for the Fijian people:
    - Faith
    - Identity
    - Land & Qoliqoli
    - Immigration
    - Electoral Boundaries & Constituencies
    - Flag
    - National Anthem
    - Currency
    - Votes at the UN
    - Alliances to Bloc of Nations

60. The above matters may be debated on the Floor of Parliament but the final decision and vote rests with the Senate with a Pass vote of 75%.

Recommendations
To reinstate the Senate

Composition
Senate membership to comprise 25 Seats, with the following seat allocations to Landowners:

22 Seats	90% from Native Land Owners (Great Council of Chiefs)
2 Seats	7% from Government of the Day
1 Seat	3% from Freehold Land Owners

Bills that only the Senate can pass through a 75% vote are any matters concerning:
- Faith
- Identity
- Land & Qoliqoli
- Immigration
- Electoral Boundaries & Constituencies
- Flag
- National Anthem
- Currency
- Votes at the UN
- Alliances to Bloc of Nations

(7)

BILL OF RIGHTS – RIGHTS TO ECONOMIC PARTICPATION

61. The Company's Act of 2015 has a major flaw in it that could easily be weaponised by any sitting Government
62. The flaw in the Company's Act 2015 refers to the Clause on the Protection of the Shareholders from Unfair treatment or Oppression. This Clause gives the right to any Shareholder to Wind up a Company on the basis of Oppression.
63. The ability of a Minority Shareholder to wound up a company on the basis of Oppression opens up the opportunity for a sitting Government to weaponize and to victimize a Majority Owner of a Company who may not be inline with the Policies of the Government in Power.

Recommendation

When a Shareholder seeks Court's relief for Unfair Treatment or Oppression, that Shareholder should pay a Bond equivalent to 10% of the value of the Company

LAST WORD

You have been given the opportunity to do what is True, Right and Just for the people and for the Nation of Fiji.

I wish you and the Commission God's blessings upon your deliberations and outcomes.

Soqosoqo Vakamarama Itaukei (SVI)

Soqosoqo Vakamarama
Date:23-4-2026
Time :2.20pm-3.40pm

Leighton: Before the chair begins, I'd like to thank the members of the Soqosoqo Vakamarama ni iTaukei. Thank you, Madam President, and if you know, Tomoko and the team, for making yourselves present here this morning and for accepting our invitation.

It is a great pleasure for us to have you before us to make submissions. Before the chair introduces the commissioners and the work that they'll be undertaking, I just have a few housekeeping matters, if you want to speak. Just press the right side of the mic to turn it on, and then once you've spoken, you can turn it off.

After the chair has made the introduction for the team and the work that they'll be undertaking, we also request if the members of your team can also introduce yourselves. This is for the transcription, so that it can be recorded.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Leighton. To the ladies, we welcome you this afternoon for coming to this consultation. We had invited you, and we are happy, we appreciate that you have accepted our invitation, which is manifested by your appearance and your attendance before this commission this afternoon. I have to apologize, there should be seven commissioners.

You only see three of us sitting here. The others are traveling, and another one is busy. If I may introduce, busy at USP, sorry, I have to finish that. He's got something to do at USP. Before I move on, I'd like to introduce the commissioners who are before you this afternoon. On my left, on my right, is Conway Beg, and on my left is Dr. Fatiaki, and I am Sevuloni Valenitabua

The other three, other four, who are not with us, Dr. Neelesh Gounder of USP, who left just a while ago, Mr. Ami Kohli, a lawyer in Labasa, Dr. Unaisi Baba, who is in Australia at this point in time, and the same as Ms. Merewalesi Nailatikau also overseas. So, you will have to make do with the three men facing you this afternoon. We heard that you asked for the ladies.

I'm sorry, you have to make do with us. So, we welcome you. We are looking forward that this will be a good session. Now, as a way of opening this consultation, I will address as the chairperson, the Constitution Review Commission is an independent commission. We see ourselves as independent. We were appointed by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji, and our task is to review the 2013 Constitution.

And part of that task is to collect submissions and views and thoughts from our people, the people of the Republic of Fiji, as to what they consider should be in the Constitution. We are talking about amendment, which means some things can be removed, some things can be added, some things are to remain in the Constitution. We don't have any preconceived ideas on what is to go and what is to remain.

We have to listen to the citizens of this country on what they think should be in the Constitution. So, that is our task, and in accordance with our term of reference, we have started on consultations. We have embarked on that, and for the past three weeks, we have been hearing submissions from ministries, from associations, from individuals.

We have come in to give us our thoughts about what should be in the Constitution. From early May, from the 1st, 2nd, 3rd May, we will be leaving Suva, and we'll be going out around Vitilevu, Vanualevu, Lau group, Lomaiviti, Kadavu, even to the west. So, it's going to be a wide coverage in order to get submissions from our people.

We are ready to listen to your submissions this afternoon, and I now hand over the mic to you ladies to start and continue with your submissions.

Adi Finau: Vinaka Vakalevu, I'll be gender sensitive. Vanualevu, Chairperson of the Review Commission, and thank you for your words of welcome.

I also say Vinaka vakalevu to your two colleagues, and it's good to see old faces. It makes me feel comfortable. But I'm not sure whether what I say will make people feel comfortable.

Nevertheless, that's what I'm saying at the outset. And most importantly, we'd like to thank you for inviting us to meet with you and share with you some of our views with regards to the Constitution. And I suppose in the course of the discussion, we'll be also airing some of our views about this country, some of which are reflected in the Constitution, and some of which are missing from the Constitution.

But before I carry on, I would like to introduce my members from the – I was going to say from the Bose Levu Vakaturaga, from the Soqosoqo Vakamarama ni iTaukei.On my right is Ro Iva, from Namosi. And on my left, far left, is Sala, from Ra.

And closest left is Ana Fine, Ra and Lau. Married to Ra, but she is from Lau. And behind us are two other colleagues, Ana Vesikula, from Tailevu, and Ro Miri from Noco, Rewa.

But I would like to emphasize the fact that we consider it a privilege and an honor. And we really appreciated your letter of invitation, which encapsulates the Soqosoqo Vakamarama, that we didn't know anybody else knew about. I suppose, how do we do this?

Mr. Valenitabua: The practice has been that you give us your submissions, and we will listen. And then at the end, if we have any questions, then we will ask questions. Okay.

Adi Finau: Now, if we may, can we proceed with the question to you?

Mr. Valenitabua: All right. That has not been the practice, but we will entertain that.

Adi Finau: Yes. Because, you know, this is a review commission. And to review the Constitution, what we would like to know is why.

Mr. Valenitabua: And that is your first question.

Adi Finau: Yes. Why are you reviewing the Constitution?

Mr. Valenitabua: First and foremost, there has been complaints out in the public that this Constitution is not the Constitution for the citizens of Fiji, in the sense that no consultation was made to the people of Fiji at the time it was being prepared. That is what is termed as a democratic deficient, which we are trying to remedy here. That is the first point.

Second point, the contents of the Constitution itself, they are contents which were not submitted or presented by the people of Fiji. In the preamble of this Constitution, it says that we, the people of Fiji, and there has been talk all over the country that that does not reflect actually what really happened. It is not for us, the people, because only a few people prepared the 2013 Constitution. That is another or an additional democratic deficiency. And then, and that was the main reason why the government thought that we should have a look at amending the Constitution.

You would have heard about the Supreme Court making a decision now and giving their opinions. That came about through a reference from Cabinet. The difficulty that was seen was the amendment of the Constitution.

Yes, if we follow the provisions which are in the Constitution right now, it is going to be difficult to amend it. With a 75% majority for the members of Parliament, and about the same for a referendum. You may know that in order to amend this Constitution, there is a process in the Constitution itself which says that an amending bill will have to be put to Parliament, and then it has to be read two times, the first reading and the second reading, and if 75% of the members of Parliament agree, then it goes on to another step which is the referendum.

And again, referendum is just like an election. We have to answer whether the bill, the amending bill, should be turned into law or not. And if in the referendum there would be a question, and either a yes or a no.

If a lot of people say no, then that's it. We will have to just live on with the 2013 Constitution. We have had a lot of submissions coming up on the deficiencies in this Constitution, and we've got those covered.

So, to answer your question, we need to have some amendments to reflect the aspirations, the views, and so forth of the people of Fiji so that the preamble can say we are the people of Fiji and be truthful about it. Not just say we, the people of Fiji, take this as a constitution when the majority do not know anything about it. I hope that answers your question.

Adi Finau: Of course. Thank you, Chair. Now, you know we are the Soqosoqo Vakamarama iTaukei, and we've been called the Soqosoqo Vakamarama iTaukei since 1944, years before Fiji decided that the natives of this country should be iTaukei, should be referred to as iTaukei.

And that's our first point. The creation of a nation-state of Fiji was a result of the deed of cession in 1874, when 13 of our chiefs ceded the country to Great Britain, and that was the origin of Fiji. And therefore, any reference to, it means that it's not just the iTaukei, it's, yeah, the iTaukei whom you are now referring to as the iTaukei are Fijians.

That's something that the Constitution should recognize, because this is our country. This is Fiji. And we created Fiji. Not everybody who now settles in Fiji had anything to do with the creation of the nation-state of Fiji. Because what we're trying to, what you are trying to do here is to call everybody Fijian. You are following the examples of countries like New Zealand, Australia, America, where settlers have decided that that's what their countries of settlement would be called.

In New Zealand, Aotearoa, the settlers decided to call the country New Zealand. And the people who belong to Aotearoa are the Māoris. The same in Australia.The settlers came in and called the country Australia. So, Australians are, the Australians are mainly settlers, people who came in from outside. The same with America.

When Columbus sailed the ocean blue, what year was that, Doctor? In 1042 or something? He discovered the Americas. And the Europeans came and settled there and decided to call Canada, Canada. United States, United States. Mexico, Mexico. And everybody who, these settlers and their descendants became Americans. And they put aside the real Americans.

And that's what's happening in Fiji now. This country has totally ignored the fact that Fiji is only a nation-state because that's what we created, the Fijian people, in 1874. There were settlers here, but they didn't have a say in what this country was to be called.

Now because of principles of democracy and so on, we are bending to the demands of democracy that the majority of the people count. But in this country, the majority are still us. We make up 60% of the population.

That doesn't include the Rotuman's. In the deed of session, the chiefs who ceded Fiji to Great Britain asked for only two things. For the British government to promote trade and industry, which means that our chiefs at the time were already aware of things that were necessary for a nation to survive and prosper, Trade and industry. And the other thing they asked for was for the British government to promote civilization through Christianity. Because the recognition of the chiefs, it was the missionaries who civilized the country and brought education.

In fact, they established all the educational institutions in the country, not the government. And this was well before anybody else came here. And in the settlement of the deed of session, the queen returned all the land to the Fijian people, except for the lands that have been, you know, legally given, legally obtained and secured by the settlers, which are now known as peace-free lands.

And the other lands, because by that time, we had chiefs who were already enlightened, and some of their sons had gone to school in Australia and New Zealand. They were aware that they too could claim. So, you had your native grants.

These were lands that were claimed by the chiefs at that time that belonged to them and were classified, had the same classification as peace-free land. And the other portion of land was land that government needed for it to run the country. The rest of the land was native land, Fijian land.

That's why in this day and age, Fijians own 90% of the land. Peace-free land is 5%, and government is 5%. That's our first. Not iTaukei ni Waqa, iTaukei ni boto, iTaukei vale. It doesn't refer to the original people. It's a Fijian word that has certain, has very specific meanings.

So, for people to be saying, because you belong here, you are a iTaukei, no. We are iTaukei and Fijian. That's why we own 90% of the land. But being a iTaukei doesn't refer to being what you people are describing, being indigenous. Fijians are indigenous in Fiji. Everybody else comes from a migrant place.

The Indians came here in 1879 as part of the Girmits. And by 1916, they had almost equaled the Fijian population at the end of the Girmits program. And by 1944, they had outnumbered the Fijian population.

And they outnumbered the Fijian population till 1994. Hence, the practice and the beliefs in democracy was brought in to push for this kind of concept to think. It should be in the constitution.

This constitution, and the one before that, and the one before that, and the one before that, all ignored and disregarded what the Fijians want. Hence, the two coups in 1987, the insurrection in 2000, and the military takeover in 2006. This is because of the disaffection of the Fijian people.

Because their interests have not been given priority. You know, the primacy of Fijian interest, which is an important principle you should consider. So long as that is ignored and disregarded, you will continue to have reflections and indications of Fijian disaffection. Not dissatisfaction, but disaffection.

Now, when the iTaukei movement supported Rabuka's coup in 1987, we were all mistakenly thinking that he did the coup so that we could lead in this country. But that didn't happen because democracy was followed, and you had to vote in a government. I'll bet most were Fijians. And Fijians continue to agitate because of this feeling of disaffection. And for a constitution to work in Fiji, and for you to recognize the fact that we are the majority, and this is our country, you have to respect that.

And not the principles of democracy. Because this is our country, we're not running it for the UN or international courts of justice. The constitution has to be ours, and that's what you, sir, had emphasized. This constitution has to belong to us. But Fijians must take priority because this is our country. That's why we didn't like the preamble to the 1997 constitution.

The preamble to the 1997 constitution says we all came here to settle. Everybody. Okay, we think, are you mine? And that we were heathens.It disrespected us. That's why there's been no, Fijians have always been disaffected and agitating. Then this 2013 constitution, which went further than that, and defines us, Rotuman's and Fijians, as iTaukei.

So, because it's in the constitution, it seals who we are. Doesn't recognize us as the owners of these islands. You're probably thinking, sir, what a bloody nationalist she is.

You know, the preamble, this preamble, unlike the 1997 constitution, just ignored the fact that we were Fijians. You know, and talks about everybody coming here to settle. Only we arrived earlier.

Now, the 2013 constitution defines us as iTaukei and seals our, whatever it is. Legally, constitutionally, because the constitution is the supreme law of the land. And furthermore, if we go back to the legal session, you know, our chiefs at the time, maybe uneducated, but they recognized important things, trade and commerce, which would result in the development and prosperity of the country.

And they said that because they, on the understanding that we had the natural resources to do that. And the other one is civilization through Christianity, which this constitution completely ignores and makes us a secular state. And even ignores the fact that the majority of the people in Fiji are Christians.

It's a disaffection of the Fijian people that will continue to emerge. And the, you know, the leaders' inability to consider things properly. Once they become leaders, they think themselves as academics. So, they bring in all these newfangled ideas. Like in 1997, they brought in the new election voting system, the preferential treatment system, on the explanation that academics give that first-past-the-post is not the real majority. And as a result of that system, people who were the least preferred went into parliament.

And the SVT, which introduced the system, lost the election and only came back with five members. Because leaders in this country allow themselves to be influenced by academics. Academics don't run anything. What do you say? They don't run any organization or anything. They just lecture. And from principles they read of.

Not of the things that they do not originate. These are things that the constitution of this country and the supreme law of the land should take into account. Because people are saying, no, Fijian is right because it's democratic. But it's not.

People who call themselves Fijians now are not Fijians. They're Indians, Chinese, Part European. And Part European still know where they come from. The places of origin. From Massachusetts, from London, from wherever. Sweden, Germany. You have to look at these things.

And I would like to go back to the 2013 constitution. Because I was a member of the NCBBF, France's National Council for Building a Better Fiji. And we produced one very excellent and brilliant report. The state of the nation and economy report.

Based on that report was the idea of creating the, how many, the charters. The charters. You know? What do you call them? The people's charter. For building a better Fiji. And because not one province supported the charter. We decided we'd use another tag.

Go to the community and consult the community. And we developed a questionnaire for those who attended those consultations to fill in and see whether they agree or not. And as a result of that exercise of voting people, voting people, we got a 64% approval.

And I think that's what the French government used to approve the 2013. That there was already public consultation and they already obtained 64% approval. It's my thinking. Two things we want. Fiji is Fijian. We are a Christian country.

And amend the laws that bind us, Fijian people. You know, it's useless. We are owning 90% of the land. But what do we have to show for it? Because we can't do what we want with the land because the government can't solve these things.

There are two systems of law in this country. There's the major, which is according to the constitution. And then the Fijian laws. That tells us, although tells us that we own 90% of the land, what we do with it and what we can do with it and not do with it is determined by government of the day. Even in terms of registration.

Everybody is registered under the birth, death, and whatever law. But with us, we have to be registered in another, the VKB. Which was really an adaptation of the register of native land owners, which they then converted to become the NLC.

These are details that you people should, I'm begging you people to look into. Because until these matters are taken into account, Fijian agitation will always remain. Do you know that although mahogany grow on our land, we don't own the trees? Although pine is grown on our land, we don't own the trees.

These are issues that should make sure that we have our freedom. Even now, the two biggest forest reserves in Emalu and Draubuta, in Navosa, the landowners cannot participate or do not have any say in carbon trading. Because, why? Because government has leased those forests.

So, any negotiation on carbon trading is to do the buyer and the government. These are basic things that, you know, we're talking about a constitution that should give us freedom. But what freedom is it giving to the Fijian people? When we have to live too under systems of laws.

TLTB has, because it is a trustee of our lands, has all the powers. Do you know that any development proposal in this country has to be approved by the Ministry of the Environment? Did you know that, sir? Yes. And that the riparian law gives ownership of everything in our rivers and streams and bodies of water, ownership of which to the government, in spite of the fact that these things run through our land.

There's so many constraints. But from people outside, they think, because we Fijian people have always run this country, you know, we've always provided the prime ministers, the whatever, the speakers, the... But no, we are held in check. Even our foreshores.

Everywhere where there's potential for development and growth, we are, you know, the right to all those things taken away from us. They even extend this to the mangroves. I don't know how much mangrove there is in Rotuma.

Well, there was full of mangroves. You know, they're on our land. They're adjacent to our villages. And it's our source of food. We are constrained. And the best constitution you can come up with is the one that gives us freedom.

You know, the list of, what are these, you know, big public businesses. What do you call them? There's about 20 of them. These are the big businesses, the ones that run this country.

One single Fijian business, Fijian holdings. Only because it has... There's no other business there that belongs to Fijians. The list begins with APP, which stands for Atlantic Pacific Packaging.

Because we've been denied the right to innovate. Because everybody is telling us' Mo ni vuli na veiluitaki na kaiviti 'We look at this to create business, to create systems of making money.

APP is so strategic. Look after both coasts of the America, you know, the Atlantic and the Pacific. And their packaging company, they provide all the packaging. But everybody keeps telling us... What use is that if they don't even know how to use their resources? Or they don't know how to access using their resources?

Do you know who logs Mahogany? Certainly not the landowners. And once they get off the log area, who transports them? Who transports the logs to the Somu's? And these are all activities that create money. And we just sit there and they keep telling us, ah, but you own all the land. But we've been denied the ability and the capacity to use those resources and to turn those resources to wealth.

Because everybody's quarreling about, ah, that's not democratic. You know, the majority counts. And us women, we're so full of all this gender equality thing, we're forgetting the things that make one's life matter.

I am sorry, Learned Chair. But I'm just viewing, you know, voicing our views as Fijian women. And we refuse to be called iTaukei. That's the name of our organization. It's a legal entity. Soqosoqo Vaka Marama iTaukei. We registered under the charitable trust law. But we are Fijian women.

The 1970 constitution, 1970 constitution, all its preamble, all that its preamble says, reverence to God, honor the queen, and respect the rights of people. And so did the 1990 constitution. That's what it said. Reverence to God, honor the queen, and respect the rights of people.

But these two constitutions, wow. One is telling us we all came from somewhere else. And the 2013 one is defining Rotuman's and Fijians as iTaukei, as indigenous people. You know the meaning of indigenous, people basically what we're wanting, and I think I've said that over and over again, that Fiji belongs to Fijians. And there should always be, interest of Fijians should always be of primary importance.

And in line with that, the council of chiefs should be reinstated as the apex decision-making body of the Fijian people. And in line with that, the head of state should be decided by the council of chiefs. Then you should create a new council of chiefs, not the one that kind of 'Vatakilakila koya cici tiko qo'

And this country should be a Christian country. And we would like also consideration or review of those decrees that were enlivened in this constitution as acts. And we would like the electoral system to change.

That we should return to the, well first the bicameral, but the electoral system, you know, now there's only one national constituency. You should return to the constituency that relate to the seat. If you have 52 seats in parliament, there should be 52 constituencies, which should make sure that every part of the country is represented in parliament.

And that you should change the system from, as is now, to one from th list system. You know, if you continue to use the list system, the list system should apply to each constituency. And that to ensure that there's some representation of women, the first name should be men. he second name might be James. The third name then can be Anna. And that the list should go on that way.

So, at least the system ensures itself that there's gender, some kind of gender parity. And we are proposing that you revert to the old parliamentary system, where you have select committees and not standing committees. Because select committees, with their findings, they ensure proper debate of those subjects.

Now with your standing committees, there is no debate. That's why the last government and this government can go through one bill in one day. There has to be proper discussion. Because these bills turn into laws for the country. And that you might consider a return to the bicameral system, to the legislature and the senate. Thank you very much. Learned Chair, that rests our submission.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka Sara Vakalevu, Adi Finau and members of the Soqosoqo Vakamarama iTaukei. Thank you very much for the submission we have heard this morning. The submissions run in line with some of the earlier submissions we have heard, some of your submissions. Like I said at the beginning, we record those. They are being recorded and we will consider them during our deliberations. I am amazed that the submission from the Soqosoqo Vakamarama, although not written, has been given to us orally without any, I don't see any reference to any notes.

And I am amazed, from where I am sitting, I don't see any notes being read in front of you. So, thank you very much. Usually, we ask questions or just leave some reflections or comments on what we have heard from the associations or ministries who have made submissions to us.

If I may start it off, the secular state has been presented to us, submitted to us with reasoning that it should stay in the alternative that it should go, should be removed. Reasons have been given to us. You have raised this issue again this afternoon, the secular state, and you have given us your reasons.

We cannot say whether we agree or we don't agree, but we thank you for that submission. In relation to Fiji, for the Fijians, and the identity that is calling us, who are now called in our case Fijians, and for the other races to be either Indo-Fijians or other ethnic groups that has been brought to us. We have received those, so we will concede those with the other submissions.

The references to land, although we own, we are supposed to be owning native land, the Environment Management Act, which you referred to, is indeed there. Any development has to go through the Ministry of Environment, and the Environment Management Act either gives consent or license or not, depending on how good the presentations are. So, if the presentations are good, that's one of them, depending on the presentations.

So, if there's good presentations from large developers, then that is something that has to be conceded. I know that the Rivers and Streams Act gives ownership of waters to the government, and any use of any water from rivers and our streams, we've got to get a license from the Ministry of Land. So, we are hearing you, and I leave the others to my two fellow commissioners. I still have some things here, but let us hear them first.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. Adi Finau and ladies, I reiterate the Chair's comments. For an oral submission to come across with such clarity is a rare occurrence in this setting. Most people come here and they read to us what they've typed out and prepared. To see you, Adi Finau, speak off the cuff in such a clear, lucid, passionate manner is very much appreciated. Because I think it captures aspects of your presentation that you could not do if you read it out from a script. From the outset, let me just reiterate what our Chair has said earlier on. We, certainly I, and I have no doubt my commissioners beside me, feel that we are completely independent.

I never saw, I speak for myself here, myself coming here to work on behalf of government, to, I won't say implement a constitution. Actually, it was to the exact contrary that I feel I might be of use in this exercise. And by that, I mean, Chair has alluded to the democratic deficits that the 2013 Constitution has.

The lack of prior consultation, the lack of legitimacy in terms of being passed by the people through Parliament, the consolidation of powers into particular ministries. These are all shortcomings. And so, our task was to review it, to give it, I guess, a degree of legitimacy in the sense that it says we, the people of Fiji, give to ourselves this Constitution.

My understanding of the Supreme Court decision is that we are basically allowed to do that. To all of the Constitution bar one chapter, which was the immunity one. Having said that, we have taken it upon ourselves to raise it and to allow the public to raise it with us.

Even though the direction from the Supreme Court was that we could review every part. And by review, our Chair has alluded to the fact that we can amend it, we can revoke it, we can repeal it, we can change it. So, everything in that Constitution is open to us changing it. There is nothing set in concrete other than the immunity part. And I think that part of it is important. We are not here to rub a stamp.

We are actually here to address an obvious illegitimacy in this Constitution and by so doing hopefully right or wrong. I say that because the terms of reference that I have in front of me from the President, which is one of the reasons I signed it, has three areas here that address specific things you've asked for.

As Commissioners, my responsibility will include protecting, guaranteeing, and securing under the Constitution, land and fishing rights and resources of indigenous Fijians and Rotuman's. And assuring that the registered owners of native lands and customary fishing rights have an equitable share of the income derived from the exploitation of the resources beneath and above the surfaces of their land, seabed, rivers, etc. That is in our terms of reference.

That is a very clear indication of the direction that we are supposed to achieve in terms of rewriting this Constitution. The other area that they have specifically allocated a specific part is recognizing the role of the GCC, the Great Council of Chiefs, in national affairs of the state under the Constitution. I think those are two things that you have raised.

I want to reassure you that that's actually part of our terms of reference. Very specific and we are asked to take that into consideration when we start compiling or amending the Constitution.

Your comments about God and faith, you know, take us to a completely different level. We've heard arguments this morning even from someone who had a particular take on them. But I think your historical narrative is an area that is so important that everybody in this country understands. I think it was the GCC that brought to us the fact that the first Constitution should by de facto be considered the deed of cession because it was the first legal document that actually, I guess, made the country of Fiji exist.

Yeah, as a nation state. And by so doing, it was technically the first legal document and may be considered the first de facto Constitution of the country. I hear your words, your passionate comments about the fact that the intent, I have no doubt of the Queen of Fiji and Rotuma then, no longer now, when we got independence was to return the lands to the people who gave it in trust to the Crown.

How that did not transpire into economic progress and equity, I think you touched upon it. I don't mean any disrespect to the structures of Fijian governance, but we Rotuman's are very lucky we don't have an NLTB. We don't have that.

Likewise, our land act which Ratu Sukuna [bless his soul], tried to change, we did not accept and we do not have anything resembling a Vola ni Kawabula because of inherent issues related to the actual translation of your ownership and your rights into economic benefits. I have, again these are more reflections, similar to your presentation, I am a member of the TTFP, a board member by virtue of secondment from the Council of Rotuma, and I sit in that board at the end of the year and look at the amount of money that the TTFP has gained from its parent companies and I always ask the question because one of the mandated things is to contribute to the improvement of the lives of Fijians and Rotuman's. Is where exactly do the Fijian villages benefit from the amounts of millions of dollars that we make and that's a question that only your institutions can answer.

I ask that as a solitary voice amongst a board of other people, but I ask that question because obviously that company which owns 52% or 54% of Fijian holdings belongs to you in name. It's the toke, any of what Native Land Trust bought before, Trust Fund Board and yet I don't see that as a board member. Again, those are just reflections, again those are things I think you will have to address at a governance level, in terms of governance, but I think your general reflections about the history is important for us.

I think it's important for anybody discussing the constitution to understand how it came about and I guess our chair has addressed the issue of the name Fijian. I proudly consider myself a Rotuman. I'm a Fiji citizen and I have never considered myself indigenous. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ladies, we are dealing with the constitution. We have heard submissions. Submissions which give us a lot of, that will give us a lot of problems I would say, just thinking about it. The reason is this. We've got a Bill of Rights.

That is the greatest, I can't say what would be the best word, the greatest challenge for us. The Bill of Rights. Because every citizen of the Republic of Fiji has got rights spelled out in black and white in the constitution.

So, with the submissions being presented to us, some of the submissions would have to mean that we water down the Bill of Rights, but there are some provisions of the Bill of Rights which won't be easy. You know, these are the basic rights, the right to life, the right to freedom of religion, the right to end belief and all those. So having heard the submission this afternoon, particularly when we say that Fijian should be paramount, we've got equality before the law.

It's in the Bill of Rights and it's in the constitution. Those are the kind of challenges that we will be facing. So, we thank you, we thank you for the submission this afternoon.

For us to be a Christian state, for us to be a Christian state, that is another one. For the secular state, for Fiji to be a Christian country, that is another one. If we are to put this in, or we are to change them, then we've got to change all other aspects, or some other aspects of the constitution which tie in with them.

And this constitution, the way it is written, it was written for somebody who thought that they might be there forever. Yeah. And that is what we are looking at. We've got experienced people, or members of the commission. You will hear Mr. Conway; you've heard the doctor. These are the things that we have been considering. They've been running through what might you be thinking about. So, thank you for that. I believe Mr. Conway would like to add to what we have said, Dr. Fatiaki and me.

Mr. Beg: Thank you Chair. Members of the Soqosoqo Vakamarama Adi Finau. Thank you very much. It was nice to meet up again. I haven't seen you for 20 years. And I remember going back to the days of the GCC design brief that we sat together in. But I appreciate all the comments that you've made. And one of the things that struck me, and I think Dr. John echoed the same sentiments, was that the first instrument in the constitution is the preambles. That roadmap that was established.

And you touched on it quite well in the beginning. It's almost a history lesson of why Fiji. You asked the question right from the beginning.

Why are we reviewing the constitution? And I think the Chair gave some really good answers. But for me, I think in the preambles, and we're hearing a lot, is that deal of session reference and the point that you made about not being the first settlers. You know, being the first ownership of the land people before.

So, those are really good points. And I think it's a roadmap to develop. Even though you make reference to your 13 chiefs, that they had the foresight to cede the UK. I'm sorry, cede Fiji to Great Britain at the time. They had the fortuitous foresight to recognize that, as you said, rightful, Fiji was going through a real, I would say, turbulent, violent times. And I think when the introduction of Christianity, I think the chiefs then suddenly realized there's some water, by default, brought some water back into their lives. And the point you make about economic trade and industry is written in the deal of session. Very clear. And actually, to be governed by God.

I think that was the clear message in the beginning, which resonates very well with me. But I'd like to hear from the people and what they say. Our job is to listen. We have very good argumentative discussions. We're always in tension, but good tension. But you raised that point.

I think that was a really good point. And the point on, you know, when you say, when Christopher Columbus discovered America. Yes, it was 1942. 1492. Yes. And again, that was the... Yes.

So, you know, and then I love, I welcome the thoughts about the electoral system, because that's, as Chair was saying, that starts to resonate through the people coming forward. We hear it from the presentations that have been brought to us, but I'm sure there's going to be a lot more out there when we get out there. But I assure you that we are now reaching out to all the people.

I'm looking forward to that. Not just sitting here behind a keyboard, getting out and talking to the people. And that point about the word iTaukei and how it's associated with Fijians, you know, I think that was a very valid point.

I think that was something for us to ponder on, but also to hear from the rest of the people. But I salute you, and I echo the same sentiments as Dr. John. You know, it's amazing that you would sit down, if you know, with your supporters just unscripted. I take my hat off, and yeah, it's quite inspiring to hear. And thank you for that, my kind words. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: I'll just close off by thanking you in relation to the reversal to the select committees instead of the standing committees. I know that the 1997 Constitution has got the select committees participating in Parliament. That's good, because there has been submission in relation to the power of the Attorney General in the appointment of certain offices, constitutional offices, where the Attorney General has to be consulted by the Prime Minister in order for the Prime Minister to confirm the appointment by the JSC.

The Judicial Services Commission, there are other provisions in there. And when we looked at the 1997 Constitution, select committee was there, consultation with the select committee, not the Attorney General. So, like fellow Commissioner, Dr. Fatiaki has said, the concentration of power on one person. That is something that we've been looking at.

So, when you brought up the select committee instead of standing committee, it's a good point that we will have to ponder on. There has been bills passed into Act using the standing order number 50 or 51. And that is what you had referred to, that laws are not being debated properly in Parliament. So, some things to ponder on, and we'll see what happens after that. We now have our level for this afternoon and for the submissions.

Fiji Women's Crises Centre (FWCC)

Fiji Women Crisis Centre
Time:10.20am-11.23am
Date:24-4-2026

Leighton: On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, Chair and Commissioners, I'd just like to welcome you members of the Fiji Women's Crisis Centre. Just a few formalities and housekeeping. If you wish to speak, just press the right side of the mic in front of you to turn the mic on, and once you've made your oral submission, just press the same side to turn it off.

Following this, the Chair will introduce the members of the Commission that are present here today, and also brief the current work that the Commission is undertaking. And then we also ask that your team, if you can introduce yourselves. This is for the transcription, for the record.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ladies and Delegates from the Fiji Women's Crisis Centre, we thank you very much for your attendance before the Commission this morning. We welcome you, and we hope that we will hear deep submissions from you in relation to the issues that you will raise with us. Just a few words in relation to the Commission.

This Commission is independent, and we are tasked with reviewing the 2013 Constitution. The word review is important because it means that we are not looking at a new Constitution. We'll just have to amend whatever can be amended, remove what can be removed, and add what can be added.

We will still have the bulk, I believe, of the 2013 Constitution. As you might know, we were appointed by His Excellency the President of the Country, and we have a term, or a timeline, of six months to complete this review. The task that has been given us is to hear submissions from people of Fiji as wide as possible in order to cure a deficiency, a constitutional and democratic deficiency, which was apparent in the 2013 Constitution.

The deficiency was that we did not know how this Constitution came about. There were a few people who knew about it. Whether consultations were made, we don't know. And if it was made, who gave the submissions? Now, that is our task. Today, we are going to pass you the mic after this, after I am finished. And then we will ask you to introduce yourselves and give us your submissions.

The media was disappointed because we had been inviting them to come here and cover the submissions and the consultations for the sake of the general population. We are required to give as much exposure as we can to the general population so that we know, or they know, what is really happening. It is your request. They were disappointed with it. It is not our decision, so let us take it on from there. So, with those few words of welcome, I now pass on the mic over to you, and you may address us now and make your submissions.

Ms. Tarai: Good morning, and thank you, Chair, for the kind introduction, the words. Before we begin, I would just like to introduce myself once more. My name is Miliana Tarai, and I am the Legal Services Manager for the Fijian Women's Crisis Center.

Today, I am joined by my colleagues, Ms. Petrina Fremlin, sitting on my left. She is one of our legal officers, and to her left is Ms. Elina Cagilaba. She is our Counsellor Supervisor, and to my right, I have Ms. Akisi Rokara, who is our Counsellor Advocate.

Firstly, we would like to thank the Commission for extending its invitation to our organization, giving us an opportunity to come and have a discussion with the Commission about this very important piece of work. We would also like to thank the Commission for accommodating us this morning, pertaining to our request.

We would just like to inform the Commission that while we have circulated copies of our submissions this morning to the Commissioners, this is just pointers for today's discussion. This is not our full submission. Our full submission will be submitted after today. We will have a full and comprehensive submission that we will be giving to the Commission, regarding other topics that we will be addressing as well.

Firstly, we would like to stress that we welcome the constitutional reform process, but we also stress that any changes must be grounded in human rights, substantive equality and equity, democratic governance, accountability, and the rule of law. By applying a gendered human rights and development lens, we submit that a constitutional design and reform process must directly address the structural inequalities that shape women's lives, particularly barriers to political participation, exposure to gender-based violence or violence against women and girls, unequal access to justice and exclusion from decision-making.

Fiji Women's Crisis Centre is a long-standing human rights organization. We've been around for 42 years, working to eliminate violence against women and girls in Fiji and the Pacific. We believe that violence against women is rooted in unequal gender power relations embedded in patriarchy. Accordingly, we submit that a constitution must move beyond formal equality and entrenched substantive equality and equity, so that rights are meaningful and forcible in practice for those who face systemic discrimination and marginalization.

The first point of interest that we would like to submit this morning is to do with the constitutional reform process. We're submitting that the constitutional reform process needs to be participatory, inclusive and legitimate as well. The legitimacy and durability of constitutional reform depends on whether the process is inclusive, participatory, transparent and grounded in the lived realities and aspirations of people across Fiji.

The 2012 Yash Gai Constitutional Commission process provides, we believe, an important benchmark because it involves extensive nationwide consultation, civic education and active engagement with diverse groups, including women, youth, civil society, faith-based communities and rural populations.

In our view, a constitution should not only be legally valid, it must also gain authority through genuine public ownership. We submit that any reform conducted in a limited, top-down or elite-driven manner without adequate transparency or inclusion of marginalized people risks undermining acceptance of outcomes and entrenching already existing inequalities.

Women, especially those in the rural and informal settings, face obstacles to participating, such as economic constraints, social norms and limited access to information. Therefore, we submit participation must go beyond consultation and it must include accessible and meaningful civic education so people are informed and are able to engage, genuine consideration of public views in drafting, opportunities for public review and dialogue on draft proposals before finalization.

We also recommend strengthening the review process to ensure that all communities, particularly women, youth, persons with disabilities and rural populations are included, transparent procedures, independent and credible review body and structured public consultation on draft constitutional provisions before its implementation.

Our second point of interest is to do with the electoral systems. The 2013 Constitution's electoral model provides for a single national constituency with an openly disproportional representation model, the entire country as one electorate.

While designed around the big-man autocratic model, it has produced structural barriers to inclusive, representative democracy and has also discouraged independent candidates from contesting elections. Because representatives are not tied to specific geographic constituencies, accountability to local communities is weakened and voters lack a clear representative responsibility for their community-level concerns.

The current electoral system amplifies party dominance and leadership popularity, as can be seen from the previous elections, especially the 2014 elections, where voters were heavily concentrated on party leaders, while other candidates entered Parliament due largely to overall party vote totals rather than individual support.

In addition, the constitutional 5% threshold is exclusionary, produces wasted votes when parties or candidates fall below that threshold and receive no representation, potentially weakening the extent to which Parliament reflects the electorate's will.

We submit that the current model can disadvantage independent candidates, smaller parties and new entrants to politics, including men, women and youth, because campaigning is national in scale and resource intensive.

Party registration requirements, including collecting thousands of signatures across the divisions, as additional barriers for grassroots movement and those without established nation-wide networks, is also an issue. Therefore, we encourage the consideration to be given to a model that is constituency-based, as this can reduce campaign costs by allowing candidates to focus on their communities.

Comparative experiences from Pacific countries such as Solomon Islands, Samoa and Vanuatu demonstrate that multi-constituency systems that strengthen accountability between representatives and their communities, encourage voter engagement and trust, allow candidates to emerge from and be supported by local communities, and it promotes more inclusive and diverse representation.

Therefore, we recommend that the reform to the electoral provision be done, where we would move away from a single national constituency and move towards a multi-constituency or multi-member district system.

We also recommend that there be a review of the threshold that is in place to reduce wasted votes and improve inclusivity. And one more recommendation that we have with this regard is creating a more enabling environment for independent candidates and smaller parties and increasing the visibility of women candidates through measures such as gender balance candidate lists, alternating male and female candidates on balance, for example, on the ballot putting one man, one woman, one man, one woman, or maybe five women or five men across the ballots, and prioritizing women candidates' placement on ballot papers.

Our third point of interest has to do with temporary special measures. The 2013 constitution's failure to clearly or specifically provide for temporary special measures such as legislated quotas or reserve seats for women ignores the structural barriers that prevent women from participating equally in political life.

Affirmative measures as legitimate, evidence-based, and time-bound tools can accelerate progress towards gender parity and can be removed once the critical mass is reached. Fiji's reluctance to recognize TSMs can no longer be justified because Fiji has international commitments, including to CEDAW, the ICCPR, and the Beijing Platform for Action. Drawing on international and regional examples, including quota systems and reserve seat models, we recommend that the constitution explicitly permit and support TSMs.

FWCC also recommends for reserve seats because they guarantee representation and they reduce the risk of women's continued marginalization in male-dominated political environments, while longer-term efforts should support women to compete for both reserve and open seats.

Our fourth topic of interest this morning has to do with non-negotiable constitutional principles. We urge that the constitutional reformers clearly identify and protect core democratic and human rights principles that should not be removed or weakened.

From a gender and rights-based perspective, we identify the following as non-negotiable. Separation of powers between the executive, legislature, and judiciary. A strong, enforceable, and accessible Bill of Rights.

Substantive equality and equity, recognizing that equal treatment alone is not sufficient. Rule of law and accountability, where no one is placed above the law. Separation of state and society, including protection of civil society to operate freely.

We place particular emphasis on separating the state from ethnicity, culture, and religion, and we recommend that the state should treat everyone equally as citizens. This can reduce ethnic politics and division, protect cultures by allowing communities to preserve their traditions without state control, strengthen civic independence, support national unity, and allow civil society institutions to play their democratic role outside the state. FWCC also recommends strong safeguards to prevent erosion of these principles with any limitations strictly controlled and subject to judicial oversight.

The fifth point of interest is on secularism and equal citizenship. Secularism and a common national identity built on equal citizenship, we believe are essential to inclusion and democratic governance. Secularism is a fundamental safeguard in a diverse, multi-faith society such as Fiji.

It ensures that the state remains neutral in matters of religion, protects freedom of belief, and guarantees that no individual or group is privileged or disadvantaged on the basis of their faith. In a country where communities of different faiths have long coexisted, the constitutional commitment to secularism has been essential in maintaining balance, fairness, and mutual respect. The removal of this protection opens the door to exclusion, discrimination, and the politicization of religion in public life.

This would contradict Fiji's international commitment to the ICCPR, which Fiji has already ratified. Women and marginalized groups can also be disproportionately harmed when discrimination is justified through religious or customary norms.

Therefore, we recommend constitutional protections that would recognize secularism, prohibit any state religion or religious preference, subject laws influenced by religion or custom to strict human rights scrutiny, affirm equal citizenship for all, with rights that override discriminatory practices.

Our sixth topic of interest is on selection and the independence of the president. We submit that the method of selecting Fiji's president should ensure independence, neutrality, and public confidence, given that the president's role as a head of state.

Selection processes closely tied to political actors, combined with limited transparency and public participation, can undermine the perceived impartiality of the office and restrict opportunities for broader presentation, including for women and other marginalized groups.

While acknowledging that countries use different models, direct election or parliamentary selection or electoral colleges, we recommend that Fiji adopt reforms that establish a transparent and independent selection process for the president, and ensure that the president is impartial or independent and not aligned with any political party.

Consider alternative selection models such as direct election by the people, and introduce criteria that promotes diversity and gender inclusion in nominations.

Ms. Fremlin: Our seventh point is on the role of the Great Council of Chiefs or the GCC. We recognize the cultural and historical significance of the GCC to the iTaukei communities. However, we submit that any constitutional role must align with equality, non-discrimination, and democratic governance. Traditional governance structures have often excluded women from decision-making, and therefore any recognition must be consistent with gender equality and human rights obligations.

We recommend that any constitutional recognition of the GCC be explicitly limited to an advisory role, and that there be separation from formal governance powers and decisions of the state, including appointments of the president or other state officials.

It is further recommended that any constitutional provisions relating to the GCC require compliance with gender equality and human rights standards.

Our third point is on the removal of the Amenity Clause, Chapter 10, in the course of the 2013 Constitution. We submit that Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution, which grants absolute immunity for actions connected to 2006 coups and related events, limits judicial oversight must be removed.

Entrenched immunity undermines accountability, equality before the law, and the rule of law, and risks denying remedies to victims of abuse, including women who have experienced violence, discrimination, or other rights violations during periods of political instability. It may also signal tolerance for unconstitutional takeovers, and therefore encourage future coups by creating expectations of protection from legal consequences.

Therefore, we recommend repealing Chapter 10, restoring court jurisdiction to review and adjudicate claims arising from past political events, ensuring access to justice and remedies for victims, affirming zero tolerance for coups, and aligning Fiji's constitutional arrangements with international human rights and accountability standards.

Our ninth point is on a caretaker government during the election period. Having a caretaker government framework during election periods is also important, as it limits a government's actions during campaigns and transitions to essentially routine administration, reducing the risk of misuse of state resources or influence over public institutions.

Fiji's lack of a clear, defined caretaker framework risks undermining electoral fairness and public trust, and may disproportionately affect vulnerable groups, including women. We recommend a constitutional framework that recognizes a caretaker government during the election period that restricts major policy announcements, significant appointments, and major contractual commitments, with urgent decisions made only in the public interest and where appropriate, after consultation with opposition parties. A good example of which is the Belgian caretaker government, that holds a record for the longest caretaker government in history, operating from 2019 to 2024.

The formation of Belgium's caretaker government in 2018-2019 was initiated by the collapse of the coalition government. The extension was due to continued political negotiations and difficulties in establishing a new coalition government. The caretaker government was tasked with maintaining stability and ensuring that essential services continue to operate, while political negotiations took place to form a new government.

The situation underscores the importance of a caretaker government in managing transitions and preventing disruptions in governance. Apologies, that's not in our submission that you have in front of you. It was just an example that we had pulled together to enlighten you.

Our third point is on our constitutional duty to protect women and children. We propose that the constitution include a clear provision recognizing a duty of the state and all citizens to uphold the rights, dignity, and well-being of women and children.

In a country where violence against women and girls and harmful social norms persist, constitutional recognition of the state's responsibility would reinforce zero tolerance for violence and discrimination, promote respect and equality, and support broader social transformation. Therefore, we submit that there be a provision in the constitution that allows the state to make special provisions for women and children.

Our last point is on sequencing of the constitutional review and the national referendum framework. A constitutional review should properly be sequenced with and not precede the enactment of a clear national referendum framework.

A referendum is a central democratic mechanism through which people exercise sovereignty over constitutional change. Without an established and accessible referendum law, participation risks becoming symbolic rather than meaningful.

We therefore recommend deferring substantive constitutional review until the referendum framework is enacted and operational, ensuring the law includes clear procedures for public education, participation in voting, and allocating adequate time for civil awareness, civic awareness, and consultation before any referendum is held.

So overall, across all sections, our central message is that constitutional reform must be people-centered, rights-based, with deliberate attention to those most affected by inequality and violence. FWCC calls for a constitution that entrenches substantive equality and equity, strengthening democratic accountability and the rule of law, protecting secularism and equal citizenship, and removing structural and legal barriers that limit inclusive participation. These are just some of the points that we would like to come and have a discussion with you this morning on. However, our complete submission will be submitted after today.

Ms. Valenitabua: So, I take this as a skeleton submission, and we are anticipating that you will send us a full submission after you leave here. Now, we have read your submissions, we have heard your oral submissions. I would like to raise a first point, something that I would want to tell you now, that is in number one, constitutional reform process, participation, inclusion, and legitimacy.

In the second paragraph, under that heading, in the second last sentence, starting with women, you are referring to obstacles to participation by women, such as economic constraints, social norms, and limited access to information. So, therefore, participation must go beyond consultation and include your suggestions.

For your information, if it might be of help to you, we will be doing country consultations beginning in May. There will be two months of consultations, and notices have gone out, will be published today and tomorrow through the printed media and the radio and television about this exercise. The work of the CRC, where we will be, the venues and the times and the dates.

So, that is just a short answer to what you have addressed here. We understand that there was a difficulty, there is usually a difficulty getting to the message out there. But we are doing our best with our schedules and our travel plans to reach out and get the widest coverage possible, not only to men, to women, to school children, and so forth.

We are looking at our students who are 18 years and over. We are trying to get them into all these consultations. So, women will not be left out.

We take note of that. And your recommendations in relation to that, we take that into account.

The other recommendations which you have raised, some of them have been raised before us in this room. So, we have been notified beforehand, or we have been told beforehand about these issues. Great Council of Chiefs, the immunity clause, and others which you have addressed, and which my fellow commissioners might want to comment on later on with you. Having said that, I will now ask my fellow commissioners if they have any comments or any questions which they might either want to ask to clarify your submissions.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. Thank you very much for your presentation. Some illumining points, well heard, but as the Chair says, in reference to the sections of the Constitution, we are going to receive a formal response back from you with regards to the sections of the Constitution.

I think there are some really valid points. I see sections 26, section 7, 8, section 16. Okay, so section 26 and 8, the substantive equality that you raised, moved beyond the formal equality that you are talking about in that space.

Access to justice, section 16, you are saying we need to strengthen real access. So, I would suggest that, and I think that is coming in section 16 in your submission. The freedom for violence, section 11 addresses that, but you are saying address the gender balance of violence.

The electoral system, which you talk about the multi-constituency reduction threshold, sections 53 and section 55. Yes, that has been resonating through a lot of the consultations. The TSM that you have brought through, the quota and reserve seats, interesting and enlightening.

Sections 26, it is the non-discriminative clause in the Constitution that you are going to address. Secularism, you know, like we talked about its strength, that has been coming through in a lot of the consultations. Section 17, I hear you, the presidency, independent direction that you talked about, that addresses sections 83 and 87 of the Constitution.

The GCC, again, we know your comments on that. We also note your opinion and concern around the immunity clause, chapter 10 of the Constitution.

And then I think the other ones that, for me, the rights enforcement. The courts centralized, I think that was kind of interesting, what you were talking about, how that is dealt with in section 44 of the Constitution, rights enforcement. You got to dwell on that a bit more. And then also other parts of your presentation, you made reference to a caretaker government, quite interesting learned thoughts on that.

It's interesting and thank you for raising that. I guess my fellow commissioners will probably debate that further. I just noted these things as we went through.

Another question before I hand over to the other commissioners is the, I want to understand how you're connected with the other women's body that talks on women's rights and issues. And how connected are you in that space? Because we heard from them a couple of days ago and then we hear you as well. I think it's always nice to, I want to see how that, I mean, according to the two bodies, you speak on the same issues and so I think that's something I wanted to understand as well. Thank you, chair. That's about it.

Ms. Tarai: First of all, the Fiji Women's Rights Movement happens to be the sister organization of the Fiji Women's Crisis Center. So, Fiji Women's Crisis Center was established 42 years ago. Two years later the Fiji Women's Rights Movement was established through the Fiji Women's Crisis Center and the women's movement at that time.

So, it is expected that we would be making similar, we have similar concerns and making similar submissions. That is to be expected. But we are both also part of the NGO Coalition for Human Rights in Fiji that also acts as a watchdog for human rights violations, including violations of women's rights. So that is where we are connected.

But in terms of networking, we have talked about some of the issues that we raised today. But that is just limited to some.

It's not all. But it's really interesting that they had done a similar submission to the one that we're doing today as well. And with regards to something that the chair had raised on point number one about women, and it's actually quite great and heartening to hear that there will be extensive consultation that the Commission has already decided on and planned.

The reason why we had actually raised this issue is because previously in other consultations, the consultations would happen at a time when women are either at work or they are busy at home. So, when they return from work, the consultations usually take in the evenings from 6pm on to 8pm. And that is the time when women arrive at home and they have to do the double burden at home.

So, the cooking and looking after the children, getting their homework done. So, they have been unable to fully participate in those consultations. So, I guess for us, the question that we would ask is on the timing of the consultations that the Constitution Review Commission is planning to schedule. We would be really interested to see the timing of those consultations. Has there been any specific times?

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, members of the Human Rights Movement. I'll just answer your question first. So, we have already provided to media a list of upcoming public consultations. The places and the times, the days of public consultations have already been published. But we can also provide you a copy of the upcoming publications.

In terms of the next two weeks of publications, which are starting on the 4th of May, the exact venues and dates and times have been published as well. It's been given to the media this morning. And our team will be able to share copies with you.

So, in terms of the exact dates, the public consultation schedule from 14th to 15th July is now available, which provides the date, the time, the venue. So, the people in these areas will have this information at least 10 days in advance before we go to these places.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, thank you, Dr. Gounder. I think your question was the time, so when these women would... My concern was that I wanted to hear you about the timing specifics. You're saying that they're not available after 6 o'clock or something like that, is it?

Ms. Tarai: What we are submitting is for the commission to consider the timing in which the consultation is being held, take into consideration the burdens too that women have at home as well to ensure that they participate fully in these consultations.

Based on what we have seen with other consultations, usually by the time the consultation is finished, that is when the women are just making their way over to the consultation venues. So, for us, what we were trying to get at is giving consideration to that.

Dr. Gounder: Yes, so the times are available. So, we are very mindful of that actually. In the National Development Plan consultations, which is I believe one of the most extensively consulted issue in Fiji, we were mindful of that. And our experience is that usually the daytime is better, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

So, if you look at the village hall meetings, it's 10 a.m. to 5 a.m. The urban areas is in the afternoon, in the evening, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. So, we have been very mindful of the times and the venues and our aim is to take the consultation to the people. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Just that I have one example.

Dr. Gounder: Do you want to ask?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, just one more or do you want to go? I just want another one.

Dr. Gounder: You clarify then, I'll come back.

Mr. Valenitabua: Example. You will have copies of this after this. We can share. On the 4th of May, in our schedule, a team will be in Nukuni Village Hall in One-i Lau. That is from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. That's already in the schedule. That is one example.

So, we've got the time and so forth. In Lomaiviti, on the 13th of May, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., will be a Tobu Village Hall in Nairai. And Nairai people and Batiki people are to meet in Nairai. So, this will go up, giving everybody notice that we are coming there. Just examples. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: So, once again, thank you for your very extensive submission. I think it's really well written and you make a lot of justifications as to why you are making those points, I think, which is really important. And we look forward to your detailed written submissions.

I have worked very closely with both the women's organizations. I've worked closely with FWRM. And I've also supported Fiji Women's Crisis Center in my capacity at USP, in various ways. And I'm fully supportive of the work that FWRM and FWCC are doing.

And I believe, which I also highlighted, that a lot of outcomes we've achieved for women have been the good work that FWRM and FWCC have done over the years. And I admire the courage of the women who do work with these organizations.

I go back to your number one point, where you talk about that legitimacy and durability of the constitutional reform must be inclusive, participatory, transparent, and grounded in the realities across of people across Fiji. And that's really important. We totally believe in that.

We want to make sure that it's inclusive, participatory, transparent, and based on what people experience. So, from that angle, I want to understand the gist of your submission. If you want participatory, transparent, why would you not allow the media to report on what you have to say today? Because I believe it's in your interest that your submission reaches out to as a wide audience as possible.

Because your views are important. You represent, I would say, women's rights and as well as issues related to gender violence. So, every woman should understand what your views are. So, I was pleasantly surprised today by your decision. So, based on your point number one, if it applies to everybody, why not you? Thank you.

Ms. Tarai: Thank you, Dr. Gounder. Yes, I see the point that you're making. For us, in the past, in the previous consultations that we've done, what we find is that the media tends to take our submissions out of context and the gist of what we are trying to get at gets undermined, which is why for today, since this is a consultative process, we came in to have a discussion with the commissioners, and our comprehensive submission will be then shared with the commission, and we will also share it as well with our networks to be shared with their networks.

So, in terms of today's request, we were just asking for the media not to be here for this initial process. However, because this is not our full submission, and we would not want the media to undermine how it gets shared online.

However, this will be posted on our website and our social media, and the same thing will be done with our full submission. So, you'll be posting this on your Facebook social media today? Sorry, the full submission, I mean.

Dr. Gounder: Not this one. Can I give this to the media after this?

Ms. Tarai: Yes, you can.

Dr. Gounder: In my capacity?

Ms. Tarai: You may, sir. You may make a comment on it. Can I give this whole submission to the media? We ask that we get our clearances first on that.

Dr. Gounder: But it's a copy to us now.

Ms. Tarai: Yes, it's a copy for the commissioners, not for the media.

Dr. Gounder: You know we are a transparent commission?

Ms. Tarai: Yes, sir.

Dr. Gounder: We don't hide anything from the public?

Ms. Tarai: I understand that, sir. However, if that is something that the commission wishes to do, we really cannot stop the commission from doing that.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. Ladies, thank you very much for your presentation. Let me say from the outset, I have five daughters and a wife. So, I have a lot of women in my household. So, any comments I make are generic. They are not personal. And I'm very guided and guarded by the fact that I have so many women in my household.

My concern relates to what Dr. Neelesh-Gounder has brought up. And it relates to it because I think part of this consultation process is what you say and what we try and clarify. And when the media is here, they're able to report that.

If they're not here, they can conjure up whatever they want to think in their mind or they just print verbatim what you've given to them. I'm interested that you need to see clearance because it speaks to my second two points that I want to make here. One is, would you consider yourself an advocacy group?

Ms. Tarai: Yes.

Dr. Fatiaki: Okay, so I think we understand that. The second thing is often, and it was said by the future women's rights movement, that we speak on behalf of women. And I want to ask you that. I guess the first question should have come after this one. But if you're an advocacy group, which means you advocate for a particular position and attempt to influence laws and whatever it is that we're discussing, how representative do you feel you are of women's views? Because often, I mean, we've asked this for other people. They come and they speak on behalf of.

And we say, well, really demonstrate to us that you are actually representative of this Tikina, if they so-called come and claim to be the spokesman for. And I guess my question to you is, how representative are you of the views of women? Or should I just take it that you are representative of your advocacy position in your presentation to us? Thank you.

Ms. Tarai: For us, our submission today is based on the realities of women and girls in this country. It's based on the data and the evidence that we have seen over time. And it's also based on the history of this country as we have seen it and how women have been affected by it. That is the basis of our submission this morning.

However, as we have mentioned earlier on, the reason why we had requested for a closed submission this morning is simply because we did not want the media to undermine our full submission. Our full submission would come with justifications for the positions that we have taken. What we have submitted this morning to the commission is basically just pointers of that.

Which is why when Dr. Gounder asked if this can be circulated to the media, we were hesitant about it. Because this does not have the justifications of the positions that we are taking this morning. So, for us, there was a reasoning behind seeking a closed submission this morning.

In terms of representative, we speak based on the lived realities of women and girls as we have seen it in our line of work. And also speaking from history as we have seen how women have been affected through the events that have taken place in history in Fiji.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may just add, you see, this discussion, that question, although I won't say a hard one, I thought you answered it perfectly. And if the media was here to report it, then it would have been to your benefit for the people to hear that. If they're not here to report it and you write it like this and they recognize that you're an advocacy group, then they say, well, you're going to say what is approved for you to say. And I think it's a pity. I mean that. I thought that your answer to my question was perfect. And you should take kudos for that.

And I think if the media was here and they reported it, and by the way, they record everything, which means there's no misinterpretation of what you're saying or what I'm saying. That would have been to your benefit. It would have demonstrated that you have thought about this issue and that although I'm not going to dwell into what your figures are, but they would have acknowledged that you are actually speaking on behalf, like you said, of lived experience.

You people have had experience dealing with women in crises, had to address obviously with your counselors some of the contributing issues that have risen to the crises, and that some of these are inherent and structural in nature. By answering that question, you would have done yourself a whole lot of good if the media was sitting here listening to you. And I say that I hope that the idea that we ask you questions is not that you want to make sure that you don't answer it wrongly.

No, it's an open session. I mean I'm saying this because there's no media here. But I say your answer to my question, which might have been considered a difficult question, was perfect.

I think nobody could have found fault with that, and I think if the media had published that answer, you know, directly as in a video, or they would have said that was correctly answered, that was appropriate, and makes your case stronger. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: We have heard you in relation to your electoral system, your recommendation about the electoral system. That has been an issue that is a hard one. Temporary special measures, that has come up from various groups, also a hard one in relation to the rights of women to be represented in Parliament. Removal of the immunity clause, a few submissions have mentioned that, and it's one that we will look at very, very carefully. Caretaker government, that is, I mean, interesting. It is interesting. We'll look at that.

And the role of the Council of Chiefs. That comes under paragraph two of number seven. Are you saying there that the Council of Chiefs should not be involved in the appointment of the President? Is that what you're stating?

Ms. Tarai: Yes, Chair, that is what we're saying. We're saying that currently the GCC is not recognized in our Constitution, but we understand that there will be that consideration on whether or not they should be constitutionally recognized.

Our submission is that they should just have an advisory role, considering that that was a colonial imposition on us, and it is continuing as a colonial legacy. So, our view on that is that the GCC should have only an advisory role, but do not interfere in state and governance matters and decision-making and decisions.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, it's an advisory role to the state and to the government.

Ms. Tarai: They can advise on how certain policies and laws would affect the iTaukei people, but do not have any interference in terms of how the state will govern or any decision-making that will happen.

Mr. Valenitabua: My question was advisory role to the state or to the government?

Ms. Tarai: To the government.

Mr. Valenitabua: Their traditional functions, they continue with that. Am I getting you there?

Ms. Tarai: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Because it says here that the traditional government structures have often excluded women from decision-making, and therefore any recognition must be consistent with gender equality. I understand that, but that also signifies or implies, you legal officers, it implies that they can continue with their traditional functions as chiefs, but when they come to the GCC, they do not touch or not touch. They only advise government, nothing more.

Ms. Tarai: Yes, and whatever traditional governance structures or functions that they have, also ensure that it is in compliance with human rights standards as well.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay. What is your view? We've had submissions in relation to bicameral parliament, parliament and senate. If a GCC is established under the constitution, before in the past constitutions, the GCC used to have members in the senate. Should they be excluded from the senate? Remember, it's advisory role. The senate is a law-making body. If you can answer, you can put it down in your next submission.

Ms. Tarai: Yes, I was just going to say that we have yet to consider having a bicameral system. At the moment, the way we have thought about the submission is just how it is, but fix the electoral system. But that is something that we might need to also give a deep thought on and that we will try and address that too in our submission.

Mr. Valenitabua: It is just something that follows on from your submission. There are submissions which say, let's have a senate, bring the senate back, have the parliament, and then you pass laws from here, and then have the senate, not the parliament, say they also review the laws.

Now, the GCC has always been part of the senate. Now, that is a law-making body of the country. If it is to be an advisory role, then should they be in the senate? That is my question. You can answer it later.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. It is what I said previously, so we expect your formal submissions when we receive them. As I said earlier on, I alluded to the various sections of the Constitution, ones that really apply, and I thank you. I appreciate that. My colleagues, we are very timid and aggressive, but in a nice way.

The tension is not to be received. Receive in kindness, because it is good. As my fellow Commissioner said, he had an opportunity there to frame it, but I appreciate your comments, and I thank you for that.

I was just trying to see where it aligns with the Constitution. Some interesting things, as the Chair quite rightly pointed out, the senate, but I think more in line with the Constitution, where women and children's protection sits in the Constitution, sections 26 and 11, that applies to you. So, I think that is kind of where I would like to see more of your contribution in that space. Thank you.

Ms. Tarai: Yes, that is also why in our point 10 of today's discussion, we had also talked about constitutional duty to protect women and children, because what we have seen is that there are laws that are meant to protect women, that the intention behind it was to protect women and girls, such as the Domestic Violence Act, considering that we have high numbers of women being subjected to domestic violence in Fiji. However, that particular law is gender neutral, so it is really hard.

What we find is that for the state to even consider passing gender-specific laws, so for that point 10 that we had raised this morning, it was to do with that, having constitutional provisions that would allow the state to actually give special provisions or special protections to women and girls, basically, and children. And we had cited, just for discussion purposes, we had cited the Constitution of India.

They had a provision under the Anti-Discrimination Clause that allows them to actually pass laws and administrative acts that would have special provisions for women and children, and that sort of led to how they had their domestic violence, and that specifically protects women and children.

So, you know, it was along that line that our research had taken us, and we thought that was something that we also need to consider too for the review that is currently happening.

Mr. Beg: In response to that, thank you for that, so you need to be adaptive to what is really singing out loudly to us here in Fiji. I think it's nice that you do the research work, but I'd like to hear how it is adaptive to our situation in Fiji. I'm sure you've got all the data, as you said, so I'm really looking forward to it.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, we've come to the end of our consultation session this morning. We thank you again for your attendance, and we thank you for this.Very well written. Thank you very much. We will consider them, and then we'll see what we can do later on during our deliberations. Remember, we will deliberate after this exercise, and then we'll write a report. That report will go to His Excellency the President, and then the President will give it to Cabinet, and then the parliamentary process will take over from there, hopefully ending up in a referendum. Okay?

Ms. Tarai: Yes, Chair. Just a quick question, Chair. The timeline for the written submissions, is there a specific deadline for the written submissions?

Mr. Valenitabua: For us, yeah, the 30th of June. Well, the sooner the better. Don't leave it too late. Yes. We'll be out of Suva from the 1st of May, or the 3rd of May, next week.

Ms. Tarai: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: But there'll be people receiving submissions, and there is a website which will be set up, and you'll be given notice. Everybody will be given notice. So, the submissions can be sent to the website.

Ms. Tarai: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you.

Fiji Women's Crisis Centre

FIJI WOMEN'S CRISIS CENTRE SUBMISSION:

CONSTITUTION OF THE REPUBLIC OF FIJI 2013

This is a submission by the Fiji Women's Crisis Centre (FWCC) to Fiji's Constitutional Review Commission regarding the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji. FWCC welcomes a constitutional reform process, but we stress that any changes must be grounded in human rights, substantive equality and equity, democratic governance, accountabiltiy and the rule of law. By applying a gendered, human-rights and development lens, we submit that constitutional design and reform processes must directly address the structural inequalities that shape women's lives—particularly barriers to political participation, exposure to gender-based violence, unequal access to justice, and exclusion from decision-making.

FWCC is as a long-standing human rights organisation (42 years) working to eliminate violence against women and girls in Fiji and the Pacific. We believe that violence against women is rooted in unequal gender power relations embedded in patriarchy. Accordingly, we submit that a Constitution must move beyond formal equality and entrench substantive equality and equity, so that rights are meaningful and enforceable in practice for those who face systemic discrimination and marginalisation.

1. Constitutional reform process: participation, inclusion and legitimacy

It is FWCC's submisstion that the legitimacy and durability of constitutional reform depends on whether the process is inclusive, participatory, transparent and grounded in the lived realities of people across Fiji. The 2012 Yash Ghai Constitution Commission process provides an important benchmark because it involved extensive nationwide consultations, civic education and active engagement with diverse groups, including women, youth, civil society, faith-based communities and rural populations. In FWCC's view, a constitution should not only be legally valid; it must also gain authority through genuine public ownership.

We submit that any reform conducted in a limited, top-down or elite-driven manner—without adequate transparency or inclusion of marginalised groups—risk undermining acceptance of outcomes and entrenching existing inequalities. Women (especially in rural and informal settings) face obstacles to participation such as economic constraints, social norms and limited access to information. Therefore, participation must go beyond consultation and include:

- Accessible and meaningful civic education so people are informed and able to engage;
- Genuine consideration of public views in drafting;
- Opportunities for public review and dialogue on draft proposals before finalisation.

FWCC recommends strengthening the review process to ensure:

(i) inclusive participation of all communities, particularly women, youth, persons with disabilities and rural populations;
(ii) transparent procedures and accessible civic education;
(iii) an independent and credible review body; and
(iv) structured public consultation on draft constitutional provisions prior to implementation.

2. Electoral system: barriers to inclusive representation

The 2013 Constitution's electoral model provides for a single national constituency with open-list proportional representation model (the entire country as one electorate). While designed around "the Big Man autocratic model" it has produced structural barriers to inclusive, representative democracy and has also discouraged independent candidates from contesting elections. Because representatives are not tied to geographic constituencies, accountability to local communities is weakened and voters lack a clear representative responsible for their community-level concerns.

The current electoral system amplifies party dominance and leadership popularity, as can be seen from the previous elections (especially the 2014 elections) where votes were heavily concentrated on party leaders, while other candidates entered Parliament due largely to overall party vote totals rather than individual support. In addition, the constitutional 5% threshold is exclusionary, produces "wasted votes" when parties/candidates fall below the threshold and receive no representation, potentially weakening the extent to which Parliament reflects the electorate's will.

We submit that the current model can disadvantage independent candidates, smaller parties and new entrants to politics—including many women and youth—because campaigning is national in scale and resource-intensive. Party registration requirements (including collecting thousands of signatures across divisions) as additional barriers for grassroots movements and those without established nationwide networks is also an issue. Therefore, we encourage consideration to be given to a model that is constituency-based as this can reduce campaign costs by allowing candidates to focus on their communities. Comparative experiences from Pacific countries such as Solomon Islands, Samoa and Vanuatu demonstrate that multi-constituency systems that strengthen accountability between representatives and their communities, encourage voter engagement and trust, allow candidates to emerge from and be supported by local communities and it promotes more inclusive and diverse representation.

FWCC recommends electoral reform that would:

- Move away from a single national constituency toward a multi-constituency or multi-member district system;
- Review the 5% threshold (including lowering it) to reduce wasted votes and improve inclusivity;
- Create a more enabling environment for independent candidates and smaller parties;
- Increase the visibility of women candidates through measures such as gender-balanced candidate lists, alternating male and female candidates on ballots, and prioritising women candidates' placement on ballot papers.

3. Temporary Special Measures (TSMs): accelerating women's representation

The 2013 Constitution's failure to clearly or specifically provide for Temporary Special Measures (TSMs)—such as legislated quotas or reserved seats for women—ignores the structural barriers that prevent women from participating equally in political life. Affirmative measures as legitimate, evidence-based and time-bound tools that can accelerate progress towards gender parity, and can be removed once the critical mass is reached. Fiji's reluctance to recognise TSMs can no longer be justified because Fiji has international commitments, including CEDAW, the ICCPR and the Beijing Platform for Action.

Drawing on international and regional examples (including quota systems and reserved-seat models), FWCC recommends that the Constitution explicitly permit and support TSMs. FWCC recommends for reserved seats because they guarantee representation and reduce the risk of women's continued marginalisation in male-dominated political environments, while longer-term efforts should support women to compete for both reserved and open seats.

4. "Non-negotiable" constitutional principles

FWCC urges that constitutional reform must clearly identify and protect core democratic and human-rights principles that should not be removed or weakened. From a gender and rights perspective, it identifies the following as non-negotiable:

- Separation of powers between the executive, legislature and judiciary;
- A strong, enforceable and accessible Bill of Rights;
- Substantive equality and equity (recognising that equal treatment alone is insufficient);
- Rule of law and accountability (no one above the law);
- Separation of State and society, including protection for civil society to operate freely.

We place particular emphasis on separating the State from ethnicity, culture and religion, and we recommend that the State should treat everyone equally as citizens. This can reduce ethnic politics and division, protect cultures by allowing communities to preserve traditions without State control, strengthens civic independence, supports national unity, and allows civil society institutions to play their democratic role outside the State. FWCC also recommend strong safeguards to prevent erosion of these principles, with any limitations strictly controlled and subject to judicial oversight.

5. Secularism and equal citizenship

Secularism and a common national identity built on equal citizenship are essential to inclusion and democratic governance. Secularism is a fundamental safeguard in a diverse, multi-faith society such as Fiji. It ensures that the State remains neutral in matters of religion, protects freedom of belief, and guarantees that no individual or group is privileged or disadvantaged on the basis of faith.

In a country where communities of different faiths have long coexisted, the constitutional commitment to secularism has been essential in maintaining balance, fairness, and mutual respect. The removal of this protection opens the door to exclusion, discrimination, and the politicisation of religion in public life. This would contradict Fiji's international commitment under the International Convention on the Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) which Fiji has already ratified.

Women and marginalised groups can be disproportionately harmed when discrimination is justified through religious or customary norms.

FWCC recommends constitutional protections that would:

- Recognise secularism;
- Prohibit any state religion or religious preference;
- Subject laws influenced by religion or custom to strict human-rights scrutiny;
- Affirm equal citizenship for all, with rights that override discriminatory practices.

6. Selection and independence of the President

FWCC submits that the method of selecting Fiji's President should ensure independence, neutrality and public confidence, given the President's role as Head of State. Selection processes closely tied to political actors, combined with limited transparency and public participation, can undermine the perceived impartiality of the office and restrict opportunities for broader representation, including for women and other marginalised groups.

While acknowledging that countries use different models (direct election, parliamentary selection, or electoral colleges), FWCC recommends that Fiji adopt reforms that:

- Establish a transparent and independent selection process for the President;
- Ensure the President is impartial/independent and not aligned with any political party;
- Consider alternative selection models such as direct election;
- Introduce criteria that promotes diversity and gender inclusion in nominations.

7. Role of the Great Council of Chiefs (GCC)

FWCC recognises the cultural and historical significance of the Great Council of Chiefs (GCC) to i-Taukei communities, however, submits that any constitutional role must align with equality, non-discrimination and democratic governance. Traditional governance structures have often excluded women from decision-making, and therefore any recognition must be consistent with gender equality and human-rights obligations.

FWCC recommends that any constitutional recognition of the GCC be explicitly limited to an advisory role, and that there it be separate from formal governance powers and decisions of the State, including appointments of the President or other state officials. It is further recommended that any constitutional provisions relating to the GCC require compliance with gender equality and human-rights standards.

8. Removal of the immunity clause (Chapter 10)

FWCC submits that Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution, which grant absolute immunity for actions connected to the 2006 coup and related events and limit judicial oversight, must be removed. Entrenched immunity undermines accountability, equality before the law and the rule of law, and risks denying remedies to victims of abuses—including women who may have experienced violence, discrimination or other rights violations during periods of political instability.

It may also signal tolerance for unconstitutional takeovers and thereby encourage future coups by creating expectations of protection from legal consequence. Therefore, FWCC recommends repealing Chapter 10, restoring court jurisdiction to review and adjudicate claims arising from past political events, ensuring access to justice and remedies for victims, affirming zero tolerance for coups, and aligning Fiji's constitutional arrangements with international human-rights and accountability standards.

9. Caretaker government during the election period

Having a caretaker government framework during election periods is also important as it limits a government's actions during campaigns and transitions to essential and routine administration, reducing the risk of misuse of state resources or influence over public institutions.

Fiji's lack of a clearly defined caretaker framework risks undermining electoral fairness and public trust and may disproportionately affect vulnerable groups, including women. It is FWCC's recommendation a constitutional framework that recognises a caretaker government during a caretaker period that restricts major policy announcements, significant appointments and major contractual commitments, with urgent decisions made only in the public interest and, where appropriate, after consultation with opposition parties.

10. Constitutional duty to protect women and children

FWCC proposes that the Constitution include a clear provision recognising a duty of the State and all citizens to uphold the rights, dignity and wellbeing of women and children. In a country where violence against women and girls and harmful social norms persist, constitutional recognition of the State's responsibility would reinforce zero tolerance for violence and discrimination, promote respect and equality, and support broader social transformation. Therefore, FWCC submits that there be a provision in the Constitution that allows the State to make special provisions for women and children.

11. Sequencing: constitutional review and the national referendum framework

A constitutional review should be properly sequenced with (and not precede) the enactment of a clear National Referendum framework. A referendum is a central democratic mechanism through which people exercise sovereignty over constitutional change. Without an established and accessible referendum law, participation risks becoming symbolic rather than meaningful. FWCC therefore recommends deferring substantive constitutional review until the referendum framework is enacted and operational, ensuring the law includes clear procedures for public education, participation and voting, and allocating adequate time for civic awareness and consultation before any referendum is held.

Overall conclusion

Across all sections, FWCC's central message is that constitutional reform must be people-centred and rights-based, with deliberate attention to those most affected by inequality and violence. FWCC calls for a Constitution that entrenches substantive equality, strengthens democratic accountability and the rule of law, protects secularism and equal citizenship, and removes structural and legal barriers that limit inclusive participation.

Fiji Corrections Service (FCS)

Fiji Correction Services
Time: 2.00pm-3.20pm
Date: 24-4-2026

Leighton: Honourable Member, I just welcome members from the Fiji Corrections Services, Acting Commissioner Mr. Moceisuva and his team. It is my pleasure to thank you on behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission for accepting our invitation. My name is Leighton Fatiaki.

I will be going through a few housekeeping matters. When you are making a submission, if you can just press the right side of the mic to turn the mic on, and once you have made your submission, you can press the same side to turn it off. Also, following this, the Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that is being undertaken, as well as the Commissioners will be introduced, and then we will also ask if you can also introduce yourselves. This is for the transcription purposes. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Members of the Fiji Correctional Services, gentlemen. Welcome to the CRC, or the Constitutional Review Commission. Before we move on, I believe that we should introduce ourselves to each other. I will start with the Commission members, and I will request the Commissioners who are present here this afternoon to introduce themselves.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. Good afternoon. Commissioner of Prisons and Correctional Services, and esteemed members of that organization. My name is Conway Begg. I am an architect by profession. I see things through a different lens. Obviously, the Constitution is very important to us, and I thank you for being here. I look forward to the deliberations and your presentation. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon, Commissioner and gentlemen. My name is John Fatiaki, Vuniwai Fatiaki. I am a rudiment and a medical practitioner by profession.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Bula Vinaka, Acting Commissioner, Fiji Correctional Services, and colleagues from Fiji Correctional Services. My name is Neelesh Gounder, and I am based at USP. Today, I look forward to your submissions and inputs, and I think we know each other well. We have been working through the National Development Plan, and also the Monitoring and Evaluation Framework. So, welcome.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Acting Commissioner, may I invite you and your colleagues to introduce yourselves, please. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Moceisuva: Commissioners, my name is Auta Moceisuva, and I am the Acting Commissioner of Corrections.

Mr. Apolosa: Thank you, Mr. Chair and Commissioners. My name is Apolosa Vere and I am the Acting Deputy Commissioner of Fiji Correctional Services.

Mr. Batiratu: Thank you. Bula Vinaka, Mr. Chair and fellow Commissioners, I am Rusiate Batiratu, and I am the Assistant Commissioner, Administration of the Fiji Correctional Services. Thank you.

Mr. Koroi: My name is Saimoni Koroi, and I am the Personal Staff Officer to the Commissioner. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much. I've just been reminded to also introduce myself. Sevuloni Valenitabua, I'm the Chairperson of this Commission. Now, like I said, we welcome you. Thank you very much for your attendance. Before, I'd like now to explain what we are here for this afternoon.

We are a Commission appointed by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji. We are appointed under the Commissioners' Inquiry Act of 1946, and we have been tasked to review the 2013 Constitution. If I may stress, it is a review, not a renewal or not a change.

We're not introducing a new Constitution. It's just a review of the old 2013 Constitution. Our task is to gather submissions, views, and thoughts from the people of our country on what they think should be included in our Constitution.

This exercise has been established so that we can redeem the drawbacks, or what we call the constitutional deficiencies, of the 2013 Constitution. Gentlemen, you might have heard, or it might have been your view personally, that most of us did not know how this Constitution was prepared, or how it came about, because there was next to nothing consultation. So, to remedy that, we have been tasked with the function, or with the task of going around the country and collecting these thoughts from our people on what should be included in the Constitution.

We can amend, we can remove provisions, we can also add provisions, but still under the amendment. Now, that is what we are here for this afternoon. We've had about 19 or 20 consultations already here at the Suvavou House.

Next week, or starting from the 4th, we will be going out from Suva. We will be visiting the islands, Lau, Lomaiviti, and Taveuni, Vanua Levu, Vitilevu, Kadavu, and so forth. We are going to take trips out so that we can have a wide coverage of consultations in order to receive submissions from our people. I've given you the name, I've given you the task, so we are happy to have you this afternoon. We are now ready to hear your submissions. Thank you.

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair and Commissioners. First of all, we would like to make an oral presentation this afternoon, and then following that we will submit a comprehensive submission. We apologize that we have not submitted a comprehensive submission, but we hope that this is permissible to you in the context of this review.

For us, we now understand your role to review the Constitution, and with us this afternoon we have just come up with nine points which we believe are relevant to the review, which you will consider later in the submission of your report.

On that note, Mr. Chair and Commissioners, the first point is about the delegation of authority. As you know, in the 1997 and the 1991 Constitution, the appointment of the Commissioner and the Officers of Fiji Corrections rests with the Public Service Commission.

And from there, the Public Service Commission delegates the powers to the Commissioner of Prisons and the Secretaries of the relevant Ministries and Departments. The Constitution does not allow the delegation of authority or the powers of the Commissioner, and we would like, for operational purposes, as a discipline organization, that the powers of the Commissioner be delegated to the Deputy or Senior Officer. Because the Commissioner is appointed by the Constitutional Officers' Commission, sometimes there is inconvenience in the schedule of the Constitutional Officers' Commission, but it doesn't stop the fact that operations must be carried out on the ground.

And we are submitting, respectfully submitting, that the delegation of authority be provided under the Constitution for ease of operations.

The second point to that, Chair, is that the current policy on acting appointment for the Acting Commissioner, is the responsibility again, for the COC with the endorsement of the President. For operational purposes, we have a policy in place where every acting appointment must be payable if the period of acting appointment is 30 days and over.

On many instances, the Commissioner is required to travel overseas or to attend official functions, but the period of absence is about 7 days, and that does not qualify him to be paid the acting allowance. What we do now for administrative purposes is to issue a Delegation of Letter, but mainly to look at the mundane operational issues and not addressing Constitutional powers under the Commissioner's power in terms of appointment, discipline, and removal of the officers. So, we respectfully submit that allowance be paid to whoever is acting because of the responsibility contained in the Constitution.

Point number two, again, the Commissioner has the power to appoint, discipline, and remove officers of the Fiji Correctional Service, but the Commissioner basically acts as the prosecutor, the jury, and the judge, because all cases initiated by the Commissioner, heard by the senior officers or Commissioner, and finalized or decided by the Commissioner, there is no avenue for redress if an officer wants to redress internally in terms of the disciplinary process.

So, for now, the only avenue available for the officers is to seek a judicial review in the court, and we cannot dispute or argue against the decision of the Commissioner when it is finalized under the current disciplinary mechanism.

Point number three, Mr. Chair, is that the Constitution is also silent on the retirement age of the Commissioner. As you know, the disciplinary nature of this organization, anyone... We are respectfully submitting that the age be tagged at 65, because this is when the person is physically able to discharge his duties because of the strenuous nature of the work in the Correctional Service, and requires one with good health condition. Right now, the retirement age of the Commissioner is open. There is no age limit for the position of the Commissioner of Corrections. We are submitting that we tag 65 as the cut-off date for the appointment.

Point number four, Mr. Chair and the Commissioner, we are respectfully submitting that the position of the Deputy Commissioner be reflected in the Constitution for constitutional roles, as I have said earlier. The position is important because the Deputy is the most senior officer to perform the functions prescribed for the Commissioner under the Constitution in terms of appointment, discipline, and removal. In the absence of the Commissioner, this will ensure unimpeded operations of the command and control of the Fiji Correctional Service.

Point number five, Mr. Chair and the Commissioners, relates to the prisoners' treatment. As you know, the Fiji Correctional Service has been inundated with a big number of prisoners coming in for HIV and AIDS, and we are constrained because the facilities that we have does not provide for HIV and AIDS, hepatitis, and the mentally challenged.

This has been worsened by the infiltration of drugs into the corrections facilities, and that has heightened the apprehensive attitude of the officers and prisoners alike because of the fear of HIV. We do not have separate facilities for HIV, AIDS, and prisoners, and we are submitting that there be provision for HIV prisoners, according to their medical condition, to enable the necessary treatment in terms of the sickness that the prisoners have. In the absence of the facility, we are not able to separate them because we'll be viewed as being discriminatory against HIV, AIDS prisoners in prison.

Point number six, Mr. Chair, relates to the freedom, cruel, inhumane, and degrading treatment of prisoners under Section 11 of the current Constitution. This section limits the use of force, disciplinary methods, and control methods within the correctional facilities. And while it is necessary to prevent abuse, it can constrain officers from managing violent gang activity, drug-related unrest, and determining what constitutes a reasonable force versus degrading treatment can be legally ambiguous, potentially dangerous, indecisive action, and affect institutional security.

Point number seven, Mr. Chair, and respective commissioners, relates to the freedom from medical treatment without consent. As I have alluded earlier, we are inundated with a number of HIV prisoners. As I speak, in our last test that we carried out, in 2025, there were 173 prisoners affected by HIV.

Today, that figure could be more, in the vicinity of 200 to 250. But we are constrained of the fact that we cannot carry out mandatory tests to the prisoners coming in because of prisoner, medical officer confidentiality about information of health, and so on. And only the officer in charge are privy to that information. We respectfully request that prisoners coming in with HIV be exempted from that provision, and that will allay the fear of the treatment inside, both from the prisoners and the officers alike.

Number eight, Chair, is the right to privacy. Prisoners, this provision impacts on search procedures, surveillance, and monitoring of inmates. As you know, the prisons is there for us to ensure the safety and security of the inmates, and when the rights to privacy are constrained under the Constitution, this constrains the ability of the officers to carry out search or monitor the prisoners wherever they are in the vicinity of the prisons through electronic monitoring mode or physical observations by our officers.

And the last point, Mr. Chair and Commissioners, relates to the access to courts and fair trial under Section 14 and 15 of the Constitution. Now, some of our facilities are overcrowded.

Overcrowded because we do not have any control on the number of prisoners sent in by the courts to our facilities. And so, we have to make do with the space accommodation available. This morning, we have 2,182 prisoners, and the prison at the Remand Center has a capacity of 200, but the actual number this morning is 284. In Suva, our approved capacity is 270, but we have over 300 prisoners there. So, the overcrowding situation stretches the manpower level and also undermines the security situation of the prison.

What we are suggesting is for the courts to agree to our proposal that there be a limit to the number of prisoners sent to us. If not, then alternatives to imprisonment, or if not, put in a virtual court, for example, so that it eases the movement of prisoners, reduces the costs, and reduce the contraband that has flooded our facilities at the moment.

We have had discussions with the judiciary over the last year or so, but we respect the independence of the judiciary, and therefore we cannot control the number of prisoners that are sent to us. So, with whatever space is available, sometimes it is degrading to see the prisoners being put in a cell meant to contain only 4, but sometimes there are 6 to 8 prisoners inside.

This is a situation that is beyond our control, and we would respectfully submit to the Commission to look into the relevant provision under Section 14 and 15 of the Constitution. With those submissions, Mr. Chair and Commissioner, that is the end of our proposal to you this afternoon. Thank you, and we know that you have questions. We will be able to answer your questions in the question and answers period allowed. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Commissioner, for that submission. We request that the submission be written and then forwarded to us, as you have asked for. So, we will be looking forward to receiving a written submission on the basis of what you have addressed this afternoon before us. Now, you have raised nine points.

We usually ask questions or pass comments in relation to your submissions, and I know it is a difficult job that you have in keeping prisoners at our prisons, not only here in Suva, but everywhere else in Fiji. I know also the difficulties in relation to overcrowding. There is a lot of overcrowding, and prisoners complain about overcrowding to the court, bringing up their rights that they have to be treated.

They are not being treated, or their human rights are being breached. So, I understand where you are coming from, that is in relation to the organization and the retention of the prisoners inside the prison. In relation to your acting appointment, we can deal with that, and the delegation of authority.

But, I will ask my commissioners to give their comments in relation to your submission, and then I will cover up at the end. I have your points which I can reach with you now, but I will let my commissioners do the questioning and give their comments before I cover up at the end. Commissioners?

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair, through you. Thank you very much for your presentation. I hear some resonating points. As an architect with my hat on, I sympathize and feel sorry that you do not have the adequate facilities. You talk about the overcrowding and the ability to facilitate the prisoners in your centers. Obviously, out of your control, maybe the judiciary system needs to improve their efficiency.

But I have just looked at all your points. The part about the deputy commissioner in that role is, well, first of all, independent. Being independent is a good point. We have heard this in a lot of the submissions, and it is resonating well with the separation of powers. We thank you for that and where that would sit.

So, in sections 130 and 138, I think that part of our constitution is a valid operational concern. I think the gaps the constitution gives power to the commissioner, but does not expressively clarify the delegation to the deputy senior officer.

So, I think that point is well taken. If we are going to consider an acting commissioner, then subsections 130, 135, 136 and 138 would apply in your case. So, I suggest that we would probably see that in your case. I am just trying to help assist in your direction.

The other one was, I guess I probably would not comment on this, because I am not the subject matter expert. My fellow commissioner to the left here is a doctor. I have a point on the, you raised about the HIV and other infectious diseases, which is a concern. Maybe perhaps I lean on my fellow commissioner. But, for that, I have some other points, but I will really open it up. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. Thank you, Acting Commissioner and Chairman. Since it has been brought up, the issue of the Bill of Rights and the specific section is section 11.3. And this was brought up to us by the police in the context of them wanting us to include a provision so that they could test their police officers. So that, you know, at any point in time, the grant of drug testing would be available so they could test their police officers.

I guess my question to you is, do you have a similar situation with respect to testing prisons officers? I know you are bringing up the issue of testing the prisons, but I guess to address that in total, my question is, do you have a policy or do you have a work contract agreement or something that allows you to test the prison officers for drugs or HIV or whatever it is? That's the first question.

Mr. Moceisuva: Mr. Chair, through you, Mr. Commissioner, yes, we have the policy in place, but it applies to the recruits only. For serving officers, we have not made a policy in that respect because it's quite a sensitive issue to deal with.

And we've had a number of officers raising this with the relevant authorities, saying that we might be intruding into their rights under section 11 of the Constitution. That has stopped us from, but we will be respectfully submitting to that there should be a provision for HIV and AIDS. Although we have not officially have an officer suffering from the disease, but we are sure that they will be apprehensive in the community because it's not only the prisoners, it's officers and their families who live in the community and it might be a chaotic situation when we do not have a clear policy on testing for officers.

And maybe follow up to that, we also do not have a policy on the treatment and follow up in the context of the Fiji Correctional Service for both the prisoners and the prison officers.

Dr. Fatiaki: Okay, this is further to the conversation we have. So, the advice I suggested to the police was that instead of them taking and adding to the Constitution, which makes it obviously very cumbersome, that what they should do is put into the employment contract a requirement because we are allowed to do the testing if it is with informed consent.

If they consent as part of your work contract and like you say you do it for the recruits currently, I would suggest that it's something that you should apply across the board in terms of the employment contract. I say this for prisons, I say this for police, I said it for pilots who fly planes. You don't want at any point in time to have a policeman, a pilot, a prison officer under the influence of drugs.

I would presume you would not want that and therefore the right to be able to test them should be maybe addressed at the level of their contracts like you do for the recruits. Because for us to put it into the Constitution means that we could put that for the police and we could do that for the prisons and the idea is to keep this Constitution as brief and generic as possible.

I've looked at this issue with regards to the prisoners and I think you have a valid point because HIV and Hep B and other blood transmitted diseases are very much part and parcel of the dangers for the people who are attending to them as well as to other inmates. In institutional settings where people live together, they share the same bedding often, they share the same rooms, the same facilities and I would suggest that we would then look at this.

I think that one of the things we could do for instance and my understanding is that when you become a prisoner you lose your rights, well maybe not all your rights and I couch that because obviously you don't lose all your rights but definitely the nature of prison is that you actually lose a lot of your rights and I would suggest that one of the things we could do is to alter section 3 which says every person has the right to freedom from scientific or medical treatment or procedures without an order of the court or without his informed consent etc.

If we were to write every free person or every person except prisoners, if we were to write that we would encompass it which means that in this particular instance for the purposes of treatment or testing they would lose this right if they were a prisoner or not a free person. The lawyers will be the ones to adjust that.

I just put that forward because if we were to write it into the constitution it would be in that kind of setting and that would therefore mean immediately that you would be allowed to test it and that right is taken away because he is a prisoner and because he is going to be living with other prisoners and he is carrying HIV or Hep B or something that that has implications upon him, the staff and by extension their families and everybody else and it's a dangerous environment. I don't envy you. I say in all honesty I can see where you are coming from and I can see a situation where we could make a constitutional provision for that.

I'll have my more learned colleagues who are familiar with constitutions and legality to say what I made it too simple by doing it like that but again that's an area that I would seriously consider taking into account because it would address your concern.

The only other thing I want to bring up is the issue of the age of 65. You know that there's going to be a part in the bill of rights that says you can't discriminate on the basis of age. I think the public service already has a guideline. 60. Okay.

So, can I ask is there any reason why you want to go to 65 if you want to really fit people? It might be easier for you to operate with the PSC guidelines as a civil service guideline even though you're a constitutional office if it's not defined here, you will obviously have your act that makes you a public servant and as part of that process you may use the civil service guideline.

I just again I'm putting these as solutions because for us to put it into the correction service guidelines about constitutional offices in the constitution I can see every other you know the army commander wants to put 65 or 70 and it becomes a bit irrational. We want to keep it consistent across the board but I think your point is taken.

I think it's valid. I'm just suggesting a mechanism that may be different to what you're suggesting change the constitution and write this in. I would suggest that we comply with across the board.

There's medium ground that you can. There's always exceptions even with the public service commission. I know a lot of doctors who are employed beyond 60 if the need is there and the exception is there.

So, the exception exists currently. It doesn't mean you must retire at 65 but it gives like you say a cap so that we don't have people with walking sticks turning to the prisoners. Vinaka Acting commissioner gentleman. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Just following up on what Doctor Fatiaki have left of, he suggested that we can have the provision or11.3. If you look at section 11.3 where I see it now, there seem to be no exception everybody has to be covered sunder Under section 11. All subsection 2, subsection 1, subsection 2 and subsection 3 and even they are named or the groups of people are named from any source at home, school, work or in any other place.

Now any other place includes prison. So maybe we look at that after our deliberations. Maybe we'll add a proviso provided that this right here is limited something which we have been talking about the limitation of rights is limited to those who are incarcerated or to those who are wherever else they are.

We'll have to look at that but for prison I understand we should include it in the constitution because knowing prisoners and how they argue about their rights, we cannot suppress their rights until we have that right suppressed by the constitution itself and the courts will look into that and the lawyers will have a field day about that. So, we'll have a look at that. Just adding a proviso to section 11.

After subsection 3 we can then say provided that this group of people are excluded from this if necessary. We might add necessary there if necessary. So, if we didn't say inspection time so that they can be tested for HIV, you come. You lose your right here because of the constitution. Just take it on from where Dr. Fatiaki left us. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you Chair. Thank you, Commissioners prisoners and colleagues. So, on that basis I'm just looking at the prisons act, corrections act. So, section 26.1 of the act actually prohibits you from doing that. So, if you can have, so it talks about upon admission and immediately before discharge each prisoner shall be examined by a medical officer but there shall be no program or policy of compulsory testing of prisoners to determine the HIV or AIDS status. So, this is I think the limitation in the act here. So, with the provision that the chair has suggested if that goes through the constitution and then you can then move ahead to modify this, I guess.

The other point is you talked about the retirement age. It might be better idea to include it in the act rather than in the constitution. Similar way is provided for other agencies. Just a suggestion and something for the others to think about. Because one of the things we've been talking about is to make our constitution more linear while containing, maintaining the core fundamental principles.

So, something to think through to include that in the, which is in the normal fashion. For example, the government of the reserve bank, the retirement age is not applicable as the civil service but also not in the RBF act. But they have this retirement age has been fixed by the board of the RBF which has the powers to do that.

So, in your case you don't have a board so it might be, an act would be perhaps a better way to fix the retirement age rather than the constitution because we don't have for any of the independent agencies. What's your thought on that?

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you very much. The commissioner is appointed by the president of the constitution but all other officers, deputy is appointed by the commissioner.

Unlike the civil service, they are appointed by the ministry of civil service. So, they dictate the retirement ages. So, the Commissioner there is no retirement age as per the constitution. For the Fiji Correction Service, we have taken our ques from the Ministry of Civil Service. We have in our policy ;60 is the retirement age.

Dr. Gounder: So, what is happening, what is preventing you from changing the policy to 65?

Mr. Moceisuva: No, because I'm not the appointing authority.

Dr. Gounder: So, where did the policy come from?

Mr. Moceisuva: The policy comes from PSC.60.

Dr. Gounder: Okay. 60, yeah.

Dr. Gounder: So, they apply the policy to other civil service?

Mr. Moceisuva: Other civil service.

Dr. Gounder: But PSC does not do that for other agencies. For example, the RBF, FRCS. So, I'm surprised they're doing it, you know, in your case.

Dr. Fatiaki: No, they're not doing it. They are not doing it.

Dr. Gounder: Oh, you are adapting. No, if they are adapting, then it should be easy for them to change it. What the acting commissioner is suggesting is that PSC is, is it the PSC or Fiji Correction Service which is?

Mr. Moceisuva: No, it's the Fiji Correction Service. Okay.

Dr. Gounder: So, what is stopping you from changing it to 65 if you are adapting it?

Mr. Moceisuva: No, no, I'm not saying that we, I'm saying it for the, for the commissioner. Okay. Yeah, yeah, for the commissioner.

Dr. Gounder: You can change it to 65.

Mr. Moceisuva: No, no, it's appointed by the president. The Constitutional Officers Commission.

Dr. Gounder: Okay.

Mr. Moceisuva: Recommend to the president.

Dr. Gounder: So where does the retirement age for the Constitutional Services Commission come from? Because for RBF, it doesn't come from.

Mr. Moceisuva: No, the Constitutional Officers Commission doesn't have a retirement age. Okay. We are just suggesting it.

Dr. Gounder: Okay. So, for RBF, for example, the board has fixed the retirement age as 65, sorry, 67, sorry So I'm just suggesting you might have, giving an option to consider. Rather than having a constitutional provision, there may be an easy way out to explore. Just trying to help.

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes. Point taken. Yeah.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may just touch on that, Chair. Dr. Gounder, I think Assistant Commissioner is very clear about this. What he's saying is that the Commissioner of Prisons is appointed by the Constitutional Officers Commission and, you know, selected, I guess, and then the president actually appoints him. Because he's appointed by him, there isn't like a board that can give you a guidance as to when he retires.

Dr. Gounder: So, I think it's the difference in having a board here because the Reserve Bank of, Governor of the Reserve Bank is appointed under the same conditions as the Commissioner of Fiji Correctional Service. RBF has a board.

Dr. Fatiaki: I'm sorry, does the Correctional Service have a board?

Mr. Moceisuva: We don't have a board. Okay. It's the president.

Dr. Fatiaki: That's correct. And if they don't have a board, obviously they can't make a decision and, you know, they're asking that it be incorporated into the Constitution under the appointment of the Commissioner of Prisons.

Dr. Gounder: The adoption of 60 years of retirement age does not come from the office of the president. It comes from the PSC.

Dr. Fatiaki: Yes. Yes.

Mr. Moceisuva: I agree. That is for the deputy? Down. Down. Okay. It is from the PSC. Yeah. But for the Commissioner, it comes from the president. Through the...

Dr. Gounder: Okay. Now I see the point.

Dr. Fatiaki: So... I want to ask the question about the deputy because I noticed there isn't a comment here about a deputy and I think you've alluded to including it?

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes. If I may ask, the justification for that because I understand from this that the Commissioner can appoint anybody to any rank. Yes, he can. But for the deputy, I can't appoint him to be the acting Commissioner.

It is the COC that appoints the Commissioner or any acting Commissioner. Not the COC but the recommendation of the COC to His Excellency the President. I was just suggesting if some delegation can be given to the Commissioner to simplify operational matters when he goes on leave or goes on official duties.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Acting Commissioner. And that point is taken and we will consider that. I say that with the benefit of having heard the same request come to us from the High Court where the head of the Court of Appeal doesn't have that discretionary power to delegate it.

It's come to us from the, I think, was it FICAC that wanted the ability to be able to...

Dr. Gounder: Police.

Dr. Fatiaki: Oh, police, to designate somebody because it hadn't been specified and I think we will just along the same lines that we are considering their request where there is a gap, we will consider yours. Thank you.

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you very much. Might I just add, Mr. Chair, that because of the conditions in the prisons and also some of the shortcomings in terms of the design and layout of the prisons not being compliant with the international standards, most prisoners are using this as ground for bail. You are familiar with this, Mr. Chair, that perhaps there are two ways through which this can be addressed.

One, through a submission to the Ministry of Finance to improve the facilities or through the courts to explore alternative sentencing options and the fast-tracking of the Parole Board, which is now being discussed with the Ministry of Justice, where they will be responsible for the administration and the supervision will be our responsibility.

And that is to say that we will have an extended role, that instead of only looking after prisoners inside, we will also be looking after prisoners through the Parole Board who will be released out in the community. This is just something that comes to mind when we are suggesting Section 11 of the Constitution.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, chair, can I respond to that? So, you are overcrowding the facilities. I guess I alluded to say that in the beginning, but Section 13 also applies for you to look at that as well. There is no explicit obligation on the State to provide adequate facilities.

That is in the current framework at the moment. So, the risk is the potential constitutional breach, as you highlighted. So, I think the recommendation of the State is to ensure humane detention conditions, if I am hearing you correctly.

I agree with you, sir. So, I think maybe you could suggest a line like that as a new clause, because it will force the government to ensure that facilities are adequate. Does that make sense? It makes sense. Thank you, sir. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: This comment is addressed to my fellow Commissioner. I refer him to Section 13, subsection 1J, and it says that every person who is arrested or detained has the right to conditions of detention that are consistent with human dignity, including at least the opportunity to exercise regularly and the provision at State expense of adequate accommodation, nutrition, and medical treatment. So, it is covered already there. What I am saying, you don't need another provision in the Constitution.

This tells the State you must provide.

Mr. Beg: This is how we interact, yes. My apologies, but I think what I am saying is that subject to 13, but then there is like 11. It doesn't make sense, right? If you go to Section 11, subsection 11, you are saying that there is no explicit obligation of the State somehow. That is why I am confused, and that is why you are probably raising that as well.

Mr. Moceisuva: So, I think the point is valid. Section 11. Yes.

Mr. Beg: That is what I think, but again, I am not a lawyer. I rely on my chairman. But I think like an architect, and I can look for provisions. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: I am taking you back to the appointment of the Assistant Commissioner of the Deputy Commissioner. Now, Section 131, Section 130, subsection 4. The Commissioner of the Fiji Correctional Service is appointed by the President on the advice of the Constitutional Officers Commission. You have told us that.

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Now, that places the Commissioner at the head of the Fiji Correctional Services. And then, on Subsection 5, the Commissioner of the Fiji Correctional Services is responsible for A, the organization and administration of the Fiji Correctional Service. This is 5A. And 5B, the deployment and control of its operations. This is the Commissioner I am talking about.

Now, is it not possible, in your experience, I don't know, I am asking you. In your experience, can or can't you, as Commissioner, utilize Subsection 5A, organization and administration, to appoint a deputy whenever you anticipate or when you are about to leave for a long period of time?

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes, I can do that, sir. But the point is, I can't appoint him as Acting Commissioner.

Mr. Valenitabua: He can be deputy.

Mr. Moceisuva: He can be deputy, but he will not be able to exercise my powers. That is why, anyone acting on my position must be appointed by the President through the COC. I can't, I can delegate to him, but he can't exercise my powers.

Mr. Valenitabua: Where does it say that? It is in...

Mr. Valenitabua: The deputy. It has to be, the deputy has to be appointed by the COC.

Mr. Moceisuva: Because he will be the Acting Commissioner.

Mr. Valenitabua: Where does it say that? It's not shown in the Constitution.

Mr. Moceisuva: It's not written?

Mr. Valenitabua: Not written. In the legislation?

Mr. Moceisuva: It's not written.

Dr. Fatiaki: Ah, okay. Which, again, alludes to wrestling with this, and I see exactly what you said. The only question is, how do we write it into it? Like I said, we will have drafters and legal people, but your point that you are putting is a very valid one. You can definitely deputize to him, but we cannot call him to exercise the Acting Commissioner.

Mr. Moceisuva: For example, there are functions that only the Commissioner can exercise. Financial decisions, HR, fire, high-end fire, discipline, appoint and remove. And those functions need to be on-going on a daily basis. In the absence of the Commissioner, they stand still until the Commissioner comes back to the office.

Mr. Beg: So, in that section, you are saying to recognize it in the Constitution or to be written in law?

Mr. Moceisuva: I am not a lawyer, sir, but this is something that I feel.

Dr. Gounder: I got something here that will be useful for the interaction. So, Section 5 of the Prison Act, Section 5.1.E, I am relying on Chair's interpretation. It says, the head of Fiji Prisons and Corrections Service shall be the Commissioner of Prisons, who shall have the power to make delegations of the Commissioner's authority to any office of a written instrument of delegation.

Mr. Valenitabua: Read that again.

Dr. Gounder: The head of the Fiji Prisons and Corrections Service shall be the Commissioner of Prisons, who shall have the power to make delegations of the Commissioner's authority to any office of a written instrument of delegation. This is in your Act.

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes, that applies to cases of disciplinary matters. Well, my point is exercising of my power under the Constitution, which is to appoint, discipline and remove.

Mr. Beg: I think it's only administrative role only in what it says in the Act. So, I think that's probably why the acting Commissioner is bringing this up.

Dr. Fatiaki: Yes, no, again, I take the point. As the Commissioner, I think you've got a very valid point. I think we really have to, because it's almost like, if we were to adopt that suggestion, it's almost like we're taking the Act and imposing it on top of the constitutional appointment of the Commissioner of Prisons. And I think we need to look at that carefully and see how we can incorporate it so that it's part of the Constitution.

So, there's no misinterpretation of what part of the Commissioner's powers he can exercise, would be disciplined but maybe not for finances. No, I think that needs clarification. And obviously, you're coming from a lived experience. You're not coming from, like us, hypothesizing. You have obviously experienced this in terms of the difficulty in operations. And I think your point is taken and hopefully we'll address it.

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Sorry. We are going to discuss it. I still have something not clear to me. Anyway, we'll leave it at that. Please send us your submissions in relation to that. Yes, do you have anything else?

Mr. Beg: Sorry, Chair. I'm a great advocate for facilities and under the HIV hepatitis thing, Dr. John is the expert in this area, but in the Prisons Act there's no address to adequately look at this, according to, am I correct in saying that because under sections 11, 13 and 26, you know, the risk is safety versus discrimination. Conflict again, going back to them. So, what do we do there? Do we consider introducing a medical classification protocol? How do we deal with that? It's late in the afternoon.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, through you, I think we've addressed it. As far as staff is concerned, we've discussed this. We recognize that your recruits are required by their recruitment process to be subject to the necessary testing.

You pointed out that your other staff that established were not, and I suggested to you that the best way to address that as far as testing for staff would be to put it into their work contract renewal or whatever, make it a policy, and then write it into your policies at that level.

The second one had to do with the mandatory testing of prisoners, who would then fight you on the grounds of their Bill of Rights under 11C, 11.3, and that part of it was what I suggested in terms of, and I haven't come to the end. I think our chair alluded to it, but, you know, from a simple person who speaks English, if I wrote every free person has the right to all these things, then you could make a case that every incarcerated person is not free, and this doesn't apply to them, and they can't demand that they not be treated or tested, because you've changed it.

Or every person except prisoners has the right to all of these things, and that was my suggestion as far as the testing for prisoners was concerned, and treatment, because they brought up the issue of treatment. If the prisoner doesn't want to be treated, and then expose all of them to a risk, well, that's correct, and that's why we took the wardens part and put that into the act, but under the prisoner, we'd be addressing it from the point of view of protesting against the Bill of Rights being infringed, we suggest we put it into the Constitution. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: All right. Commissioner, we've heard your submissions. I see what the submissions are about, the right to privacy. There's no right to privacy inside prison. The access to courts and fair trial. The usual complaints over overcrowding.

The virtual courts. Can you explain to us, please, the virtual courts and the limitation of inmates? How will that work out practically, considering that inmates are convicted persons, sentences have been passed on them, and they have to serve these sentences unless they are released early, and these virtual courts are utilized only when the person is still on remand, I believe. Or when he goes on appeal.

When a person is convicted and goes on appeal, then we use virtual courts. How does it work? How will that assist in reducing the population in prison at any one time?

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Perhaps it's not going to reduce the population. It is going to make the life easy for the officers in terms of the safety of the inmates. It's going to reduce costs of transportation in and out. As you know, for maximum prison, when there is a trial in the high court, we have to take the prisoners every day to the court. Naboro to Lautoka. Every day. If it is a one-week trial, or if it is two weeks or so. And it is also going to help us in the reduction of contraband for the remand prisoners, because they are handled by the police.

And there's a whole host of ways through which prisoners bring contraband, some of which include using cavity, body cavity, to conceal contraband, such as mobile or drugs, to come inside. And we have suggested a few times to the judiciary that we use the virtual court or the Zoom court to avoid these things. But I think we respect the independence of the judiciary for that matter.

And I think their favor is for the person to appear in person to the court before the magistrate or the judge. But, Mr. Chair, as you know, during COVID, when the movement was limited, we used to have this virtual court. But then it died out when the operations resumed normal.

And now we are required to bring prisoners back to the court. As you might remember, back in the days, through the reform program of the judiciary, one of the main efforts was to see if the possibility of using virtual court could be applied. That is our suggestion when we say that we adhere to the provision of the Constitution for fair trial. Access to fair trial of the prisoners.

I think the judiciary has other views, that they should be presented physically to the court for the judge or magistrate to hear the case as opposed to the virtual court.

Mr. Valenitabua: In relation to overpopulation, we are talking about here the right to freedom of inhuman treatment and all that. Overpopulation. There was a move by the courts some time ago where they would discourage people being sent in for remand. I remember that time. Is that...

Mr. Moceisuva: Yes, we have also raised this with the judiciary through the Chief Justice, Chief Registrar. And I think it depends on the individual magistrates and the judges. We circulate, at one stage we were circulating the daily master that we had. But it just didn't filter out for them to really help in the reduction of overcrowding. And you know, overcrowding is an ongoing issue in the Fiji Correction Service.

Mr. Valenitabua: Alright, thank you. I think we have come to the end of our session. We have another session after this at 10.30. So, we've heard you. I'm sure my fellow commissioners have recorded what or have noted what you have given us. You have presented to us this afternoon. And we will surely deliberate on it. Particularly the deputy. The deputy post. I've been reading the provision. There might be a point there for addition of that into the constitution. There might. So don't take my word for it. That is it. We thank you very much for attending this afternoon. And we'll be waiting for your written submissions. Thank you.

Mr. Moceisuva: Thank you, Mr. Chair and the committee.

FIJI CORRECTIONS SERVICE

Dear Mr S. Valenitabua

SUBMISSION ON BEHALF OF THE FIJI CORRECTIONS SERVICE

Introduction

1. I wish to extend our sincere appreciation for the opportunity afforded to the Fiji Corrections Service to make a submission before the Constitution Review Commission. On behalf of the Fiji Corrections Service, I respectfully submit our views regarding Section 130 of the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji and other constitutional provisions that have, in practice, hindered our ability to fully discharge our statutory and constitutional responsibilities.

2. The Fiji Corrections Service is mandated under the Fiji Corrections Service Act 2006 to provide for the safe custody, welfare, rehabilitation, and reintegration of offenders committed to our care by the courts. In carrying out this mandate, we encounter practical, operational, and legal challenges arising from constitutional gaps or constitutional protections that, while necessary in a democratic society, require clearer wording or reasonable limitations in the correctional environment.

3. This submission therefore seeks the Commission's consideration of amendments or clarifications that will strengthen the governance, command, operational efficiency, and institutional security of the Fiji Corrections Service.

Retirement Age of the Commissioner of Corrections

4. The 2013 Constitution is silent on the retirement age of the Commissioner of Corrections. We submit that the Constitution should expressly prescribe a mandatory retirement age of 65 years.

5. The office of the Commissioner of Corrections is physically, mentally, and administratively demanding. The role not only involves executive leadership and policy decisions but also requires the Commissioner to undertake regular inspections of correctional centres throughout Fiji, oversee inmate rehabilitation programs, and inspect external inmate deployments such as cane-cutting operations and community work programs.

6. A constitutionally prescribed retirement age will ensure succession planning, leadership renewal, and the appointment of suitably qualified individuals capable of effectively carrying out the functions of the office.

7. Further, if a clear retirement age is not constitutionally prescribed, it creates room for exploitation and potential corrupt practices in the future whereby a Commissioner may continue serving indefinitely—potentially until 80 years of age or until such time he or she personally determines they are no longer capable of discharging the functions of office. Such uncertainty may undermine institutional performance and delay opportunities for capable successors.

Position of Deputy Commissioner of Corrections

8. We submit that the position of the Deputy Commissioner of Corrections should be expressly recognized in the Constitution.

9. The inclusion of this office in the Constitution will provide legal certainty and continuity of command and control in the administration and operations of the Fiji Corrections Service when the Commissioner is absent, overseas, or otherwise unable to perform his or her duties.

10. The absence of constitutional recognition creates operational difficulties, particularly where urgent approvals are required for payment processing, procurement of food and medical supplies, emergency operational deployments, and other critical matters affecting the welfare of inmates and the security of institutions.

11. Constitutional recognition of the Deputy Commissioner will also prevent the downgrading or removal of this critical office by future office holders. This has occurred previously when the role was downgraded to Assistant Commissioner level, affecting command structure and institutional effectiveness.

Delegation of Commissioner's Authority

12. The Constitution is currently silent on the delegation of the powers and authority of the Commissioner of Corrections.

13. The Commissioner of Corrections is appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Constitutional Offices Commission and exercises authority vested personally in that office. In the absence of an express constitutional provision, the Commissioner may not lawfully delegate his or her authority to the Deputy Commissioner of Corrections or another senior officer.

14. This creates serious administrative and operational delays in urgent matters including:

a. approval of payments and purchase orders;

b. emergency security and operational decisions;

c. urgent staff deployment or transfer;

d. disciplinary proceedings against officers and employees; and

e. authorization of high-level institutional actions.

15. The Fiji Corrections Service has an internal disciplinary system in which the Commissioner may hear and determine disciplinary cases involving officers and civilian employees. We submit that the Constitution should expressly permit lawful delegation of such powers to the Deputy Commissioner or another designated senior officer in the Commissioner's absence.

16. We further submit that the wording should refer to "employees of the Fiji Corrections Service" rather than merely "officers" so as to cover both uniformed and civilian personnel.

Segregation of Inmates with Medical Conditions

17. The Fiji Corrections Service increasingly receives inmates with serious medical conditions, including communicable diseases such as HIV. Prisons are closed environments where inmates live in close proximity and interact daily. The risk of disease transmission is heightened due to overcrowding, close contact, and high-risk behavior such as needle sharing and unprotected sexual activity.

18. We submit that the Constitution should provide reasonable leeway for the segregation of inmates according to their medical conditions where necessary for:

a. treatment and monitoring;

b. centralized medical care;

c. prevention of transmission;

d. efficient use of medical resources; and

e. protection of other inmates and staff.

19. Currently, the legal framework limits the ability of the Fiji Corrections Service to separate inmates based on HIV status due to anti-discrimination provisions. While we acknowledge the importance of non-discrimination, the correctional environment requires practical exceptions to protect public health and institutional safety.

Freedom from Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment (Section 11)

20. Section 11 significantly limits the use of force, disciplinary methods, and control measures within correctional facilities.

21. While this protection is necessary to prevent abuse, it presents operational challenges in managing violent inmates, gang activity, riots, and drug-related unrest. Inmates frequently use this constitutional protection to challenge the lawful use of force by officers to compel obedience and maintain discipline as authorized under the Corrections Service Act 2006.

22. As the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, inmates often classify lawful and reasonable force as assault or degrading treatment and use this as grounds for complaints or legal action.

23. This creates legal ambiguity regarding the distinction between:

a. lawful and reasonable force; and

b. cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment.

24. Such ambiguity may discourage officers from taking decisive action in dangerous situations, thereby compromising institutional security and discipline.

Right to Privacy (Section 24)

25. Section 24 affects the ability of officers to conduct searches, surveillance, and monitoring of inmates.

26. Institutional security often requires intrusive searches, including:

a. body searches;

b. cell searches;

c. mail monitoring; and

d. monitoring of inmate communications.

27. These measures are necessary to prevent the smuggling of contraband, drugs, mobile phones, and weapons into correctional facilities. Strict interpretation of privacy rights may limit such actions or expose officers to legal challenges. We submit that constitutional wording should provide reasonable limitations on privacy rights in correctional settings where security concerns justify such actions.

Freedom from Medical Treatment without Consent (Section 11)

28. This provision is particularly challenging in light of increasing cases of drug dependency and communicable diseases such as HIV.

29. Correctional institutions are closed environments where there is close interaction between prisoners and prisoners, as well as prisoners and officers. We submit that all inmates should be subjected to mandatory medical testing upon admission and periodically thereafter. Further, confidentiality provisions relating to communicable diseases should be reasonably waived or limited within the correctional environment so that affected inmates may be identified and, where necessary, segregated for:

a. monitoring;

b. treatment management;

c. prevention of spread; and

d. protection of staff and unaffected inmates.

Such measures are necessary to ensure institutional safety and effective medical management.

Access to Courts and Fair Trial Rights (Sections 14 & 15)

30. These rights allow inmates to challenge disciplinary decisions, conditions of detention, and administrative actions of the Fiji Corrections Service. While these protections are essential in safeguarding justice, they also increase the administrative and legal burden on the Service.

31. Frequent legal applications require:

a. extensive documentation;

b. legal compliance;

c. procedural consistency; and

d. allocation of limited institutional resources.

32. We submit that clearer procedural safeguards and internal dispute mechanisms should be recognized to reduce unnecessary litigation while preserving inmates' rights.

Conclusion

33. The Fiji Corrections Service fully supports the principles of democracy, human rights, and the rule of law embodied in the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji. However, the unique nature of correctional work requires practical constitutional provisions and reasonable limitations that enable the Service to maintain security, discipline, rehabilitation, and public safety.

34. We respectfully request that the Constitution Review Commission carefully consider these submissions and recommend the necessary amendments and clarifications to strengthen the Fiji Corrections Service in carrying out its constitutional and statutory mandate.

Yours faithfully,

A. MOCEISUVA
Acting Commissioner of Corrections

Leighton: Members of Fiji Council of Social Services, on behalf of the Chair of the Constitutional Review Commission, I would like to take this time to thank you for accepting our invitation and for making the time to make submissions today. My name is Leighton Fatiaki, I just want to go through a few housekeeping matters. For those of you, when you want to use the mic, please just press the right side of the mic to turn it on, and the same side to turn it off.

Our Chair will begin by introducing the Commission and the work that they will be undertaking, as well as the Commissioners who are before you today. Following that, we request also if you could also introduce yourselves, just for the record, for transcribing purposes. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Bula vinaka, members of the Fiji Council of Social Services. Before I go on, I will ask my fellow Commissioners to introduce themselves first, before I make the opening address. We'll start from the far right.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. Welcome, everyone. My name is Conway Beg, I'm an architect by profession, and I'm certainly looking forward to the consultation process, both inward or narrow, and wide, throughout Fiji, and I welcome you. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good morning, FCOSS members. I'm Dr. John Fatiaki, Vuniwai Fatiaki. I'm your neighbor in Waimanu Road. That's my clinic, and I'm Rotuman, and I look forward to getting your presentation. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Bula Vinaka, members of FCOSS, and a special welcome to my good friend, Vani. My name is Neelesh Gounder, and I'm with USP. Today I look forward to your submissions for the consultation review.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Vinaka Commissioners, members of FCOSS, if I can call you that, we are indeed pleased and we're happy that you are here before us this morning. The invitation was sent out.

We appreciate your acceptance, which is manifested by the presence of your members here this morning. We have invited you to come in and present to us your views about the 2013 Constitution. You will understand that it is our function, our task, given to us by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, to review the 2013 Constitution, not to change it, to review.

So, we are looking at review and amendment, not throwing it away and bringing in a new one. We have to differentiate that because some people are thinking that we are trying to create another Constitution. The CRC is an independent commission.

We have to work independently, although we were appointed by the President under the Commissioner of Inquiries Act. The Commission's task is to collect what you might call data these days through submissions and through consultations, which we could use for the review of the 2013 Constitution. We can remove provisions, we can amend provisions, and we can keep provisions intact in the Constitution.

So, that is our work. We have been in consultation with selected groups here at Level 9 Suvavou House for the past three or four weeks. When I say selected groups, we send out invitations to the groups, such as yourselves, to come and assist us in this huge task that has been placed on us.

So, this morning, all we are going to do is to listen at first and hear what your views are. I'm sure you are here prepared, you have come prepared in relation to provisions of the Constitution, which you may want to comment on or make suggestions on. And then later on, at the end of your submissions, we might have questions for clarification's sake and maybe reflections for general knowledge on how we can all support each other in relation to the provisions that you might have discussed.

So, with those few words, I welcome you again, and the floor will be yours. Make use of it. And then I'll pass the mic to you.

Ms. Catanasiga: Thank you. Vinaka Vakalevu, members of the Commission and the Chairperson, thank you for the warm welcome this morning. We appreciate the opportunity to present before you.

I've come with staff and members' representation from what we call the National Executive Committee, which is the equivalent of the Board. We've decided to introduce ourselves at perhaps the segments where reps will speak. They will introduce themselves before they comment, so I hope that the Secretary is okay with that.

So, I will perhaps commence introducing myself. My name is Waninata Vani Catanasiga, and I'm the Executive Director for the Fiji Council of Social Services. FCOSS, with its long history in development, organizing structure in Fiji, and of course the recent projects we've implemented, we are committed to advocating for community realities within the constitutional framework.

We acknowledge the complexity of constitutional issues, and we appreciate the opportunity to present our submission, even if some points may transcend purely constitutional matters. Our overarching theme emphasizes the critical need to bridge the gap between the constitutional promises enshrined in law and the lived realities of communities across Fiji, whose daily lives are intersected with these broad constitutional aspirations. Generally speaking, the Constitution must reflect the values of we the people, and it is in hearing, capturing, and advancing the views of the people that we can claim a document that is by the people, for the people.

In Chapter 1, we would like to maybe strongly support the current iteration of the 2013 Constitution that affirms the necessity of a secular state that protects all faith, while ensuring social welfare remains inclusive and neutral. This principle is fundamental to fostering an equitable society where all citizens, regardless of their religious beliefs, are treated equally under the law and have access to public services without discrimination. However, we recognize the need for more awareness on what a secular state entails.

There have been a lot of concerns raised on what this means on the ground, and because there were very little discussions on a secular versus a Christian state, the confusion continues or continues to perpetuate fears in the community on these matters.

Mr. Tokoni: Bula Vinaka members of the Commission, I'm Bula Vinaka Chairman. My name is Josiah Tokoni, and I'm the Program Manager for the Fiji Council of Social Services.

In FCOSS, we advocate for the localizations of the responsibility to protect all R2P and atrocity preventions. R2P is an international law norm that calls on the state to protect its people from all types of atrocity crimes. While these crimes are enshrined in the Rome Statute and involve the gravest of criminal wrongs, there are ongoing triggers such as political instability, discrimination, et cetera, that can lead to the commission of these crimes.

History shows us through Nazi Germany, Cambodia, Rwanda, how triggers eventually escalate to atrocity crimes. This call involves explicitly supporting stronger partnership between the state, civil society organization, faith-based organization, cultural organization, traditional structures of our and international partners. The goal is to prevent the commission of all incitement to commit atrocity crimes in Fiji, thereby broadening human rights protections at the national and specifically at the community level.

Ms. Dilanaivota: Bula Vinaka to the members of the Commission and to Mr. Chair. My name is Seini Dilanaivota. I'm originally from Kadavu. I'm an intern at the Fiji Council of Social Services. Chapter 2, Bill of Rights.

General concerns. The current Bill of Rights contains numerous claw back clauses where guaranteed rights are subject to significant limitations, often based on the availability of the state resources. This undermines the effective realization of these fundamental rights, such as the right of health and environment rights. While rights do not operate in a vacuum, the limitation must be within the values of Fijian society, the democratic ideals that shape it, and international law.

FCOSS, calls on the need to scale back on this limitation clause to ensure fundamental rights and freedoms are generally protected and enforceable. FCOSS, encountering trafficking in person, CTIP projects, has revealed that enforcement of these rights is severely hampered by a lack of awareness in rural and remote communities. We submit that the state must be mandated to fund community-level education and socialization programs to ensure these rights are not merely paper-level education, not merely paper protections, but are understood and actionable by all citizens.

Based on the unmet legal needs research conducted with the Fiji Law Society, we propose a justice pipeline framework. This framework aims to identify and implement projects that address identified gaps in the legal aid, ensuring that justice is accessible, particularly to the most marginalized segments of society. Joined from the EFES electoral submission, we propose expanding political rights provisions to explicitly guarantee the right to vote and stand for office for all persons, including persons with disabilities.

FCOSS, calls for the establishment of accessibility standards for electoral participation and embedding a constitutional obligation for the state to remove structural and systematic barriers to participation.

Furthermore, FCOSS, advocates for constitutional principles requiring democratic governance of political parties, gender-balanced leadership structures, and provisions preventing indirect discrimination through excessive financial or procedural requirements. Tendency conditions must be reasonable, proportionate, and inclusive.

Mr. Rasili: The Commission, the Chairman of the Commission, 'Miau Sa Bulare', I'm Sepesa Rasili, the National President of the Fiji Council of Social Services. Insights drawn from our initiatives concerning black sand and deep-sea mining underscores that the adverse effects, impacts of resource extraction are significantly compounded by climate change and natural disasters. Furthermore, our 'Vakabula Vanua project', which focuses on fostering strong kinship and building resilient communities, emphasizes the critical need to recognize and integrate existing social structures into these processes.

It is imperative, therefore, to safeguard autonomous decision-making bodies such as The Bose ni Mataqali, Bose Vanua, from being undermined or marginalized by quasi-government entities. To ensure equitable resource management.

FCOSS, emphasizes that the ownership of minerals must be restored to the traditional landowners. Additionally, it is essential that the Constitution guarantees the principle of free, prior, and informed consent, or FPIC, for any development projects or extractive activities proposed on their land.

Based on our public finance management and Vakatawa Noke work, we propose defining the social contract within the Constitution. This definition should ensure that poor planning and decision-making by the State do not excuse its failures to provide essential rights such as minimum wage, housing, and health. Thus, constitutionally guaranteed social protection flaws serve as a critical mechanism for the effective realization and enforceability of these vital socio-economic provisions.

FCOSS, submits that the Constitution must guarantee free, prior, and informed consent for any project that poses a risk of environmental damage. Furthermore, the application of FPIC should not be limited solely to landowners or resource owners. Instead, it must be extended to include all community members who may be environmentally, socially, or economically affected by such developments.

FCOSS, recognizes the push from Pacific States to include ecocide as an atrocity crime under the Rome Statute. In this regard, environment crimes must be emphasized in light of the State's ongoing commitment to address climate change as well as to show regional and global leadership in this area.

The Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission is a vital institution under the Bill of Rights. However, challenges exist regarding its independence and effectiveness, particularly concerning compliance with the Paris Principles.

FCOSS, submits that the Constitution should clarify and strengthen the Commission's role as a watchdog for the protection and promotion of rights, ensuring its independence and full compliance with international standards, especially in the appointment of commissioners, which is one of the current challenges identified by the Accreditation Committee on NHRIS, resulting in Fiji's ongoing classification as a B-State Commission, a drop from its 1997 status as an A-Commission.

FCOSS, proposes formally recognizing and providing constitutional protections for community-based emergency responders within constitutional emergency frameworks. This ensures that local initiatives and responders are empowered and protected during crisis, enhancing resilience at the community level.

Mr. Rika: Bula Vinaka Sir, My name is Laitia Rika. I am the Vice President for FCOSS. FCOSS recommends reviewing sections 52 and 54 to allow flexibility for multi-constituency and mixed electoral systems, which would facilitate greater geography, geographic and community-based representation. Any changes to the electoral system must constitutionally require broad public consultation and consensus, building to ensure legitimacy and public trust. Reform and provisions governing the Electoral Commission and supervisors of elections are necessary to ensure transparent, merit-based appointments with security of tenure and protection from political interference.

FCOSS recommends that constitutional requirements for gender balance and diversity within electoral bodies should also be introduced to enhance representatives and fairness.

The Executive, the President of Sections 81 and 89, FCOSS proposes setting higher moral standards as prerequisites to the appointment for the head of state. This is important as the HOS represents the moral and unity figure of our nation.

We propose setting constitutional requirements for no criminal convictions resulting in term of imprisonment to 12 months. No past complaints regarding prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse, as in BSEA, and no involvement in coups. Furthermore, the successful nomination of the President should require 65% threshold in a secret ballot from both the government and opposition to ensure broad political consensus.

Separations of power. To uphold the separations of power and protect the independence of the judiciary, FCOSS recommends that the Constitution establish a clause for the appointment of a Vice President to perform functions in the President's absence and not the Chief Justice. This prevents potential conflicts of interest and maintains the integrity of both the Executive and Judicial branches. Parallel can be drawn from the 1997 Constitution on this issue.

Powers of the Prime Minister and Attorney-General in Section 96. The current Constitution grants significant powers to the Office of Prime Minister and Attorney-General. Particularly in appointing constitutional office holders, this concentration of power raises concerns about potential interference and lack of clarity.

FCOSS recommends that the Constitution should introduce clearer checks and balance to prevent allegations of interference and ensure greater transparency and accountability in these appointments.

Mr. Maharaj: Thank you, esteemed Mr. Chairperson and esteemed members of the Commission. My name is Vipin Maharaj. I am currently the board member, a board member of the Fiji Council of Social Services and I will speak on Chapter 5, which is Judiciary and particularly Section 113.

While respecting judicial independence, FCOSS proposes aligning judicial remuneration to a performance management framework to promote efficiency.

This framework should be established through separate legislation mandating the Judicial Services Commission to oversee its implementation without enroaching on judicial autonomy. Further, on judicial independence and appointment of judges in Section 106, to strengthen judicial independence, we submit that the Chief Justice nominations should be jointly signed by the Prime Minister and the Leader of Opposition before being presented to the President. The collaborative approach ensures broader political buy-in and safeguards the independence of the judiciary from undue executive influence from either side of Parliament.

On Sections 115 and 121, we at FCOSS recommend replacing the Fiji Independent Commission against corruption with a preventative approach to address the maladministration or leadership complaints. The 2013 Constitution already envisions the establishment of the Accountability and Transparency Commission. FCOSS recommends resourcing and passing the Bill for the Accountability and Transparency Commission, ensuring its independence and accessibility to citizens across all four divisions.

FCOSS suggestions in dismantling FICAC would mean a reversal to what the 1997 Constitution held. We further suggest that the current FICAC functions of investigation should be distributed to the police, prosecution to the Director of Public Prosecutions, and anti-corruption activities, awareness, monitoring and learning to the Accountability and Transparency Commission. This will strengthen the overall anti-corruption ecosystem. Thank you, esteemed Chairperson.

Mr. Rika: On Chapter 6, on State Services, Sections 123A to 127 on Public Service, FCOS submits that permanent secretaries and ambassadors or high commissioners must meet a clean record standard constitutionally requiring no criminal convictions, no PSEA or Prevention of Sexual Exploitation and Abuse history, and no involvement in coups. Appointments should be tied to a rigorous performance management framework. Furthermore, citizen oversight on public service delivery and performance, possibly through mechanisms like the Kacivaka Squad Card, should be mandated.

On Chapter 7, Sections 144 National Budget, FCOS proposes introducing a constitutional ceiling cap on government operational costs, mandating that they do not exceed 40% of total expenditure. These measures aim to ensure that a greater proportion of public funds reaches citizens and essential services, promoting fiscal responsibility and community welfare.

Mr. Tokoni: Again, members of the Commission, on Chapter 8, Accountability, Freedom of Information Section 150, based on the Kacivaka Squad Card, FCOSS submits that the scope of freedom of information should be expanded to include private sector bodies performing public functions and government business enterprises.

A dedicated right to information unit should also be established to facilitate access to information and enhance transparency across all state-owned entities. Section 151, the Auditor General, FCOSS submits that the Auditor General's authority should extend to auditing not only central government ministries but all entities receiving or managing public money, including state-owned enterprises, statutory authorities and government-guaranteed debt.

Resources for the Auditor General's office should be significantly boosted to ensure real-time accountability. Referrals to the police and the DPP's Office for Investigation and Prosecution of Abuse of Public Funds should be emphasized and constitutionally entrenched.

Mr. Maharaj: Thank you once again, Mr. Chairperson and members of the Commission. On Chapter 9 and 10, which are Emergency Powers and Immunity, I would like to focus on Sections 155 to 158, which talks about immunity. Fiji Council of Social Services strongly advocates for the removal of constitutional immunity provisions and entrenchment clauses within Chapter 11, which is amendments to the Constitution that will foster impunity. To promote national healing and uphold the rule of law, mechanisms for genuine justice, redress and reconciliation for unconstitutional acts and coups must be established.

This includes considering conditions where individuals involved in coups cannot benefit from their actions, such as by standing for elections, unless they renounce their immunity. And this is only if immunity provisions persist in any forward-looking document. This would ensure accountability and prevent future abuses of power.

Further, on Sections 159, Fiji Council of Social Services suggests that while the Supreme Court has read down the Constitution, the reading down should be reflected within this clause. With the new majority required to do referendum, this should be clearly stated and not just be a precedence in common law and case law. Thank you, members of the Commission.

Ms. Catanasiga: To conclude, members of the Commission, this framework outlines FCOSS key recommendations to the Constitution Review Commission, all aimed at strengthening democratic governance, protecting human rights, and ensuring that the Constitution truly serves the needs and realities of all Fijian communities. By addressing these critical areas, we can bridge the gap between constitutional promise and community reality, fostering a more just, equitable and accountable nation. We, of course, wish to advise the CRC that we may wish to present other aspects of our submissions in a later sitting.

Even with our members out in the various divisions, we anticipate that they will be making submissions along some of what we presented this morning. As we also continue to collate information from communities, if the CRC obliges, our request, we are also happy to provide submissions in writing. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Ms. Catanasiga. I was going to ask, could we have all your submissions, the individual submissions, compiled into a joint one and be sent to us? We thank you very much for your submissions this morning. I see that the submissions came from everyone who has been delegated to come and make submissions here before us, and we welcome that.

What we have been doing is, after the submissions, we can ask questions for clarification, and there might be some reflections shared with you just to discuss whatever has been raised during a certain submission. Now, we will do that again today, and we have to ask questions because of the wide range of subjects being covered by your submissions, the various provisions, the various sections, the various subsections, I believe, for which we will need to have dialogue with you here and now. I'm sure my commissioners have got those ready, and to start off, some of the things which you had raised this morning have been raised by other parties, so there's a commonality there.

Some parties have been in support of them, some parties have opposed them. Now, that is normally the democracy, and we will be addressing you, or we will be asking you questions in relation to those issues so that you can confirm your position as we have heard it from you. Now, without further ado, I will now ask my commissioners, or the members of the commission, not my commissioners, the members of the commission, if they wish to address you this afternoon. Commissioners?

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you. Thank you very much for a wide spectrum of presentation. I only just want to touch one for now, but I have others, and the point or the term Kacivaka Scorecard was used quite a bit. I'm unfamiliar with that, and I was wondering if that has influential positioning, if I can use that word, in your presentation. Maybe perhaps could you just elaborate a little bit more on that for me, please?

Ms. Catanasiga: Chair, if I may, maybe just to provide perhaps a background on Kacivaka Scorecard is a citizen's diagnostic tool. It was developed by our members after the multiple crisis of COVID-19 and natural disasters. One of the things that we saw was because communities were not able to access services during this particular time, the level of vulnerability increased. And so, while we were advocating as an organization here in Suva, we couldn't see any traction in the way government services were being delivered, particularly to those who were affected by disasters.

So, we asked the communities, and one of the things that we get accused of as NGOs is that we're told, you're here in Suva, you don't know what's happening in communities. So, we decided that members come up with a diagnostic tool, we were supported by UNDP, to assess levels of access to information on the services being rolled out by government for disaster-impacted communities. And what resulted was the Kacivaka diagnostic tool.

So, what happens is that members in communities actually choose an agency, a government agency, and they diagnose or perhaps rate the level of openness of the government agency in terms of services that is made available. I think it was to do with how government was rolling out initiatives specifically for rebuilding after Cyclone. There were communities that we visited that didn't know about this information, and the time for application had already elapsed.

And when we were trying to say this to government services, they just perhaps weren't responding in the way that we felt should have catered to that need. So, we asked communities to do their own assessment using that, and we produced a scorecard to tell government, look, communities in these particular areas have said that your information on this particular program is not available on your website. You're not visiting them in communities to tell them this.

To be able to show to government agencies that these are realities that the communities that you are trying to reach are sharing. So, it's influenced the policy work that we've done, of course, to advocate for the passing of the Access to Information Bill, which is still waiting for Parliament to endorse, and that's been quite a while. It's influencing the way we are advocating about the Accountability and Transparency Commission Bill, the Code of Conduct Bill. All of that is based on this diagnostic tool, the scorecard that we've used here. That is basically what the Kaicivaka scorecard is about.

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much.I have some other questions, but I'll allow the other commissioners to comment. Sorry about that. I don't want to dominate it.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, members of FCOSS. Thank you for the presentation, and thank you, people, for the work that you do. I'm looking at a piece of paper in front of me, which is our terms of reference.

C states that we will prepare a report on the findings of the effectiveness, relevance, and implementations. Sorry, take that back, B. Seeking input and evaluating key aspects of the Constitution to ensure its provisions reflect the values, needs, and aspirations of all the people of Fiji, the Republic of Fiji. I bring that up in the context of your discussion of a secular state.

I know this is a contentious issue. I want to clarify aspects of your stance, particularly in respect of the values of this country. We've had different presentations who have addressed this issue. There are some who have been very supportive of it, and some who have been very anti it. Let me say, just as part of our process, we do look at previous constitutions. If I go back for the three previous constitutions, and I take it a step further and look at the deed of cession, in all of these, there is a recognition of the concept of God in a moral guidance.

I think all of us who live in Fiji understand that I think the general population, or the prevailing stance, again, I don't have any figures for this, but I ask you to consider it, and you being FCOSS representatives will probably have access to it, is that most people in Fiji have some form of belief system. I think if you walk down the road, you might find 95% of people you ask, do you believe in a God? They will answer yes. And because of that, in all the preambles of the constitution, there is a reference to God in guiding us.

And I emphasize I'm a Christian, but it doesn't necessarily say Christian God. It refers to God. Now, my concern, and our concern, is that that is in fact the values of our people, as stated in three previous constitutions, and one deed of cession.

The 2013 constitution makes absolutely certain in its preamble that it removes it, and then introduces a new section, the secular state. And my concern is that the secular state, by definition, is godless. It's not just a question of a particular religion, it means that you must not even state any belief in God, because by so doing, you are discriminating against the people who don't believe in God.

I'm trying to reconcile, as a reflection, how that will address actually the values of our society. Now, we don't have any particular stance on it yet. We will go out to the people, and I'm glad that you said this constitution will be a constitution made by the people, for the people, and of the people.

And I suspect we will have a lot of people give us their opinions about this, and I don't know for certain, but I suspect that the values espoused there will actually value some form of guidance from God. We know that in societies where secular states are stated in their constitutions, that people have used this as the grounds on which to stop you praying in public. Any prayer, forget a Christian prayer, or Muslim prayer, or Hindu prayer, any prayer.

And I don't think Fiji is a godless society. I think this society values God. Not a particular preference for a particular God, but in so making the state a secular state, you make it a godless state. You have to remove it from the preamble. You can't refer to it. And I wonder if that directly contradicts the aspect of the values of the people that we're trying to incorporate into this constitution.

This is a reflection. It isn't a question. I presume your written submission will come later. I'd like us all to reflect on that before we can finalize our thoughts on the matter. We're open-minded. We haven't made any decisions. We will listen to everybody. But this is a reflection I have in the context of our terms of reference, in terms of the previous historic stance of this country in stating their belief in God and the removal of that and the imposition of the secular state, which by definition is godless. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Executive Director, board members and team from FCOSS. I want to recognize the good work that you're doing for our communities and also your participation in other forums where you have provided the input and feedback that have made our society a better place. Thank you very much for all the work that you do.

My question is regarding the fiscal policy aspect that you mentioned about 70-30, so 40 percent you mentioned. Am I right? So, you are saying that or recommending that the operational expenditures be kept at 40 percent of the total budget? Just for the information, it's a very big ask because at the moment the operational and capital expenditures are in the ratio of 70 to 30, so 70 percent of operational expenditures and 30 percent capital expenditures. That is also kind of seen as a benchmark by most economists, which is to account for, so that would be a huge, huge ask if we have to keep it at 40 percent. Total revenue that we earn, the budgetary provision for, sorry, expenditure, 40 percent would be an extremely difficult ask.

Mr. Rika: Thank you, Dr. Nilesh. Maybe to respond very briefly and also to further clarify, we understand that operational budget or OPEX for any ministry are divided into six special expenditure groups and that is SEG 1 to SEG

6. However, our ask is specifically for the cost for the running of office and that is SEG 1 to SEG 4 to be kept at 40 percent.

We understand that SEG 5 and 6 deals with grants and also with special expenditure and that also includes the fund that reaches the people. That has to be part of the 60 percent, so the 40 percent should be SEG 1 to SEG 4 of the budget.

Dr. Gounder: Okay, so that's more clear. You are just talking about SEG 1 to 4, okay. Thank you. Point noted, but still a big ask, still a big ask given the fiscal scenario we have and our traditional expenditure patterns, but point taken.

The second clarification that I see is on the Bill of Rights and I think a lot of us agree that there are some limitations. Do you have any particular ones that you want to talk about today? Removing of the limitations on the Bill of Rights, any particular ones? If you did mention in more general way, any particular ones from FCOSS perspective or was there more of a general comment?

Ms. Catanasiga: We may have included specific examples in our earlier versions of our presentations, but we decided to remove that from the current copy, but I think one of the things we want to perhaps emphasize is the right to health. I think we were discussing that two nights ago, the right to health. That is assured until there are emergencies or there is a...

Dr. Gounder: You can give written feedback later, written submission that is fine here. So, you do not have to answer, but it will be good to have some more clear submission would be better. So, we can look into that and I would also like to request given the role and functions of FCOSS, if you can continue to consult your members, the public and provide the feedback at a later date would be great because you are an influential CSO and you have contacts on the ground, I think like no other CSO.

So, please you can do some of the consultation with your members and then give us feedback. The due date for written submission is 30th of June, so you can still submit just a request.

Ms. Catanasiga: We note that Dr. Gounder and perhaps just very briefly respond to... I was arguing with our program manager whether we should respond on the question around secular state and, I think that is based on our experiences during disaster response because, sometimes we have seen where perhaps faith has often become a barrier to accessing humanitarian support and it is not necessarily just based on your faith system, but also about logistical access.

You know, faith-based organizations have clear access into their own communities and have often, you know, despite the humanitarian principles we hold and some of the standards that we often use, some of these services are often prioritized for, you know, members of a particular faith organization.

FCOSS, it is made up of members that are people of faith and that is why they are volunteers during times of disaster and crisis. And this recommendation is based only on ensuring that perhaps that clarity is established so that it does not serve to discriminate those who may not share or have the same faith system as perhaps a dominant development partner perhaps.

But we certainly see, you know, the merits of that argument because, FCOSS, itself is made up of members who express faith, all types of faith, Christian, Hinduism, the Islamic faith, they are members of FCOSS and I think that is primarily why FCOSS is a thriving organization because its members are volunteers and that is driven by faith. So, we will review that. We will go to our members. I am pretty sure you will meet some of our members who may not support that when you go out for divisional meetings.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair, if I might because we are talking about this issue. I have, in listening to your rationale behind trying to justify the insertion of the secular state into the 2013 Constitution, I acknowledge, Vani, that you and your members have nothing to do with actually putting this into the 2013 Constitution.

What worries me is in trying to justify it remaining, you have, by stating that faith-based organizations actually venture out into the communities, made the counter argument in the sense that a lot of the people who have been helped in crises are by faith-based communities and to me that is a counter argument to maintaining a secular state where we can't identify faith.

The second thing I want to emphasize and I feel very strongly about this because often the argument is that we are progressive, that we are progressive countries. I would like to just read you, and I have a list here of about 30, but I'll read you 10.

Countries that currently have a faith as a stated national religion. They include the UK, Malaysia, Greece, Malta, Zambia, Denmark, Norway, Armenia, Argentina, the Dominican Republic, and closer to home, Samoa and Tuvalu. All these countries have a state religion.

By no stretch of the imagination would I consider any of these countries to be discriminatory against other religions. I think they exist quite well. I think these are things that are not known by a lot of people. All those countries I mentioned actually have a state religion. Malaysia has Islam as a state religion.

The other question that I really want to address is the issue of how you address the problem of certain faiths discriminating against other people. I think if you are a person of faith, you would never only deliver your parcels to people of your particular faith because it goes against any faith that you would choose. Because I'm a Christian, I'm only going to deliver to Christian households. Because I come from the Sanatan whatever, I'm going to deliver to Hindu households.

I think by faith alone, they would not do that. Quote me if I'm wrong if you had examples. I would think that that would be contrary to any faith that we practice in Fiji.

And then I think there's also the Bill of Rights that can address that as an issue already because it says you cannot discriminate on the basis of religion. And I think it's more a question of enforcing. But to impose a section into our constitution that goes against our values, that is not existent in many countries who actually have stated state religion. I think we need to reflect on this because we want something that reflects, we, the Fijian people. Thank you.

Mr. Maharaj: Thank you, sir. Perhaps just a few reflections from my end as well. Very good points made by you, sir, and also highlighting. Perhaps before I come to secular state, I would just like to address Dr. Neelesh in terms of when he mentioned is there any particular rights and limitations that we want to address.

So, if you go to the constitution, in particular if you see section 43 of the constitution, it mentions that during emergency, certain rights may be limited. So, I would just give one of the examples. Of course, we'll come back with future specifics.

But then if you look at section 43 and then you see what sections are mentioned there, they mention 8, 10, 11, 13, 14, 13, so on, and then it goes to 26. Now you go back to 26 and it talks about right to equality and freedom from discrimination. Why should a state in exercising its emergency powers limit someone's right to equality, freedom from discrimination? So those are the type of contradictions that we are trying to avoid.

So, those are the types of specifics. The claw backs that we mentioned, that's what we are trying to avoid because a state should not have that much power to limit somebody's right to freedom from discrimination or limit their right to equality because then where do we draw the line? If such a claw back exists, where do we draw the line? And then if you go back and look at this, there are so many mentioned there. How come in terms of an emergency you can limit someone's right? Yes, you may be able to limit freedom of movement, but then what about equality? What about the right to life? So there has to be some sort of line drawn that we have to draw a line somewhere that some claw backs we need to remove. So, this is one example that I'm giving and then there are particular sections mentioned.

Now, in terms of secular state, very well pointed out, sir, that there were some contradictions, yes. But you also mentioned that if you go out and ask people, 95% of them will say that they value God and their values, but then what about the 5%? Because then there is the 5% as well who might have different values and we are not saying that we promote a godless state.

You know, when you use the word secular, it doesn't always necessarily mean, to my understanding, that it is a godless state. It's just saying that we are sitting as a neutral, as a country who is neutral, allowing all citizens to practice whichever religion that they want and not have supremacy. Because if you see Fiji's history compared to a lot of other countries, Fiji has had three coups or four coups in the past and there have been a lot of rights violated and faith has been one of the grounds.

So, imposing the word God, we are not against it. It's just that the interpretation of it needs to be clear. Because if we write God, then people might just automatically assume that we are talking about Christianity.

So, using the word God, it is a good term, yes, but then if you solely make it a Christian state, that means you are imposing that value on the 5%. So, while we look at the majority, we really cannot deny and move away or look away from the minority. Because those minority also have rights enshrined under this constitution and particularly under the Bill of Rights in Chapter 2. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: I'll keep this short. I would like to think that as constitutioners, we will reflect the majority. I emphasize it again. As commissioners in the constitutional review, I would hope that at the end of two months of consultations, we will come to write a document that reflects the majority. And that's not to discriminate against the minority, but I think it must reflect the majority. That's my comment in respect of the 5% versus 95%.

The second one is what I stated earlier and you alluded to indirectly as part of my argument, which is that unfortunately when you call something a secular state, it then prohibits people like you and me saying a prayer in here that might, for instance, use the name Christ. Should that be a crime?

I existed at a time when we didn't have a secular state and we had no problems praying amongst each other. Actually, most of the Gujarati boys in Toorak who went to Suva Street when I was in school, they prayed the Christian prayers probably better than many of us did. And we celebrated Diwali and Eid with them as much.

I think the idea that somehow, we need to be constantly on guard because the minority opinion might feel hurt or be discarded. I think it's not a good argument in the context of what we're trying to do, which is to get the majority opinion. But thank you for your thoughts. I share with you my concerns about minority views, that they not be abused.

But again, I emphasize, I think that the Bill of Rights addresses that. And when we can see that a minority is being discriminated against, I'm sure that the bulk majority of Christian believing or Muslim believing or Hindu believing or God believing people would not tolerate it. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Ladies and gentlemen, we have heard your submissions. I'd just like to make some suggestions in relation to a number of sections which were mentioned to us. First from Mr. Rika, if I understand you correctly, your submission was in relation to sections 52 and 54. Part of your submission was in relation to sections 52 and 54 and that you wanted a review on that.

What in particular is to be reviewed? Is it the constituency or the number of seats in Parliament?

Ms. Catanasiga: Sorry, sir. We're reading from one document and just divide the sections between ourselves. I think Mr. Rika was recommending reviewing section 52 to 54 to allow for flexibility for multi-constituency or mixed electoral system.

And that's because from our perspective is of course that would facilitate greater geographic community-based representation.

Mr. Valenitabua: And so right now in Fiji we have a national constituency, a one constituency. And you would like that to be reviewed so that we can have multiple constituencies?

Ms. Catanasiga: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Would you put that in your final submission?

Ms. Catanasiga: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Secondly, would you be as bold as some others who have appeared before us to divide up the constituencies into seats? And how many seats per constituency? Please write it down.

The presidency, section 81 and 82, elected in Parliament by the parliamentarians. There's a 65%. What is that 65% about?

Ms. Catanasiga: I think the idea is that the nomination of the president requires 65%, yes, on both sides of the house, 65% government, 65% opposition. We don't know how realistic this is but I think it is to do with ensuring perhaps buy-in and legitimacy of the person nominated.

Mr. Valenitabua: Okay. Maybe we have that also in your submission explained. Section... I see that next to that it was the position of vice-president to be a new constitutional appointment for vice-president and to replace the chief justice and do the president's job if the president is unavailable. And how do you propose that the vice-president is to be appointed or elected or what other means?

Mr. Rika: Mr. Chair, through you, this particular, our submission seek the establishment of an additional clause. It could be after a section on the appointment of the president to also read the appointment of a vice-president. The rationale behind that is that so that even in the absence of the president, we still have separation of power between the two arms of the state the president and also the judiciary.

Mr. Valenitabua: Just note that down in your submission.

Mr. Rika: Will do, Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: And I see that Mr. Rasili, you referred to the constitution to encourage free, prior and informed consent from landowners or from the people?

Mr. Rasili: Yes, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes. Does that, is that in line with ILO 169?

Mr. Rasili: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes? Alright, okay. Thank you for bringing that up.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, I was just talking to the Chair about the point made by... You mentioned RTI? Was it RTI or RTV? The international language?

Mr. Tokoni: Right to Information RTI.

Mr. Beg: Yes, okay. Can you just elaborate a little bit more on that? You said international protection and, you know, intervening like extremists, like you were making reference to Nazi Germany and so on and things like that. So how does that, I'm just trying to understand what you meant by that. No, it's an interesting point. I mean, security. You may have a point. I'm interested in that. Sorry, Chair.

Ms. Catanasiga: I think the responsibility to protect is geared towards atrocity prevention and, you know, a lot of people might think that this is really a far-fetched idea but it isn't when we look at the history of coups in Fiji.

It's an international law norm and we did do sort of a partnership with a university, Queensland University, and we are calling for perhaps the, you know, some recognition in the constitution. Of course there's a lot of advocacy around prevention, preventing corruption, preventing atrocity crimes, and that's based on patterns that we've observed, you know, in the history of Fiji. And so, we perhaps, maybe our suggestion is to find some way to embed it into the sort of the chapter one of the constitution.

Although there's been arguments that this cannot happen in Fiji, a lot of things that has happened in Fiji, you know, can actually lead up to atrocity crimes. So that's what we are trying to advocate here.

Mr. Beg: I was trying to understand the framework of that related to your colleague, Mr. Maharaj here, bringing up the point about community.

I don't know whether that sits in what you are talking about. I was curious like how they joined or how they related. Is what you are saying is on the same lines or are you saying something different?

Mr. Maharaj: Thank you. But perhaps to just take a, you know, explain to this. When we said about right, you know, we talk about freedom of information and, you know, the right to information because in our submission we mentioned particularly on the right to information unit. This also comes from the Right to Information Act or the bill that was in the response in 2005 to my knowledge.

And I remember Madam Vani and I, we were in the Attorney General's office in the other room actually discussing about the RTI and from which there was another mention of the Transparency and Accountability Commission.

So, when we mention about right to information, we particularly talk about citizens' accessibility to documents, to information in general.

This is away from immunity because immunity we are talking about in a different context.

When we talk about right to information, we talk about, you know, if a citizen wants to go and get some documents, say for example a report, it shouldn't take a citizen one month, two months, three months to get that particular report. If someone wants to scrutinize the government's activities or Auditor General's report, it should not take a citizen three months to access that. Why should it? So that is where particularly the accountability section and the freedom of information and the particular mention of a right to information unit comes from because this is still a debated topic.

But if it's enshrined in the constitution, then the state is bound by it to have a right to information unit and to make documents accessible to public to scrutinize because by right it is the right of the citizens to have those documents. So, this is where the RTI comes from, away from immunity.

Mr. Beg: Well, that makes sense then. I stand alerted and corrected. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: The other provisions that have been mentioned, Chapter 9 and Chapter 10, there's a lot of issues being raised about those two. We will not comment on that for the time being. We will see what we can do. But with your lawyer, I'm going to ask you a question.

What is your interpretation of the opinion given by the Supreme Court? Can Chapter 10 and Chapter 9 be amended or not? Since it's coming from you. Thank you. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Maharaj: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, we had this discussion before and I had told Madam Vani that this will be a question that is definitely going to be raised. So, I anticipated it. So, your question around my opinion on the interpretation of the Supreme Court, because if we see Chapter 9 and Chapter 10 and if we study it closely, we see that the Constitution itself has a double entrenchment clause which prevents the court, which prevents even this commission itself to amend, to repeal, to infringe, to diminish and for the courts to not be able to look at it.

But then again, we also have to balance that on the principles of constitutionality. The Constitution of principles and the Constitution is for the people, by the people. So, if you prevent the main system for accessing justice from looking at the document which is supposed to give them justice, then how does it, then doesn't that breach the law of constitutionality or the principle of constitutionality? So having that, so my opinion is that that particular entrenchment should not be there.

It should be removed in its entirety because a constitution should not be a document that is too rigid to amend because the social economic stance, the societal context changes over time. The previous generation should not be allowed to prevent the future generation in deciding what they want to do and that double entrenchment in itself should not have been there from the beginning.

So, while the Supreme Court had looked at the how and the legality of the 2013 Constitution, so by their opinion they said that yes, this particular document is legal but then they also have read it down.

So, if they can read it down, then pretty sure if it's taken back to the court, they can, they can interpret particular sections of those entrenchments. Now the ouster clause there, in general in history courts have narrowly interpreted the ouster clauses but that does not mean that citizens can't get justice and take this to court because it allows, this document itself allows this document to be taken to court. Thank you, Mr. Maharaj.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Well, that's, do you have anything else?

Dr. Fatiaki: Since we're all smiling, I thought I'd end on a light note. My comment and I will risk being chastised by Dr. Neelesh Gounder relates to your request that 40% is reduced from 75%, is it 70% to 40% operational?

Dr. Gounder: No, he clarified it.

Dr. Fatiaki: No, I mentioned it only in the context of his comment which was this is a big ask. Let me just say that given that every government that I have known in my memory, that's a long memory, has vowed that they will reduce the civil service and expenditure on operational costs, I thank you for that.

It's a big ask, it's an honest ask and I suspect that it reflects the opinion of people of Fiji that we need more money to help the people and less to operate the government. That's again a reflection. I will be chastised after this.

The second one, was and this is a bit of a double whammy because after saying that you then suggest that we put a right of clause to the President in the interest of separating the judiciary from the legislature but, you are imposing another great expense to have a house and a car and bodyguards and everything else to impose a new position of Vice President.

I would suggest that the times that the CJ has to stand in for the President is few and far between. For the amount of time, they would spend versus the principles of separation of power, I suspect that your argument for economic trickliness and keeping that money in the areas that it should be spent is a better argument than trying to separate the powers and making a new position of Vice President which I would suggest would be just a person who sits there not much doing.

The third one, is to thank you for having the courage to address section chapter 11.10 indirectly by so stating that no coup maker should for instance stand for Parliament or be appointed to certain positions. I can assure you that this sentiment will be looked at very closely. I think the prevailing principle is that nobody who conducted a coup, good or bad supposedly, should benefit from it and I think that's what I understand from you and I thank you for putting it forward to us. I think that's a fair thing to suggest and we will certainly take it into consideration. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, Executive Director and gentlemen, thank you very much. For today we have come to the end of this session of consultation. We have been enlightened and we request please send us your written submissions jointly, not separately. Thank you.

----------End of Session [24-4-2026]----------

Diven Prasad

Diven Prasad
Time: 2.00pm- 3.30pm
Date: 27-4-2026

Leighton: Good afternoon Mr. Prasad and team. On behalf of the Constitution Review Commission, I would like to take this time to thank you very much for coming forward to make submissions before the Commission, sir. Prior to starting, I just have a few housekeeping rules to go through.

If you wish to speak, just press on the right side of the mic and then just press on the same side to turn the mic off. The Chair will introduce the members of the team and also lay out the work that the Commission will be undertaking throughout the review. Following Chair's introduction, I also request if you could also introduce yourself and your team members. This is for the transcribing purposes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Prasad. Thank you for accepting our invitation to come and present submissions before us in relation to the 2013 Constitution this afternoon. You are one of about five individual persons who have made submissions to us, individuals, not groups.

So, we thank you very much. Before I go on, I'd like to introduce the members of the Commission who are before you this morning. On my left is Dr. Neelesh Gounder of USP, and on my immediate right is Dr. John Fatiaki, a medical doctor. And next to him is Ms. Merewalesi Nailatikau. And further on, last but not least, Mr. Conway Beg. So those are your commissioners who will be hearing you today. There's one, two. The two are not here with us. Mr. Kohli, who's in the back, and Dr. Unaisi Baba who's with Fiji National University. However, we shall continue to hear you. We'd like to hear introductions from you before I open the submissions this morning for the consultation.

Mr. Prasad: I'm Diven Prasad. I'm a legal practitioner, apart from my other business ventures, which is funeral. I run a funeral home, Suva Crematorium, and Suva Morgue Services. With me is my associates. This is Nandini on my right, and on the far right is Shereena. Both of them plus three years or so in legal practice, and they started with me. My firm, we mostly do a lot of commercial work.

I used to specialize in personal injuries in Fiji many, many years ago, and I've done some controversial cases as well in Fiji, which I will highlight today, and how these amendments will assist future generations in Fiji. So that is all.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Mr. Diven Prasad. My apologies for that. The Constitutional Review Commission. We have been appointed, Vice Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, for the task of reviewing the 2013 Constitution.

The main task at hand is to collect data or information or suggestions from members of this country, our fellow citizens, on what they believe, what they think, what they prefer. That should be included in the 2013 Constitution. You might remember that a deficiency, which was apparent in the 2013 Constitution, was that it was not put to the masses, not put to the citizens, to comment on before it was enacted.

That is according to the majority view. So, the task of this commission at hand is to get those views from people of this country. And because of that, we have been receiving submissions from organizations and from individuals for the past four weeks.

By Monday next week, we should be out of Suva, and we'll be at the islands and the other rural areas to collect the same thing, to receive submissions. So, we welcome you this afternoon, and we believe we have received your submissions written on, and we are looking forward to hearing from you to explain what your views are as you have put out in your submissions. With that word of welcome, we now pass the mic to you for your submissions, Mr. Prasad.

Mr. Prasad: Yes, thank you, Mr. Chair and the distinguished members. I gather my written submissions have been read, so I'm not going to sort of go over and over. So, I'm going to be very short.

So, my issue here is that the 2013 constitution as it stands, you have a perfect bill of rights, which I have mentioned on my page one and page two. And this bill of rights allows a citizen of Fiji to take legal action against any statutory bodies, and that means even the government. A perfect bill of rights, that you have a right to take action, you have a right to be heard in a court, and not to be discriminated.

So, that's a perfect article we have in the constitution. However, you then go and look at the last of the articles in the constitution, which is the immunity provisions under article 173. Now under this particular article, now this is a very sensitive issue, and I have actually mentioned that, so I'm not going to touch on that core issue for now.

See what has happened is article 173 has basically said that any laws or decrees that was created prior to the first sitting of parliament, and the first sitting of parliament I understand was in 2014, in October 2014 or so. So, any law that was passed by then administration, you cannot challenge it in court, no matter what you do, because the constitution has given that provision. So, there were a lot of decrees made, and you will recall, decrees were made day and night, day and night, and we as lawyers didn't even know what law existed.

So, those decrees cannot be challenged. Now I take you, I give you an example. Now when the, one of the examples is, and I've quoted is Fiji Road Authority Act. Under that act, it has been given a blanket immunity. If you look at section 38, it says there that you cannot challenge Fiji Road Authority. Now I give you an example, and if you look at my page, page 5, I have quoted the full version of section 38A, and what it says.

Now in that, it says there very clearly, the authority, or its servants or agents, shall, it says here, any actions, proceedings, dispute or challenge in any court, tribunal or any educating body, for or in respect of any act or omission done in the exercise or non-exercise of powers. So, they are not liable. So, Fiji Road Authority is not liable.

And I tell you, I went to court, and I filed an action for, a claim for damages against the FRA, and this matter was obviously challenged by the defense to say listen, you guys can't bring this action because we got this immunity under section 38A. We went to high court and we argued on the grounds of common law. Now when you look at the constitution, even the 2013 constitution, it says that Fiji follows common law principles.

It's there. However, now this particular law, it's a legislation, has an immunity, and then it contradicts a person's right to be heard in a court of law, a person's right to bring an action against a body. And that is supported by Article 173, which supports this kind of legislation.

So here we are, we're having a nice law, why all of a sudden, we have one particular law, being example Fiji Road Authority, being given a blanket immunity, which means you can't bring any action under the law. What happened, I argued on the basis of common law that the common law principles allow a person to bring an action, and I used the provisions of the 2013 constitution. Obviously, I used a Mauritius case, where Privy Council had a similar situation, and they said that under the principles of common law, a person is entitled to sue and can bring action in court.

But in Mauritius, the constitution did not have what Article 173 has. So, what Article 173 says is that you can't challenge anything that was made back in those, before the first hearing of Parliament. Now the same thing happened when I did the case against Fiji military forces during the mutiny, back in those days.

And there, it was well read cases all over, where this guy, James Pillay was shot, he was standing by the roadside. And we sued the military on the basis, under the common law principles of duty of care. And one of the issues we came out, the role of the Fiji military forces, what is their role? Because they are governed by their own act.

So, in that particular case, we won the case, and the matter went to court of appeal. Now when this matter went to court of appeal, this is the full bench, and the full bench is three judges were sitting, a decree was passed. And a decree was passed and presented in court, open court, whereby they said, well, there you go, thank you very much, but this is the decree.

Any decision made against the Fiji military or against the government of the day is invalid, even to now. And in that decree, it says, ex gratia payment. So obviously we wrote to Attorney General then, and of course you don't get any reply.

So, we then tried to present back in those days to say, listen, there is a common law principle, our laws are there, we can sue. But in those days, it was governed by decrees. So, when you are governed by decrees, anything can happen.

But when 2013 constitution was created, of course, none of the lawyers were invited to make a submission, because in those days we were told to shut up. Because if you do anything, we get charged. So, none of us knew anything about 2013 constitution.

Now, had that been discussed, the article 173, we would have said no, no, no, you cannot support any legislation that has been passed which has immunity. So, when you look at Fiji Laws Authority, if you walk down the street right now, and you, you know, the footpaths are not level, and if you don't look down, you'll protrude and you'll fall. Who do you sue? And you get a fractured leg. Back in those days, we used to take action against Suva City Council, or against PWD. And we used to get judgments and people used to get compensated. So, there was strict control.

Now, you can't sue Fiji Laws Authority because they will just come up and say, we have immunity. Now, when you look at the constitution itself, why do we need to have an immunity to support such things? Because 173 says that any decrees that has been passed, you can't challenge it in court. So, when we went before Justice Alfred, we, when this matter was argued, we said, well, the defense, in fact, argued to say to the judge, you have no power to hear us.

So, the judiciary doesn't have any power to hear any laws that was passed by, before the 2013 constitution. So, whatever we do, no matter what we try to redress, we can't challenge it in court because the other parties will come and say, look, judge, you don't have any power. That is embedded in this constitution.

So, because this is the supreme law. So, when we are going to have immunity clauses in the supreme law, and you are restricting a person's freedom, a person's right, you don't call that a fair constitution. It's very imbalanced. Now I touch on the sensitive part. The sensitive part is the Fiji's history. We have all gone through the past coups and the immunity provisions were created for a particular purpose.

So, we need to be very sensitive whether we want to shake that. Because by shaking, we don't want instability in our country because, you know, we want to move forward. We had enough. We want to move on. But there has to be some kind of sort of wordings, not the way 173 is worded. To say that maybe perhaps previous actions done by the actors of those coups cannot, you know, you can't now bring it back.

However, going forward, none of those immunity provisions should be there because if you do anything wrong, you should be punished. So, the sensitive issue, the historical backgrounds of those immunities granted for the coup makers, I think one has to be very careful how we address this because we want stability. And otherwise, you'll end up large legal battles and we will never achieve anything.

But going forward, like any amendments needs to be done, I think we need to reflect that any laws that is made in Fiji, that is the legislations, cannot have any immunity. Because if you look at Fiji Road Authority as an example, it's like, okay, I can do anything wrong. Like imagine they dig a big hole.

The first thing law students learn is about thought that there's a manhole and it's not covered. So, if a blind person walks through, he will fall and get injured. He has a right to sue because there's a duty of care. Now under Fiji law, under the Fiji Road Authority, you can't sue them.

So, the constitution of this country is we need to be fair and equal. Do not discriminate. Whether it's a blind person or a person who can see, the laws applies to everybody. But when we start having law with immunities and the supreme law of this country supports such, then there's something wrong. Because I understand that, I mean, you will know that before we used to go to court and a law change or some amendment happens.

It was happening. And those were wrong because it only benefited certain sections of people. And this constitution was perhaps made and the immunity provisions was brought to protect that because they made so many. If you look at the decree that they made in 2009, that was the judicial decree. But that decree mandated how the judiciary is going to run. They said, there is the administration of justice decree in 2009.

And this decree was implemented when my case was before the court of appeal. And that was the day that the Fiji court of appeal was dismissed. During that trial, Judge Ben was the acting president and he asked me, what do you want me to do? I said, well, there's no more court.

So, these decrees were brought in to protect at that time because that case came in at a time that, you know, a lot of, if you read the case, the case talked about how the CRW was formed, how CRW executed things, the security of the country, the whole works. So those kinds of things were actually established back in those days. And then if I want to come and go back to court now and say, hey, hold on a minute, we have a perfect constitution, which some says.

And I want to be heard again to say this man has been deprived of the common law principles. And there's a judgment and that judgment was thrown away. Yet we won, we lost. So, we wanted to come to readdress. I can't. I can't have a constitutional redress on that grounds because of 173.

So, 173 says, hey, hold on, no court can decide. So, the buck ends there. So, my submission is in Fiji going forward, we need to have in our constitution, a strict article to state that no laws in Fiji to be made or implemented, which carries a immunity provision.

So that is the going forward. And by doing that, obviously, and all the previous laws has to be amended, because you just can't hide under immunity provisions and then just keep going on. And then we say we have Bill of Rights. So, can you see how imbalanced the laws are, some of the laws in Fiji and our constitution. So that's my submission. But I have summed it up in my paper. So, it's all there, relevant sections.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you Mr. Prasad. In some Acts some legislation there are provisions which states that officers would not be liable for any act civil or criminal which they would have undertaken in the exercise of their function or their duty. I'm looking at the Public Service Act or the Crown Proceedings Act, State Proceedings Act. It is now over.

There is an exclusion clause in there which sounds like immunity. Are you including those in this?

Mr. Prasad: Yes. when you look at the Fiji Police and Fiji Military legislation those provision are there, It has been there for a while. But when you look at the immunity provisions, under the principles of common law, which has been established in Fiji, we can still take action against, for example, in those days, we used to take action against Attorney General's office because they are under the Crown Proceedings Act and say against a ministry vehicle that causes an accident or something or causes a damage.

So, when you look at actions of the individual driver driving and causing accident or causing damage, you sue the relevant ministry. Now, example, police. Can you sue police? Under the common law principles, and they're saying we are exercising our lawful rights, like unlawful detention.

Now, are they stopped by these immunity provisions? Because these laws come in and Section 173 says, well, you can't. You can't sue them because we are exercising our rights. Whereas FRA has got a particular section that actually is so clear.

Whereas the other one says you can still take action against these entities and whereby the locus is then on you to prove absolute gross negligence. That they were exercising but they were grossly negligent. Now, the same principles, if you look, with FRA, whether they're grossly negligent or not, you still can't sue.

So, under the police, under the military, those acts haven't been amended. So, it has been there. Like Public Service Commission hasn't been there. Future amendments. But you can still take action. But again, the locus is, which is very hard, the standard is very hard to prove gross negligence.

But these things were not exercised in the courts because of the 2013 Constitution and prior to that, how the administration was run. The lawyers did not go and take action because of fear. These things were raised with somehow the other way shut up.

When I tried to do certain things in my time, a lot of things happened against me. And what do you do? You just have to keep quiet and move on because you want to move on in life. You don't want to be house arrest and then, you know, been questioned a couple of hours and you're removed from the airplane. All these things happened. But bygones are bygones. We don't want all those things.

But when you look at the law, why can't I as an individual, why can't you as an individual have a right to sue anyone? Because that's what the Constitution says. But then the same Constitution says, well, yeah, I give you the right but you can't. So, very imbalanced Constitution.

Mr. Valenitabua: Article 173 you're looking at. There is a section or article in relation to freedom of access to the courts and tribunals.

Mr. Prasad: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: That is what you're relying on. And then Article 173 says, no, you can't sue because of this. And so, because of the provisions of 173. So that defeats the freedom of access to the courts.

Now, did it ever come up that this law here, this law, which has been the Fiji Road Authority Act 2013, by its provision is unconstitutional? Noting that the Constitution is the supreme law. Was it ever argued?

Mr. Prasad: Yes. So, the case that I did, so there were two cases that were filed. And when we argued before we had to withdraw the action, and we argued on the grounds that it's unconstitutional. You cannot have overlapping laws. One is saying you have a right. One is saying, and then the same law is saying you don't have a right. However, the worst part was that these provisions don't even allow the court to hear.

The court has no powers. So, the judge asks me, what do I do? Because this is the court and the judge doesn't have the power to hear. What else can argue? He can't even make a written judgment on that because it's an invalid judgment.

So, that is what happened. We could not argue and get a judgment to say that is unconstitutional. Because that particular article says even the judges doesn't have the powers to hear anything in relation to what was passed before the first session of parliament. So, there you go. It's very imbalanced, very unfair, and people were hushed ; hushed that way.

Mr. Valenitabua: You were referring to Article 173. Is there any other provision? That may be the only one.

Mr. Prasad: Yes. So, Article 173, that's on your page one. Well, I got a small booklet so it's on page one. That's the last. And the last one is 174 which talks about judicial proceedings. And again 174 talks about the sections that has been embedded in the administration of justice decree 2009. So, what section 173, that's the last. And it says very clearly.

So, if you look at even subsection 4 which is on the next page, it says that it cannot be challenged. And then remember the administration of justice decree of 2009 sacked all the judges and the whole court system was sacked. And then they brought in the new, so all the judges and magistrates were appointed under that decree. Any appointment prior to that particular decree, they were all gone. So, there was a mess sacking of judges and magistrates. So, the new ones were appointed including you reapply. So now when you look at your issue, these judges have been taken away to say that you don't have the power to hear. Because it's governed by that decree. And that decree, nobody can challenge it.So that's what happened. And we could not raise any constitutional issue. So even if we do it, the same thing we do it now, the defense councils will come up and say I'm sorry, it doesn't allow you. So, we can't do anything unless and until there's amendments made.

Mr. Valenitabua: Because there's conflict within the constitution itself.

Mr. Prasad: Yes.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you for your submission. I read your submission early this morning. Very interesting submission. This is something which was first brought to our attention by Mr. Faizal Koya who attempted to take EFL to court. And I think he faced the same situation. So, does the same scenario also apply to FNPF and EFL as well in your knowledge of view? Because when the pensioners wanted to take FNPF to court, the courts used this particular aspect to say we cannot hear the case.

So, I think your argument today in the submission might have much wider implications.

Mr. Prasad: That is absolutely correct. Now I only used one particular law as an example so it makes it clear to the board. There are other legislations in place in Fiji which you cannot sue them.

And when you, again I'm repeating myself, when you try to argue, when you try to take this matter to court, this particular, the last two articles will stop you, will stop even the judges from listening. So basically, there's no court to hear those things unless and until this supreme law is amended.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I think this is a very important point and we will try to see what are the other implications for this apart from the FRA argument that you have used to justify. I think it also extends to FNPF and EFL and maybe other agencies.

What's also interesting is that EFL is now a privatized company with shares, although it has not been listed on the stock exchange. So, yeah, thank you for bringing this up.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you. Dr. Gounder, there was some good points. Mr. Prasad, thank you for your presentation. It's a topic that relates to me. I'm an architect by profession. I understand the space that you're working in, in terms of compliance and standards. I personally feel that no one is subject to immunity or any failure.

So, the problem you have at the moment, I guess, under 173 is that rights are formally recognized but the remedies are practically unavailable. So, in a nutshell, for me, I have a real problem right now as I continue to hear this. Not just the constitution is at risk, the laws are not supporting the constitution.

So, for example, this constitutional framework covers, your section covers section 2, 6, 7, 8, 15, 16, 26 and 173. All those rights that your case, the example of this young mother falling in a manhole, fracturing her leg and not being able to sue FRA for breach. So, in summary, I ask you the question, does the constitutional framework, does it permit non-compliance to be insulated from liability? Or does not protect governance, it protects failure?

Mr. Prasad: Your second part, it does not protect. So, when you look at, I mean, when you look at logically, we have done a lot of practical cases where we used our constitution. Not 2013, before that. This article, I think, was really drafted because when you look at all the decrees passed back in, during, from 2006 when the decrees started to come in.

And then all of a sudden, they may have realized, hold on, there's so many changes in law. How can we protect this? How can we protect ourselves? So hence, you need to bring something to say, listen, we have done it, we can't even remember how the things we, decrees we have made. So, let's bring this, end of story, and let's see what happens.

So, that's what they did, they brought this and if you see the wordings of it. It was nicely crafted to say any decrees or any laws or any legislation cannot be challenged by any courts. And then, they also under 174, that is the last of the articles of your, in this book, says about the decree which abolished the entire legal system.

When the legal system goes, and then a new decree was passed to govern how the legal system is going to operate. So, they have taken that power away from the courts to listen. Because it's under the new, so when you challenge, even if I want to go to court and challenge what you are saying, I will be stopped. So, we have a constitution, and I remember everybody saying we have the best bill of rights, protecting people. And I don't know why this kind of issue was never raised by a Fiji Law Society even, I'm a member of. I don't know why these issues were never raised by most of the lawyers.

You know, that we have laws which have been restricted. Now, look at the ACCF that came in, took away the entire third-party laws of this country. So, but it has only one provision that if you want, you can go and swan the common law, but the way it was framed.

I was present in that, I was asked to present a paper, which is one maybe in this room, with all the insurance companies. And as soon as I presented as to the benefits of the third-party laws in Fiji, just like we have in Australia, where people have the right to sue. And Fiji is too small to bring such a kind of act.

And it's only limited, so a person loses a life, who's only 40 years of age and has got another 20 years to earn, you only get 75,000. You see, and then when you look at the constitution, why can't, so, but then they said, oh, hold on. There may be something, so you say, okay, you can bring an action under common law, provided you still lodge all your claims with the ACCF.

And under common law principles, things does take time. It takes two years, three years before you get a judgment, but the judgment you'll get is over a million dollars or half a million or more. And how they came to a figure of this is what you get, maximum payout. You see, so if you look at that particular legislation, though it allows, but there is a provision to say this is the limits of compensation that one can get. And that's again unfair. In Fiji, nobody has challenged that.

I was asked to challenge that issue. Unfortunately, you would all know Mr. Moti, he passed away. He was a former attorney general in Solomon Islands. He got injured and covered under ACCF. There's no third-party law anymore in this country. And so, when, but unfortunately, he passed away, so we could not go ahead and challenge that to see the compensation scheme.

So, we have a lot of laws that has come in, overlaps like your question. One has to be relooked. So, when the Supreme Law is amended and takes away those provisions, then all the other existing laws has to be changed. Oh, I'm sorry, amended. But from my perspective, from my experience, it is very unfair. It is unfair where people don't have certain rights to sue and get proper justice.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. Thank you, Mr. Prasad. I'm not a lawyer. But my understanding is that at this point in time, the Supreme Court, as in the Supreme Court of Fiji, operating under the auspices of the 2013 Constitution, has made a ruling in respect of amending the 2013 Constitution under Section 11.

My understanding is the only area that they, I won't say they directed that we could not or we should not review, was Chapter 10 relating specifically to the events related to the coup. Everything outside of that, and I think maybe Chapter 12, which is the section that you're talking about, 173 is under Chapter 12, the section that related to the president, the transitional arrangements.

But every other section in this Constitution can now be amended. And when I say amended, I mean it can be revoked, repealed, taken out completely. And so, I think from the point of view of us as a review panel, that's our mandate from the Supreme Court.

They've made the necessary guidance as far as how this happens, and we are part of that process. Now we are not the actual group that will actually put out an amendment act, for instance, and go through the parliamentary process of what they have now deemed to be adequate, which is a two-third majority, and subsequent to that, a referendum of 50 plus one of people who vote for it, to allow that amendment act of this Constitution to take place. Our job stops the minute we submit our report.

But as part of that process, just for the sake of argument, if we feel strong enough, and if there are enough submissions, we could, for instance, revoke everything in Chapter 12. Basically, make it non-existent. That's putting it simplistically. I mean we could go line by line. But that would remove all the concerns you have, and done in a legal way. So, if they did not exist anymore in writing, in an amended Constitution that government may choose to submit to Parliament, then those issues become moot, because they would no longer become part of a new Constitution, in such an amended or reviewed Constitution.

So, I think that's where we're at right now. We have very clear guidance and permission of the Supreme Court to review every part of this Constitution, and your section is not one of the sections that they've told us we should not touch. Section 10, which relates specifically to immunity granted to people involved in the conduct of the cause, that's the only area there, and you are rightly attributed that to the question of national stability and the need to move on.

But everything in 173, and everything in that Chapter 12, as far as the Supreme Court is concerned, we are able to review. And by that, I mean we are able to amend, we are able to revoke, we are able to repeal, we're able to do whatever we wish in terms of the powers that have been given to us, or the guidance that's been given to us by the Supreme Court. So, I guess I say that more in terms of a general reflection about how we might approach this, and I'm glad that you brought that up.

We have different chapters allocated to us to work through. I had the first few, I had the preamble, the Constitution, I was not aware of this. That scares the wits out of me.

I mean, other than the fact that it conflicts with everything, and natural justice, and Bill of Rights, and everything else. I didn't even realize that there was that part of it, the immunity for FRA and immunity for, you know, city councils and who else is included at EFL. I mean, that idea, it's just, you know, just almost nonsensical.

I mean, I can understand the coup immunity, which is chapter 10. The people who are involved in the coup, and they're the only ones that the Supreme Court has, I won't say determined, but have asked us, maybe in the context of amending the Constitution. We may not want to touch that.

But chapter 12, literally could become non-existent if this panel so decided at the end of that to remove that entire chapter, and all the immunity provisions that have been given to FRA, and EFL, and city councils, and everyone else. We have a mandate to do that. Now whether government feels strong enough to take it to the next stage is another matter.

We have not deliberated on it in any detail. For me personally, this is the first knowledge I have that, I mean, I understood immunity from soldiers, you know, and police and others involved in the actual conduct of the coup. I understood that.

I didn't realize that you had immunity and the inability to touch any law from 2006 right up until 2014. Well, basically the Supreme Court has told us we can do that. In this review process.

And like I said, that review part of it involves a decision that we will make as part of our written report, which may well not have a chapter 12. And then after that, if we remove that, then the courts can then adjudicate as they see fit going forward. That's a simplistic, non-loyal way to put to you my perspective on it as a commissioner.

But I have no doubt that as I read it, those are the guidelines and what you described is, you know, just goes against the grain. Common law and everything else, common sense would dictate that you can't have a country run like this where nothing can be challenged. And, you know, I'm not going to argue about the propriety of that, but I'm glad that you mentioned that these were all decreed and promulgated.

There's a complete difference and that's part and parcel of the so-called democratic deficit that has brought about this review process. There's the issue of non-consultation with the public. Why consultation? But legitimacy, you know, of actually having it prepared and passed through a parliament, you know, where people get to scrutinize it and make a decision.

Those processes didn't occur and as a consequence, the court has seen fit to allow us to review it. And the only proviso that I understand they asked us not to touch was section 10. But everywhere else is open, including the clauses that you allude to.

Now, how we address it as a commission, I'm sure we'll get lots of feedback from other lawyers who will bring up issues like this. But I want to assure you that certainly it will be taken into consideration. And I think we have a mandate and I guess the power to write a report, for instance, that addresses that and I'm glad and thank you for bringing that to our attention. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Through you, Chair, just a quick question. Since you brought it up and I'm sure we'll be discussing this, we have two lawyers in our panel and we will, I'm sure, discuss with others as well. What would be your ideal scenario? Is to remove all of that to solve this problem? What would you suggest at this stage?

Mr. Prasad: Well, if you look at my concluding remark, and I agree with Commissioner Dr. Fatiaki, we need to amend or remove, well, the way it's structured, you may have to amend it, you just can't remove it. You may have to amend 173 and where it says that it supports, you cannot challenge the laws that was passed prior to the first sitting of the Parliament, that clause should not be there.

So, once that clause goes, we, as Commissioner has correctly stated, we then have a law where we can challenge. But on the transitional history, we need to understand that what coups have done.

Now, these coups and immunities that was granted is very, very sensitive area. Because the moment you take away Article 173 and immunity for all, but then the Supreme Court ruling has come up, which you can't touch. So, the only amendments would be that there cannot be any immunity in the legislations. And can be, so once that is done, all the laws that was passed, which is still in this law, will now needs to be amended, because it becomes unconstitutional.

So, that takes care of that. But touching the coup issues, we have to be very careful how we're going to deal with it, because we will open up the floodgates, whereby everybody will sue. And then we have the court system, but then the Supreme Court is the last court, which says it cannot be touched. So that issue goes. Chapter 10, you can't touch. That's the end.

Mr. Valenitabua: Just one question, Mr. Prasad. Was, in your case, was a judgment or a ruling given, written one?

Mr. Prasad: In which case?

Mr. Valenitabua: The case you've been measuring. So, the James Pillay against Fiji military forces, yes, there is a proper judgment.

Mr. Valenitabua: Was this issue...

Mr. Prasad: No, so then the decree came in.

Mr. Valenitabua: It was not adjudicated in that one. The issue which you are raising now.

Mr. Prasad: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Was it adjudicated in a judgment, in a case and resulting in a judgment?

Mr. Prasad: No, so the constitutional issue was never there, because there we had a proper judgment against the Fiji military forces. And when the matter went on appeal, then this justice administration decree came in where it abolished the whole court system. So, nobody could educate it. And FRA, we could not get a proper ruling because the judge had no powers to go here, because of Article 173. And that was it. So, there's nothing. I see. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Through you, Chair, if I may. Thank you, sir, for your contributions here today. I think your submission has also outlined how rights don't only have responsibilities but also redress and the importance of effective and enforceable redress.

When you speak about individuals being able to take an entity to court, for example, with respect to their rights being limited or their rights being placed at risk, does this only apply to individuals, or can it also be about individuals working with organizations or advocacy organizations?

Mr. Prasad: It applies to everything.

Ms. Nailatikau: So, they can be, in collective, take, you know, for example, take a civil suit, forgive me for the lack of terminology, but they can as a group, for instance.

Mr. Prasad: Yes, as a group, as an NGO, as a limited liability company, same. So, a person is individual, a company is a person, they can sue. But in this context, if they want to do those kinds of actions, they will be stopped. And why all of sudden certain legislations were passed within themselves and it's so important for them to get an immunity doesn't make sense. Why, you know? So, it doesn't make sense.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you. I asked the question because in other submissions and contributions, people have also spoken about, I believe, section 44.1 where individuals can, people can only seek redress on an individual basis as opposed to collectively, but what you are saying is that that should apply across the board. The issue here is the immunity.

Dr. Fatiaki: Because the media is not here, I'll feel free to make some candid comments. I appreciate as a lawyer; you see a lot of complexity in this. We had a submittees the other day argue with me about how simple or complex a case could be. And I argued that it was a lot more complicated. And that's what I'm hearing from you in terms of how we might address this issue.

I would suggest that the way that 2009 came out with a promulgation that removed all judges in every law, that seemed very simple for the ones who did it. And then after that, they then built things up to 2013 when they put it into a constitutional document to try and make up for the fact that they had no laws after they removed everything in 2009. We could apply a similar brush stroke to this entire section and worry about fitting it afterwards and letting the courts rightly adjudicate that.

As easily as they did it in 2009, in one day, we could technically recommend as part of this review process to do exactly the same thing to that section without getting too complicated to the individual parts of it. And then let the courts make the decisions on a case-by-case basis as they arose. I just put that out as, you know, when we talk about how complicated or how simple this can be.

I'm sure when they did it in 2009 and wiped all laws of the book and sacked the court and everybody else by promulgation, I don't think they thought very difficult with great difficulty about how difficult that was. I think we're empowered to consider all of the parts of the constitution except for section 10 and if you read it, section 10 grants immunity only to the people involved in the actual conduct of the coup and events related to the coup. And that's, we're working on the basis that we're not touching that.

But everything in section 12, which is, or 172, 173, 174, is not being embargoed by the Supreme Court in their guidance to us. And again, how we approach it is something we will do at the end of all our consultations, but I can assure you that this is something that any right-thinking person can see is not right. You know, other than the fact that it makes no sense that it conflicts with so many other parts of the current constitution.

The fact that the courts have had to apply it that way means that they're applying it to the letter as they see it. We have the opportunity now as part of this review process to, as Dr. Gounder tried to maybe suggest, what would you recommend? Should we just erase all of chapter 12? And that gets rid of from section 162 to 174. If it's not written into the new constitution, then it no longer applies. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: I recall the story about a young electrician working for EFL who was using a very old harnessing system. And he was requesting for a new harnessing system, but he wasn't supplied on time. And he fell from the pole and he passed away. He had a young family. And one of the lawyers was acting on behalf of the family. They sued EFL, but the court said you can't based on this. This is back in 2014. These are all stories at the personal level too.

So, many people can get impacted by such legislations. And the pensioners too, I remember FNPF pensioners, when their pension was reduced. When they took FNPF to court, that was the argument used by judges.

We can't do anything because FNPF is protected.

D Mr. Valenitabua: Under Deprovisions,

Dr. Gounder: Deprovisions yes. And that's what I mean when I said the Supreme Court now, as in the current operating Supreme Court, has actually told us we can do this. And make it so that the supreme law of this country, the constitution, for instance, addresses issues like that. How we do it, again I emphasize, is something we're going to have to sit there. We'll have legal experts, but we may be well advised.

They may tell us that, well, you're quite able to just remove the entire section and it becomes smooth.

Mr. Prasad: One thing actually happened during the coup leading us to 2013. There were so many decrees passed. Mr. Chair will agree, we used to go to court and say, oh well, the law is amended. Which section? We didn't even know. Every day it was passed like that.

And then they must have said, okay, this is quite dangerous, it might go against us, let's make a decree. So, a new law comes in, a new decree, amendment comes in, and then that's the end. Now, and the Supreme Court would have looked at all those and said, look, this is very unfair.

You can't have overlapping legislations, which currently we have. One law says something, another law says something. So, a law has to be on the straight level and balanced. So, this is the difficulties, and what you said correctly, if you remove those. But again, the court is very mindful, the Supreme Court, that look, let's not touch on the sensitive part, the historical part. Let's worry about the law.

Some may argue that you want to remove the whole immunity. You know, people can argue, but the fact is that if you look at the Supreme Court ruling, it's made it very clear. So, yes, rightly, we can remove the entire immunity provisions. In particular, reference to the legislations, in particular to the laws, that there's no immunity. It takes care of itself.

Dr. Fatiaki: And the court has not directed that we can't address that part of it. We can certainly repeal those or remove them, these immunity decrees that have been promulgated for FRA and FMPF not being sued. That is certainly under our purview in terms of making recommendations about how we treat that section. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: It's certainly to do with this point. There's nothing in the Electricity Act that talks about anything like this. So, the courts are certainly picking up this point. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair. So, Mr. Prasad, if I hear you correctly, I'm a bit more technical. In 173.5, so basically your point is if we look at that framework and said you're saying notwithstanding subsections 1 to 4, nothing in this section shall operate to prevent the court or tribunal, blah, blah, blah, blah, something to those lines. Is that what you're trying to hint at?

Mr. Prasad: Yeah, so if you read 174, the whole article itself basically is on to preserve all the existing laws. And the heading is Preservation of Laws. So, whichever way we were trying to read section 173, it stops a person from challenging any laws that came prior to the first sitting of Parliament. So, the laws that came in 2014, remember, Parliament only sat in October 2014. So, anything that was passed, you cannot come and challenge that.

Now, you may say, no, hold on, I still have this right to seek re-address. Then you look at section 174, the last one, because 174 dictates that you cannot challenge the administration of justice decree. This is this decree that abolished the court and therefore the powers was taken away.

We challenged this in court and then again, you know, there was no court because this establishes that the decree is still there, justice administration decree is still there. So, the judge's powers was taken away. So, 173 is basically you can't, no matter what you do.

Mr. Beg: I was just thinking that you could, Mr. Prasad, I was thinking that you could, along the lines that you're suggesting, instead of fully removing it like my colleagues are suggesting or maybe, you know, you just say something to that effect, to prevent any court or tribunal from hearing, determining or granting relief in any matter where injury, loss or damage arises. Could we reframe it? I mean, that's for the technical drafters to look at. Yes, the drafters, you're absolutely correct.

Mr. Prasad: The drafters have to then say that any propagation decree or declarations, the wordings, we need to draft it in such a way that those now can be challenged in court of law. And then the immunity provision doesn't apply.

Mr. Beg: So that will then force the law to adjust itself.

Mr. Prasad: And because now you have a constitution, you cannot go against it. So, the courts will hear us redress that, as Dr. Fatiaki has correctly said. So, yes, you can have it, but you need to remove those. Remember, propagation decrees and declarations. It has to go. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: All right.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr. Prasad. Something for us to think about. And thank you for your submission. Thank you. It will force the lawyers now, Mr. Kohli and myself, to look at Section 173, 174, and the ones before it, Chapter 10. You know, the provisions in Chapter 10 and Chapter 12.

You have raised a pertinent point, a very important point. I have not come across this because I've never done a case in relation to this. I've been away. You are in a very good position to have come up here. And thank you very much for that. Thank you very much again. We will deliberate on submissions. And then we will write a report. That report will have to be submitted to His Excellency, the President. And then the lawmaking process follows on from there. We've got a good team here.

As you might have concluded just hearing to the questions, we look at this provision of the Constitution. It affects the lay people of this country who may be damaged and who may be injured and who may suffer damages and claim damages for personal injuries and things like that. Thank you very much.

----------End of Session [27-4-2026] ----------

SUBMISSION TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMITTEE OF FIJI
27 April 2026

The Chairperson, distinguished members of the Committee,

Thank you for the opportunity to present this submission.

My focus today is a structural constitutional issue arising from the interaction between the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji 2013 and statutory immunity provisions found in legislation such as the Fiji Roads Authority Act 2012.

The central concern is whether constitutional rights—particularly access to courts and effective remedies—are being limited in practice by statutory and preserved legal frameworks.

1. Constitutional Framework

The starting point is the Constitution itself.

- Article 7(1)(a) and 7(4) establish constitutional supremacy and state clearly that any law inconsistent with the Constitution is invalid to the extent of that inconsistency.

- 7(1) In addition to complying with section 3, when interpreting and applying this Chapter, a court, tribunal or other authority—

  (a) must promote the values that underlie a democratic society based on human dignity, equality and freedom;

- 7(4) When deciding any matter according to common law, a court must apply and, where necessary, develop common law in a manner that respects the rights and freedoms recognized in this Chapter.

Article 15(2) requires that rights be interpreted broadly and in a manner that most favours their enforcement, consistent with a democratic society based on human dignity, equality, and freedom.

Article 15(2) Every party to a civil dispute has the right to have the matter determined by a court of law or if appropriate, by an independent and impartial tribunal

Article 26 guarantees access to courts and tribunals.

Article 26

(1) Every person is equal before the law and has the right to equal protection, treatment and benefit of the law.

(2) Equality includes the full and equal enjoyment of all rights and freedoms recognised in this Chapter or any other written law.

(3) A person must not be unfairly discriminated against, directly or indirectly on the grounds of his or her—

(a) actual or supposed personal characteristics or circumstances, including race, culture, ethnic or social origin, colour, place of origin, sex, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, birth, primary language, economic or social or health status, disability, age, religion, conscience, marital status or pregnancy

Article 173 (1), (2), (3) and (4)(a)(b)(c)(d) preserves existing laws at the time of constitutional commencement.

173 (1) Subject to subsection (2), all written laws in force immediately before the date of commencement of this Constitution (other than the laws referred to in Part C of this Chapter) shall continue in force as if they had been made under or pursuant to this Constitution, and shall be construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring them into conformity with this Constitution.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Constitution, any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (other than the laws referred to in Part C of this Chapter) and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration—

(a) made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution; and

(b) which are in force and have not been repealed or replaced by another Promulgation, Decree or Declaration or by any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (as the case may be), shall continue to be in force in their entirety.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Constitution, any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (other than the laws referred to in Part C of this Chapter) and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration—

(a) made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution; and

(b) which are in force and have not been repealed or replaced by another Promulgation, Decree or Declaration or by any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (as the case may be), may be amended by Parliament after the commencement of this Constitution, provided however that no such amendment shall—

(i) have any retrospective effect;
(ii) in any way nullify any decision made under these laws; or

(iii) grant any compensation, damages, relief, remedy or reparation to any person affected by these laws.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Constitution, no court or tribunal (including any court or tribunal established or continued in existence by the Constitution) shall have the jurisdiction to accept, hear, determine, or in any other way entertain, or to grant any order, relief or remedy, in any proceeding of any nature whatsoever which seeks or purports to challenge or question—

(a) the validity or legality of any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration, and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (including any provision of any such laws), made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution;

(b) the constitutionality of any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration, and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (including any provision of any such laws), made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution;

(c) any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration, and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (including any provision of any such laws), made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution, for being inconsistent with any provision of this Constitution, including any provision of Chapter 2 of this Constitution; or

(d) any decision made or authorised, or any action taken, or any decision which may be made or authorised, or any action which may be taken, under any Promulgation, Decree or Declaration, and any subordinate laws made under any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (including any provision of any such laws), made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution, except as may be provided in or authorised by any such Promulgation, Decree or Declaration (including any provision of any such laws), made or as may be made between 5 December 2006 until the first sitting of the first Parliament under this Constitution.

Taken together, these provisions establish both continuity and supremacy within the constitutional order and cannot be challenged in any courts in Fiji.

2. Statutory Immunity Context

A practical illustration arises under Section 38A of the Fiji Roads Authority Act 2012, which provides broad immunity from civil and criminal liability for acts or omissions carried out in the exercise of statutory functions.

In effect, compensation in such cases is discretionary rather than enforceable through the courts.

Section 38A in full version states as follows:

- Neither the committee, the Authority nor any officer, servant, workman or labourer employed or engaged by the Committee, or the Authority shall be liable for any action, suite, proceeding, dispute or challenge in any court, tribunal or any other abjudicating body for or in respect of any act or omission done in the exercise or non-exercise of the powers conferred by or duties prescribed under the provisions of this Act or any other written law.

- Notwithstanding anything contained in subsection (1), the Minister may on an ex-gratia basis grant compensation to any person who has suffered any injury or damage to property, caused either directly or indirectly by any act or omission done in the exercise or non-exercise of the powers conferred by or duties prescribed under the provisions of this Act or any other written law.

A few years back, I filed a claim against FRA for two clients who sustained injuries after falling into a manhole that was not fixed or protected. In one of the cases, a lady was disembarking from a bus, carrying her 2-year-old baby, at the bus bay in front of the Nausori Town Council office. As she stepped her left foot onto the bus bay, which was covered with water, her leg went straight into the hole. Luckily for her, she managed to save her baby. Of course, she sustained a fracture to her leg, and the matter was called before justice Alfred.

FRA argued that the Judge had no locus to hear this matter based on Section 38 of the FRA Act. I argued that although there is immunity in the Act, this does not override common law principles, and I quoted a Privy Council case similar to my case. In that case from Mauritius, there was an immunity provision in the Act, but the Privy Council allowed the common law grounds of duty of care to proceed.

In my case, Article 173 of the Constitution specifically states that any laws passed prior to the first sitting of Parliament under the 2013 Constitution cannot be challenged in any court. This provision stops any judicial interference, and the case had to be withdrawn.

The FRA is generally immune from tort claims regarding its core statutory duties, stemming from a "King can do no wrong" doctrine.

The case James Pillay v Fiji Military Forces, which dealt with actions taken by the military during Fiji's period of political upheaval.

The High Court in Suva, Fiji ruled in favour of Mr. Pillay who was hit by a stray bullet during the height of the mutiny shootout on November 2, 2000 and ordered the Military to compensate him.

Justice Roger Coventry said the military was liable in negligence to James Pillay, who sued the military after being hit in the abdomen by a stray bullet.

The court heard that Mr Pillay was waiting for a taxi near the Queens Elizabeth Barracks, Nabua, where the shootout took place when he was hit.

Justice Coventry says the military breached its duty where it allowed men disbanded members of the elite Counter Revolutionary Warfare Unit access not only to guns but to ammunition.

In that case, the court did find issues around unlawful treatment. However, the broader legal context matters: after the 2006 coup, the Administration of Justice Decree 2009 (and related decrees) effectively granted immunity to the military and government authorities for acts done during that period.

Because of that decree:

- Even if a court found wrongdoing,
- Compensation could not be enforced or awarded against the Republic of Fiji Military Forces.

After 2013 constitution was formed Article 173 denies anyone from bring redress of action and seek remedy for the laws that granted immunity.

3. The Constitutional Tension

This gives rise to a key constitutional tension:

On one hand, Articles 26 and 15(2) emphasize access to justice.

On the other hand, Article 173 preserves pre-existing laws, including those that restrict or exclude liability.

The question therefore becomes:

How meaningful is the right of access to courts if the supreme law limits those rights and remedies?

For example, FRA digs a manhole on a footpath. This manhole is not covered or protection placed around it. If you are walking on that footpath and its dark, did not see the manhole and fall in, sustain severe fractures.

Now can you sue FRA? The answer is Section 38 – NO.

So, what happens to your rights under Article 15 and 26?

Prior to establishment of FRA the roads, footpaths were looked after by local councils and state roads were looked after by PWD. People who sustained damages or injuries were able to sue the relevant parties for negligence and the courts in Fiji have granted awards in that respect.

4. Constitutional Supremacy

Articles 7(1)(a) and 7(4) confirm that the Constitution is the supreme law of the State and that any inconsistent law with the Constitution is invalid.

This supports an important principle:

Statutory immunity provisions should be applied in a way that remains consistent with constitutional rights, including access to courts and the effective remedies.

5. Practical Effect

In practical terms, the current framework may result in:

- Limited ability to bring civil claims against public authorities
- Reliance on discretionary compensation schemes
- Reduced judicial enforceability of rights in certain cases
- Continued operation of broad immunity provisions even where harm is alleged

6. Constitutional Concern

A core principle of constitutional governance is that:

where there is a right, there must be an effective remedy.

If immunity provisions prevent courts from providing remedies, there is a risk that constitutional rights become theory rather than practical.

7. Transitional and Historical Immunity Frameworks

It is respectfully submitted that Fiji also has historical legal arrangements arising from past political and constitutional issues, where certain actions and actors were subject to specific legal immunity frameworks intended to preserve national stability and legal continuity at the time.

These frameworks, while exceptional in nature, form part of Fiji's constitutional and legal history and have contributed to:

- maintaining institutional continuity during periods of political transition
- avoiding extensive litigation that could destabilise governance structures
- enabling constitutional and democratic restoration.

8. Reform Considerations

It is respectfully submitted that the Committee may wish to consider the following:

First, strengthening access to justice by clarifying that Article 15 and 26 includes the right to effective and enforceable remedies.

Second, ensuring that immunity is never included in any Laws of Fiji (The Act).

Third, clarifying the operation of Article 173 to ensure that preserved laws remain subject to constitutional scrutiny where they limit fundamental rights.

Fourth, preserving historically sensitive immunity frameworks, but ensuring they are interpreted narrowly and applied with current constitutional principles, including Article 15(2).

9. Conclusion

In conclusion, this submission highlights a structural interaction between constitutional rights and statutory as well as transitional immunity frameworks.

While the Constitution guarantees access to courts, the practical enforcement of those rights may, in certain circumstances, be limited by statutory immunity and preserved legal regimes.

It is respectfully submitted that reform in this area should ensure that constitutional rights remain meaningful, enforceable, and consistent with the principle of constitutional supremacy, while still preserving only those immunity frameworks necessary for historical continuity and national stability.

Submitted respectfully,

Leighton: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan. By way of introduction, my name is Leighton Fatiaki. I am just going to go through a few housekeeping matters with you, sir.

If you wish to speak, if you can just press the right panel in front of you on the mic for the mic to turn on, and after you have given your submission, if you can press the same panel just to turn it off. Following this, the Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they will be undertaking, as well as the Commissioners. I kindly request if you can also introduce yourself after the Chair's introduction. This is for the transcription record.

Mr. Valenitabua: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan.

Mr. Singh: Good afternoon, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: It is a pleasure having you here this afternoon. As well, sir. Before I proceed further, by way of introduction, I would like the Commissioners to introduce themselves this afternoon. We will start from the far right, and then we will come across the table. Thank you very much, Chair. Good afternoon to you, sir.

Mr. Beg: My name is Conway Beg. I am an architect by profession, and I am glad to sit here and listen to your presentation. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Good afternoon, Mr. Singh. Thank you, Chair. I am Mere Nailatikau. I am an independent consultant. I work mostly in environmental and social safeguarding. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon, and welcome, Mr. Narayan. I am Dr. Fatiaki. I am a medical practitioner by profession, Rotuman. I welcome you and thank you for coming this afternoon.

Dr. Gounder: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan. I am Neelesh Gounder, and I am with USP. I look forward to your submission on behalf of the CF. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: We now know your second name, your surname, I believe. I believe it is a matter of recording. Could you please introduce yourself, sir?

Mr. Singh: Thank you. My name is Sandeep Narayan Singh. By profession, currently I live in Fiji since 2022. I moved back in 2022 to Fiji. I am the economic consultant and investment consultant. I am also the director of Fiji China Business Council and the Fiji Canada Business Council. Apart from that, I am the leader of an organization called Hindu Unity, and I am one of social media influence in regards to when it comes to the politics and economic activities.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much for that introduction, Mr. Narayan.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Like I said, we welcome you this afternoon. It is a pleasure receiving you here. You are one of the five or six other individuals who have made submissions to us in relation to the 2013 constitution. The commission was established, and we are tasked by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji, to review the 2013 constitution. We are not tasked to create a new one, no.

We are tasked to review and prepare an amended one if it is necessary. I would use that phrase for the time being, for reasons you might understand. Now, we are going to listen to you this afternoon. We will listen to your views, to your suggestions, to your input into how we can improve this constitution. A review would usually result in an improvement. We can remove some provisions.

We can add new provisions, or we just amend the current ones to change meanings and so forth, as is usually done in legislative enactments or amendments. So that is what our task is. We will listen to you.

At the end of the session, my commissioners and I will be asking you questions, or some of the commissioners might want to comment on what you have raised. So be prepared that we will ask you questions and comment on your submissions this afternoon. That is all in relation to that. As of now, the floor is open to you, and I pass you the mic. Thank you.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, sir, for giving me this opportunity. I actually drafted it, so I'll just go through that, what I have drafted. First of all, Bula Vinaka, Honorable Chairperson and the esteemed members of the Commission, thank you for granting me this opportunity to present my submission. I sincerely appreciate your efforts in engaging the people of Fiji for shaping the future of our constitution.

First and foremost, I strongly submit that the Fiji must remain a secular state. This is not about the numbers game or elevating one religion above others. Religion is deeply personal. It shapes individual values and beliefs, but it must never be imposed by the state or used as the national identity.

The constitution must clearly guarantee the separation of religion and state, equal recognition and the protection of all religions, that no religious doctrine overrides constitutional supremacy. I do not believe by making Fiji a Christian state, the nation will progress economically or will boom. Neither will crime nor the serious concern of drugs will reduce. Instead, it will risk dividing our people further. We are already facing the hardship because of so-called racial politicians' issues and discrimination from decades.

Instead of solving and healing the past, some are trying to bring new wounds and now even dividing the nation in the name of religion. The nation must remain a secular state and all faiths must be given and recognized equally. Fiji must remain a secular state.

Two, citizenship chapter five. Under the chapter five, I firmly believe that all citizens of Fiji are Fijians regardless of ethnicity. We may proudly acknowledge our ancestral roots, whether indigenous, Indo-Fijians or others, but our home, identity and contribution belong to Fiji.

For myself, I am very happy to be called an Indo-Fijian or simply as Indian as I'm rooted from my ancestors and I'm proud of where they came from, a country that is booming and growing to become the world's largest economies. But by saying that, sir, it does not take away our commitment and contribution to the nation we live in. We all know that Fiji is only our country where we are born, living and contributing towards development.

This is our country. As citizens of this country, by rights, we are all Fijians. Taking this on consideration of citizenship, I rated here is the integration with the indigenous people of this nation.

It's like lack of integration and this I feel that there is an issue where our country is currently taking. But whom shall we blame? Before 1987, most of us know that the different races were flourishing together and the gap started to create after 1987. I kept dividing and many of our politicians contributed to creating distance between communities.

Calling Fijian or not Fijian is not the real issue. The real issue is whether everyone feels protected under this constitution and valued equally and no one is supreme above anyone else, even if many might argue. I would say that that itself can give the answer to equality.

Apart from the chapter five, I wrote this because this is very dear to me. This is about reform on the citizenship conditions. Now I want to focus on the condition upon which the citizenship of Fiji may be acquired and the condition upon which a person may become a Fiji citizen.

Under the current constitution and the laws, it is very general and the rules and regulations will sooner or later affect the nation, especially the way citizenship is being granted. In recent years, we have noticed the large number of Bangladeshis acquiring citizenship, including the large number of Chinese nationals. Many cannot even understand language properly and this is creating further division in our community.

Even laborers, unskilled workers are given citizenship of this country. I want to ask the commission that granting of citizenship must be amended and structured in the constitution. For example, citizenship by investment, citizenship by skill and knowledge. We do not want to make Fiji a situation of instability or extremism.

So, on chapter two, Bill of Rights, under chapter two Bill of Rights, I would like to propose the death penalty for serious offence, especially the drugs. There should be no one or no very limited rights for anyone arrested under the Drug Act.

This is high time that the constitution gives powers to authorities to act decisively in combating the drugs. This rise of drugs in Fiji is one of the most serious threats facing our nation today, destroying our youth, breaking families and undermining our future. This is not just a legal issue; it is a national crisis.

The constitution must empower the state to act decisively. I propose constitutional recognition of drug trafficking as a serious national threat, stronger enforcement powers, faster investigation procedures, expanded powers for police and joint operation and special drug court for quick trials. Judicial reform, fast track courts for drug cases or stricter bail conditions for serious offenders.

The state shall take all necessary legislative and enforcement measures to combat illicit drugs and protect the public health safety and the national security. The constitution should provide the framework. The message must be clear, Fiji will not tolerate the destruction of its people through drugs.

The protection of iTaukei land must remain absolute and non-negotiable. However, protection alone is not enough. There must also be fair economic participation for landowners. I propose a national consultative land forum to ensure the inclusive decision making. Mandatory stakeholder consultation before any land law reforms. Stronger procedural safeguards.

The current system under the iTaukei Land Trust Board must develop. Reforms include dividend or profit-sharing schemes for landowners, mandatory sharing of increased land value upon resale, a requirement that the 50 percent of the land value at the time of sale be returned to landowners. The reason I am putting because this is a very serious concern as the nation is not developing when we talk about the land and the land law.

Too often land is leased, held and later sold at a significant profit while the landowners receive no or no return and this imbalance must be corrected. Additionally, I propose exploring the institutions similar to sector-based models to protect the tenants, the farmers, ensuring the long-term stability and trust. 5.

Chapter 4. Cabinet and the Governance. Under the Section 91.1 of the Constitution, the Prime Minister has the sole authority to determine the size of cabinet. I propose an amendment. Cabinet should be kept at the 15-member and reduce the bloated Parliament.

Independent institutions and judiciary. Under the 2013 Constitution, independent institutions are politically captured. I propose that the appointments to the independent institutions should be jointly selected by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition or a Parliament.

Judicial independence. Under the current Constitution, the Prime Minister advised the President on appointment of a Chief Justice and Court of Appeal President, after consulting only the Attorney General.

There is no requirement to consult the Leader of the Opposition. Under the 1997 Constitution, the consultation with the Opposition was required.

I therefore propose to remove the Prime Minister's direct advisory role, President to act on recommendation of Judicial Service Commission, consultation with both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition.

Electoral Reform, Fair Representation and Encouraging the New Leadership. To strengthen the democracy and restore the public confidence in governance, I propose important reforms on our electoral system. Firstly, I strongly believe that Fiji should move back to constituency-based electoral system. This will ensure fair and direct representation of communities where people know their elected representatives and can depend on them to raise and address their concern.

A constituency-based system will strengthen the relationship between the people and the representative, ensure accountability at the local level, and provide fair representation to different communities across the country. People must feel that their voices are heard and that the elected members of Parliament are directly responsible to them. In addition, I propose adopting a practical approach similar to Singapore, where the Member of Parliament is required to dedicate at least one day every week to their constituency.

This will ensure that MPs are accessible to people, directly engaged with community issues, assist in resolving problems faced by the citizens, and maintain a strong connection with those they represent.

Furthermore, I propose limiting the Members of Parliament to two consecutive terms, requiring to break before re-contesting to allow new leaders to emerge, reducing the size of Parliament to 30 members, which is more appropriate for Fiji's population. These reforms will encourage new leadership, bring fresh ideas into Parliament, improve efficiency and reduce costs, and reinforce the accountability and the service of the people. Politics should not be seen as a lifetime position, but it is a responsibility to serve the people with dedication and integrity.

Seven- accountability empowering the people. Citizens must have stronger rights to hold the state accountable. I propose legal rights for citizens to challenge unreasonable delays by government agencies and forcible timelines for savings delivery. Currently, dealing with government agencies can be slow and frustrating. This must change to support the economic growth and the public confidence.

In my conclusion, before I conclude, I propose that Chapter 10 immunity should be completely removed. No individual should be above the law. True democracy requires equality, accountability and justice.

In conclusion, I wish to highlight my concern that the 2013 Constitution was designed in a way that enabled the previous government to maintain the pro-loan control. A careful reading shows that the Office of the Prime Minister and Attorney General are referenced extensively in a manner that suggests significant concentration of authority in the hands of two individuals. Yet, many continue to describe this Constitution as fair.

I acknowledge that no Constitution can ever be perfect. However, it must always reflect to the fundamental principle of fairness, independence and the proper checks and balances. Not a system that is controlled by a few. No Constitution should be cemented forever. It must remain a living document, open to review and amendment as our nation grows.

It is also important to recognize that the 2013 Constitution was never fully endorsed by the majority of the people. It has created divided opinions and, in many instances, frustration and anger among citizens. I sincerely hope that the Commission will meaningfully engage with the people, carefully analyze and contribute and make fair, balanced and just recommendations. At the end of the day, every citizen must be treated equally, recognized equally and be free to practice their faith without fear.

Every individual should have the right to live and move freely across the nation without discrimination. Vinaka Vakalevu, Jai Sri Ram and thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Mr. Narayan. Thank you very much. We have heard your submissions. Interesting. I must say that some of the matters that you have raised this afternoon have been raised with us before. You are not the only one who have raised them, so your submissions, part of it, are in common with other members of the other citizens of this country who have appeared before us. Citizenship is an issue.

I would leave that to my other commissioners to speak on the citizenship. The drug issue, that is an issue which is threatening this country right now. So, we will discuss that with you, or we will comment in relation to that.

The returns to landowners, iTaukei landowners, of the proceeds of the land. We have heard submissions in relation to that. One of the commissioners might want also to comment on that.

There are other ones, judicial independence and so forth, the concentration of powers. You have raised that in relation to judicial independence and also the appointments, some of the appointments. The concentration of power to the AG and to the Prime Minister and so forth, we have heard about those.

And to top it off, we are glad that we have this consolidating submission coming from you on points that we are to look at in relation to this review of the constitution. Thank you very much for that. I will now call upon my committee of commissioners in case they have any comments to make regarding your submissions this afternoon. At the end I might just cover up on some matters that I think should be covered up. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you, Chair. Mr. Singh, am I correct? Mr. Singh, thank you for your contributions. I call to your point about term limitations in terms of parliamentary terms, the two terms of parliament. That relates not only to section 56 of the constitution, but also the extensive work that the Electoral Law Reform Commission has done.

I am sure you will be pleased to note that we have met with them for a very important discussion. You mentioned a particular stand down period, for example, as in people would, a candidate for instance, with the credentials outlined under section 56-2 of the constitution, would then be required before standing for elections a third time to have a certain stand down period, for instance, perhaps not standing for the third election. How would that work in terms of what you were thinking?

The second part of my question was about your limiting parliamentary numbers to 30. I would be interested to know how you came up to that figure in terms of Fiji's geographic and population makeup. Thank you.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Honourable Commissioner. I think the first question in regards to where we have a gap of one year and then they can contest the election. Of course, this depends on the candidate. If the candidate has done or achieved within the two-year period, definitely the public demand will be there for a candidate to contest re-election after having a gap of one year.

The reason of submitting this because we have seen now in Fiji, and I'm myself contesting next election to tell you, is the reason that we can see the young generation or the young leaders are not attracted to our political arena where it is concerned, despite so many political parties are coming up for registration, because people feel that the politic is only for the senior politician or old politicians. That's simple. And young people do not want.

I think to take this country forward and the reason that suggestion was done is that it allows the two-year term and then you turn down and then if you want to contest on the fourth year, you can contest. But it will also allow the change of the candidates that the new leaders and new people with the new fresh ideas would bring in.

And with your second question in regards to the number 30, I think looking at the current situation, we have one single vote, so it is one single constituency in Fiji and if we keep this as it is, as of now, I believe that's reason to reduce the numbers because the whole nation had a population of less than 900,000 and the registered voters is maybe around 450 or below 600,000.

Based on the numbers, I believe 55 is too much. We only proposed in the area was the 15-member cabinet and if you're looking at 15-member cabinet, therefore we're saying that it should be 30 so it can balance it where the government is concerned. But again, looking at the budget constraint, looking at the country's situation, looking at unnecessary MPs doing nothing in the parliament.

If you look at this current situation, I believe there are many that has done nothing, contributed to the nation's development. I deal with people maybe regular basis. So that is the reason I put that suggestion that looking at the size of our population, looking if we continue the election under the single that is the current political party act where the whole nation is one constituency and that's what I propose for the number 30. But if the country goes into constituency system, then the numbers definitely will change.

Ms. Nailatikau: And sorry, just to clarify, did you mean two terms? I mean one term being four years in terms of parliamentary terms?

Dr. Gounder: Thank you Chair and thank you Mr. Singh for your submission this afternoon. I want to start by asking you regarding the citizenship of Fiji that you mentioned. So, currently the citizenship of Fiji shall only be acquired through birth registration or naturalization. And then we have further laws that talk about the naturalization aspect of the citizenship. Now I've analyzed some data and I do not see the point that you highlighted about the Bangladesh residents.

But in any case, you are also recommending that citizenship can be acquired through other means apart from this, for example through investment interest in Fiji. Is that what you are suggesting?

Mr. Singh: No sir. In connection to the naturalization, naturalization is an act, it is under the constitution. And in naturalization you have various ways of acquiring the citizenship currently in this country. So, under the naturalization you lived in the country for five years on a legal permit, you acquired a citizenship. I'm just saying regulate that naturalization process because, well I don't have a number, but I know it's almost 7000 plus citizenship has been granted in the last couple of five years maybe.

But what I'm saying is that the country is getting, or the people are getting citizenship of this country who do not contribute in aspect of the skill level, the education level, and the investment level. We are giving citizenship so generous. Anybody living in the country with a permit of five years, you are qualified to citizenship, you are a laborer or whatsoever.

There are a lot of countries that modernize their citizenship law. I lived in Singapore for the last seven years; I will talk about Singapore. Singapore has three categories of permits, S-pass, E-pass, and the work pass.

We never give citizenship to work pass holders because they come to work, whatever years you have a contract, work and go. And that actually brings more qualified people, expatriate to actually come to Fiji. There are many countries like Mauritius, or if you look at some European countries currently, giving citizenship under the naturalization on the basis of investment.

So, example, Fiji is currently facing difficulties of having investment in maybe rural area or agriculture sector. Why not we develop those sectors, create a program that people investing in those rural development has an easy pathway to citizenship.

Like Singapore, we give citizenship within two years. If you have an E-pass, which gives you master's and doctorate degree holders, you can get citizenship within two years. Or you brought some kind of program to vent in Singapore, example you are an IT professional or a game developer, you come to Singapore and develop that game, the government gives you early a recognition of citizenship. That's what I'm trying to say, restructure the naturalization.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I think we received this submission in the National Economic Summit, the National Development Plan consultations as well. So efforts are being made to modernize the Immigration Act at the moment.

We should take care of some of these issues. I just wanted to explore where you're coming from that angle, because most of the work payment that we are giving at the moment to the Bangladesh nationals we refer to as a maximum two-year period. After those two years, they go back home. So, there is no, so to say, transition from work payment to citizenship in Fiji at the moment. It's not that easy.

Mr. Singh: That's not true, sir. My agency, One Stop Pacific Island Business Consultancy, we deal with work permit. We deal with 70 large companies' work permit and we process work permits. There are people, renewal of one, we don't have a two-year work permit in Fiji.

In Fiji we have two permit systems, one is the long-term and one is the short-term. Short-term is one year or below one year, and we have a long-term which is three years. And the permits are renewed.

It's not that people are not allowed to go out. You're talking about the two years period of permit is basically a construction sector, because construction sector is based on a project base. So, you are building a building and the project is for two years. You bring person for two years, you complete the project, and you send the people. But that's only for those area. But if that contractor has a continuous project, the workers will remain there. And they will not just leave the country after two years. So basically, that's what is happening commissioners today.

And that's my line actually. I'm the expert in immigration. I even did a proposal for the amendment of the Act. I have drafted the 30-page submission which I have given to the former minister in regards to the immigration amendment. And that is my expertise in sector of immigration, Your Honors.

Dr. Gounder: So, the Act has been currently, I think, being revised.

Mr. Singh: Yes, sir.

Dr. Gounder: So hopefully they'll take care of it.

Mr. Beg: Sorry, can I just, through you, Commissioner, Mr. Narayan, I mean, you make a point about the Bangladesh issue, because I'm in the construction sector, so I see it happening. But, you know, we have to also be careful to empower our own people. And I'm just worried about the balance of that as well and how that would be interpreted and framed in our place. Because we need to empower our nation. We can't rely on, you know, every time we have a problem, we run outside. And there is a problem. I agree with you. So, yeah, I'd like to see how that would be. And my fellow commissioner, Dr. Gounder, that's his area of expertise. So probably we'll have a debate about that. Sorry to interrupt you.

Dr. Gounder: No, that's all right.

Mr. Beg: I just have one point. I thought you had some very valid points that you were making, but you brought up the death penalty. So, I'm trying hard to fathom that, because in the Bill of Rights, how do you, you know, the freedom of cruelty, inhumanity, how do we deal with that? Because everybody has the right to live. So, I'm just, and then also how it plugs in with international law. And, you know, if we bring that in, how would Fiji be perceived? I understand the frustration. I totally agree with you, the situation with the drugs.

But I have a serious concern about the death penalty and how we deal with that issue. So, yeah, but you, I mean, you framed it, like you used the drugs and processing of the law and so on. So, I think I would like to discuss that a little bit more with the team. I just, yeah, I have a concern with that, when it comes to the section of Bill of Rights and the right to live. So, thank you.

Mr. Singh: Thank you. Thank you, sir. On the first question, I think that was just a discussion. Yes, definitely we need to empower our people. And that is the reason I'm saying that the citizenship shall not be given to people with the work permit, because then they continue to stay and take up those jobs, right?

So, if you come for work permit, you come, finish your job and go, and don't try to apply citizenship here. Because you all know that even under your construction company, when you apply work permit, you have two terms.

But when you go for the longer term, you need to provide understudy, so that that skill pass to the local understudy, transfer of skills, the reason of that. And the reason why we're taking foreigners is because of that, because we are lacking of skill. But they should not just take over and continue with the job, so a local can't get a job.

On the second, on the death penalty, I live in Singapore, so I think that's why I'm coming out for the death penalty as consent. But yes, I think I have echoed my post after the incident, what is happening currently. And I echoed various times, maybe you have seen on media, about the death penalty with Fiji Village and all others.

The reason is this, Your Honor. Currently, the way I feel, I was very close to Reverend Simione Tugi, who was fighting for drugs, and I actually conducted the whole funeral of my brother. And since three, four years since I came back to Fiji, he was my closest buddy and brother to me.

And he was a fighter for drugs. I go with him to some conference and activities, and conference workshop, UN, and all these places. Everybody was keep on dialogue, dialogue, dialogue, dialogue, and there was no actions being taken. And recently we lost him. But after he lost, I took that kind of courage to actually stand for where the drug is concerned. I never came into drug issues.

I got two death threat warning came, one which I sent to the military commander, where is your residence, we want to bomb you. And the other one is that you shut your mouth, otherwise you will disappear. But that's fine where the drug is concerned, and the death threat I'm receiving.

But yes, sir, we need to create some kind of fear to the people. I believe nearly 40%, when Tugi was mentioning, around 40% of people are now either distribution sellers or usage of drugs, and the high rise of the HIV numbers. Taking the consideration of Bill of Rights and all those rights, the human rights, and all sort of things, I think sometimes as Fijians we need to stand up for our nation and protect our children and our youth.

I believe going above or going over the international treaty that we have sometimes need to compromise, and you would see Dubai, you would see Singapore, Leekwan Lee has compromised all that, where he thrown out human rights when he was there. And because to put that strength and focus to make sure that we don't lose the children of our nation and enter them into drugs.

Fiji is now at the level, I would say, a pandemic or calamity level, because of the number's threats going on. Just yesterday we have seen a young police officer being actually hit by a car, and she's currently facing a serious condition in the hospital, who is also the daughter of our defense minister.

And looking at all this aspect of criminals moving around, I propose that for the commission to see the situation, and I appeal the commissioners, let's forget about whatever the Bill of Rights and all those things have. If it comes to drugs, there should be no rights, because it's not something that you're going to do it without knowing it.

Everybody knows what is drugs, everybody uses drugs, and there are syndicates, and I think the last time I raised this, countries which have the national budget of $4 billion has more than worth of $4 billion drug lying down in the country, and that is a serious concern. So that's the reason, sir, I have proposed that, and I just feel that some kind of consideration should come up when this is, because for me, if I am there as a politician, I don't care any international treaty, when it comes to my national, and my children, and my country, where we have to protect the drugs.

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, Mr. Narayan the issue of drugs, we were discussing with the police compulsory testing, we were discussing with the police that, but then, now it has come up that the issue of drugs is now at a very high level here in Fiji.

It is a situation which is a threat to the lives of citizens of this country. Just been thinking that maybe laws should be introduced in order to tackle these drugs, considering the Bill of Rights, considering the views of our citizenry in relation to soldiers joining in the investigation, and considering the use of force, considering the use of inhuman treatment, and so forth. We have already discussed that, but coming to yesterday, matters have escalated.

When I say matters have escalated, the operations of these people who are dealing with drugs has just escalated. And you rightly said, it is now a threat to the country, and we need to regulate, we need to pass laws which are to deal with this thing.

Maybe compulsory testing for drugs, not only on the civil servants and public officers in the army, and the police, but all citizens, to empower police officers, to empower certain officers to just test drugs on the streets, you know, on suspicion and things like that.

So, the point that you are raising is current to Fiji at this point in time. We need to save this country, if we can, from drug usage and drug dealings, and the repercussions of drug dealings. Yesterday we only had a young police officer being run over with a car. Imagine if these people or the dealers were armed. What would be the situation in our country?

So, we've got to think seriously about this drug issue and how to pass laws. Maybe that can be legislated, maybe. But then legislation will be overridden by Bill of Rights in the Constitution. So, with my commissioners or with the commissioners listening here this afternoon, it is something that we will have to reconsider. We've dealt with the police submissions in relation to compulsory testing of drugs on officers.

Now, we might have to expand that and think beyond the police, police force, the army and civil servants, and the general citizen at that. It is something that is, I mean, when a group of people can take on police officers and armed officers at a checkpoint like that, it's no longer just, someone was saying, it's no longer an accident. No, that would have been a planned activity.

And it's an action or a conduct taken against the disciplinary forces who are here to safeguard our communities from the scourge, I might say the scourge of drugs now at the level we are at. So, I thank you for that submission that you have made in relation to the drug issue. I believe, I think that some of the commissioners might have other comments in relation to that. But from me, we will have a look at this. Thank you. Thank you, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Mr. Singh, thank you for your submissions, the comprehensive nature of which I'm sure we will be addressing in more detail. I'm not going to talk about the whole problem of drugs because that's a ballgame that's too complicated for me to enter. As I hear you, you're only addressing one aspect of it.

I suppose when we address issues, we can address it by education, we can address it by enticement, or we can address it by a big stick. What I understand from what you're telling me is there's lots of education going on, lots of conferences, lots of workshops, lots of, what do you call it, groups and committees that are formed when they target a particular problem. I think you said too much talk and not much action.

And so, what you've suggested, obviously, is the death penalty. As I look at this constitution, the area that rightly has been pointed out, and again, that's the only area I'm going to address, not the issue of drug testing and how you solve the entire drug problem in Fiji, but the issue of death penalty, a big, big stick to deter people.

There is section 8 that says right to life under the Bill of Rights. It says every person has the right to life and the person must not arbitrarily be deprived of life. I presume arbitrarily means that it is, that you can't do it in certain instances. So, a simple provision could say except in cases of treason, capital drugs as determined by law.

I mean, we would have to write something like that and then obviously, I mean, I'd leave that to the legal people to actually put it into words. But I think if we did that and put an exception to the right to life in cases of treason, drug trafficking beyond a certain amount, that would be determined by law, which would then be written as a specific law where you could apply the death penalty. Then that would address both aspects of the right to life, but also the right of the state to enact laws to protect its citizens.

So, that is really just a question of an argument over whether we support the reintroduction of the death penalty or not. And I have no doubt that there will be discussions around that topic as we go forward. I think the point you make is very valid.

I think our chairman has addressed that. I think my personal feeling is I think we are running around; we're running as the running front is disappearing around the curve and we're starting off this side. And we'll continue to do that at the expense of an entire generation and who knows, possibly the future of this country.

I think it's run beyond us and I can see that there are people like yourself who might think that we need to do something drastic to resolve that problem. And I hear you there and I have no doubt that we can address it in the context where it is constitutional. The Bill of Rights allows you the right to life.

We won't deprive it arbitrarily except in cases of capital treason, drug, I'm sure we can copy and paste from Singapore and Indonesia and Malaysia and all the countries that have the death penalty applied very strictly to a certain amount of drug which they will constitute trafficking.

And I would suggest that there are many people in Fiji who might feel that we have reached that point and I think that point is well taken and I'm sure we will discuss this more and get more opinions as we prepare to write the amendments to this constitution.

Mr. Singh: Sir, with that only, I think there was a consultation with the Narcotic Bureau when they wanted to set up. Aspect of that, I have submitted the thing and I think there were a few measures were there. Aspect of the fast-tracking court, we don't want to see the drug cases goes around 3 to 4 years and then you destroy the drug after 4 years. I think the evidence of that drugs destroy when it destroyed the number of years or number of months the case would be settled which is called fast-track.

A stricter bail condition was placed there. I put a 5 gram of drugs if you caught someone with a 5 gram of drugs which is the white meth and all those things, there shall be no bail condition. Those are the thing was placed.

Because one incident I wanted to refer which you might have seen on the Wednesday's newspaper where my face was published. Rokovoka Road in Lautoka where they had the same issue of meth selling from the resident. Despite of having 16 cases in the court for the same offense, people are freely selling the drugs at their place. And it's from since 2023, they have 16 cases in court.

So, this is the reason I'm saying that we should have this no bail policy. Singapore has no bail policy. It's 5 grams of drugs you caught, there's no bail policy. You stay in the prison unless your case goes on. So, we're not just saying this is targeting Singapore.

You have mentioned Indonesia and Malaysia. They have a similar ARPIC member's countries which is Philippines and all those countries have a serious or the same procedure on the drug cases where they go for death penalty. Of course, Philippines is a Catholic country.

They don't give death penalties. But if you look at Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore, they definitely give death penalty. Yes, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Sir. Again, I want to take us back. Obviously, the laws that you are describing go outside the purview of this Constitutional Review Commission.

We're really focusing on the supreme law. And the only area I think of relevance to our consideration is not how you go through the judgment of different penalties and that's not in our purview. Our purview relates to in respect of what you have recommended which is something drastic, like I say, a big stick.

And from our reading of this, this is the area in the Constitution that we would have to address. And like I suggested, I'm sure that our lawyers can find very quickly if we concur with it and if we have enough people suggesting that we move in that direction, we may well write a provision under that every person has the right to life and the person must not be arbitrarily deprived of life except in cases of, you know, and we can get the lawyers to write that out.

Okay, so it doesn't then, but it does provide and because this is the supreme law, it means no other law can override this and therefore everything else will be written with a view to giving what you suggest, giving the powers to the government to take serious action and don't get into situations where bail is granted, all these things.

That's number one. The other thing I thought I might just touch on again is a contentious issue and this is the issue of the secular state which you spoke very passionately about from the beginning. Let me just, in the way of history, and we have no opinions about what works. I can tell you just that you're passionate about it. I have other people who are very passionate about the opposite view. I reflect on a number of things.

We've had three constitutions that I would consider legitimate in the sense that they were convened after consultation with the people and designed for Fiji, not necessarily in compliance with international so-called norms and, you know, constitutions, but in compliance with our particular country.

And in three of those constitutions, I think the first two referenced the Christian state, that's 1970 and 1990, in the preamble, in talking about it. The third constitution in 1997 took away a denomination of religion, but they spoke about God.

Now, my understanding is that when you talk about a secular state, you can't talk about God because there's a percentage of people who don't believe in any God. And my concern is that if we are to reflect the people of this country, I don't know what the percentage is, but I suspect that 97 percent of these people in this country, if we walk down the street and ask them, believe in some form of God. Like I said, the 1997 constitution was very specific.

It didn't refer to religion, but it said we, the people of Fiji, believe in God and his moral guidance to oversee our islands or whatever. And if you write that and reflect the belief and values, because that's part of our terms of reference, is to make sure that we reflect the values of our people.

And if 90 percent of our people feel that they believe in some form of God and want us to write it into the constitution, then we would have to remove the secular state part of it because it is not compatible with each other.

I put that to you because I understand exactly where you're coming from, but I think when you talk about God in our setting, it makes all 97 percent of us or 95 percent who believe in some form of God, whether you call him Shiva or Mohammed or Allah or Christ.

If you say God, then it's generic and it covers everybody, but it reflects values that we hear a lot of people saying that when you remove it from a country's constitution and you take it out and we become a secular state, then basically they're saying that the guidance that we get from those values of religion, any religion.

I'm not saying Christianity or any religion, if we remove that, then we become in almost a godless society and that it doesn't bode well for how we govern, how we make laws, how we interact with each other if we don't have any divine guiding principles, whether it's the Ten Commandments for the Christians, whether it's the Koran for the Muslims or whatever your holy book is.

So, I reflect like that and I also pointed this out to another group that asked for the secular state and I named 10 or 35 countries that are non-secular states and that you and I would probably consider very progressive and that includes the UK, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, Greece, Costa Rica, Malta, Argentina, Armenia, Denmark, Iceland, Norway, and close by Samoa and Tuvalu. All of these countries are non-secular. They actually state in their constitutions that they believe in God. Some are actually Christian ones, some Islamic ones, all these countries that I've just mentioned.

And I don't think any of these countries I would consider regressive. From the UK that has the state the Church of England is its national religion. I don't think they persecute all the other religions, but that is a non-secular country and like I say Sri Lanka, Malaysia, Greece, Norway, Denmark.

These are countries that exist very well and they are non-secular. So, I think when we talk about this issue of secular versus non-secular, we must understand that these are actually very progressive countries that none of us would consider regressive and repressive.

I mean there are some repressive ones like Saudi Arabia maybe in the way that they institute their religious rule, but the point I'm making is for Fiji in terms of our values and in terms of our history, the idea that we have a constitution, but we don't recognize any form of God, which is what a secular state says, then we are poorer for it.

And again, I emphasize we have to reflect the values of the people as they come up and tell us as we go along. We have not arrived at any conclusions, but at the end of this next two months in July when we start putting this together, those will be some of the considerations we have to have. And I thought I would share that with you as a general reflection because I know your intentions are good, but I've given it to you in maybe a bit more detail and a different perspective to maybe how you read it. Thank you.

Mr. Singh: Thank you Honorable Commissioner. I have gone through the 1997 constitution and the paragraph in regards to what you have mentioned. I think for me I'm okay in this aspect, looking at the 1997 constitution where the fairness of practice of religion or the religious is allowed. But looking at that, I believe that if that is the considerable or that is where the direction it might go, then definitely there should have some kind of tougher laws and strict laws may be more tougher than what we have today of somebody used freedom of speech or rights to degrade other faiths because the reason why we come up with this.

In recent days we have seen some issues happening across the country and it becoming somehow a very pain for one particular, maybe believers of one faith. And the aspect of, we can say, burning, breaking idols and all those sort of things.

And no serious outcome of that what currently we see in our legal system. So, people does all those events. And there was one incident also, Your Honor, you might know it, that somebody openly was degrading the faith and taking sweets off at the Deepavali and all that.

Fiji is made with the multiracial sort of aspect where we celebrate all festivals together and this is what Fiji is all about. But if one faith stand up and says that you cannot because your God does not want you to eat that, I think in that aspect, as I said, 1997 Constitution paragraph is perfectly okay.

But as far as there are measures taken in the Constitution that avoid this kind of destruction and divisions where our faith, our religion, but not only that, but as a nation that we build up, everybody celebrates Diwali, everybody celebrates Christmas.

My wife is Roman Catholic and I am Hindu and we celebrate all festivals together. Because we never see anything different, but there are some might use that and start degrading it and which already happening today despite of secular state.

Dr. Fatiaki: I agree completely with you. Just to reassure you, I refer you to Section 22 of the Bill of Rights. It says freedom of religion, conscience and belief. Anybody who were to contravene that would immediately be contravening the Constitution.

I think to legitimize or to suggest that a person who desecrates a temple or a church is somehow reflective of a constitutional provision is he just breaking the law and is a criminal. He might be a religious criminal, but he is a criminal nonetheless and I am sure all of us, irrespective of your religion, would demand that he not be accommodated. But I think your point is taken.

What I wanted you to consider in terms of the issue of a secular state is the other extreme of that, which is that the removal of God. For instance, that secular state is the reason why in some instances people can't pray. The education department I think gave a directive that people are not to say a prayer that ends with Jesus or any prayer.

To me, that's taking the secular state interpretation. I mean, who doesn't pray in Fiji? Whether it's a festival, doing a puja, or a village group having a meeting and they decide to pray, that would be completely under the secular state. That's a crime.

And I think, like I said, I think the protection of freedom of religion is well guarded in the Bill of Rights and I'm sure there are respective laws that are enacted to make sure that if you break, you know, the sacrilege laws that don't allow you to, you know, disabuse or abuse places of worship of other religions.

I think you can apply that without going the other extreme and saying, okay, because we're secular, you must not mention God, and if you mention God, then you're breaking the Supreme Court, I mean the supreme law of the land. I think that's taking it to the other extreme and in a country like Fiji, which is, like you said, multicultural but also multi-religious and I would suggest very religious.

There are lots of, you know, good Sikhs, good Muslims, good Christians that live in this country and I think the idea that we want to make ourselves irreligious is probably taking the pendulum too far in the other direction.

Mr. Singh: Thank you. Sir, I conceded what you have said and I also wanted to tell the Commission that I will be submitting my written one where I will actually revise the secular state presentation that I have done and I'll go through back to that 1997 and come up with the constitution that you have submitted.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Just one quick point. We have heard the argument about the death sentence for drug offenses, but you have made it more passionately, I think, in kind of an extensive way than anyone else. We have discussed this issue at length when we were looking at the national defense strategy, the white paper as well, and in some of the work that we did with the judiciary for the national development plan.

And looking at the criminal justice perspective and some of the fundamental principles of criminology, would you consider, say incarceration, longer sentences, say 50 years to 70 years in lieu of death sentence? Because if you put somebody to 70 years sentence, he is likely to die in prison.

And the courts have heard that after a very, very long time, courts have now sentenced three people to 40 years and one to 50 years after the arguments that we had, discussions that we had with the judiciary last time and Ministry of Defense as well. So, do you think that's a quick one, please?

Mr. Singh: Yes, definitely, sir. But one thing that I wanted to say about it, because putting the drug offenders or the criminals, the drug lords, because these are the drug lords that you mentioned that has taken into 40 plus or 25 years, I believe this is the Nadi case.

One thing I have a concern, because that could be right, doing that, rather than you saying about the death penalty to be considered. Putting them into a combined prison, which is currently happening, where other sort of prisoners are there, different criminal prisoners. Maybe that should be removed, and then it can be considered if it's a separate drug prison be built, because you don't want them to keep there for 40 years and then making the entire prison or prisoners not only drug addicted, but they could become the drug traffickers because they are being told because of that money is concerned.

And we've all seen that currently prisons are full of diapers, drugs, and all those sorts of things, because you have drug lords in that same prison. If that is considerable, I believe that definitely the nation should, but as apart from that, I think the nation should come up something in regards where the drug is concerned.

But I really would say that drug prisoners should be kept in a separate isolated drug, even no signals or anything to be back there, because that will actually avoid or populate other criminals or other offenders.

Mr. Valenitabua: The review period for the constitution, you suggested that the constitution is to be open to review. Do you have a number of years in mind?

Mr. Singh: So, looking at the reviews basically done around the world, I think it's fine to be done with maybe 9 months to 18 months normally, because getting up a new constitution could be done 18 to 2 years. I would say from 6 months to 1 year, that will be sufficient for review.

The reason is because we already have, most of the people have a pain of last constitution did not went for consultation. If it's a fair representation and a fair way of consultation done by the public, I think that the shorter term will be better. Again, taking the consideration that we're having election coming, we don't want people to use this amendment of constitution as a political tool to campaign. After all, this might happen. So therefore, I would say that how quick possible will be better for the nation itself.

Mr. Valenitabua: Pardon me, Mr. Singh.

Mr. Singh: Yes, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: What I meant was, we now enact a constitution. You have recommended a review period. How many years after the enactment should we review?

Mr. Singh: I believe every 10 years we should review our constitution, the way the nation grows, because that is a living document.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. You also dealt with, this is my last question, or my last comment to you. You have dealt with; you have submitted that Chapter 10 has to be removed. That is the provision in relation to the immunity given to the soldiers and anybody who participated in the coups of 1987 and so forth, 2000 and 2006.

Now, when you say that no one is above the law, the main concern here is that we do not want to create problems and move the country backwards, rather than just proceed forward and advance in the life of the country.

Is it to be a problem, creating a problem, if we remove Chapter 10, or should we leave it as it is and move forward? I hope you understand what I am asking.

Mr. Singh: Yes, sir. But my belief is different. I believe that by forgiving what has happened in the past is not the way to move forward. I believe that us, like younger generations, we might be five years old when the 1987 coup has happened.

My father was beaten by about 20 soldiers at that time because we have a goat farm on Sunday and we are working on Sunday. But apart from that, Your Honor, I think my suggestion was this because, again, as I said, that law is fair and equal.

But for the younger generation, I think moving forward, it is very important that we heal the past, not only by forgiveness or reconciliation and all those sorts of things, but the real justice.

That will also bring a fear for the younger generations or the future generations that the law will be abided equally by every citizen. I know this is a very serious thing, but I know many may be no longer alive, many have died, maybe a few have been only left with the 1987 coup's consent. But again, this sort of thing should have brought in because, as we know, the reconciliation went through all around places, but what was the outcome? I haven't seen any outcome by forgiving people.

So, I believe, sir, that it can be considered. I stand my submission that Chapter 10 need to be removed. I feel that will give more strength and confidence to the future generation that whoever commits something that is against the law.

Two, if I saw the nation developed because of that coup and the reason the coup has been named for, maybe I would say, yes, leave it as it is, but country has not developed. The country has gone backwards, and everybody could, on the name of iTaukei rights or whatever rights, but look at the situation of our country today. Our generation is not safe, and poverty has been grown up.

Look at all those situations. So, I definitely would say, no, that should be a lesson, and that should be a lesson for coming and future generation. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Singh. I believe we have come to the end of our session this afternoon. It has been a good session. We've heard a lot, and we noted a lot to be considered by this team. We thank you very much for your time, and we thank you for your submissions. Thank you.

----------End of Session [27-4-2026]----------

VERBAL SUBMISSION TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMISSION – FIJI

Bula Vinaka Honourable Chairperson and Esteemed Members of the Commission,

Thank you for granting me this opportunity to present my submission. I sincerely appreciate your efforts in engaging the people of Fiji in shaping the future of our Constitution.

1. Chapter 1. Secular State

Submission on Secularism, Faith, and National Values

I respectfully submit that Fiji should be a nation guided by Godly principles and values. In the 1997 Constitution, the principle of religious liberty was clearly recognised, ensuring the protection and freedom of religion for all individuals. However, in the 2013 Constitution, this was changed with the declaration of Fiji as a secular State.

While secularism is intended to ensure neutrality, I feel that, in practice, it has distanced public institutions from the moral and spiritual values that guide the majority of our people. Fiji is a nation where a significant majority believe in God and are faith-based. As a result, there is growing concern that secularism is being interpreted in a way that excludes God entirely from public life, including institutions such as schools, where prayer and faith-based expressions are no longer commonly practiced.

There are examples of countries such as the United Kingdom, Indonesia, and Malaysia, where constitutional frameworks acknowledge belief in God or moral foundations, while still ensuring that no single religion is imposed above others and that diversity is respected.

Therefore, I respectfully propose that Fiji adopts a balanced approach one that maintains inclusivity and equality for all citizens, while also recognising the importance of Godly principles in guiding the nation's values and direction.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the State must be guided by Godly principles, grounded in justice, compassion, and integrity, while fully upholding equality, freedom of religion, and respect for all.

2. Citizenship Chapter 5 – Protecting National Identity and Integrity

Under Chapter 5, I firmly believe that all citizens of Fiji are Fijians, regardless of ethnicity.

We may proudly acknowledge our ancestral roots whether Indigenous, Indo-Fijian, or others but our home, identity, and contribution belong to Fiji.

For myself, I am very happy to be called Indo-Fijian or simply Indian, as I am rooted to my ancestors, and I am proud of where they came from a country that is booming and growing to become one of the largest economies.

But by saying that, it does not take away our commitment and contribution to the nation we live in. We all know that Fiji is the only country where we are born, living, and contributing towards development. This is our country.

As citizens of this country, by rights we are all Fijians.

We all know about the lack of integration with the indigenous people of this nation, but whom shall we blame?

Before 1987, you will know the way this country was flourishing, and the gap started to create after 1987. It kept dividing, and many of our own politicians contributed to creating distance between communities.

Calling "Fijian" or "not Fijian" is not the real issue. The real issue is whether everyone feels protected and valued equally and no one is supreme above anyone else, even if many will argue.

I think death itself can give the answer to equality.

Citizenship Conditions – Chapter 5 Reform

Now I want to focus on the conditions upon which citizenship of Fiji may be acquired, and the conditions upon which a person may become a citizen of Fiji.

Under the current Constitution and laws, it is very general, and the rules and regulations will sooner or later affect the nation especially the way citizenship is being granted.

In recent years, we have noticed large numbers of Bangladeshis acquiring citizenship, including a large number of Chinese. Many cannot even understand languages properly, and this is creating further divisions in our communities.

Even labourers and unskilled workers are being given citizenship.

I want to ask the Commission that granting of citizenship must be amended and structured in the Constitution.

For example:

- Citizenship by investment , Citizenship by skill and knowledge
- No automatic citizenship for work permit holders

We do not want to make Fiji a situation of instability or extremism.

3. Chapter 2 – Bill of Rights / Drugs and National Security

Under Chapter 2, Bill of Rights, I would like to propose the death penalty for serious drug offences.

There should be no or very limited rights for anyone arrested under the Drug Act.

This is high time that the Constitution gives powers to authorities to act decisively in combating drugs.

A. Drugs – A National Emergency Requiring Constitutional Backing

The rise of drugs in Fiji is one of the most serious threats facing our nation today.

It is:

- Destroying our youth
- Breaking families
- Undermining our future

This is not just a legal issue it is a national crisis.

The Constitution must empower the State to act decisively.

I propose:

- Constitutional recognition of drug trafficking as a serious national threat

b. Stronger Enforcement Powers

- Faster investigation procedures
- Expanded powers for police and joint operations
- Special drug courts for quick trials

c. Judicial Reforms

- Fast-track courts for drug cases
- Stricter bail conditions for serious offenders

d. Constitutional Support

"The State shall take all necessary legislative and enforcement measures to combat illicit drugs and protect public health, safety, and national security."

- The Constitution should provide the framework

The message must be clear: Fiji will not tolerate the destruction of its people through drugs.

4. iTaukei Land – Protection, Fairness, and Economic Justice

The protection of iTaukei land must remain absolute and non-negotiable.

However, protection alone is not enough there must also be fair economic participation for landowners.

I propose:

- A National Consultative Land Forum to ensure inclusive decision-making
- Mandatory stakeholder consultation before any land law reforms
- Stronger procedural safeguards

The current system under the iTaukei Land Trust Board must evolve.

Reforms should include:

- Dividend or profit-sharing schemes for landowners
- Mandatory sharing of increased land value upon resale

- A requirement that at least 50% of the land value at the time of sale be returned to landowners

Too often, land is leased, held, and later sold at significant profit, while landowners receive NO or minimal benefit. This imbalance must be corrected.

Additionally, I propose exploring institutions similar to sector-based models to protect tenants and farmers, ensuring long-term stability and trust.

5. Chapter 4 – Cabinet and Governance

Under Section 91(1) of the Constitution, the Prime Minister has sole authority to determine the size of Cabinet.

I propose an amendment:

- Cap Cabinet at 15 members
- Reduce bloated Parliament

Independent Institutions and Judiciary

Under the 2013 Constitution, independent institutions are politically captured.

I propose that appointments to independent institutions should be jointly selected by Prime Minister and the Leader of Opposition or a parliament.

Judicial Independence

Under the current Constitution, the Prime Minister advises the President on appointment of Chief Justice and Court of Appeal President after consulting only the Attorney-General.

There is no requirement to consult the Leader of Opposition.

Under the 1997 Constitution, consultation with the Opposition was required.

I therefore propose:

- Remove Prime Minister's direct advisory role
- President to act on recommendation of Judicial Services Commission
- Consultation with both Prime Minister and Leader of Opposition

6. Electoral Reform – Fair Representation and Encouraging New Leadership

To strengthen democracy and restore public confidence in governance, I propose important reforms to our electoral system.

Firstly, I strongly believe that Fiji should move back to a constituency-based electoral system. This will ensure fair and direct representation of communities, where people know their elected representatives and can depend on them to raise and address their concerns.

A constituency-based system will:

- Strengthen the relationship between the people and their representatives
- Ensure accountability at the local level
- Provide fair representation to different communities across the country

People must feel that their voices are heard, and that their elected Members of Parliament are directly responsible to them.

In addition, I propose adopting a practical approach similar to Singapore, where each Member of Parliament is required to dedicate at least one day every week in their constituency.

This will ensure that MPs:

- Are accessible to the people
- Directly engage with community issues
- Assist in resolving problems faced by citizens
- Maintain a strong connection with those they represent

Furthermore, I propose:

- Limiting Members of Parliament to 2 consecutive terms
- Requiring a break before re-contesting to allow new leaders to emerge
- Reducing the size of Parliament to 30 members, which is more appropriate for Fiji's population

These reforms will:

- Encourage new leadership
- Bring fresh ideas into Parliament
- Improve efficiency and reduce costs
- Reinforce accountability and service to the people

Politics should not be seen as a lifetime position, but as a responsibility to serve the people with dedication and integrity.

7. Accountability – Empowering the People

Citizens must have stronger rights to hold the State accountable.

I propose:

- Legal rights for citizens to challenge unreasonable delays by government agencies
- Enforceable timelines for service delivery

Currently, dealing with government agencies can be slow and frustrating. This must change to support economic growth and public confidence.

8. Conclusion

Before I conclude, I propose that Chapter 10 Immunity should be completely removed.

No individual should be above the law. True democracy requires:

- Equality, Accountability and Justice

In conclusion, I wish to highlight my concern that the 2013 Constitution was designed in a way that enabled the previous government to maintain prolonged control. A careful reading shows that the offices of the Prime Minister and Attorney-General are referenced extensively, in a manner that suggests significant concentration of authority in the hands of two individuals. Yet many continue to describe this Constitution as fair.

I acknowledge that no Constitution can ever be perfect. However, it must always reflect the fundamental principles of fairness, independence, and proper checks and balances, not a system that controlled by a few.

No Constitution should be cemented forever. It must remain a living document, open to review and amendment as our nation grows and evolves.

It is also important to recognise that the 2013 Constitution was never fully endorsed by the majority of the people. It has created divided opinions and, in many instances, frustration and anger among citizens.

I sincerely hope that the Commission will meaningfully engage with the people, carefully analyse all contributions, and make fair, balanced, and just recommendations.

At the end of the day, every citizen must be treated equally, recognised equally, and be free to practice their faith without fear. Every individual should have the right to live and move freely across the nation, without discrimination.

Vinaka vakalevu.

Setareki Cokanasiga
Time: 3.20pm-4.00pm
Date: 29-4-2026

Leighton: Bula Vinaka Mr. Setareki Cokanasiga. On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission. It is my honor to thank you for coming before the Constitutional Review Commission.

We also thank you for the comprehensive submissions that you have submitted thus far, and we look forward to hearing your oral submissions. Just for housekeeping, if you wish to speak, you will have to press on the right panel in front of you to turn the mic on, and then press the same panel to turn it off.

Following this, Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they will be undertaking, and then he will proceed to introduce the Commissioners, or we will ask the Commissioners to introduce themselves. Following that, we ask if you can introduce yourself, just for the record, so that we can transcribe. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka. We'll call you Setareki. Setareki, welcome to the Commission this afternoon. You see your commissioners sitting here. They will introduce themselves first, and we invite them to do their introductions now, so that you know who you're speaking with.

Mr. Beg: Bula Vinaka, Setareki, welcome. My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession. I believe you're an architect. You're saying you're in that space, or not? No? You're not an architect. Okay. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Setareki, good afternoon. My name is Dr. John Fatiaki. I'm a medical practitioner, and I'm a Kai Rotuma. Vinaka.

Dr. Gounder: Bula Vinaka, Setareki. My name is Neelesh Gounder. I work for USP. Setareki, today I'm here as a commissioner, and I look forward to hearing your submission.

Mr. Valenitabua: Bula Tale, Sevuloni Valenitabua. You have given us a number of submissions. You have sent them to us through email, and we hear that you came this morning asking to be heard before the Commission this afternoon. So, we have taken an extra session, given you another slot, so that we can hear you.

I believe you understand what the purpose of the Commission is, because reading through your submissions, it indicates that you are moving towards the review of the 2013 Constitution. So, without further ado, I will now invite you to introduce yourself formally, so that you can be recorded, and then make your submissions. Speak to the mic. It has to be transcribed. We've got a handsard reporter there who's going to record everything you say, and we will deal with your submissions later on. So, I give you the mic. Please introduce yourself, and proceed with your submissions.

Mr. Cokanasiga: My name is Setareki Cokanasiga I'm from Nabiau, Nabuka, Yavusa Nabuka, Tikina Conua, Yasana Nadroga/Navosa. I'm named after the chairperson, grandfather from Nukui, in Rewa, Setareki Cokanasiga gone Turaga na Tuinidau. I am a carer by profession. I used to look after Mr. Issac Beg, the late father of Mr. Conway Beck.

My presentation today is regarding the Great Council of Chiefs, GCC, submission to the 2026 Fiji Constitution Review Committee. The author is Setareki Cokanasiga, and this is my presentation for today. The exclusion of the Great Council of Chiefs, GCC, from the Fiji 2013 Constitution marked a significant shift in the nation's governance structure.

Historically, central to indigenous presentation and cultural legitimacy, the GCC removal has created a vacuum in indigenous governance. This submission outlines how the absence of the GCC contradicts international human rights standards, particularly those protecting indigenous people's rights to self-determination, participation, and cultural preservation.

A little bit of history about the GCC, the Great Council of Chiefs, was established during the colonial times, and was later entrenched in the Fiji Constitution of 1970, 1990, and 1997. It held significant powers, including appointing a president and vice president, and influencing land and cultural matters.

In 2012, the Bainimarama government formally abolished the Great Council of Chiefs, and the 2013 Constitution was promulgated without any reference to it. All powers previously held by the GCC were transferred to Parliament and the Prime Minister.

Custodians and customary lands and chiefly authorities are now only indirectly acknowledged through the iTaukei Land Trust Board and the Ministry of iTaukei Affairs. I'll be speaking on my first submission today regarding the GCC and indigenous governance contradiction. Foundation Principles and Rights, this is from 2013 Constitution, Chapter 1 to Chapter 2, Contradictions and Loopholes, Supremacy Clause, Section 2, undermines the immunity provision, Chapter 10.

Freedom of Expression, Section 17, curtailed by Crime Act 2009, Sedition Law and Media, Decree 2010. Socioeconomic Rights, Section 31 to 40, weakened by progressive realization. GCC exclusion removes indigenous cultural legitimacy from cultural identity.

My recommendation to the Committee is to amend Supremacy Clause to override immunity, repeal the sedition provision and media decree. Guarantee and enforce socioeconomic rights with minimum standards and re-establish GCC in advisory role to safeguard cultural representation.

Second point into Constitution, 2013 Constitution, Institutional Governance, Chapter 5 to 3 to 5, Contradictions and Loopholes, Parliament Petitions, Section 72 - 73, ignored unicameral structural weakness checks.

Prime Minister's Dominance, Section 92, undermines Cabinet's accountability. Attorney General, Dual Role, Section 91, creates conflict of interest. Judicial Appointments, Section 97 to Section 100, influenced by executive. Ministry of Ethical Affairs laws exceeds but lack constitutional recognition.

My recommendation- is to re-instate bimetallism of strengthened communities with GCC advisory input. For example, because we only have a lower house, by re-instating the standard, that would be my recommendation 4.1. Second point is limit PM power and strengthen Cabinet oversight.

Separate Attorney Generals from Cabinet politics. Reform Judicial Service Commission to include civil society and indigenous representation. Insert constitutional clause recognize Ministry of iTaukei Affairs cultural governance role.

Oversight and Accountability and Special Provisions, Chapter 6 to Chapter 10. Contradictions and Loopholes- RFMF mandate, Section 131, which is still enforced as we speak right now, overlaps civilians' governance. Auditor General Report, delay weak enforcement. Emergency Power, Section 153 -154, suspend Bill of Rights.

Blank Immunity, Section 157 - 159, overrides supremacy. TLTB Amendments 2021, weaken indigenous land safeguards. My recommendation is to limit RFMF strictly to defense. Strengthen Auditor General independence. Enforcement timely reporting. Require parliamentary approval and judicial review for emergency powers.

Remove blanket immunity. Replace with transitional justice mechanism. Reinforce TLTB consent powers. Require parliamentary oversight for land amendments.

iTaukei Land Trust Board TLTB, Governing Laws. iTaukei Land Trust Act 1940 TLTA. iTaukei Land Trust Budget Amendment Act 2021, Contradictions and Loopholes. The Constitutional Land Rights versus Amendments Reducing Indigenous Control. Board consent powers, weaken undermining customary safeguards tied to chiefly authority.

Recommendation-reinforce board's consent powers. Require parliamentary oversight for amendments affecting land. Ministry of iTaukei Affairs, Governing Laws. iTaukei Affairs Act 1945. iTaukei Lands Act 1905 and 1940. iTaukei Development Fund Act 1965. iTaukei Trust Fund Act 2004. Contradictions and loopholes, customary governance structures exist in law but lack constitutional recognition. Village by law, regulated cultural practice but are not constitutionally entrenched. For example, the Kalabu village, they have a village by law, but legally, under the constitution, it's not legally entrenched.

Recommendations-insert constitution clause recognizing ministry role in cultural governance. Align village by laws with Bill of Rights protection.

Sedition Law to Media Decree. Governing Laws. Crime Act 2009, Section 65, Section 67, Sedition. Media Industry Development Decree 2010. Contradictions and loopholes, restriction freedom of expression, Section 17, Constitution. Suppress indigenous voice and prevent contestation of GCC removal.

Recommendations-repeal sedition provision and media decree. Guarantee press freedom and civic participation, including chiefly voices. Final takeaway from my first submission, GCC and indigenous governance contradiction.

My final takeaway is that this third submission demonstrates how the exclusion of GCC combined with the contradiction across foundational rights, Chapter 1 and 2, governance and institution, Chapter 3 - 5, and oversight and provision, Chapter 6 -10, and indigenous institution, TLTB, Ministry of iTaukei Affairs, weakens accountability and cultural legitimacy. Reforming these areas would restore constitutional balance, strengthen indigenous governance, align Fiji's framework with democratic and international human rights standards.

Moving on to my second submission, the GCC, connection across constitutional divisions and laws. Areas, foundation principles and rights, Chapter 1 and 2, the connection to GCC. GCC was the custodian of indigenous identity and cultural legitimacy.

Its exclusion undermines inclusivity. Sedition laws and media decrees silence chiefly voices. Preventing advocacy. Without GCC, indigenous communities lost constitutional champion for socio-economic rights.

Still with Chapter 1 and 2 of the constitution, relevant chapter sections and law, constitution section 2, supremacy, chapter 10, section 159, 157, immunity section 17, freedom of expression, crimes act 2009, section 65 - 67, government sedition, media industry development decree 2010, section 31 to 40, socio-economic rights.

Chapter 3 to Chapter 5, institution of governance of 2013 constitution, parliament and cabinet now operate without traditional checks. GCC once balanced executive power and legitimacy government.

Its absence weakens petition, judicial independence and indigenous representation. Ministry of Ethical Affairs exists in institution but lacks constitutional entrenchment. Relevant laws to the chapter 3 - 5 of the 2013 constitution, constitution section 72 - 73, petition section 92, PM powers section 91, Attorney Generals dual role section 97 to 100, Judicial Ethical Affairs Act 1945, Ethical Lands Act 1909 and 1940, Ethical Development Fund Act 1965, Ethical Trust Fund Act 2004.

Oversight and accountability and special provision, chapter 6 to chapter 10 of the 2013 constitution, RFMF board mandate in blank, immunity, overshadow, civilian and cultural oversight. GCC previously acted as a moral counterweight to military executive dominance. Its removal leaves no indigenous institution to demand accountability in emergencies, audits or land protection.

Relevant section to chapter 6 to chapter 10 of the 2013 constitution, constitution section 131 RFMF mandate, Chapter 7 finance and audit general, Section 153 - 154 Emergency powers, Section 157 - 159 immunity, Ethical Land Trust Budget Amendment Act 2021, Ethical Land Trust Board TLTB, chief safeguard land through GCC oversight amendments weakening TLTB consent powers wrote chiefly authority. Without GCC no collective indigenous land rights against legislative changes. iTaukei Land Trust Act 1940, section 4 and section 9, iTaukei Land Trust Budget Amendment Act 2021.

Ministry of Ethical Affairs, Ministry of Ethical Affairs connection to GCC. The Ministry of Ethical Affairs manages indigenous affairs but lacks constitutional recognition. GCC historically legitimized and reinforced its role.

Without the GCC statutory structures stand alone, vulnerable to political shift. Relevant laws, governing laws, acts and decree and sedition laws to the Ministry of Ethical Affairs. You have the Ethical Affairs Act 1945, the Ethical Lands Act 1905 and 1945, the Ethical Development Fund Act 1965, the Ethical Trust Fund Act 2004 and the village bylaw kept 120.

Sedition laws and media decree. These laws suppress dissents and prevent chiefs from contesting GCC's removal or advocating indigenous governance. While not written specifically about GCC, they ensure silence around its abolition and block public debate on restoration.

Relevant governing laws to sedition laws and media decree. Crime Act 2009, Section 65 - 67, Sedition Media Industry Development Decree 2010, Constitution section 17, Freedom of Expression. Overall link for my second submission regarding the GCC and GCC connection, of course.

Constitutional division and laws. Every contradiction and loophole across rights, governance, oversight, land and indigenous institutions brings back to the GCC exclusion. The GCC was the anchor of indigenous legitimacy.

Its removal, reinforced by sedition laws and decrees, weakens accountability and cultural governance. Restoring GCC in a modern advisory role would rebalance Fiji's constitutional framework. And giving the indigenous voice a right place in national decision making.

That's my third submission regarding the GCC. This is in regards to international human rights position towards the GCC. The exclusion of GCC from the Fiji constitutional framework raises concern on the several international human rights instruments.

United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous People, Article 3, 4, 5, 18, 19, 20 and 33. International Labor Organization Convention No. 169, Article 6 and 7. International Convention on Civil and Political Rights, Article 19. Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission of Fiji, 2025. Statement of the Great Council of Chiefs, 2025. Governing laws and acts and decrees in human rights context, areas from foundation rights and freedom.

Constitutional Bill of Rights, Section 17, Crime Act 2009, Section 65 - 67. Media Industry Development Decree, 2010. Suppress of chiefly voices and indigenous advocacy, which violates freedom of expression and participation rights.

Governance and Representation Constitution, Section 91, 92, 97 to 100. Ethical Affairs Act, 1945. Lack of indigenous checks and representation undermines autonomy. Land and Cultural Authority Ethical Land Trust Act, 1940. Budget Amendment Act, 2021. Weakening of TLTP-conscient powers erodes indigenous land rights.

Emergency Powers and Oversight, Constitutional Section 131, 153 to 159. Broad military powers and immunity clause limit indigenous oversight.

Media and Dissent, Crime Act 2009. Media Industry Development Decree, 2010. Legal barriers to indigenous leaders, public participation and dissent.

My new international reform recommendation.

Number one is to establish the Great Council of Chiefs as a constitutional recognized advisory body.

Number two is to amend the 2030 constitution to include mechanism for indigenous consultation on national decision making. Repeal Sedition Provision and the Media Industry Development Decree to restore freedom of expression. Strengthen land and cultural governance to reflect indigenous participation and consent.

My conclusion and takeaway from my public submission today. The exclusion of the Great Council of Chiefs from Fiji constitutional framework breaches international standard on indigenous self-determination and participation. Restoring the GCC in a modern advisory role would affirm indigenous rights, strengthen democratic legitimacy and fulfill Fiji's obligation under international law. Thank you very much.

Mr. Valenitabua: Setareki, thank you very much for your submissions this afternoon. We see that you have prepared your submissions in written form and we received your submissions through email also. Like I said, we will consider those when the time comes for us to deliberate on all submissions which we have received. All right, we have a question for you.

Dr. Gounder: I'm also from Nadroga. I'm from Momi, so good to see you. I just have one clarification. You talked about the Media Industry Development Act on the decree. It was repealed by Parliament in April 2023, so it no longer exists. It's one of the first tasks the coalition government did because it was part of their... It was in April. I think it was the 5th of April or 6th sometime around that.

The second point I need a little clarification. You talked about separation of powers between Attorney General and Cabinet politics. A little bit more on that, just to understand what you mean. Thank you. You talk about AG, Cabinet and politics. Attorney General is part of Cabinet.

Mr. Cokanasiga: Right now, we are in a coalition government. So as far as I'm concerned, there is a three-way party running this government. So, the politics involving the position of Attorney General will be immense in a way of decision-making regarding Cabinet decisions and political matters. I'll give you an example of what I'm seeing. At the moment, we have Prime Minister Sitiveni Rabuka appealing the High Court decision on FICAC Commissioner. Still in court, PM. You have DPP, Manoa Kamikamica. Still have a case in Fiji Court.

You have Biman also present in the court. So, a balance within the position of Attorney General and politics between Cabinet and politics and the position of Attorney General in this kind of circumstances will be very much a push forward for me regarding what we're facing right now in Fiji. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. I understand your argument now much better. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Oh, yes. I just want to thank you Setareki, I recall some of the discussion, when I ask you the question whether you are and architect just to qualify a statement by my colleague but I thank you for your submission. I think your submission was around the GCC framework and some other point around your conclusion was around the Great Council of Chief and affairs and decision.

So maybe just to clarify, for the record Spear the Sun, can you tell us a bit more about that, please? No, we...

Mr. Cokanasiga: Spear Sun is my... My name is Setareki Cokanasiga I'm named after Mr. Valenitabua's grandfather. So, if I put it in English, it will be Spear Sun. I have a digital platform. I actually am an architect of my own digital platform. And I run my own digital business. It's called Spear the Sun. So, you're really from the days where we used to have the discussions. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Secretary, we have gone through your submission with you. A number of matters which you have raised have already been raised before us. Now we see that you are concentrating on the GCC. That has been dealt with. You are not the first who is giving us submissions in relation to that.

We're just curious about your recommendation on amend... This is on page two. Amend the Supremacy Clause to override immunity. We have the Supremacy Clause in Section 2. The Constitution is the supreme law of the land. You are submitting that that Supremacy Clause is to be amended so that it overrides the immunity provision in Chapter 10 of the Constitution. How do you suppose we can go about that?

Mr. Cokanasiga: Amend the Supremacy Clause to override immunity. This is the immunity provision in Chapter 10, Section 157 to 159. To amend the Supremacy of this clause, the Immunity Clause, Jone Vakarisi who died in military custody last week, is going to be buried in Lovoni Village tomorrow. From his case, we can see the constitutional crisis of GCC.

Every governing law is contradicting towards each other. Chapter 2 of... Chapter 1 of Foundation Principle and Rights regarding Jone Vakarisi's Bill of Rights and the immunity provision, Chapter 10, Section 157, protects the soldiers from Jone Vakarisi for them to... it protects them from the April 13 post of the Republic of Fiji military force regarding their joint operation. So, there is a security detail regarding all the citizens of Fiji.

And this immunity, together with Chapter, with the Bill of Rights, this immunity and... the Bill of Rights and the immunity provision, they seem to head on to each other. There we need to have a supremacy. As the supremacy law of the land, this immunity needs to be amended.

Mr. Beg: Setareki, can I ask a question then? Where do you think it fits then? Where do you think it should sit? That overriding law, where do you think it should sit?

Mr. Cokanasiga: At the moment, we still have a joint operation, military and police, Republic of Fiji military force and Fiji police force joint operation. From the 13th of April till today, they haven't put any oversight, any timeline to when will this operation will end. And also, I've been waiting for them to come here for you guys to present a submission regarding this immunity provision. Then only I can answer your question, Mr. Beg.

Mr. Beg: I just thought you might have an opinion on that. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. That brings us to the end of our consultation for this afternoon. I see that you would have travelled from Navosa?

Mr. Cokanasiga: I'm staying in Suva Mr. Valenitabua.

Mr. Valenitabua: So that brings us to the end of this consultation session. Vinaka Vakalevu.

4 – Executive	Sec. 131, 157	PM's Office, Home Affairs, Justice	State Services Decree 2009; Public Service Act; Public Order Act [Cap. 20]	Emergency powers override civil service protections and weaken checks and balances.
5 – Judiciary	Sec. 105, 106	Justice, Home Affairs	Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009; Administration of Justice Act	Executive influence undermines judicial independence in rights cases.
6 – State Services	Sec. 131–133	Home Affairs, Rural Development, Transport	Police Act [Cap. 85]; Military Forces Act [Cap. 81]; Land Transport Act	Assembly and movement rights curtailed under broad policing powers.
7 – Accountability	Sec. 149, 150	Finance, Housing,	Leadership Code Decree 2007;	Weak enforcement of leadership code

		Commerce	Finance Management Act; Housing Authority Act	enables corruption, undermining socio-economic rights.
8 – Finance	Sec. 151, 152	Finance, Health, Education, Housing	Finance Management Act; Public Health Act; Education Act; Housing Authority Act	Budgetary discretion allows cuts to essential services, breaching constitutional guarantees.
9 – Emergency Powers	Sec. 157	Information, Justice, Home Affairs	Public Emergency Regulations 2009; Public Order Act [Cap. 20]; Media Industry Development Decree 2010	Freedom of speech, movement, and assembly curtailed.
10 – Immunity	Sec. 155–156	PM's Office, Justice	Immunity Decree 2010	Blocks prosecution of human rights abuses committed during coups.
11 – Amendment	Sec. 160	PM's Office, Justice	Constitution Amendment Act provisions	High thresholds restrict democratic reform.
12 – Transitional	Sec. 161–163	All ministries, esp. Information, Justice, Housing	Transitional Decrees; Media Industry Development Decree; Housing Authority Act	Old decrees remain valid even when they violate rights.

Notes on Decrees Still in Force (2026)

Under Sections 161–163 of the 2013 Constitution of the Republic of Fiji, all decrees and promulgations enacted by the military regime between 2006 and 2013 remain in force unless specifically repealed or replaced by an Act of Parliament. As of 2026, several key decrees continue to operate and have significant implications for constitutional rights and governance. These include:

- Media Industry Development Decree 2010
- State Services Decree 2009
- Public Emergency Regulations 2009
- Immunity Decree 2010
- Leadership Code Decree 2007
- Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009

These decrees often override or conflict with constitutional guarantees, particularly in areas of media freedom, civil service independence, emergency powers, and accountability. Their continued enforcement underscores the need for comprehensive legal harmonization with the Constitution.

Briefing Note: Constitutional Audit Recommendations

This briefing note summarizes the key findings of the constitutional audit of the 2013 Fijian Constitution, focusing on contradictions between constitutional guarantees and existing legal instruments. The audit highlights six major areas of concern:

1. Secularism: Tensions exist between the constitutional commitment to secularism and religious influences in governance.
2. Socio-Economic Rights: Sections 31, 38, and 41 guarantee rights to education, health, and housing, yet implementation remains inconsistent.
3. Judicial Independence: Sections 105–106 provide for an independent judiciary, but overlapping decrees compromise this independence.
4. Emergency Powers: Section 157 grants broad emergency powers that risk undermining civil liberties.
5. Immunity Provisions: Sections 155–156 provide sweeping immunity for past actions, limiting accountability.
6. Transitional Decrees: Several military-era decrees remain in force, contradicting democratic principles.

Key decrees still in effect include:
- Media Industry Development Decree 2010
- State Services Decree 2009
- Public Emergency Regulations 2009
- Immunity Decree 2010
- Leadership Code Decree 2007
- Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009

Prepared by Setareki Cokanasiga, Founder of SPEARTHESUN

Six Key Recommendations

Limit emergency powers	Section 157
Remove immunity provisions	Sections 155–156
Strengthen judicial independence	Sections 105–106
Enforce socio-economic rights	Sections 31, 38, 41
Audit and align decrees
Protect indigenous rights	Section 28

Executive Summary: Constitutional Audit of the 2013 Fijian Constitution Against Ministerial Mandates

Key Contradictions

- - Sec. 4 – Secular State: Curriculum reforms under the Education Act and iTaukei Affairs Act clash with indigenous and religious practices.
- - Sec. 31, 38, 41 – Socio-Economic Rights: Rights to education, housing, and health are undermined by decrees and budgetary discretion.
- - Sec. 105–106 – Judiciary: Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009 enables executive influence over judicial appointments.
- - Sec. 131 & 157 – Executive & Emergency Powers: State Services Decree 2009 and Public Order Act override civil service protections and restrict freedoms.
- - Sec. 155–156 – Immunity: Immunity Decree 2010 blocks accountability for past abuses.
- - Sec. 161–163 – Transitional Provisions: Old decrees remain valid, including those that contradict rights guarantees.

Decrees Still in Force (2026)

- - Media Industry Development Decree 2010
- - State Services Decree 2009
- - Public Emergency Regulations 2009
- - Immunity Decree 2010
- - Leadership Code Decree 2007
- - Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009

Recommendations

1. 1. Limit Emergency Powers: Amend Sec. 157 to prevent arbitrary suspension of rights.
2. 2. Remove Immunity Provisions: Repeal Sec. 155–156 to restore accountability.
3. 3. Strengthen Judicial Independence: Reform Sec. 105–106 to ensure impartial appointments.
4. 4. Enforce Socio-Economic Rights: Make rights to housing, health, and education justiciable.
5. 5. Audit & Align Decrees: Repeal or harmonize decrees with constitutional guarantees.
6. 6. Protect Indigenous Rights: Clarify Sec. 28 to safeguard cultural and land rights.

Conclusion

The 2013 Constitution remains weakened by decrees and systemic contradictions. Reform is essential to ensure enforceability, accountability, and protection of democracy and human rights for all Fijians.

The 2013 Constitution remains weakened by decrees and systemic contradictions. Reform is essential to ensure enforceability, accountability, and protection of democracy and human rights for all Fijians.

Constitutional Audit of the 2013 Fijian Constitution Against Ministerial Mandates

Introduction

The 2013 Constitution of Fiji, comprising 173 sections across 12 chapters, establishes the supreme law of the Republic. While it recognizes a broad range of civil, political, and socio-economic rights, its limitation clauses, emergency powers, and immunity provisions weaken enforcement. This submission compares the Constitution with the mandates of Fiji's 20 ministries, identifying contradictions, legal loopholes, and potential human rights violations.

Chapter-by-Chapter Analysis with Ministry Links

Chapter 1 – The State

Issue: Sec. 4 – Secular State

Affected Ministries: Education, iTaukei Affairs, Multi-Ethnic Affairs

Contradiction: Curriculum reforms and cultural governance under the Education Act [Cap. 262], iTaukei Affairs Act [Cap. 120], and Multi-Ethnic Affairs Decree may conflict with constitutional secularism, diluting indigenous and religious practices.

Chapter 2 – Bill of Rights

Issue: Sec. 6, 31, 33, 38, 41 – Socio-Economic Rights

Affected Ministries: Information, Housing, Health, Employment

Contradiction: Rights to education, housing, health, and employment are recognized but rendered unenforceable when overridden by decrees such as the Media Industry Development Decree 2010 and budgetary discretion.

Chapter 3 – Parliament

Issue: Sec. 46, 47

Affected Ministries: Finance, Commerce, Public Works

Contradiction: Decrees such as the Finance Management Act and Public Works Decree are enacted without adequate safeguards for socio-economic rights.

Chapter 4 – Executive

Issue: Sec. 131, 157 – Executive & Emergency Powers

Affected Ministries: PM's Office, Home Affairs, Justice

Contradiction: Emergency powers under the State Services Decree 2009 and Public Order Act [Cap. 20] override civil service protections and weaken institutional checks and balances.

Chapter 5 – Judiciary

Issue: Sec. 105, 106 – Judicial Independence

Affected Ministries: Justice, Home Affairs

Contradiction: The Judicial Services Commission Decree 2009 enables executive influence over judicial appointments, undermining independence in rights-related cases.

Chapter 6 – State Services

Issue: Sec. 131–133

Affected Ministries: Home Affairs, Rural Development, Transport

Contradiction: Broad policing powers under the Police Act [Cap. 85] and Military Forces Act [Cap. 81] curtail rights to assembly and freedom of movement.

Chapter 7 – Accountability

Issue: Sec. 149, 150

Affected Ministries: Finance, Housing, Commerce

Contradiction: Weak enforcement of the Leadership Code Decree 2007 enables corruption, undermining socio-economic rights.

Chapter 8 – Finance

Issue: Sec. 151, 152

Affected Ministries: Finance, Health, Education, Housing

Contradiction: Budgetary discretion under the Finance Management Act allows cuts to essential services, breaching constitutional guarantees.

Chapter 9 – Emergency Powers

Issue: Sec. 157

Affected Ministries: Information, Justice, Home Affairs

Contradiction: The Public Emergency Regulations 2009 and Public Order Act [Cap. 20] curtail freedoms of speech, movement, and assembly.

Chapter 10 – Immunity

Issue: Sec. 155–156

Affected Ministries: PM's Office, Justice

Contradiction: The Immunity Decree 2010 blocks prosecution of human rights abuses committed during past coups.

Chapter 11 – Amendment

Issue: Sec. 160

Affected Ministries: PM's Office, Justice

Contradiction: High thresholds for constitutional amendment restrict democratic reform.

Chapter 12 – Transitional

Issue: Sec. 161–163

Affected Ministries: All ministries, especially Information, Justice, Housing

Contradiction: Transitional provisions allow decrees such as the Media Industry Development Decree and others to remain valid even when they violate constitutional rights.

Ministry-Specific Contradictions (Summary Table)

Ministry	Key Constitutional Conflict
PM's Office	Emergency powers override civil service protections.
Finance	Budget cuts undermine socio-economic rights.
Foreign Affairs	Trade deals conflict with environmental protections.
Education	Curriculum reforms clash with religious freedoms.
Health	Resource shortages undermine health guarantees.
Justice	Executive influence undermines judicial independence.
Home Affairs	Deportation powers breach non-discrimination rights.
Information	Media restrictions contradict free speech.

Rural Development	Forced relocations breach housing rights.
Agriculture	Land use undermines indigenous land rights.
Fisheries & Forestry	Logging concessions breach environmental protections.
Tourism	Expansion overrides indigenous land rights.
Employment	Labour disputes curtailed under emergency powers.
Women & Social Protection	Welfare cuts undermine socio-economic rights.
Housing	Labour disputes curtailed under emergency powers.
Public Works	Infrastructure projects override environmental rights.
Commerce	SME policies conflict with fair competition rights.
Youth & Sports	Youth programs lack enforceability.
iTaukei Affairs	National unity clauses override indigenous governance.
Multi-Ethnic Affairs	Ethnic policies clash with equality guarantees.

Recommendations

1. Limit Emergency Powers: Amend Sec. 157 to prevent arbitrary suspension of rights.
2. Remove Immunity Provisions: Repeal Sec. 155–156 to restore accountability.
3. Strengthen Judicial Independence: Reform Sec. 105–106 to ensure impartial appointments.
4. Enforce Socio-Economic Rights: Make rights to housing, health, and education justiciable.
5. Audit & Align Decrees: Repeal or harmonize decrees with constitutional guarantees.
6. Protect Indigenous Rights: Clarify Sec. 28 to safeguard cultural and land rights.

Conclusion

The 2013 Constitution provides a comprehensive framework but contains systemic weaknesses that undermine rights enforcement. Each ministry operates under decrees and acts that dilute constitutional protections. Reform is essential to ensure the Constitution is not only supreme in theory but enforceable in practice, safeguarding democracy, equality, and human rights for all Fijians.

Rainbow Pride Foundation (Chrisopher L)

Rainbow Pride Foundation
Time:10.12am-11.10am
Date: 29-4-2026

Mr. Valenitabua: Good morning Mr. Lutukivuya from Rainbow Pride Foundation. It is with great pleasure that we welcome you before the Constitutional Review Commission on behalf of Chair and the Commissioners. We thank you for accepting our invitation and coming forward to make submissions before the Commission today.

Before we start, I will go through some housekeeping matters. If you wish to make a submission or speak you will have to press the right side of the panel in front of you to speak and then press the same side to turn the mic off. After this Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they are trying to undertake and also the Commissioners will either introduce themselves or Chair will introduce them.

After that we kindly request if you could also introduce yourself. This is for the record, the transcript.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Lutukivuya, welcome. Thank you for turning up this morning. In response to the invitation that was sent we know that we have had a number of deferments in relation to the consultation from your association, your foundation. However, we are glad that you have managed this morning to appear before this Commission.

The Commission has been established to review the 2013 Constitution. We are not, or it is not part of our task to produce a new one, no. We are only tasked to prepare an amended one which we will then forward to His Excellency the President.

From there it will have to go to Cabinet and then the legal process of law making takes over. So, our task is only to listen to submissions from citizens of this country, from the people of Fiji and record these submissions, record your thoughts, your views, your expectations, your recommendations.

Record those and then in the end we will have to deliberate on all these matters that we have collected from the people of Fiji and then work on it, write a report and God willing we will have a Constitutional amendment or an amended Constitution.

So, we are glad that you are here this morning. By way of introduction of your commissioners we have got name tags in front of us. However, I would just like to introduce Mr. Conway who is on the far right, Conway Beg.

We have got Commissioner Mere Nailatikau or Merewalesi Nailatikau, you might be familiar with her. On my left is Dr. Neelesh Gounder from USP and further left is Dr. Unaisi Baba from the Fiji National University. I am Sevuloni Valenitabua, the Chairperson.

One of us is not here this morning, Dr. John Fatiaki. So please pardon, excuse his absence. Now with those words of welcome we will pass the mic to you and you can introduce yourself and also proceed with your submissions.

Mr. Lutukivuya: Sa yadra Vinaka Sara. A very good morning, a warm good morning to everybody, to the panel. First of all, introducing myself, Christopher Lutukivuya, a LGBTIQ, HIV and mental health advocate in the country. I do apologies for the late, the last-minute change in the representations of the submission, who was going to submit our submission today.

So, with that being said, in introducing my submission today or the organization's submission today, you know the Rainbow Pride Foundation is an organization that looks after LGBTIQ health and rights in the country, therefore would like to also put forth this, to submit this contribution to the Constitutional Review Committee in support of the Constitution that reflects dignity, equality and live realities of people in Fiji.

So, people of diverse sexual orientation, gender identity, expression and sex characteristics understand the importance of respecting every person regardless of their ethnicity, religious belief, gender or sexual orientation.

We believe strongly in the values of respect, unity, family, tradition and culture that shapes Fiji as a nation. Recognition of diversity does not weaken the value. It strengthens them by ensuring that every citizen is treated with fairness, dignity and compassion.

As a community-led organization working on the intersection of human rights, HIV response, public health and social justice, the Rainbow Pride Foundation works closely with people of diverse SOGIESC across the country in Fiji.

So, including those who continue to face discrimination, exclusion and unequal treatment in everyday life. The Constitution should affirm that every person regardless of their sexual orientation, gender identity and gender expression or sex characteristics has equal dignity, equal protection and equal opportunity before the law.

Why constitutional recognition matters to us. Many people of diverse SOGIESC in Fiji continue to experience discrimination in employment and in workplace, unequal treatment in healthcare services and settings, bullying and exclusion from school and university, family rejections and homeless, harassment by service providers, violence and threat in community, barrier in accessing justice and police protection, exclusion from leadership and decision-making spaces, stigma with HIV testing, treatment and social services. Although, legal protections exist in some areas.

Constitutional silence creates uncertainty, weak enforcement and inconsistent protection. Without clear constitutional recognition people of diverse SOGIESC remain vulnerable to discrimination that affect not only their human right but health outcomes as well, economic participation, education access and national development. Therefore, recognition is not about special right, it's about equal right.

Existing constitutional principle should be strengthened from our view. The constitution already upholds important principle, equality, non-discrimination, dignity, privacy, freedom from degrading treatment, access to justice and freedom of expression and association. So, this principle should be strengthened through clear protections of explicitly including sexual orientation, gender identity and expression and sexual characteristic.

Explicit recognition improves legal clarity and ensure institution can properly uphold the right of every citizen. Therefore, this submission is important for a transgender person whose legal identity do not align with their lived reality. Intersex person facing medical and legal invisibility.

Young people of diverse SOGIESC vulnerable to abuse and exclusion and people excluded from family, faith and community support because of who they are. So, our key recommendations are strengthening non-discrimination protections and strengthen positive obligation. The constitution should explicitly prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression and sexual characteristic.

The protection should apply across employment, education, healthcare, housing, access to public service, law enforcement, government institution, humanitarian response and disaster recovery system. This strengthens fairness, accountability and equal treatment for all citizens.

Recognitions of the human dignity and personal identity. The constitution should affirm that every person has the right to dignity, bodily autonomy, privacy and personal identity. This includes protections for transgender, gender diverse and intersex from discrimination, degrading treatment and forced disclosure and harmful institutional practices.

This also acknowledges the intersectionality and multiple dimensions of discrimination for SOGIESC as diverse people who are member of group that face unique challenge, layered discrimination, iTaukei with disability and also those who lives in rural maritime area.

Recognitions of identity helps improve access to healthcare, mental health outcome, school retention, employment opportunities, legal protections and community safety and belonging. Protections from violence, harmful practices and abuse.

Constitutional safeguards should ensure protection from hate-based violence, forced family rejection, coerced or abusive practices, harmful conversion effort, discrimination in policing and justice system and also abuse within the institution, school or workplace.

No citizen should live in fear because of who they are. And also strengthen right to privacy that introduce protections against unauthorized disclosure of SOGIESC status in both physical and digital spaces.

Equal access to health and social services. The constitution should affirm equal access to healthcare services, HIV prevention, testing and care, sexual and reproductive health and services, mental health and psychological support, a social protection system, legal aid and justice services. Stigma and discrimination in health and social system creates serious public and development risk. Constitutional clarity supports stronger outcome in these circumstances.

Inclusive civic participation and presentation. People of the diverse SOGIESC should be recognized as full participant of national life, including leadership and governance, public services, policy consultants, disaster preparedness and humanitarian responses, climate resilient planning, youth development and community national development. No community should be invisible to national planning or excluded from decision that affects their life.

Clarification on marriage. The Rainbow Pride Foundation wishes to clear that this submission is not advocating for constitutional recognition of marriage. The focus of this submission is equal citizenship, protection from discrimination and human dignity, not marriage reform.

The constitution should ensure that people of diverse SOGIESC can live safely, work fairly and access service equally and participate fully in society without fear. Therefore, constitutional inclusion supports national development. Exclusion creates significant economic and social and public health cost, which has been faced so many times.

When people of diverse SOGIESC are excluded, the productivity decreases, mental health burden increases, HIV outcome worsens, education participation drops, trust in the institution weakens and social cohesion suffers.

So, in conclusion, the Rainbow Pride Foundation respectfully urges the Constitutional Review Committee to ensure that Fiji's constitution reflects the dignity, equality and lived realities of people. Recognition of people of diverse SOGIESC is not about creating special rights or division.

It's about ensuring that no citizen is left unprotected. We ask that the Constitution protects without exception, recognizes without prejudice, includes without discrimination and upholds dignity for all. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Vinaka, Mr. Lutukivuya, we heard your submission. Would it be possible to put it down in writing and send it to us please? We'll wait for it so that they could be collated with the other submissions which we have received and are in writing and would make work for the Commission easier. Now I'll start this of.

I've been listening to your oral submission. You've been raising various issues in relation to the subjects of your advocacy. I was looking at or I am looking right now at Section 26 of the Constitution.

You will be aware or you should be aware of Section 26 of the Constitution and the heading is Right to Equality and Freedom from Discrimination. Section 26 has 8 subsections and reading through those 8 subsections, they deal, subsection 1 deals with equal before the law. Section 26.1 says Right to Equal Protection, Treatment and Benefit of the Law.

If we go down to Section 26 of Section 2, it says equality includes the full and equal enjoyment of all rights and freedoms recognized in this chapter or any other written law. And then in subsection 3, it says that a person must not be unlawfully or unfairly discriminated against directly or indirectly on the grounds of his actual or supposed personal characteristics or circumstances including race, culture, ethic, social origin, color, place of origin, sex, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, expressions, birth, primary language, economic or social or health status. I stress health because of the HIV aspect of your submission.

Now if we go down through all of those subsections, Section 36, subsections 1 to 8, the discrimination and equality, they are both addressed in those sections. Protecting citizens of this country from discrimination and conferring on citizens of this country the right to equality before the law.

Now having heard your submissions, you were talking about strengthening, that is the adjective that you've been using, strengthening, you know, these rights, these freedoms and so forth.

How do you propose to this commission, what is your proposal on how we can do it, how can we strengthen it? They are already covered here and I'm sure that they have been practiced.

Look around, all these, the members of the group that you are advocating for, they hold good positions at work and employment, they work in various industries, hotels, offices and so forth. Where do you see the strengthening should be based on and how can we deal with that as commissioners? So, that subsection 26 of the Bill of Rights are more of a declaration to our community.

Mr. Lutukivuya: I'll be very frank; it's not being operationalized as it should. Our community continues to face discrimination, our community tends to face stigma because of their identity, because of their orientation and I do, and I must say that not everybody within my community are of privileged background.

And when they try to escalate or move up to a certain standard or bar, discrimination tends to oppress them, suppress them in a sense in which they lose all dignity in trying to move forward.

So, I'm speaking from lived experience, proposing from lived experience that have been collated on the ground because of the lived realities in which we have been facing for years. Not everybody has equal access to health. As somebody who's been advocating for HIV over the past 12, 13 years, this is the lived realities on the ground.

Transgender women, LGBTIQ individuals are still being discriminated when they enter the health services. So, that's also the proposal that I'm putting forth. How can this committee sort of look at strengthening the Bill of Rights subsection 26? Yes, we were excited when we saw this in the first place, but the fact that we continue to get the same thing that we have been getting over the years, despite the fact that this exists in the constitution, it makes us wonder where's the equality, where's the equal treatment.

So, that's why I'm here today and also asking how can this be strengthened and further operationalized or socialized in a manner that it is understood by everybody.

Ms. Nailatikau: If I may, Chair. Thank you, Mr. Lutukivuya for your submission this morning. I appreciate that it takes a lot of time and energy and effort to collectively put something together, and there are lots of barriers, seen and unseen, to doing the work that you've been doing for many years. Noting that you bring some valuable lived experience relating to mental health, the LGBTIQ community, as well as HIV advocacy. I would really hope that you can encourage others in your community to also make submissions before the commission.

It's part of our job to make sure that we hear these lived experiences as well, and if we do ask questions, it's really just to make sure that we can understand or clarify how this can find a landing spot if it does in the constitution.

I have a question relating to forced disclosure, and a very important part of this process is that it's trusted, is that it is open and transparent so that members of the public can also have the chance to listen to each other and understand what other members of the community are also submitting. And, of course, it's our obligation to be as transparent as possible throughout the process.

That does come up against submittees or members of the public's concerns who may want private or closed sessions, for example. And when you spoke about forced disclosure, I think that also brings to bear the reality and lived stigma that a lot of members of your community live with that you spoke about, and how not everyone is in a state of disclosure or able to publicly disclose their identity when they make submissions, and that we hope shouldn't prohibit them from being able to make submissions as well.

I would just like to hear from you in terms of ways in which processes like this can be bettered in the sense that there is a genuine positive intent to be open and transparent, but at the same time you don't want to put people in difficult positions by contributing to making them feel unsafe in terms of disclosure of identity. I hope that question was clear.

Mr. Lutukivuya: Well, in all honesty, there are those within the community who prefer their lives more quiet. And if I may, because there are those within our community who are married with children and do not want to be known because of their status.

The fact that other people tend to expose them on social media within their community, and it comes back to us as an organization asking us where is the protection, how can we protect them. Now we are sitting here asking how can we strengthen these protections of outing people publicly because of their status. And nobody has to go through that because of their lived realities.

And it's quite sad that there are those who have been pushed out of their family. I've mentioned family so many times within the submissions that I've made. It's because of that as well.

They've been thrown out of their family because of the life that they, because of who they are. And there is poor understanding, despite the fact that we have done so much advocacy, but as I've also mentioned within the submission, we also have our own religious belief and traditional understanding to what is and what should not be. Outing people has been one of the major problems that we have been facing over the years.

Because, I'll just leave it at that because it's a bit emotional talking about trying to put words together to sort of really speak on what exactly is happening on the ground. So, I hope I kind of...

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you Mr. Lutukivuya, I think your contribution has really underscored the importance of allowing members of the public to dictate their; condition to make them; feel safe to make their condition and while transparency is always the main priority members of the public to be Safe and protected and having a safe as its their right as how they want on how they want to be governed, how they see their rights being protected and upheld. I'm sorry about any other issues that my question may have raised, but I do appreciate you underscoring that important point.

Professor Baba: Thank you. Chair, Mr... Sorry, I didn't quite get your name. Uluivuya?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Lutukivuya.

Professor Baba: It's a very nice name. Lutukivuya. Is HIV covered here? HIV patients, are they covered here in your disclosures?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Yeah.

Professor Baba: Yeah, okay. I thought I'd clarify that. I'm asking for you to just clarify for me, because I find that young people that live around me do not go to nightclubs anymore. I worry that the openness with which my generation live their lives is totally redefined today.

So, what would happen is they have changed their patterns of socializing. The five people would go to each other's houses, or they'd just control the people that they mingle with. In the long term, that constitutes a problem for me as an educator, because they're not mixing with everybody.

They've limited their social circles, if you like, their identities and their possibilities to expand and understand other people, because they're worried about people who are mixing with them that are not disclosing the fact that they are HIV positive.

I just put it to you in terms of moving forward and helping everybody live together, yeah? So, there's 30,000 students in my institution. How do you suppose we don't disclose? And still, because people are young, the urges to be with other people will be there.

So, it constitutes almost a problem in terms of, you want people to be free, you want people to be natural, and have relationships with other people. But where do we tell our children, it's okay, go mix, because the world is no longer like that. The statistics in this country, isn't it highest in the world? So yes, we should produce protection for each other, but the future that we hold educationally is also a future we're responsible for.

Now, I used to work in the American Guam. So, when my girlfriends want to have a boyfriend, they tell them, can I have your health certificate, where you disclose, you know? Like if you have, not even HIV, even NCD, like if you have sugar, you should tell your partner to be. So, we are open to each other before we tie knots, before we sexually engage.

In my eyes on the system, how do you suppose we also tackle that? And you know, how do we, because it's written here to be protective, but HIV for me is an area I'm not sure, as a leader of a big institution, it's the biggest in the Pacific.

We are trying to protect as well, those that are out of non-disclosure. If you want people to go and have relationships, yes, it makes people natural and normal, and it doesn't matter who they choose, in my view.

But the non-disclosure protects who?

Mr. Lutukivuya: The non-disclosure that I was mentioning about is outing people who are LGBTIQ, but would not like to be known. And if we are talking about HIV, we also have the HIV decree which specifically says that you are not allowed to disclose anybody's status without their authorities, and if there is a need to do that, you need permissions from the PS Health or the President.

Professor Baba: You know, the same is in Nauru and other Pacific Island countries, where we have 1,200 people, so you would assume that one person generally has 10 partners?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Yes, and you talk about enjoying freely. The availability of ARV has sort of allowed this to happen, so it suppresses all the virus within the system that you cannot pass it to anybody else.

Professor Baba: Okay, okay, that's the solution. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Good morning, Mr. Lutukivuya. Thank you very much for your presence this morning and for your presentation. I must say it was a very honest and candid presentation.

I also have deep respect for your submission from the perspective of realities. Thank you very much for that. In a number of occasions, you talked about strengthening the principles of the provisions in the Constitution, and the Chair has already read out a long list of provisions that protect people from discrimination against various circumstances.

I also take your point about the gap between what's on the paper and what's practiced on the ground. This is an issue not only emerging from the Constitution, but in other frameworks as well, such as development plans. We have a lot of ideas, but some of those don't materialize at the end of the day.

The things on paper in various policies don't seem to happen on the ground. So, this is a challenge in many other areas as well, but I recognize your point. For us as a Constitutional Review Committee, we will take note of the gap that you have mentioned, that what's on the paper doesn't necessarily always get implemented on the ground.

So, hopefully at the end of the submissions we will be able to converge that that is an issue and make a recommendation for the government to ensure that the provisions that are in the Constitution are actually implemented on the ground and have an impact on the people in terms of their real lives.

But beyond that, is there anything in addition to what is currently there that you want to see in terms of the actual provisions, taking into account the gap between what's on the paper and what's actually implemented? Anything more that you wish to see here? Thank you.

Professor Baba: Chair if I may. I've been sitting here and thinking, just as an example. Institution, I take your point it's not covered. Because the law is one thing but how we put it in rules and rights 'e sega' when I went back with Doctor Neelesh and team, I looked hard at our course outline because In the American system, explicitly we have to put it there.

So, if you have 30,000 students in all university systems, in other words, the Higher Education Commission will regulate this. Every course outline, now we are doing it at FNU. It's only because I said here. You know what I mean? We're too busy. We don't really look at detail. It doesn't cover it.

But if every course outline does what we do in the university system in America, it's called Accommodations EEO. It's actually a section of the Constitution, comes under the 14th Amendment. We're talking about the U.S. Constitution. So as a lecturer, I'm duty bound. Every course outline I produce, one of the pages at the back has accommodations because of EEO or EDA or AAEO.

We are governed. Then you put it there, then you say, for everybody that has blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, that this course will make sure we accommodate them. But it goes back to the EEO thing over here. I haven't seen it here. I don't know how. Maybe chair. Equity provision. It's called EEO in the American system. So, if you are disabled, there's the ADA Act. It all covers that. It's called accommodations. So, I'm taking it that we, at least in my institution, we can do that.

But maybe taking it up. It's the High Education Commission or the regulatory body. Yeah, that's what answers with Dr. Neelesh. Just helping you in terms of institutions. I don't know how that transfer first to schools. It probably it should be there somewhere. Yeah, but I think it's work to be done. It may not appear here because it's already here. But we need to transfer it to the regulations that we have. Over to you, chair.

Mr. Beg: Through you, chair. Can I call me? Can I call you Christopher instead of?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Go ahead.

Mr. Beg: Thank you. I was listening tentatively to your submission. What I hear is the, you know, we have, Fiji is founded on very strong cultural and religious values in one breath. We practice it and, you know, all the different parts of society. But the Constitution protects. In one breath, it applies to all citizens, regardless of your differences.

And obviously, I heard you earlier saying that you love the section of Chapter 2. And it's very clearly defined. But in reality, we're not practicing the Constitution is there, but society is not practicing those values against yourselves or what you're trying to present.

So do you think the society needs to change or, you know, because what I hear is you're happy with what's in the Constitution. But reality, the operational mechanism is not being practiced. Is that right to say that, Christopher?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Yes. Changing society, that'll be a different story altogether. We can only do so much. But the request is strengthening Section 26 of the Bills of Rights. That's probably, that is actually where I'm basing my whole submission from. Because as I've aforementioned, the reality on the ground is not reflected as such. Being protected, non-discrimination clauses.

I am no constitutional, Constitution writer or compiler. But the fact if there is a way that it can speak to institution on how maybe ways and should protect that little bit clause.

Using the mechanics within that clause and put it into their regulations, within their policies. Maybe if there's something that can speak to that to filtrate this down. Because most of the time we're talking up here, people on the ground are suffering.

And if we are to talk about realities, I think the whole pages of books in this room cannot fit them all. Because of what the community has undergone without being truly protected as per Section 26. So, the violation keeps on continuing. The violations of right, the violations of physical harm.
So, these are some of the things that we would like to see being protected. And most of the community are being violated just because of who they are. So that's basically strengthening that protection, strengthening that equality within that section would be really nice.

Mr. Valenitabua: Christopher, Section 26 is there that protects or gives the freedom to equality before the law and freedom from discrimination. And there is Section 24 of the Constitution which gives the right to privacy.

Now you have talked about privacy in relation to members of your group. The confidentiality of communications which should happen in hospitals and our medical clinics and respect for private and family life.

So, as you were saying, Section 24 right to privacy and Section 26 right to equality and freedom from discrimination, they have there the coverage in the Constitution. And it is still not enough.

Now Mr. Conway raised a reason, I should say, which is giving problems or creating problems. I would term it, you know, he said about society. Now I would term it as the prejudices which people have against members of your community. Those prejudices, I don't know how they can be controlled by law. I'm not saying that it can't be done. There might be books written about it.

Mr. Beg: Chair, can I just interrupt there just so that it strengthens your argument. Chapter 5 also plays a role in this, the judiciary, if they want to take it to court.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, I was going to come to that. So, you've got the rights here. The prejudices are there from the people in the hospital, in our various societies. Now there is a section also in the Constitution, which is Section 44, which allows a person whose right has been breached by anybody to go to court and seek redress from the court.

Now I do not know whether that has happened. Again, like you said, some of your members would rather remain, you know, maintain their privacy. We can pass laws, but if we do not remedy the prejudices which are there in society, prejudices by the people is going to be a long ask. We can put proficiency in the Constitution.

I get your point. So that is something that we will have to look at. How to remedy the prejudices. The rights are already protected, but if we are to strengthen, then it's the prejudices, the prejudice which has to be diminished or eradicated. Do you agree with me?

Mr. Lutukivuya: Yes, sir.

Mr. Valenitabua: It's the prejudices that you are talking about. You know, we have lived our experiences. We have seen how some of you, I mean, some of the members of your community have been treated, how they've been spoken to and things like that. It's discriminatory, it's derogatory at times, degrading and so forth, despite the coverage here under Section 24 and Section 26.

So, it's that prejudice that has to be cured here or remedied. Anyone else?

Mr. Beg: If I can just add to that, I think, Christophe, what you're saying about the hospitals, I think society needs to change in that, of accepting that, because we're protected in the Constitution. What I hear you saying is, let that operational mechanism flow. Why do you have to look at us in that view, based on who we are, to be accepted? So basically, that's what I'm hearing.

Mr. Lutukivuya: It's also the same applications when we make a report to the police station. So, this is why I'm asking equality, this is why I'm asking equity, this is why I'm asking fairness. Other people would be served first. One LGBTIQ, full on make-up, would be sitting on the corner half a day before somebody come and take their report or their statement.

So, why can't we be treated the same? That's all I'm asking. It's provided within the Constitution 5, 2, 26, 25, but the fact that it is not being filtrated down to the understanding of the institution that exists to protect us, to give us a service, that's something that we're asking. Prejudice does exist, and we cannot control it. But abiding to the working law system that is in the country is something that we could look at.

Professor Baba: Could I help a little bit, Christopher? Are you familiar with Tonga and Samoa? That within the cultural society set up, there is absolute provision for what we call 'Fakalelei and Fakafifinei' n Samoa. So, if I had, for example, five sons, my youngest will be culturally trained to be a girl. They don't have a choice. And it's acceptable because it's part of the cultural make-up of society in Samoa. Just like they can make somebody from Fiji their matai.

See, the cultural set up of Samoa totally is part of that acceptance already. So, when I speak to my Samoan Fakafifine, there's absolute respect for them, because a lot of them, they're actually tutored to be whakafifine, even though they were born to be men in the first place. But culturally, they were trained to be ladies.

And very often, they're better at playing the woman's role. That's in Samoa. Now in Tonga, they wouldn't call them whakafifine, and there's a reason. They call them Fhakalete. It's also the same kind of respect, but there is a cultural role to this. In Fiji, because it's very Melanesian in culture, and the rest of Melanesia, there is no such cultural role.

So ,you will understand that it will take education a lot of time to change the mindsets of people. It's just not part of our psyche. I was alluding to rules and regs of institutions, but I think every ministry could have their rules and regs to accommodate.

In the American system, it's called the 14th Amendment. People don't have a right to do otherwise. We'd have to. Even for soldiers, if they're in my class and they need to go on tour of duty, I go and write a letter and say, when you come back, if you choose to come back straight to me, I will continue. It doesn't absolve you. It doesn't take anything away.

What I'm saying is, that is what Counselor Conway and Chair were alluding to. In a place that does not, because we're very Melanesian, had we been governed by Tonga, maybe it would be different, or Samoa. Samoa is very liberating.

Anybody that knows that lives in Samoa, it's very freeing. You can be yourself, but not here. The Melanesian part of us doesn't allow it. So how do you propose we go through that? Through the Council of Chiefs? That's my question to you. Vinaka

Mr. Valenitabua: Do you want to answer that?

Mr. Lutukivuya: I actually don't want to.

Mr. Valenitabua: That's fine. That's fine.

Mr. Lutukivuya: On the note, I have respect for the Chiefs, despite that they would be the last resort to sort of change this, but I would rather stick with the constitutional provisions that we currently have.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. I think that brings us to the end of our consultation this morning. We have heard, and we will really deal with this in relation to what you have submitted this morning.

It's a huge task. You will understand that because of the prejudices out there. We'll have to find something or find a way to address it. So, thank you very much for coming in this morning.

We've heard you. We will deliberate on your submissions. Please send us a written copy. Thank you.

Rainbow Pride Foundation

DRAFT Submission to the Constitutional Review Committee

Introduction

Rainbow Pride Foundation respectfully submits this contribution to the Constitutional Review Committee in support of a Constitution that reflects the dignity, equality, and lived realities of all people in Fiji.

People of diverse Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity and Expression, and Sex Characteristics (SOGIESC) understand the importance of respecting every person regardless of ethnicity, religious beliefs, gender, or sexual orientation. We believe strongly in the values of respect, unity, family, tradition, and culture that shape Fiji as a nation. Recognition of diversity does not weaken these values—it strengthens them by ensuring that every citizen is treated with fairness, dignity, and compassion.

As a community-led organisation working at the intersection of human rights, HIV response, public health, and social justice, Rainbow Pride Foundation works closely with people of diverse SOGIESC across Fiji, including those who continue to face discrimination, exclusion, and unequal access to opportunities and services.

This submission does not seek constitutional recognition of same-sex marriage. Rather, it seeks constitutional protections that ensure people of diverse SOGIESC are recognised as equal citizens under the law—protected from discrimination, violence, exclusion, and unequal treatment in everyday life.

The Constitution should affirm that every person, regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, or sex characteristics, has equal dignity, equal protection, and equal opportunity before the law.

Why Constitutional Recognition Matters

Many people of diverse SOGIESC in Fiji continue to experience:

- discrimination in employment and workplaces
- unequal treatment in healthcare settings
- bullying and exclusion in schools and universities
- family rejection and homelessness
- harassment by service providers
- violence and threats in communities

- barriers in accessing justice and police protection
- exclusion from leadership and decision-making spaces
- stigma within HIV testing, treatment, and social services

Although legal protections exist in some areas, constitutional silence creates uncertainty, weak enforcement, and inconsistent protection.

Without clear constitutional recognition, people of diverse SOGIESC remain vulnerable to discrimination that affects not only their human rights, but also health outcomes, economic participation, education access, and national development.

Recognition is not about special rights—it is about equal rights.

Existing Constitutional Principles Should Be Strengthened

The Constitution already upholds important principles of:

- equality
- non-discrimination
- dignity
- privacy
- freedom from degrading treatment
- access to justice
- freedom of expression and association

These principles should be strengthened through clearer protections that explicitly include Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity and Expression, and Sex Characteristics (SOGIESC).

Explicit recognition improves legal clarity and ensures institutions can properly uphold rights.

This is particularly important for:

- transgender persons whose legal identity may not align with their lived identity
- intersex persons facing medical and legal invisibility
- young people of diverse SOGIESC vulnerable to abuse and exclusion
- people of diverse SOGIESC living with HIV who face layered stigma and discrimination
- people excluded from family, faith, or community support because of who they are

Key Recommendations

A. Strengthen Non-Discrimination Protections (Strengthening Positive Obligation)

The Constitution should explicitly prohibit discrimination based on:

- sexual orientation
- gender identity
- gender expression
- sex characteristics

This protection should apply across:

- employment
- education
- healthcare
- housing
- access to public services
- law enforcement
- government institutions
- humanitarian response and disaster recovery systems

This strengthens fairness, accountability, and equal treatment for all citizens.

B. Recognition of Human Dignity and Personal Identity

The Constitution should affirm that every person has the right to dignity, bodily autonomy, privacy, and personal identity.

This includes protection for transgender, gender-diverse, and intersex persons from discrimination, degrading treatment, forced disclosure, and harmful institutional practices.

Also Acknowldging the Intersectionality and Multiple Discrimination for SOGIESC diverse people who are also members of other groups that faces unique challenges: Layered Discrimination, Itaukei, Living with Disability and Living in Rural Maritime areas

Recognition of identity helps improve:

- access to healthcare
- mental health outcomes
- school retention
- employment opportunities

- legal protection
- community safety and belonging

C. Protection from Violence, Harmful Practices, and Abuse

Constitutional safeguards should ensure protection from:

- hate-based violence
- forced family rejection
- coercive or abusive practices
- harmful "conversion" efforts
- discrimination in policing and justice systems
- abuse within institutions, schools, or workplaces

No citizen should live in fear because of who they are.

- Strenthen Rights to Privacy that include protection against "unauthorized disclosure of SOGIESC status" in both physical and digital spaces.

D. Equal Access to Health and Social Services

The Constitution should affirm equal access to:

- healthcare services
- HIV prevention, testing, treatment, and care
- sexual and reproductive health services
- mental health and psychosocial support
- social protection systems
- legal aid and justice services

Stigma and discrimination in health and social systems create serious public health and development risks. Constitutional clarity supports stronger national outcomes.

E. Inclusive Civic Participation and Representation

People of diverse SOGIESC should be recognised as full participants in national life, including:

- leadership and governance
- public service

- policy consultation
- disaster preparedness and humanitarian response
- climate resilience planning
- youth development
- community and national development

No community should be invisible in national planning or excluded from decisions that affect their lives.

5. Clarification on Marriage

Rainbow Pride Foundation wishes to clearly state that this submission is not advocating for constitutional recognition of same-sex marriage.

The focus of this submission is equal citizenship, protection from discrimination, and human dignity—not marriage reform.

The Constitution should ensure that people of diverse SOGIESC can live safely, work fairly, access services equally, and participate fully in society without fear.

These are fundamental constitutional rights that exist independently of marriage debates.

6. Constitutional Inclusion Supports National Development

Exclusion creates significant economic, social, and public health costs.

When people of diverse SOGIESC are excluded:

- productivity decreases
- mental health burdens increase
- HIV outcomes worsen
- education participation drops
- poverty and vulnerability increase
- trust in institutions weakens
- social cohesion suffers

Inclusion strengthens national resilience and supports Fiji's commitments to human rights, sustainable development, gender equality, and public health.

A Constitution that protects all people strengthens the nation for everyone.

7. Conclusion

Rainbow Pride Foundation respectfully urges the Constitutional Review Committee to ensure that Fiji's Constitution reflects the dignity, equality, and lived realities of all people.

Recognition of people of diverse SOGIESC is not about creating special rights or division—it is about ensuring that no citizen is left unprotected.

We ask for a Constitution that:

- protects without exception
- recognises without prejudice
- includes without discrimination
- upholds dignity for all

A stronger Constitution is one where every person can belong safely, equally, and with dignity.

Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji
Time: 12.00pm-1.30pm
Date: 29-4-2026

Leighton: Good afternoon Mr. Narayan. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I'll just be going through a few housekeeping matters with you.

Just for the sake of making submissions, you'll have to press the right side of the panel of the mic in front of you to turn the mic on. And once you've finished, you can press the same side to turn the mic off. Following this, the Chair will introduce the work of the Commission that the Commissioner will be undertaking, after which he will then introduce the team or will ask the team to introduce themselves.

We also ask after that if you can introduce yourselves, sir. Just for the record, we thank you very much, sir, and the Sri Sanatan Dharam for accepting our invitation to be here this afternoon.

Mr. Valenitabua: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan. Before I proceed, I'd like to request the Commissioners to introduce themselves. We'll start from the far right, then I'll ask the Commissioners to follow on until we get to the left. Good morning, sir, and welcome.

Mr. Beg: My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession, and I'm happy to sit here and listen to your consultation or your presentation. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Good morning, Mr. Narayan. I'm Merewalesi Nailatikau. I'm a consultant, mostly working in environmental and social safeguarding. Thank you for joining us this afternoon.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan. I'm Dr. John Fatiaki. I'm Rotuman a medical practitioner by profession. Welcome, and we look forward to hearing your submission.

Dr. Gounder: Good afternoon, Mr. Narayan. I'm Neelesh Gounder. I work at USP. Today, I look forward to your submission. Thank you.

Professor Baba: Good afternoon. I'm Unaisi from F.N.U.

Mr. Valenitabua: Good Afternoon Mr. Narayan, Sevuloni Valenitabua, the Chairperson. We have all welcomed you this afternoon. A matter of introduction. You are before the Constitution Review Commission. This commission was established or was called upon by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji.

Cabinet had decided on an amendment or review of the 2013 Constitution, and then we were called upon to be the review team. Thus, the Constitution Review Commission was established. The task that has been given to us is to review the 2013 Constitution, and in doing so, we have to get or collect the views and thoughts and suggestions and recommendations from the population Of Fiji, we've got citizens and we've got our people, all Fijians.

We have to try and gather as much as possible from the population. So, that is why we have been inviting associations and we have been receiving individuals also to come and submit submissions to us before the Commission.

We thank you on behalf of the Commissioners. We thank you for turning up today, and we believe you will be speaking on behalf of the Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji. Yours will be the first Indo-Fijian Association to appear before us, and we're happy that you are here today so that we can hear from a representative of an Indo-Fijian Association.

The task is, as I have mentioned, we'll be here to listen to your submission. Your submission will be recorded fully, word by word. We've got a handsard recorder who's recording everything. And we can tell you now that whatever you submit to us today in relation to what your association thinks or recommends to be included in the Constitution or removed from the Constitution or amended within the Constitution will be considered by this Commission.

That is what we are tasked to do here, record and recommend the changes. And at the end of our timeline, which is the 31st of August 2026, we will have to write a report for His Excellency and together with a draft amended Constitution. And from there, our job ends. The rest of the process will be taken over by His Excellency and Cabinet also. Now, with those few words, we welcome you again, and we are ready to hear from you. I now pass the mic to you, sir.

Mr. Narayan: The Chairperson, the members of the Constitutional Review Committee, distinguished officials and fellow citizens who might be listening to me through this or observing this proceedings, good afternoon to you all Bula Vinaka, Jai Shri Ram, Namaskaram. My name is Ravin Narayan, and I am one of the National Vice-Presidents of the Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji. And first and foremost, I would like to take this opportunity to the Commission that the invitation that was extended to Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji to come out and give the submission or at least voice out their concern of being one of the largest religious organizations in Fiji, representing the descendants of the Girmitiya since 1879. And for that, thank you very much, Vinaka Vakalevu.

The Chairperson, members of the Constitutional Review Committee, I appear before you today on behalf of Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji, who is representing almost 250,000 of the citizens of this country who have Sanatan faith.

We thank the Committee for the opportunity to make oral submissions, and our written submission is before the Commission on table. And today, I will not read that submission that is before you, but however I would just like to be heard on five matters that we consider that is in that submission. So, I'll be taking you through orally on that particular part.

The five matters that we consider most urgent matters that go to the very heart of what kind of Fiji as a nation that we want to become in decades ahead of us. The first and foremost that we are pointing out is the national identity. One people, one nation.

Chairperson, allow me to begin with a simple question, which is, what is a Fijian? The 2013 Constitution answers that question clearly under Section 2, Subsection 1, states, and I quote, all citizens of Fiji shall be known as Fijians. That is the law, and it has been there for the past 13 years. Yet in 2026, members of my commentary, whose ancestors arrived in this country in 1879, who have fought for Fiji, have built Fiji, have built the schools in Fiji, who have paid taxes for the past six generations, and yet we are continued to be called 'vulagi', we are considered outsiders or guests.

In our own homeland country, which we call Fiji. Chairperson, this is not merely an offensive, it is unconstitutional. The Sabha is not asking the committee to write any new laws. We are seeking the committee to enforce the law that already exists. We respectfully propose three small but significant changes. First, retain Section 2, Subsection 1, without delusion.

Second, require all state entities and public officials to refer to citizens only as Fijians without ethnic qualifier. Third, mandate a civic education campaign explaining that Fijian is a civic identity and not an ethnic level. The chairperson sir, New Zealand does this, Canada does this, the United States of America does this, and so can Fiji do this.

We are not asking for any special treatment; we are asking for equal treatment under the constitution onwards. Secondly, sir, our second major point is the language and religious freedom, protecting our sacred mother tongue. The Japanese censor, the second matter concerns the survival of our faith.

For followers of Sanatan Dharam, the Pure language, which is Shudh Hindi, is not a political symbol. It is not a heritage that is kept in the museum. It is a living language of our scriptures, the Ramcharitmanas, the Bhagavad Gita, the Vedas, our prayers, our rituals, and our Aarti.

When a priest chants the Hanuman Chalisa, he does not speak in Fiji Hindi. When our elders recite the Sundarkand of the Ramcharitmanas, they speak in Pure Hindi. If our children cannot learn Pure Hindi, they cannot fully participate in our religious life of our community.

This is not a preference chairperson, that is a theological fact. The current constitution recognizes Fiji Hindi, and rightly so, but it is silent on Pure Hindi. And that silence has been used to exclude Pure Hindi instructions from the state-supported education.

We are not asking to diminish Fiji Hindi, we treasure Fiji Hindi. It is a language of our mothers, our fathers, the market, and the home. But we are asking for the constitution to recognize that Pure Hindi serves a different and equally legitimate purpose.

Our proposal is simple. Amend Section 31, Subsection 3, to include these words, and I quote what we are proposing. The state shall also support the teaching of Pure Hindi as a linguistic language essential to the religious freedom of Sanatan Dharam followers.

Currently, Section 31, Subsection 3 promotes Fiji Hindi. If the state can support Arabic for Muslim Quranic studies, Hebrew for the Jewish, and then the state can support Pure Hindi for the Sanatan worship. Equal protection requires equal accommodation.

The third point that we are pointing out to this commission and bringing before this Honorable Commission is this. Land security. Dignity for the leasehold tenants. The chairperson, the third matter is land. Let me be absolutely clear. The Sabha acknowledges and respects the iTaukei land ownership.

We do not challenge the native title. We do not seek to transfer ownership from the iTaukei hands. But respect must be reciprocal. There are thousands of Sanatan Dharam families in this country who have lived on the same leasehold land for four, five, or even six generations. Their parents have built those houses. Their parents have planted those trees.

They have sank wells, installed irrigation, and have improved this way. And when the land lease expires, they are told to leave. No compensation for the improvements. No security for the future. Just a mere displacement.

The chairperson sir, the current constitution promises a right to housing under Section 37. But that right is qualified by a price, and I quote, within its available resources. In practice, that means no court can enforce it. A displaced family has no remedy.

We propose three changes to that. First, make the right to the housing justifiable and enforceable in court. Second, a mandate minimum lease term of 99 years for families who have occupied the land for more than three generations.

Thirdly, guarantee a fair compensation for permanent improvements. These improvements, these provisions do not take one inch of the iTaukei land. They simply say that if you lease a land to a family for a century, you cannot throw them off that land without nothing. That is not anti-iTaukei That is pro-stability, pro-production, and pro-peace.

The fourth submission that we are making before the Constitutional Review Commission is on the electoral reform and democratic governments. The chairperson sir, the fourth matter concerns how we govern ourselves. The current system of 51 seats elected from a single national constituency has a serious flaw. It shivers the link between the representatives and the communities.

A farmer in Rakiraki cannot tell you who his MP is. A village head in Labasa cannot call their representative. This is not democracy. This is lottery. We propose a mixed system. 30 constituency-based seats where every community has a local representative they know and they can hold accountable.

And 21 proportional seats to maintain national balance. We also propose, and I know this may be controversial, but please let me explain carefully, up to four nominated seats in Parliament for major religious bodies. The Methodist Church of Fiji, the Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji, the Fiji Muslim League, and the Catholic Church.

Chairperson sir, these organizations are not special interests. They are the infrastructure of the Fijian civil society. They run schools. They operate hospitals. They provide social services. Giving them a formal voice in Parliament is not undemocratic, but it is recognizing reality.

And finally, on governance, we strongly support the re-establishment of a Senate, a second chamber with a suspensive veto which staggers 60 attempts, with representation from the Ethiopian traditional leaders, religious bodies, and civil society. A Senate is not an obstacle to democracy. It is the guardian of democracy. Protecting minorities from temporary majorities and ensuring that legislations are properly scrutinized.

So, the fifth that we are proposing is that no more humanity for coups. The chairperson sir, come now to the most difficult matter. Fiji has endured four coups, twice in 1987, 2000, and 2006. After each coup, the next constitution included immunity provisions, protecting those who broke the previous constitution. The Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji says, enough. And it's enough. We are asking for the committee to reopen the past. What is done is done.

But we are asking the committee to bind the future. We propose an unamendable provision in the new constitution, a provision that no future parliament can repeal. And it would say this, no law, no amnesty, no pardon, no statute of limitations shall grant immunity to any person for the acts done in furtherance of an unconstitutional seizure of power.

Any person who participates in support or benefits from such seizure shall be permanently disqualified from holding a public office. The chairperson said, this is not vengeance. This is the architecture of a durable republic.

It says to any potential coup maker, if you break the constitution, you cannot later use this constitution to protect yourself. Fiji has suffered enough from the cycle of seizure, amnesty, and renewed seizure. The committee has the opportunity, this Honourable committee has the opportunity to break that cycle. And I urge the committee to take it.

Sir, in conclusion, the chairperson, members of the committee, I will close with this. The Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji has been part of Fiji for over 140 years. We have built temples; they are still standing. We have educated generations of Fijian children of every ethnicity and faith. We have farmed the land when it was difficult. We have served in public offices when it was dangerous. We have loved this nation with ferocity that only the dispossessed can fully understand. We are not asking for any privilege.

We are not asking for any separate rights. We are asking for equal rights. For the constitution to mean what it says. For our children to be called Fijians. For our sacred language to be protected. For our families to have security on the land. They have worked for generations. For democracy to have checks and balances. And for our nation to finally, once and for all, close the door on coups and immunity. The committee has a historical opportunity. You can give Fiji a constitution that honors every stream of our national life.

The iTaukei, the Girmit descendants, the Rotuman, the European, the Chinese, and the Pacific Islands. All of us who call this nation our home. We trust and we have faith in this commission. And with that, sir, the Sabah stands ready to assist this committee further. And we thank you for your attention and giving us this opportunity to submit. And we stand by for any questions that the commission has.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr. Narayan. Thank you for that submission. We have been given a written version of your submissions. And we'll be looking at that. Now, each time, as we usually do, to ask you questions or to comment, give reflections in relation to your submission. You have raised a number of points. The first one of which is the common name for all Fijians. That has been an issue which has been presented to us by a number of associations and individuals.

The freedom of religion in Section 22, I note that you have included in that the right in relation to Section 31.3. And that is the teaching of pure Hindi. That's a new one. We have always accepted that the Fijian Hindi is sufficient. But now we have another addition to that.

Section 37, the right to housing. And that is an extension from lease, from leases which are granted. Maybe under the state lands provisions or regulations and the iTaukei lands regulations. That is a matter that we'll discuss. And then you've got the electoral reform. Others have also come up with their various division of seats and the electoral system. And the immunity. Difficult one, but we've got submissions in relation to that issue also.

So, with those five, I have summarized the titles or the headings of your submissions this morning. I will not comment for the time being. I'm sure that my learned friends sitting with me here would like to address you on certain matters or on what they think about your submissions and how to address them. Commissioners, please.

Dr. Fatiaki: Mr. Narayan, thank you for your submission. My comments are more along the lines of clarification in respect of some of the specific things that you have spoken about.

I refer, for instance, to the issue of the identity. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I understand that you suggested that we would not only apply the term Fijian as a generic term for all citizens of Fiji, but there was the implication or suggestion that we would actually enforce it, which means that we would require people by law, I presume, to refer to each other as Fijians and no ethnic designation. Am I correct in assuming that?

Mr. Narayan: Yes, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Okay. And by implication, you would therefore, I think the word you used was mandate, which means that we would essentially force people to address each other as Fijians. And obviously, that raises questions about the Bill of Rights issues to do with, you know, people's freedom of expression, freedom of speech and things.

If we are to enforce, I mean, it's a different thing writing into the Constitution the requirement that we're all Fijians, for instance. But I think the issue of mandating it or enforcing it or requiring that we have to address each other using the word Fijian, I don't doubt your intentions are good, but I reflect and ask you to reflect on if we were to do that, then we would conflict with freedom of expression in the Bill of Rights, which is a fundamental freedom.

And I wonder whether you want to take it that far and maybe reflect on your submission or whether you might want to just request for the use of the word Fijian for Fijian citizens without mandating that we must call each other that and if we don't, you know, punitive measures might be taken. That's my first general reflection and I ask you to maybe reflect on it in the context of my comments.

The second one relates to the issue of your suggestion, I think, that there would be seats under the reservation of seats in Parliament. I think you suggested four that would be allocated to designated religious bodies. Am I correct? That's one of the things you suggested. Okay, my issue again with that, am I to then assume that you wish us to withdraw under section four, which refers to the secular state in the 2013 Constitution. You would be therefore suggesting that we would remove that entire section.

That Fiji will no longer be a secular state because obviously as soon as we allocated seats in Parliament for Christian or, you know, Sanatan representative or Hindu, or sorry, Muslim, it would no longer allow us to be a secular state. Am I to presume that that is what you are suggesting?

Mr. Narayan: No, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Could you therefore clarify exactly what you are suggesting? Because if you are suggesting and asking us to incorporate into the Parliamentary make-up four reserved seats that are specifically for religious denominations, by definition that means we are no longer a secular state because the secular state would not permit us to do that. So, we will have to have one or the other. And if that's your submission, then I would suggest that you are also submitting that we remove the secular state provisions. Am I correct in suggesting that?

Mr. Narayan: No, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Could you clarify how this would be compatible then?

Mr. Narayan: Thank you, sir. For that, the first, would you like me to comment on the section four or the first issue that you had raised also? The identity one.

Dr. Fatiaki: Sorry, the first one was more for, like I said, for you to reflect on in the context of what I put out. But the second one I would like some understanding of that if you don't...

Mr. Narayan: The second one that we have submitted to this commission on reservations of the seat, it's not basically to identify or create a non-secular state. However, we are saying to incorporate the religious representation in the Parliament so that all voices of these people through whom the entire Fiji, we know that we are all faith-based and everybody has some faith, they have got some voice in the Parliament. That is basically what we are saying.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for that. Just in the way of clarification, I will read to you exactly what the Senate, sorry, the secular state states. It says, religious liberty as recognized in the Bill of Rights is a founding principle of the state. Religious belief is personal. Religion and the state are separate, which means the state and all persons holding public office must treat all religions equally. The state and all persons holding public office must not dictate any religious belief.

The state and all persons holding public office must not prefer or advance by any means, I presume a parliamentary election would be, any particular religion, religious denomination, religious belief, or religious practice over another or over any non-religious belief.

Now again, if I would just use those sections, immediately you would see that a person who is, for instance, Sikh, who doesn't have a seat in Parliament, may say, well, you are preferring these four religions to be represented in Parliament against my wife, I am a Shinto Buddhist, for instance. Your thoughts?

Mr. Narayan: My, the clarification I believe would have been sorted out had I, the four that we have proposed, I was trying to use it as an example. It was not saying that those four seats should be reserved. My humble apologies, I should have clarified it. It's supposed that all the religions, they have got one voice in Parliament.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Mr. Narayan. I'll let my colleagues carry on.

Dr. Gounder: Yes, thank you, thank you, Chair, and thank you, Mr. Narayan, for your submission this morning. I'm familiar with the Shree Sanatan Dharm Pratinidhi Sabha of Fiji, and I recognize your voice in terms of one of the largest religious organizations in Fiji.

I haven't gone through the written submission, but we will be looking at it later. But based on your presentation this afternoon, I refer to your comment regarding the teaching of conversational Hindi language in the school.

There's been a lot of debate in the last 13 years or so, since the 2013 constitution came into force, and I agree that survival of the Hindu religion actually depends on the teaching of formal Hindi. What I want to argue is that there is an education bill before us. This is an attempt to revise the Education Act.

If you look at Part 5 of the bill, which talks about curriculum development and assessment, and Section 23.3 of the bill, which if passed by Parliament will become our new Education Act, it talks about the National Curriculum and Assessment Authority, which will ensure the curriculum in addition to the standard subjects taught in schools covers the thematic areas, and which mentions the word Hindi is deleted, and it says other languages in Fiji. So, my question is, have you made a submission to the Education Act, the bill, which I believe was widely consulted?

Mr. Narayan: For me, we haven't made it, and I'm unaware that the Sabha had made it or not, because at that time, when this consultation was, I was not present in the country.

Dr. Gounder: Okay, thank you. I think it provides an opportune time for the Sabha also to talk to the Parliament and seek what is the stage, where is the bill in this current process, because it will be important to make changes in the bill, which will have a more forceful effect in terms of implementation at the school level, because the constitution may contain broad provisions.

So, while your argument is recognized in terms of the formal Hindi being taught and moving away from conversational Hindi, that point is recognized. So that is something that I wanted to highlight.

The second point that I want to highlight is just a reflection, which Commissioner Dr. Fatiaki has highlighted. If you talk about, in my view, if you talk about a secular state, and then you talk about seats based on religious organizations, there might be a conflict between secular state argument and seats based on religious grounds.

And I know you are a religious body, you might have some interest, but at the same time, you have to be mindful of the secular state, which talks about equal treatment of all religions, and also at the same time is somebody who does not wish to pray, may have the same freedom. So just be mindful of the fact that you can have a conflict over the secular state. Thank you, Chair.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you for your contributions. I think, as was mentioned, your note on all being the common identifier of Fijians, and I'm thinking about particularly 2.3b, where you talk about the constitutional or legislative directive should require all state entities and public officials to refer to citizens solely as Fijians without ethnic qualifiers. And I think as you noted in your introductory paragraph, you're also talking about how there are often derogatory terms used to refer to people of different identities in Fiji.

I think what I'm reflecting on as well is having to be very careful, as my two fellow commissioners have spoken about, in terms of how ethnic identities are also recorded statistically and census-wise, for example.

And having differentiations in ethnic identifiers can be important for understanding how different communities experience health outcomes, socioeconomic outcomes, etc. So, it's really a thinking-out-loud consideration for me in terms of addressing what you are talking about in terms of being all equal under the law and enjoying rights as citizens of Fiji. And we certainly have heard submissions talking about the common identifier being something very precious to a lot of people who have made submissions, but also about how do you protect ethnic identifiers in ways that are supportive of communities being able to understand their experiences, for instance.

So, just thinking about that delicate balance, ensuring that all are equal under the law, and at the same time, all communities and their unique experiences can be understood and recorded. That's just a point for reflection from me, not requiring an answer. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Mr. Narayan. I probably just only have one comment. There were other comments that were raised by the commissioners, but you know your point about the descendants of the Girmit. And you mentioned in your faith that as part of your qualification – I need to just understand this. Sorry, it's just a qualification.

You made mention that if you don't speak pure Hindi, you're not considered part of our faith. If I speak Fiji Hindi, I'm not considered. Can you qualify that? Because that's what I heard from you.

Mr. Narayan: The words that I had used was that the children will not be able to participate in the rituals of the Sanatan Dharam if you do not know pure Hindi, because the scriptures, the textbooks, and all those are in pure Hindi, and the language that is spoken in temples and ceremonies are pure Hindi. The conversational Fiji Hindi that is used is just outside of a conversation in markets and at home. But when you come to the rituals and ceremonies, those are pure Hindi. My point was that if they do not learn pure Hindi, they won't be able to participate.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Mr. Narayan. But would you think that's a constitutional violation of someone's Fiji Hindi, their rights, if they wanted to participate?

Mr. Narayan: I believe that the part would be participation and being a Sanatan. Participation, what I'm referring to is that you will not be able to read, you will not be able to chant those mantras, you will not be able to perform those ceremonies, because in that actual you have to speak in pure Hindi.

So, if you have got a lack of pure Hindi knowledge and you have got Fiji Hindi, you will be there, but doing the actual ritual, you will not be able to do it, because yourself, you are unable to read those.

Mr. Beg: Forgive me for this, because my mind thinks, like, if over the years, since you said, I think your organization was formally described in 1926, but you say 1879, the Girmits was of all, before India was segregated between Pakistan and India, because it all came under one umbrella.

My point is, over time, Fiji Hindi became its own language. So, I'm just, I'm trying to understand, my forgiveness, forgive me, I don't speak Hindi, which is a really bad trait, because I have some part in that, in my bloodline, but my point is that if the Fiji Hindi speakers over time, that's all they learned, how do you force that in the religion? Is that through your, purely through religious beliefs, what you stand for?

Mr. Narayan: We do not discriminate Fiji Hindi, it is a conversational language. And like you have mentioned, India and Pakistan, in India there are more than 1000 languages in individual states, out of 28 states they speak. But the common language that we are saying that is Hindi, because those scriptures and those textbooks are in Hindi. So, Fiji Hindi is only recognized in Fiji, and it does not have any formal form of textbooks. Even the textbooks that is published by the Ministry of Education for the children, Meri Pahli Pustak, Meri Paheli Pustak, they are all in pure Hindi.

So, the fact would be that, if you lack pure Hindi knowledge, you will not be able to read, or enjoy, the new, which is not published, the Shanti Dutt, or any other Hindi articles that are written. That is what we are saying, that for children to promote Sanatan Dharam, they should at least learn pure Hindi, so that they will be able to read those texts and scriptures.

Mr. Beg: Okay, thank you, I appreciate that, but it doesn't qualify someone to come and sit and observe in your space, anyone.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, sir. If I can just add to that, so what has happened over time, historically is that, there is a Colloquial Hindi that we speak to each other, which developed in the sugarcane fields, and there is a proper Hindi with the sound syntax and literature. So, the religious texts are written in the proper Hindi.

So, over time, most of us know both Hindi, but to be able to effectively read a religious textbook, you need to have learnt real Hindi. So, schools have been teaching the proper Hindi since we started teaching in schools. But the 2013 constitution provides for the conversational Hindi.

If we go down that path, in two or three decades, we may not have any pure Hindi speakers coming out of the schools, which will eventually mean that Hindus will have to read their texts in English rather than in Hindi, which is happening in some countries where there is no provision to be taught. So, I think the point that is being raised is really about that.

And I will quickly highlight one more point. The constitutional making provides an important opportunity to include these points. For example, I don't speak my mother tongue today, because somebody didn't include it in the Education Act of 1926, which made provision for only three languages to be taught in schools, not more than three. So, you can see, it can have a huge implication on people's traditional languages of mother tongue.

So, thank you for highlighting that point. I think it's a very important point. But it's now, especially for me, too late to go back and change that. We have moved on, and Hindi, formal Hindi has kind of become the main language for most Hindus. I hope that clarifies your point and the Commissioner's.

Mr. Valenitabua: In the Constitution, provision is provided for the teaching of Fiji Hindi. If we were to include that pure Hindi, as you have labeled it, would it be sufficient if we just amend that pure Hindi to Hindu, you know, a general term, which can include pure Hindi and Fiji Hindi? The problem, see, with us in the iTaukei, as we call us now, in the iTaukei we've got our different dialects. A person from Nadroga speaks a different dialect from someone from Rewa, where I come from. However, we all have this common dialect, which is the Bauan.

Now, we are not being told that we are to be taught Bauan, to be taught Nadroga dialect, or to be taught the Vanua Levu dialect. It's just vernacular under the Constitution. So, teaching starts at home, where we speak our native or our mother tongue. That is our dialect from where we come from. Even villagers have different dialects in some places. So, the vernacular under the Constitution covers all of that.

And we are not teaching Nadroga dialect as a subject in school, no. It is just the vernacular. Can you wait, please? So, what I'm trying to say is, do we have a common name for these languages? Rather than stating pure Hindi, what else can we add? Or how can we amend that?

Mr. Narayan: The common, basically, with all due respect to what you have said, for the iTaukei's from Nadroga, from Bau, from Vanualevu, even though they speak in their own dialect, but they have the common language that the Bible that has been written in the vernacular for the iTaukei community to read is one. Which is constant, yes. So, everybody reads that. So, for us, we are speaking, having conversation in another language, that is Fiji Hindi. But our texts are written in another language, which is pure Hindi. It's not pure Hindi, people have adopted this pure Hindi, but it's called Shudh Hindi. I would rather call it Shudh Hindi, which would be better.

Not pure Hindi, but Shudh Hindi. That is, it. So, the language that we speak in Fiji, the Fiji Hindi, the textbooks and the other scriptures that are written are from India, which is written in Shudh Hindi.

Mr. Valenitabua: What can be a common name?

Dr. Gounder: So, in my view, correct me if I'm wrong, putting Hindi should be sufficient or do you think we should put, because Hindi in itself we can move on and say that's the proper Hindi that we are teaching. So, here, I know what's creating the confusion is that in the current constitution it's a conversational Hindi, so it goes down to a Hindi which doesn't have its own syntax, its own alphabetical system that we have normally. So, would Hindi be sufficient rather than Shudh Hindi? In my view it should be sufficient, but I want to hear your view.

Mr. Narayan: Yes, it could be sufficient, because if you say Hindi, then Hindi is the recognized one. There is no Fiji Hindi, there is no pure Hindi, it's Hindi.

Dr. Gounder: So, we could just say Hindi should be taught in schools, full stop.

Mr. Narayan: Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Then it depends on the education department and each individual school, you know, what to teach. Same as in the iTaukei language.

Professor Baba: Chair, can I come in? So now, 2022 to 2032, all over the world, Mr. Narayan, it's the decade of languages, indigenous languages. If you're pushing your point, so you're pushing for a reconnect to the Indian subcontinent or continent. So, given that we are all Fiji Islanders, from an education perspective, a whole lot of our children speak Fiji Hindi. We are not allowed to deny them that.

We are actually duty-bound to teach that. Sometimes the technical term for that is Creole, not Fiji Hindi, it's a Creole. It's a mix of India and this country called Viti or Fiji. So, it's a mix of an Indian man from India and a Fijian man from Fiji, the two of them, that's the mix. So, the mix is Creole, which is Hindi, Fiji Hindi.

Just to point out to you that this is a longstanding issue, even at the University of the South Pacific. For those of us who are academics, we're divided in the middle. Because Professor Subramani, for example, was advocating for Fiji Hindi, wrote books on Fiji Hindi, and there's a group of people that just totally refuse to be Fijian in the sense of the word.

So, you can't deny that there is a Creole. So, from an education perspective, a constitution must recognize that. For when we teach in Natabua, when we teach teachers, the both are happening.

So, what we're doing is, we're teaching Fiji Hindi to the ITaukei, if you like, Rotuman's, etc., so that they have an understanding of our people who are descendants of Girmitiya and others. Because when they go to the community, they need to. We're not teaching Fiji Hindi.

But there is a diehard people also in universities that will not recognize the fact that you've been here for 100 years. It constitutes a problem for me, because we kind of have to accept the both, yes? So, you want the both in the constitution, so Hindi is not enough? Just putting Hindi is not enough? And give us, to allow us to be either this or that? The bulk of the Fiji people, do they read Hindi-Hindi or Fiji-Hindi? Because you are duty-bound to develop a language here. You know, when we talk languages, you are duty-bound.

As a group of Indians from India who've settled here, you must create a new language. Because you know what? To say no to that is to deny that this Creole exists. You are not quite from India. You are not quite Fijian. But you are also legitimately, you are Creole. We need Creole, even the Fijians today.

They say they speak Fijian, it's Creole. Yeah, so from an education perspective, what are you saying? You want in the constitution, which one? Just to clarify, I need this, because at Natabua, we fight over this. The lecturers will talk to each other. I don't exactly know what's the problem of the both. You know? Yeah.

Mr. Narayan: Thank you, madam.

Mr. Narayan: As you have said, for me to know that word Creole, the...

Professor Baba: It's the technical term, you're talking about Fiji-Hindi. It's a Creole. It's not a Fiji-Hindi, it's a Creole. It's legitimately a language.

Mr. Narayan: The Fiji-Hindi is mostly used to converse, because it's a mixture of Hindi, it's a mixture of iTaukei, it's a mixture of English words that we converse normally. And not only the Girmit descendants are speaking, the same is being spoken by our iTaukei brothers and sisters.

They have adopted to this Fiji-Hindi to some extent. But the fact is that, madam, if you see, like you have said, that how many populations, out of respectfully, if we have got a population of 300,000, suppose, of Fijians, of Indian descendants, out of that, when the International Hindi Conference took place, there were merely about 250 to 400 people. And in schools, it's very less proportionate of children that are taking up this language.

The reason being that they are taking it as a subject that should assist them to pass. So, if they are not able to learn that they are dropping Hindi and they are adopting to other subjects. And for us, our difficulty is this.

To take Sanatan Dharam ahead with our tradition and culture, we have to preserve that Hindi so that these children of ours, in future they can read those literatures that are there. Because no other literatures, our literatures have been written in Fiji-Hindi. And like as rightly pointed out by Dr. Gounder, that the Fiji-Hindi does not contain grammatical things and all those things. And the Hindi that we are proposing covers that part.

Professor Baba: Just so that you're talking about something that's probably a 60-year-old debate or more, because I've seen professors of Hindi at USP fight over this. One day we launched a book. Somebody wrote it in Indian-Hindi. The professorial team who are Indians from USP, Fiji Indians, did not understand a thing. Do you know which book I'm talking about? Neelesh.

One of our professors produced a book and wrote it in Indian-Hindi, the proper Hindi. And then people were looking around and I'm sitting among them as their student. I was between Satendra Nandan and Subramani. And these are scholars. And they are saying there's nothing wrong with Fiji-Hindi. You haven't created the literature, you haven't created the syntax, the morphology around it. I take that. It's your duty to do it. Because you are from here.

You said in the first sentence you want to be Fijian. Being Fijian constitutes that language. You are not allowed to not give it respect, that's all I'm saying.

As an educator. The students in Natabua, about 5,000 of them, they speak Fiji-Hindi. They are learning the Hindi-Hindi from two people who are over 70. That's the point you're telling me? I just need to understand your point that a religious group would like Indian-Hindi. Proper Hindi. Okay, fine. We'll write that down maybe. Thank you, Chair. I really am trying to understand the push.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. Mr. Narain, I think we have got that point. We'll just have to amend that Fiji-Hindi to a term which covers all Hindi languages. That is the short of it all. Now, I'd just like to comment on Section 35. You had referred to Section 37 of the Constitution. And you referred to it as the land security and right to housing. You started off with the leases. And then the lease, you're asking that it be included in the Constitution.

That leases are to be for a minimum term of 99 years. And then at the end of the 99 years, compensation for permanent improvements are to be paid upon the expiry of the lease. If we consider early in the 1900s, Europeans and later, pardon me for the name, later Indians arrived.

We have seen leases granted to Indians at the time for 50 years, 30 years. Alta and Alto came later. These were the early leases. Now, the policy at the time was to develop the country. Now, it was a matter of trade. Britain stepped in and saw that Fiji could improve economically through trade.

That was why we had rubber plantations, cotton plantations, bananas and so forth. And leases were given for the purpose of this farming. Now, something that was considered at the time was that the population of Fijians, pardon me, I'm going to use that to differentiate between the two, the population of Fijians was small.

So, the power that be at that material time thought we can give out some land on leases so that they can be farmed, cattle, banana, whatever else was there, sugar cane in the West, started in Nausori. We'll give out these lands to be leased at certain periods, for certain terms, 30 to 50 years. If you look at the lease documents from those years, the early 1900s, they were for 30 years, 50 years, Alto and Alta then came in and then there was permanence at 50 years.

Now you are asking, for 99 years, consider at the time the population of Fijians was small. Mataqali members, the numbers were small. Now, the numbers in the Mataqali have increased considerably. Members of the Mataqali are raising disputes about land. They are fighting over land. Do you still think the 99-year leases should be included in the constitution? And on top of that, justiciability.

You have asked that the issues in relation to housing to be justiciable. Are they not justiciable right now? Because people can go to court in relation to leases and housing. What is your comment on that?

Mr. Narayan: Thank you, Chair. The issue you have said that back in 1900s when we started, the leases were 30 or 50. Till date, I believe, the substantive amount of land that are currently in Fiji are farmed by the descendants of the Girmitiya, which are holding on these whole lands. And those lands to be cultivated in a more efficient and productivity level would rather that if the traditional landowners, they give it out on rent, it will mean two things.

It's one, the productivity is increasing. Increased productivity will lead to an economy which will be growing. And in other hands, the landowners, they will be gaining from the rental amount that they will be getting from the ground rent money.

It can be a form of investment for them. And making sure for 99 years, what we are asking is that it gives some form of security for a person to call, to dwell on a land and make it productive and then at least having some form of security to say that this particular piece of land that I'm planting a tree here will give me benefit for the next 99 years. That's what we are saying, just for the security part.

And the second part that the Honorable Chair has asked about, that the remedy. There are remedies that if they are displaced, for the landlord and tenants, they can take. But if a lease is expired, then the tenant does not have any form of ownership or any equitable interest over the particular land, which cannot be brought before the court.

And even the section that we have said that the right to housing, the state is saying that if it is not adequate or it is not in the jurisdiction, they will not assist. So, these farmers that are currently being displaced, so we are having these quotas that are increasing in these corridors and other parts of Viti Levu that we are seeing that the expiry of the land leases, they are coming. Had it been some form of security that, for example, the TLTB would have taken, the lease agreement will increase, so with the increased ground rent.

You increase the ground rent and your lease increases, you dwell on that, but there is a condition that the traditional landowners should also benefit. That is what we are saying about security for the farmers. Thank you.

Professor Baba: I would like to agree with you. You know, I have been walking from Nabouwalu to Labasa. As a vice-chancellor, I strictly make a point to go on the boat to be with the people, to understand how students and their parents' travel. It is not because it is comfortable, it is because it is duty. My last travel really broke my heart, because between Nabouwalu and Labasa, a lot of lands are free now. They overgrown.

The houses are there, but they don't have people. And I am the kind of person, for the 20 years maybe that I was at USP, I would stop and demand roti from people who I know who do roti and get angry if they give me something not roti that they cook. Anyway, you can't do that anymore. Not in Vanualevu. So, I agree with you, because like you, I am not from here. I am a leaseholder.

So, where I have to make business, whether it is Vanualevu or here, I have leasehold land. My one in Lautoka, I have just done the 99-year lease now. It cost me 45, now 15 to change.

But I agree that maybe the problem could be with the landowner, for a study on landowner, if they really are benefiting, how much, and what exactly could the business community and the TLTB do together, because it's not transferring to the Fijian landowner. Something is happening. So, I just want to affirm that I find that sad, because these are lands, from an education perspective, where people demand that we build FNU, for example, we look at populations.

It's called dwindling populations, but the constitution covers that already, no? I mean, the lawyers among us are saying it's covered, but I think the devil is in the detail. It's for us to examine what exactly is TLTB doing in terms of favoring and really productive managing the money given to landowners.

The last time I did an analysis for the Tui Suva and his people, it's almost like 15 cents when it reaches the everyday person. That means that they should really prefer, they would prefer having a forest. They can eat from it, rather than get 15 cents a year. So, it's in the distribution of leases.

No economic development thinker has given us something productive for the landowner. You know, I have stories about FNU, but it's not for this forum. Every landowning piece that we have at FNU, there's 17 spaces, we haven't quite given back a cent. It will change now. There's many ways to give back. It's not happening.

But I would like to agree with you. It bothers me that we can't get the leases renewed, but it also bothers me that no one's done an analysis of the benefits of me sitting in the half acre in Lautoka to the landowner, whether the landowner, how much he gets a year. But thank you. I agree with you on that.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Narayan, I think we have come to the end in relation to the immunity provisions, your submission and the thoughts within that is recorded, and we will consider that. You're not the first one who has said that. It's not community from the past, immunity forward. So that's in the books. Well, thank you very much for this morning or for this afternoon. We will deliberate on all submissions and then write a report and forward it to His Excellency, the President. The government can then take over from there to deal with it according to law. Thank you very much.

WRITTEN SUBMISSION TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

BY THE SHREE SANATAN DHARM PRATHINIDHI SABHA OF FIJI

1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.1 The Shree Sanatan Dharm Prathinidhi Sabha of Fiji ("the Sabha") respectfully makes this written submission to the Constitutional Review Committee ("the Committee").

1.2 The Sabha is the largest Hindu religious organisation in Fiji, representing approximately 250,000 adherents of the Sanatan Dharm faith. For over 140 years, our community has contributed significantly to Fiji's social, cultural, educational, and economic development.

1.3 This submission complements our oral presentation and identifies five priority areas for constitutional reform. These matters are of national importance and concern the foundational principles of identity, equality, governance, and constitutional supremacy.

2.0 NATIONAL IDENTITY: ONE PEOPLE, ONE NAME

2.1 Section 2(1) of the 2013 Constitution provides that "All citizens of Fiji shall be known as Fijians." This provision establishes a unified civic identity.

2.2 Despite this clear constitutional directive, the continued use of terms such as "vulagi" to describe certain citizens undermines both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Such practices perpetuate exclusion and are inconsistent with constitutional supremacy.

2.3 Submissions:

(a) Section 2(1) should be retained without amendment or dilution;

(b) A constitutional or legislative directive should require all State entities and public officials to refer to citizens solely as "Fijians," without ethnic qualifiers;

(c) The State should be constitutionally mandated to implement civic education programmes clarifying that "Fijian" is a civic, not ethnic, identity.

2.4 Comparative Perspective

Jurisdictions such as Canada, New Zealand, and the United States adopt inclusive civic identities that transcend ethnicity, thereby strengthening national unity.

3.0 LANGUAGE AND RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

3.1 Section 22 of the Constitution guarantees freedom of religion, while Section 31 recognises linguistic rights, including Fiji Hindi.

3.2 However, the Constitution does not recognise Pure Hindi (Shuddh Hindi), which is the liturgical language essential to the practice of Sanatan Dharm. This omission has practical consequences for religious transmission and education.

3.3 The ability to understand and engage with sacred texts such as the Ramcharitmanas, Bhagavad Gita, and the Vedas is integral to religious freedom.

3.4 Submissions:

(a) Section 31(3) should be amended to include: "The State shall also support the teaching of Pure Hindi as a liturgical language essential to the religious freedom of Sanatan Dharm followers."

(b) State-supported education frameworks should accommodate the teaching of Pure Hindi where there is demand.

3.5 Legal Basis:

Freedom of religion includes not only belief but also practice, observance, and transmission.

4.0 LAND SECURITY AND THE RIGHT TO HOUSING

4.1 The Sabha recognises and fully respects iTaukei land ownership and does not propose any alteration to native title.

4.2 However, insecurity of tenure for long-term leaseholders has resulted in hardship, displacement, and economic instability for many families who have occupied and developed leased land over generations.

4.3 Section 37 of the Constitution recognises the right to housing but limits its enforceability by qualifying it with "available resources," rendering it largely non-justiciable.

4.4 Submissions:

(a) The right to housing under Section 37 should be made justiciable and enforceable by the courts;

(b) Legislation or constitutional provisions should mandate minimum lease terms of 99 years for families with multi-generational occupation;

(c) There should be a constitutional guarantee of fair compensation for permanent improvements upon lease expiry.

4.5 These measures do not affect land ownership but promote fairness, stability, and economic productivity.

5.0 ELECTORAL REFORM AND DEMOCRATIC GOVERNANCE

5.1 The current electoral system, based on a single national constituency, has weakened the connection between elected representatives and local communities.

5.2 Submissions:

(a) Adoption of a mixed electoral system comprising:

i. Thirty (30) constituency-based seats; and

ii. Twenty-one (21) proportional representation seats;

(b) Consideration of up to four (4) nominated parliamentary seats for major religious organisations representing significant segments of civil society;

(c) Re-establishment of a bicameral legislature through a Senate with:

i. A suspensive veto power;

ii. Staggered six-year terms;

iii. Representation for traditional leaders, religious organisations, and civil society.

5.3 These reforms would enhance accountability, inclusiveness, and institutional checks and balances.

6.0 CONSTITUTIONAL SUPREMACY AND IMMUNITY FROM COUPS

6.1 Fiji's constitutional history has been marked by repeated unconstitutional seizures of power in 1987, 2000, and 2006.

6.2 Subsequent constitutions have included immunity provisions, contributing to a cycle of impunity.

6.3 Submissions:

(a) The Constitution should include an entrenched, unamendable provision stating that:

i. No immunity, amnesty, pardon, or limitation period shall apply to acts undertaken in furtherance of an unconstitutional seizure of power;

ii. Any individual involved in such acts shall be permanently disqualified from holding public office;

(b) This provision should be expressly shielded from amendment.

6.4 This reform is prospective and seeks to deter future unconstitutional actions, thereby strengthening constitutional supremacy and the rule of law.

7.0 CONCLUSION

7.1 The Sabha reiterates that its proposals are not grounded in claims for special treatment, but in the pursuit of equality, dignity, and constitutional fidelity.

7.2 The reforms advanced in this submission aim to:

(a) Strengthen national unity through a shared civic identity;
(b) Protect religious freedom and cultural continuity;
(c) Promote fairness and stability in land tenure;
(d) Enhance democratic governance and accountability; and
(e) Ensure the enduring supremacy of the Constitution.

7.3 Fiji stands at a constitutional crossroads. The Committee has a historic opportunity to craft a framework that reflects the diversity, aspirations, and shared future of all its people.

7.4 The Sabha remains available to assist the Committee further and welcomes any opportunity for clarification or additional submissions.

Fijian Teachers Association (FTA)

Fiji Teachers Association
Date: 29-4-2026

Leighton: Members of the Fiji Teachers Association, on behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I'd like to take this time to show our appreciation for accepting our invitation to make submissions before the Commission. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I'll just be going through a few housekeeping matters to speak with regards to the submissions.

If you can turn the mic on, it's the right panel in front of you on the mic. And once you've spoken, you can just press the same panel to turn the mic off. Following this, the Chair of the Commission, Mr. Valenitabua, will introduce the Commission and the work that they'll be undertaking.

He will then introduce the team, or will ask the team to introduce themselves. Following this, we also ask that you introduce yourselves as well. This is for the recording, transcribing purposes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Bula vinaka, Mr. Uluinaceva, Bula Vinaka Mr. Manumanunitoga. It's a pleasure receiving you this afternoon. Thank you for coming before us, so that you could give us submissions in relation to the Fijian Teachers Association. Before I proceed further, I invite your commissioners to introduce themselves. We'll start from the far right.

Mr. Beg: Bula vinaka, sirs. My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession, and I'm really grateful to be here and to listen to you. Thank you. Vinaka.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon. Welcome to the Constitutional Review Commission. My name is Dr John Fatiaki. I'm a medical practitioner and im a Rotuman. Vinaka.

Dr. Gounder: Good afternoon. My name is Neelesh Gounder. I work at USP. Today I'm here as one of the Commissioners for CRC, and I look forward to receiving your submission this afternoon. Vinaka.

Dr. Baba: Bula vinaka, General Secretary of the FTA, Mr. Paula Manumanunitoga Bula vinaka, Ratu. You know who I am, and good to see you here in front of the CRC. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: Gentlemen, Mr Sevuloni Valenitabua Chairperson of the CRC. We have you here this afternoon. Before we proceed further, I'd like to inform you about the CRC, which is the Constitutional Review Commission. We have been appointed by His Excellency, the President of the Republic of Fiji. The Commission is tasked with reviewing our current Constitution. When I say that we have been tasked to review, it is not a new Constitution that we are looking at.

We have been asked to listen to the members of the population of this country, our people, and get their views on what they think, what they prefer to be included in the Constitution. You would have heard and you would have known that there were complaints about how the 2013 Constitution came into effect. The main complaint was that the majority of the Fijian people did not know about its preparation and its enactment.

There was very little public consultation. Now that was a democratic deficiency, which the team has been asked to remedy. And in order to remedy that democratic deficiency, we have to listen to the people and get their views. That is why we've been sending out invitations to targeted groups or selected groups. And from next week, we will be traveling out of Suva to the Lau group, to Lomaiviti, to Kadavu, to Vanualevu, all around Fiji, so that we can get the widest coverage possible and gather views in relation to what should be, what should not be, what has to remain, what has to be changed in the 2013 Constitution. We've had consultations, more than 20 consultations so far. There will be an additional one. We will gather all submissions and then we will deliberate on them and write a report, lodge that to His Excellency the President with an amended Constitution, if need be. So, it's a big task and you are contributing to that big task this afternoon. I thank you very much for attending. And now I pass the mic to you two gentlemen, first to introduce yourselves and the second to continue with your submissions.

Mr. Paula: Thank you very much, Chairperson of the Commission. My name is Paula Manumanunitoga. I hail from Namosi. I'm the General Secretary of the Fijian Teachers Association and from the outset I would like to just emphasize that we had registered ourselves as the Fijian Teachers Association, but the previous government changed our status to Fiji Teachers Association. I've been General Secretary of the Fijian Teachers Association for seven years now. This is my colleague, Ratu Marika Uluinaceva. We are both teachers by profession. He hails from Rakiraki Yale in Kadavu. He is our Industrial Relations Officer and he's been at FTA longer than my tenure at FTA.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you. You may proceed with your submission.

Mr. Paula: Thank you, Mr. Valenitabua From the outset we know that the 2013 Constitution is here to stay. We would have loved if we had come in with a recommendation that it should be abolished due to many reasons. We thought that the government would pursue a constitution based on the Yashgai Constitution that was a widely consulted constitution throughout Fiji and the two previous constitutions which we had. But since that is not the case, I will start with our formal contribution which is here. We will be giving you a copy when we leave.

First, we will begin by the use of the name Fijian in the preamble. The Fijian name must be unique to indigenous people, that's how we feel. And the Fijians that are entered in the Vola ni Kawabula and they use the Fijian language as their mode of communication and the Fijian culture and traditions, customs and traditions have been used since the beginning of time in Fiji and our recommendation is that the name Fijian be reserved for those who are entered in the Vola ni Kawa Bula as Fijians.

We move on to section 4.0, chapter 1, circular state. We believe in religious liberty as stated in part 1, as recognized in the Bureau of Rights. But we at the Fijian Teachers Association believe that we should somehow in a section of the constitution include that Christianity is the official religion of the state. On chapter 17, freedom of speech, expression and publication, which states every person has a right to freedom of speech, expression, thought, opinion and publication. The Fijian Teachers Association feels that this freedom must be based on fact and truth without slander on other person's races or religion.

On chapter 20, which is a section on the employment relations, which states every person has a right to fair employment practices including human humane treatment and proper working conditions. This has been an ongoing struggle for us as trade unions, as registered trade unions. We feel that we have been doing all the negotiations on behalf of all the workers of this country, especially our union members.

We feel that everything that has been borne out or granted by government as negotiated by unions, union members must benefit and not those who are non-union members. So, only those joining unions will benefit from the negotiations by unions and if possible, for it to be made compulsory for all workers in this country to become union members. There are some countries in the world that have that as included in their workers' rights bill and if they don't become a union member, their pay must be deducted for some of their pay to be directed towards social welfare or for other commitments as government sees right.

On chapter 28, on the rights of ownership and protection of ITaukei, Rotuman and Banaban lands, the Fijian Teachers Association wishes to express its concern that the ownership of the lands only exists on the soil level at below three feet. Nothing below three feet belongs to the indigenous peoples or the owners of the land. What it strongly recommends is the constitution for it to include that the total ownership of the land must also include everything under those three feet or six feet below the level of the ground.

We have reasons for that because when Fiji was ceded to Great Britain, our chiefs ceded everything but when it was returned, it was not returned to the chiefs, it was given to the state. So rightfully, we strongly recommend that that should be done for landowners to own everything under the current land laws which is approximately three feet or six feet under the ground. We also recommend that every recognition and protection of ITaukei cultural identity and group rights that were removed from the 1970 and the 1997 constitution are to be fully restored. We also strongly recommend that the great council of chiefs be given full recognition and respect in the new constitution or the amended constitution. We also have a recommendation for that GCC membership. The GCC must have only 14 permanent seats from provinces including representatives from other ethnicities as well including the Fiji council churches.

On chapter 29, protection of ownership and interests in land, all rights of ownership of traditional land must be returned to the owners. I think I have already stated that. In section 30, all minerals including all minerals and on section 31 is what we had intended to focus in from the starters on the rights to education but we could not ignore the other sections which we had raised earlier.

Every person has a right on section 31, the right to education the right to early childhood education, primary and secondary education and further education. The Fijian Teachers Association recommends the state that the state must provide this equal education opportunity to those also who are facing physical disadvantages like people who live in the far remote rural areas and it must provide availability of internet connections and availability of computers to disadvantaged groups of people who live in squatters and those who live in the outer islands, the maritime and in the interiors. On section 33, the right to work and adjust minimum wage, the Fijian Teachers Association recommends that the state must create employment opportunities for the unemployed and improve economy to increase the minimum wage.

We all understand that there are thousands of people, thousands of foreign workers in our country who have come in from Bangladesh, sort of disadvantaging our groups of people who are unemployed who are out there in the villages and are out there in settlement areas. It is the view of the Fijian Teachers Association that the government must stop recruiting people from overseas and train our own local young people who are school dropouts to fill in the vacant positions in industry. On section 36, the rights to adequate food and water, there has been a lot of complaints from people, especially in the Delanaivesi-Lami area, the shortage of water.

We feel that it should not be only stated in the constitution, that it is the duty of the state to take reasonable measures. It must see that this problem must be solved. It says the state must take reasonable measures within its available resources to achieve the progressive realization of the right of every person to be free from hunger, to have adequate food of acceptance quality, and we strongly recommend that this must be taken seriously by government and not only be put in the constitution as it is.

Section 41 on the rights of children, we all understand that this has been an issue, especially with what the teachers face in schools. Teachers are facing an uphill battle in schools. It is a daily battle from 7am to 4pm. Because children know their rights, they spell it out in front of their teachers clear, they even overdo it by swearing at the teachers, by putting up their hands, throwing the finger, throwing objects at teachers.

This has forced some teachers to find work elsewhere and if you know that the current figures, latest figures of 2025, 800 teachers left this country, resigned, left this country to join work, to probably look for cleaner buses, but there are pushing factors, push factors which are pushing them away. When children are given rights, the parents do seem to take a back step and just allow children to exercise their rights to the full, but rights come with responsibility and the Fijian Teachers Association strongly recommends that the rights of parents to teach a child by corrective behavioral measures or remedial measures in the home, which aligns with cultural practices.

I know the constitution particularly mentions about the cultural, it sort of rules out the cultural path, especially for us indigenous peoples. We use the rod, but this has been ruled out by the constitution and the Fijian Teachers Association feels that the rights of the parents, the rights of the child must not override the rights of the parents. We are all parents, sometimes we give hiding to our children, but we all know what's going to happen if our neighbor picks up the phone and calls the police.

It's going to be us in the cell for a couple of hours and the child is let off. Even though the child was in the wrong, the parent's intention was to teach the child, was to correct his behaviour, so it's going to be the child that's going to be taking over our society instead of the parents. We strongly feel that this must be, that something must be done to you learned commissioners in a way, put in a way that the rights of the child does not override the rights of the parent.

You may have also been following that, especially for us at the Fijian Teachers Association, we've been recommending the reintroduction of the use of corporal punishment only to be at the head of school level because things are getting out of control. I think in one of the sections in this constitution it talks about, I'm sorry if I may not be able to quote, it talks about conventions. We being a signatory to a convention on the rights of the child, I think we should not, like we strongly believe at the Fijian Teachers Association, we should not allow other people to come in control and rule over our own sovereign, how we rule, how we run our country. So, if it is possible, these signatories, these conventions, we could write to them and tell them, tell the United Nations that we are withdrawing our signatory from this particular convention.

On section 48 on the presidential assent, on part 2 it says if the president does not assert to a bill within the period set out in submission, the bill will be taken to have assented to the expiry of that period. So, it means even if the president does not assent to any bill that's passed in parliament, it's still automatically passed even though he doesn't give his assent.

So, we strongly recommend at the Fijian Teachers Association that if the president does not assent to the bill, the bill must be returned to parliament for further discussions or the president must put in writing his intentions or his reasons why he does not want to assent, he does not want to give his consent or give his signature or sign off on that bill. Clearly put in his reasons and for it to be rediscussed at parliament level.

The president has no lawful veto power to be the last authority to stop anything unlawful decided by parliament or stop an unlawful government.

On part 2, the president shall perform ceremonial functions and responsibilities as the commander-in-chief of the Republic of the Fijian Military Forces. We feel that the President must be given powers to order the RFMF or to direct them on certain stance that they probably be taking including if anyone at the RFMF decides to perform a coup again, the president has the authority to stop him and tell him not to. On permanent secretaries, section 127 on the role of permanent secretaries, we are observing at the Ministry of Education how weak our current permanent secretary is.

This is due to an arrogant leader, a leader who does not listen, the Minister of Education, I'm sorry to say that but this is a fact, the Minister of Education is in a big mess now, a bigger mess than what it was in the previous regime. FTA demands, probably recommend that the clause on with agreement or with a concurrence of the minister in the constitution be removed. We want that removed. The permanent secretaries must have the total freedom to run his or her ministry and is guided by policies of the Minister of the Civil Service or as we used to know the Public Service Commission. We've been observing quietly. We've spoke to both of them. There seems to be differences. You may have heard that the previous permanent secretary was forced to leave because in the past the politicians did not have anything. They lay out the policies and the permanent secretaries would run the show. This is the strongest recommendation that we request the commission to consider that that part of the constitution be removed.

Yes, I think that is the conclusion of what we have come here for, to give enough submissions. I would ask if my companion would like to say a few words.

Mr. Uluinaceva: In some of the areas that are really the responsibility of the permanent secretary, just because of that clause with the agreement of the minister, we feel that he is obliged to get the approval of the minister. It can depend on the contract to be renewed, but we don't know whether that is in place. With this constitution, it removes all that has been there before and also the right of the PS to run his business and report to the ministry who will be allowed to assess and also gauge the work of the permanent secretary.

Also, in the conclusion that we have here, we have discussed this a lot, to look at all the constitutions. The one that was produced by Yash Ghai, to us, has been the one that is closest to the one that was done in 2014. With all the situations that we had faced then, it was similar also to the 2013 situation. It could be used as a constitutional review, as a guiding light for reviewing the constitution that we want to review. That's all. I would like to add on to what has been discussed.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you very much, Mr. Manumanunitoga and Mr. Uluinaceva. Thank you for your submissions. We welcome your written submissions, as you have stated at the outset. You have covered a number of sections in our constitution, which the Commission needs to look at. We have heard you, and your submissions are recorded by Hansard reporters, which we have here. We will read your submissions together with what is recorded in relation to your oral submissions. The Commissioners usually ask questions in case there is some clarification which they need from you. I take this time for the Commissioners to ask questions for clarification, if they have any questions. Thank you.

Dr. Baba: Can I start? Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Ratu-Paula and Tuma. Those of us that do education and do it seriously, I think we are hearing you loud and clear. A lot of people, I'm agreeing with you, a lot of people, we have a technical term on this. A lot of people think just because they go to school, they know education. This is a fundamental flaw in society. We call that ethnography minus one. That technical term talks about the situation that we are looking at now. When you look at the Attorney General's office, they generally put a lawyer.

When you look at the health ministry, generally they put a doctor to be the minister. Those two, I think, are equal to the Ministry of Education, one of the biggest in the country. We have divisional heads, we have district heads, we have the Permanent Secretary who is supposed to operationalize from Selina's time to now.

No one is unaware of the lack of movement within that ministry, so the right of the people to do their work is inhibited by that clause. I'd just like to thank you, because as an educator of 40-something years, this is a serious flaw. But other people might say that it's the choice by the Prime Minister of an education minister that doesn't know anything about education, nor experience, is the problem, rather than the clause.

But like you, I've spent the last three years worrying about this situation. I must just thank you for raising it today. I limit my comments on that because that's my area of expertise. If anything at all, there's a big going back in time. Neither of us education specialists have been consulted anyway. So yes, thank you for bringing that up. It's the concurrence that I worry about. Thank you.

Dr. Gounder: Vinaka, colleagues from Fijian Teachers Association, I think we know each other well. I have worked closely with FTA on many occasions, especially your fight in the area of economic rights and issues related to salaries and other conditions. I refer to your presentation on corporal punishment, which is, as an educator, I find it difficult to accept. Children, anyway, must not learn in an environment of fear. And nobody should be inflicted any form of physical abuse, including corporal punishment. Times have certainly changed. We are not the same country we used to be, say, years ago. I also understand that children's behavior patterns have also changed. But we are living in different times. So, the call for corporal punishment goes against the grades of what we see a modern society and a schooling and education system is.

I know you have called for corporal punishment at the head level. But one of the flaws of that system is, what if corporal punishment fails? What's next? That's one fundamental question when it comes to the issue about corporal punishment. So, my question is, how do you see corporal punishment in terms of the rights of the child and the argument that all children should learn in an environment where it provides them safety and security rather than the fear of physical abuse? Thank you.

Mr. Paula: Through you, Chair, I'd just like to say a few words on that. Well, many civil societies in the world have not removed corporal punishment from there. I can name a few. But for us, Fiji, we have just been we have gone too fast. That's how we feel. We have adopted so many policies of countries that have been civilized for hundreds and thousands of years. For us indigenous people, we're still just less, not even 200 years since we got Christianized or civilized, as Europeans say. We strongly feel that we have gone too fast. I know there are rights of children. We would not want to, like the corrective behavioral measure, we even thought of replacing corporal punishment with a term, a corrective behavioral measure. It's a corrective measure to correct behavior. In the school situation, we are not recommending that children, like what used to happen to all of us in the past, we went to school. When you did not attend school, you'd get a hiding. Or if you didn't know your times tables, you would get a hiding. You'd get your head banged with some pieces of equipment. That is not what we are recommending. We're only recommending for behavioral. It's a behavioral measure. It was introduced since the previous regime or probably the other government, the two previous governments brought this into law. We make a study. We make a study of how things have gone. I would recommend that you commissioners take time out in the afternoon, go down to the bus stand in Suva. You stand in a corner somewhere and you observe the behavior of students. And this is the same sort of behavior that's happening in the schools. The punch ups, the bullying, the swearing, even teachers, as I mentioned, get thrown at by children's lunch boxes. I mean, what we're saying is we have gone too fast. We will come to that stage. But this is just a recommendation for you to hear. It's not like we want it to be considered that the rights of the child be curtailed, be controlled, and the rights of the parents, even in the home. Parents, children are misbehaving in the homes. When I'm speaking, how many of us are indigenous peoples? Like, you go to a Fijian home where there is a single mother with so many children and the grandmother is there. Oh, the boy's in that home. And I've been head of a school with 1,300 students. And misbehavior often comes from children who are raised in those sorts of circumstances.

So, if the parents can play their part well, well and good. If they don't, then the child keeps on misbehaving, bullies our child. If your child gets bullied in the school, you'd be angry. So, this is why we're recommending that it stays with the head of school. The law for everything for infliction of corporal punishment or corrective behavioral measure, as I said, must be with the head of school only. It's a kind of deterrent. And we wait for another 100 years. When we get there, then we go slowly. We don't just jump too fast. I mean, just think of our parents. For me, my grandfather was a teacher. My father, a teacher. I am a teacher. So, my children, two of them, have become teachers. So, we are lucky. Think of the villagers that have been raised in the village. It's going too fast. We're just going too fast. That's how we feel. No offense is meant, Dr. Gounder. We are just voicing out our opinions.

Dr. Gounder: I'm happy to hear your views. I was trained as a teacher. My family are teachers. I get to meet teachers all the time. I socialize with teachers. My only concern is that nobody should be inflicted physical abuse for any reason whatsoever. In the education system, corrective measures, in my view, must be sought through counseling and guidance. And the Ministry of Education was here. They made a strong argument about counseling and guidance. In schools, in the national development plan, we work closely with the Ministry of Education. The provision of counseling and guidance, accessibility, provision of counseling and guidance to all schools should be provided. Thank you.

Dr. Baba: Can I clarify a few things, Paula, with you? So, like you, I have only ever just thought all my life. So, I agree with you that behavior has become really bad. I just give an example to the commission because maybe they haven't come across. When I was head of campus in Lautoka, I thought I was looking at animals. They are Fijian, and they are men. I'm sorry. Every year, there are 10 boys in Lautoka that really disrupt all our activities. And I've said it over and over at FNU. However, this is where I ask respectfully that you reconsider. The Ministries of Education all over the Pacific receive a lot of substantive support by aid donors. So, sitting, if I were to sit as a minister, I would say, Paula, your concerns are very good. What can we do about it? Because in 2003, we signed the CRC. That's a convention of the right to children, to the child. You are right. It's from Europe. But it was done for a reason. Because all over the world, there are children that are disempowered by adults who are bullies. And we've seen some of that here.

So, the child, because it's a minor by law, it's under that particular protection. My other concern is when we shake international conventions that we have ratified, Paula, we cease to get the money that we don't have to develop our schools. To pay what you call HEG or PEG, or whatever it's called now. Is it HEG or PEG? Per Child FEG. Yeah, I used to hate that thing. Sounds like a... So, per child, you get money because you have 500 children in your school. You have more FEG money. You can repair the classroom. Because we are developing countries, we can't do this ourselves. So, on a balance, I'm wondering if you can help us at the commission, maybe in your revised submission. How do we move forward? We want discipline.

This behaviour cannot go on. We're far too small as a country to entertain criminal behaviour within our classrooms. And like I said, on the ground, in Natabua, I've spent, what, 10 years now at FNU? 10 Fijian students would almost break down toilets, would punch the policemen while they're sitting on their chair, driving the police car. So, you know, as educators, we are concerned. So, I think that was your position. We feel like we are not being supported by law. Or is there another way to restructure this part of the constitution? Because those of us who do, who are on the interface of law and real life, we are not being helped here. It feels like it. Yeah, there is the CRC. We've ratified it. That's why we get education money. A quarter million for teacher upgrade every year, which hasn't come to us yet. So, yeah, this is a balance that I worry about. But I hear you. Yeah, like a chair.

Mr. Uluinaceva: Chair, can I just add a little bit to the same topic? I think what we are trying to talk about is a more structured discipline process. And the way the constitution is worded, no compromise. If we can have it like something as a last resort, because there are some students that will need that road of correction. Otherwise, if we don't change them, they'll end up in prison. They'll keep on taking on the drugs. And one of the things that can stop them is this discipline. So, what do you think? Don't remove it completely. Have a structured discipline process, but it must be there as a deterrent to stop children from getting worse in their behaviour. That's all I would like to add.

Mr. Beg: Through you, Chair, thank you very much. Enlightening. I just want to say thank you for your presentation and your points that are taken on board. Yeah, I kind of agree with what's being discussed, but I'll go through your written submission. But your points on handling that space with discipline is a tough space and I don't envy, but I agree in some ways it needs to be addressed. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for your submission. My comments are more just along the lines of reflection. I think what you argue passionately about is well taken. I'd like to assure you, certainly for myself as a commissioner, that I have no preconceived ideas about what should come out at the end of our report. I'm very open to accepting any suggestion and I would like to think that when I come to the deliberations at the end of two months, my deliberations will not be governed by my personal opinion about these sorts of issues, but will be actually governed by what I hear from you people and the people of Fiji as what they consider appropriate to be inside the supreme law of the country.

And if I might add, although we've been asked to review the constitution and it is a working document 2013, there is nothing in this constitution that we are not empowered to review and by definition amend, change, except for one particular chapter. So, every single other thing here can be changed and we will consult with you. I can assure you for myself there will be no preconceived stand on any particular issue and that I would like to think that my deliberations will be governed and geared by what my terms of reference are, which is to take the values of the people who make submissions, the people of Fiji who make submissions to this commission in determining what we arrive at. If I might just go more practically to the issue of, for instance, corporal punishment, I'm not going to argue whether it's good or bad. From a practical point of view, corporal punishment was allowed or permitted prior to this constitution. Please, colleagues, correct me if I'm wrong, but my understanding is there wasn't provisions in the previous constitution that prohibited it. If that is the case, I would presume that the provision in this constitution is under the Bill of Rights in respect specifically to the protection of children against unnatural abuse and punishment, the rights of the children.

Let me say categorically that if enough of us felt strongly enough and enough of the public felt strongly enough, then we could remove the rights of the children from the Bill of Rights. It might sound dramatic and drastic, but the point I'm trying to make is this is what constitution making is all about. There are obviously no Bills of Rights for the children in previous constitutions and if our process is to reflect what the people of Fiji want and if that were one of the measures, then if we were to remove that particular right, I notice there's no right for parents, no right for sons or daughters or uncles or aunties.

So, by such an extension, that section could be removed and then it allows you then to manage the opportunity to utilize and I presume it's a tool. Whether I agree or not is not the issue and whether it is actually beneficial or not is not the issue for me. I'm sure there's lots of studies that have been done that demonstrate that. These emotive issues and these are things that the public of Fiji need to talk about amongst themselves.

As a parent, I exercise certain what I consider parental responsibilities within my household. I worry that I infringe upon the rights of my children. Fortunately, none of my children have taken me to court yet or to the police, but I do worry about that and I think reflecting upon that as a parent, I would say to them, you have no rights in my house because all rights belong to me as the father.

Again, these are just general reflections. If we're talking about a country and I beg to differ with my colleague, I do not think that signing onto a convention on children's rights supersedes the constitution, sorry, the supreme law of Fiji. So, if we were to change this, if there was sufficient impetus, sufficient consideration for us to change this and remove this,

I have no doubt that subsequent to that, that will be the law and then we can then address the other issues in respect of complying with international conventions. But I would hope that the constitution will reflect the will of the people and not the will of the international conventions. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Gentlemen, you have made your submissions. You have heard comments from the commission. I recorded your concerns or the contents of your submissions this afternoon. The issues were the Fijian identity, which is now in the constitution. That is noted because it has been raised by a number of other associations and individuals, both on the for side and on the against side, if I may simplify it that way. The circular state, that has been covered by a number of submissions and we take your submission in relation to that. Freedom of expression, that is a new one, where expression has to be based on truth, raising the issue about defamation and all that. But then, most of the time, what you read on Facebook is just that, untruths, spoiling the reputation of people and the reputation of government and all those other bodies. Section 20, members of the union.

We heard that from a well-known person to you, Mr. Felix Anthony, so that is recorded and will be deliberated upon. Ownership of ITaukei land, we have heard concerns even from one of our Indo-Fijian brothers in relation to the ownership of land and the returns to the land owners. Your group rights in relation to the GCC and the group rights of the ITaukei people, I believe we will be hearing more of that. In relation to the reinstatement of the GCC, that has been covered, but in relation to the powers, there are some pros and cons in relation to that. Section 30, right of land owners to a fair share of the royalties, we have heard that. I have already mentioned about this, I missed it, from one of our Indo-Fijian brothers.

The state to create employment opportunities is the first time coming from you, so we will have a look at that. Right to adequate food and water, stated to solve the problem, we will rely on the government on that. It's already in the constitution, the right to life, so food and water come under right to life, as among other things. Right to housing is different because it is provided separately.

The rights of children, that is a big issue now. What is to be done? Fights at the bus stations, there was a fight in Nadi during the weekend, which has been circulated on Facebook. Fights in schools, teachers being assaulted. Now, as a former school teacher, we never had that in our time because of the discipline. There was nothing to stop teachers at the time from disciplining children. Now, I think the issue here, which we might have to look at, is correctional behavioral measure, as you mentioned, versus abuse. There has to be a line drawn there. It's going to be difficult because section 41 of the constitution, subsection 1D, states that children are to be protected from abuse. Neglect harmful cultural practices. Harmful cultural practices, where does it come under that? Any form of violence, inhumane treatment and punishment and hazardous or exploitative labor. So, we have to, in relation to discipline, at the home or in schools, is it correctional behavioral measure or is it abuse? We don't have the answer at this point in time. That is something we have to consider. It is true that discipline among our young population is really bad and is getting worse.

The section 48, assent by the president, we'll have a look at that. Section 81, president to have more powers, we have heard that. And section 127, the PS powers, which is being watered down by ministerial intervention, if I may call it that. So, use of the Yash Ghai constitution as our guideline, we are reading the report from the Yash Ghai guide constitution days. We didn't see the light of day, but we want the reports in relation to that. So, various submissions we have summarized here. We are going to be looking at them. Please send us your written submissions. We will collate that and add them to the submissions which are with us in our record. And we will surely deliberate on these things that you have raised. Having said that, I thank you very much for being here this afternoon and I wish the FTA well in the Fijian. Thank you.

FTA demands the removal of the clause "with agreement of the Minister".
The PS should be allowed to run his/her Ministry and guided by the General Orders and the Policies/Bi Laws of the Ministry of Civil Service.
The Minister is only responsible to assist the PS in his decisions. The PS will be assessed by the Minister and graded for renewal of contract purposes.
This Section 127 part (7) can allow Ministers to micro manage the Ministry which will interfere with PS responsibilities.

CONCLUSION

FTA completely rejects the 2027 constitution as there was no proper consultations done but FTA supports the Yash Qhai Constitution which went through wide consultations to be the guiding constitution for the review of the 2014 Constitution.

Niko Nawaikula (Stand With Niko) (SWN)

Niko Nawaikula
Date: 30-4-2026

Mr. Valenitabua: Good afternoon, Mr. Nawaikula, Mr. Silatolu and Mr. Rabe on behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I would like to take this time to welcome you and thank you for accepting our invitation to make a submission before the Commission. Before we proceed, my name is Leighton Fatiaki, I will just be going through a few housekeeping matters. Just with regards to making submissions, the mics in front of you, if you can press on the right side, the right panel of the mic in front of you to turn the mics on to make your submission and after you have made your submission you can press the same panel to turn the mics off. The Chair will then introduce the work that the Commission is undertaking during this exercise and then he will either introduce the team himself or request that the Commission members introduce themselves. We also request that after the introduction, if your team can also introduce yourselves, this is for the transcription and the record.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon, Mr. Nawaikula and your colleagues. It is my pleasure this afternoon on behalf of the Chairman of the Constitutional Review Commission to preside over this afternoon's session and it is my pleasure to welcome you and your team this afternoon to present to us a submission. Thank you for accepting our invitation, we appreciate it. In the way of a background, I am sure you are aware that we were established by His Excellency the President under the Inquiry Act and our task has been defined in our terms of reference which has been published in the Government Gazette.

Let me just say that number two of the terms of reference very specifically advise us to consult widely and meaningfully with the people of Fiji, all the peoples of Fiji, so that the submissions when put together can encompass the collective view of this country and its peoples. I know you come with a particular interest and I might just allude to the fact that if you refer to our terms of reference, you will find that there are three items specifically out of the twelve that allude specifically to the area of indigenous rights. I am not going to read them out, I am sure you can refer to the necessary areas, but those are obviously a reflection of Government's interest in our addressing those as part of our terms of reference in this review process. I state from the outset that we are independent. We have no directives about what we will come up with. I speak for myself and I have no doubt for my commissioners when I say that we will listen to everything and everybody.

We have obviously our own personal opinions, but in the process that we are embarking on, I can assure you that our job is not to take our personal opinions on anything to determine the outcome. Our job is to listen to you, we the people of Fiji, to express yourselves freely, openly, transparently, to give it due consideration, guided by the restrictions that the Supreme Court may have placed upon us in its ruling and also the terms of reference that we have been given by His Excellency the President. Other than that, every paragraph and clause in the 2013 Constitution is up for review. I want that clear. We have been asked by various people, what is the meaning of this? You already got the 2013 Constitution. Well, I told them, other than the two paragraphs or the section that we were advised we can't touch, we can touch everything else from the first line to the last line.

Whether we have enough time, again, is another issue that we don't address. Our mandate is to complete this task by the 31st of August. We intend to do it. Part of this process will be widespread consultation. We have spent the first four weeks in Suva taking submissions from invited parties that we consider may be held in-house. Subsequent to that, we travel from next week into two teams. One team heads off to Lomaviti, Laos. The other team heads off to Beqa, Vatulele, Levuka, Ovalau, and Kadavu. We meet again in Savusavu and Vanualevu From Savusavu, at every major center, all seven of us will sit. Once we've sat at the major centers, we then divide ourselves. I'm proud to say that I will be heading down south to Nabouwalu in places that I've never seen in my life, all along that coast with my team. The other team heads up to Manawa and other places along the other side of the Vanualevu .

We will meet again in Labasa, where we will all be together. And then from Vanualevu, we will then head off back to Vitilevu, where we will spend five weeks going around the same process, all of us together at each of the major centers, and subsequently divided into two teams to address the more rural and remote communities. We hope to culminate our visits by the end of June. The first week of July sees my colleagues and I on Maryland of Rotuma. And after that, we return here, and I think there may be provision, depending on the Chairman's determination, if we have sufficient time, we may take some more submissions in-house in the first week of July, or the second week of July. The process after that involves our putting together the voices of the people in a meaningful document. We will be assisted by two international constitutional professors. I know Professor Reagan from Australia; Professor is a professor from Texas in the United States.

We also have professional craftsmen. Despite the shortage of time that many people allude to, we are determined to complete this task by the 31st of August. From that point on, we are not going to address anything further, because it's beyond us. Once we've completed and compiled our report and submitted it to the President, the ball is then in the government and the Parliament's court to decide how they proceed with it in the form of an amendment act or whatever, and to undergo the processes that have been defined by the Supreme Court in respect of the two-third parliamentary majority and the 50 plus one referendum majority. Those are my general comments in the way of introduction. Gentlemen, thank you for your patience.

I'd like to introduce my commissioners. Maybe I'll get them to introduce themselves. From my far right, Mr. Beg.

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Presiding Chair, and welcome, Mr. Nawaikula and Mr. Silatolu, and your other... Sorry, I didn't get your name at the end, but welcome, sir. My name is Conway Big. I'm an architect by profession. I'm glad to be in this space and to listen to the public and to everyone here, and look forward to this process with yourselves. Thank you. Thank you, Chair, and good afternoon, gentlemen.

Ms. Nailatikau: I'm Merewalesi Nailatikau, a consultant by profession with a background in public diplomacy and public policy. Thank you. Professor Nabobo.

Dr. Nabobo: Thank you, Chair. It's nice to have you here. We're looking forward to your submission. Mr. Nawaikula and the team.

Dr. Gounder: I'm Neelesh Gounder. I'm an academic by profession, and I look forward to your submission this afternoon. I'm looking forward to hearing from you.

Mr. Valenitabua: Sevuloni Valenitabua, it's a pleasure to see you this afternoon Mr. Nawaikula and the team.

Dr. Fatiaki: Gentlemen, I'm John Charles Fatiaki. I'm a medical practitioner by training, and I'm a Kai Rotuma. I now have the pleasure and privilege to ask you to make your submission. Please, before that, introduce yourselves, and then after we listen to your submission, we may enter into a process of some dialogue, depending on our time. And the floor is over to you now.

Mr. Nawaikula: Thank you. By way of introduction, my name is Niko Nawaikula. I am the president of SWN Advocacy. SWN meaning stand with Niko, and we will be giving our submission today. Thank you.

Mr. Silatolu: My name is Timoci Silatolu. I came because of this committee, and I wish to make submissions.

Mr. Raile: I'm William Raile, member of the SWN. Thank you.

Mr. Nawaikula: We have our copies of our submission here. So, there's a copy each for the commissioners and one for the secretary. I will be submitting on behalf of the advocacy group, and after that, my colleagues may decide to, if they can, add on to that. And those views can be personal, so it can be different.

About SWN, as I said, that's an advocacy group, SWN meaning stand with Niko. It is a non-government organization that was registered in 2021. Before that, we were working very closely with other NGOs, specifically the Fiji Native Tribal Congress. And with the Native Tribal Congress, we made interventions in New York before the floor of the UN General Assembly.

In 2011, 2014, 2015. And around about April or May every year, you have what you call the Permanent Forum for Indigenous Peoples. And there are voluntary funds that you can look into to attend it. And we attended it through TED. And the first one that we attended to in 2011 was through sponsorship of the Melanesian Interest Group in Fiji. So as the name indicates, it discusses issues concerning indigenous peoples around the world. And it happens once every year. We made submissions there specifically to complain about the anti-Taukei laws that were passed by the last regime. But what had happened was that when the last coup happened in 2006, government took over everything, even nationalized the ITLTB and even the Fijian Affairs. So, there was no independent body to speak out for indigenous peoples.

And a few chiefs, Tuicakau, Marama Bale Roko Tui Dreketi, and Mere Samisoni, just decided to form an NGO, which was then the Fijian Native Tribal Congress, to at least speak out. So, we were possibly the only one doing the work that you would have expected the GCC and the Fijian Affairs to do, because they had been nationalized and they come under the control of the government. So that was one of the things we do in that advocacy. We also, on the 16th of August, 2012, managed to travel to Geneva, and very hard we had to look for affairs. I had to go to Australia, work in the tomato fields for them. But we also complained. And we complained before the Human Rights Committee, called CIRD, which is the Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. And I think every fourth year they review governments, and Fiji was reviewed on the 16th of August in 2012.

So, we went there to also complain about these anti iTaukei laws. The one that took away our name, the Surfing Decree, the Land Use Decree, the Minus for the Mahogany. Bearing in mind, of course, that Fiji ratified ILOC 169 in 1998. And by that, Fiji was obliged to recognize all those group rights. Group rights meaning the right to prior and informed consent before you change any legislation. The right to our cultural institutions. So, in August of 2012, we attended there to complain. There's a law, a decree that terminated the GCC at the time. There are many others. I think there's a total of about 81 what we call anti-iTaukei laws. Specifically passed by the last government to take away what we can term our group rights.

And one of the interesting points, if I can say here, was that government was also represented there. And when I came in to submit on behalf of these chiefs, the reply from government. Government always have, at every UN session, government has priority. They don't have to make appointments, they can just come in. So, the submission that they made then, government representative at the time was an individual from, I've forgotten his name.

But he said Fiji, or the government at the time, does not recognize indigenous rights because they are the majority. And the reply that I had always noted from the committee for the elimination said, no, you're wrong. What about Bolivia? What about Venezuela? What you should do is recognize indigenous rights to its fullest extent.

Recognize fundamental human rights. Recognize also the rights of the other community. And the challenge or the task of the government, whoever is in power, is to balance this so that non-topo is the order.

And just to say now, when I come back, there's an example. If you look at TLTB, indigenous people own 91% of the land, but you have that institution to make sure that we have equal access. So even though indigenous people may own 91% of the land, you have this legislation to guarantee equality of access to land. So that's basically that. So, you know, just a point of interest. You can Google CERT 81st Session to see a copy of my submissions.

And you will see the signatures of Terakau, Na marama, and others. You can also see the submission of the government. And you can also search there to find the concluding remarks. And note that the concluding remarks stated by the CERT Committee, which is a human rights committee, was that these legislations, the example that they gave was the legislator that terminated the GCC, was a racist. Racist because by ratifying ILOC 169, Fiji has recognized these as indigenous rights of corporates. And having legislation to terminate those on the basis of their race alone makes them racist. So, this is a point to remember. Well, I'm still talking about SWN.

So locally we engage in a wide range of advocacy to promote justice, human rights, and democracy. So those are our core areas. Earlier in the year, or last year, we had teamed up with other parties, including Unity Party, and others who wanted to challenge the 2013 Constitution. We had very, very good reasons to challenge the Constitution, because therein contains the anchor for the government policy to terminate or annihilate what we may term as indigenous rights or indigenous corporates, and I will go into that.

So, we very eagerly joined whoever was at the time that wanted to go against the Constitution. So, we joined up with Unity Party. There were others from overseas, so we were formulating a way to go to court to challenge it. But that was overtaken by the Supreme Court. When the Supreme Court did so to give its opinion on the 2013 Constitution, we stepped back. But leading up to the decision which they gave in August, SWN advocacy organized a peaceful march against the 2013 Constitution in about July, but the permit was refused. But when your committee was established, immediately after that, we successfully organized a Talanoa session at FNU National Camps. Thanks for that, ma'am. Very successful.

We invited different points of view to come and talk about their views on the 2013 Constitution. After that, recently, currently we've been engaged from after that, we are going down to the level of the Vanua, and we have just recently returned from Rewasa in Saivou Ra and Toga, where we tried to educate the indigenous people and point out to them what exactly their rights or the protection that were given to their culture and cultural identity, cultural institutions that were the mainstay of the 1970 and 1997 Constitution, which the authors of the 2013 Constitution decided to throw away, and to persuade them to please come to your committee to beg or to demand that those be restored. So that is basically about us.

And by way of introduction, let me just say that we will address the committee on how the proposed amendment should incorporate the recognition and protection of the cultural identity, cultural institutions, and the group rights of iTaukei. We limit ourselves to that. We know there are other experts who come here. They know about the separation of powers and all those things. But for us, we limit ourselves to the need to look into that or to restore what were there in the 1970 and 1997 Constitution. First, even way back, because it all started in the deed of cession.

If you look at the deed of cession, you will see that this is a treaty where the whole purpose of that was for the crown to come and an extinguee for the protection of the rights of indigenous people. And the wording of the deed of cession speaks on to that, especially if you look at clause 4 which recognizes the promise of the crown to protect their rights to land. Clause 7 which recognizes the promise of the crown to look after their cultural autonomy.

And we all know, Mr. Koli and I are lawyers, and we know that a treaty does not have any legal right unless those aspects of the treaty are passed on to the domestic law. So clause 4 was passed on into the domestic law by the Native Lands Ordinance of 1882. It became Native Lands Act of 1905. It is still there. It establishes what we call now the Native Lands Commission. And Clause 7 was made into domestic law under the Fijian Affairs Act that establishes the cultural autonomy.

And those were the deeds of cession, 1970 constitution, 1966 says these laws were taboo. No state can change them unless very strictly the principle of prior consent and consultation goes in by the consent through the Senate, which again was repeated in section 185 of the 1997 constitution, which the others of the 2050 constitution threw out. For whatever reason, I don't know. So, we will be addressing you only on those and other related matters.

So, the first point we want to make is that the constitution must reflect the culture of the nation. And we believe that the Fijian culture and identity, including its language, institutions, representation, the foundation culture and identity of Fiji, or what we can call our common identity. So, this must be reflected in the constitution. Not only the constitution, but other aspects of governance.

In New Zealand, for example, it has adopted the bicultural policy that recognizes the need to incorporate Maori language, traditions, and the core government administration. And it's reflected in various state practices, including if they sing the national anthem of New Zealand, they will sing it in English and sing it in Maori. Both New Zealand and Australia struggle to fully reflect biculturalism.

And one reason for that is that they only gave serious thought to the indigenous peoples after Yunchi, basically, or in New Zealand, 1975, when they passed the Waitangi Treaty Act. And these challenges partly arise because both countries only ratified it in 2007. And you can see that Fiji is different.

So Fiji is a different case. They have been recognized because indigenous culture has been recognized since the deed of cession. So, the point we are saying is that whereas those countries are now trying, the move nowadays for the current norm, national norm, is to accept the indigenous identity of a nation to be the indigenous culture of the nation state. And in Fiji, probably why that did not happen was because of the demographic shifts. We became more of a multicultural community, and we are possibly going through that. But the point that we wish to make is that the culture of the common identity or culture of Fiji is the indigenous Fijian culture, and that must be reflected.

And I will get back to that. And how that may be illustrated may be as follows. For example, the Senate should be, we don't have the Senate, but we bring in the great Council of Chiefs right at the center of government station and replace the GCC, the Senate with the GCC.

And when you sing the national anthem, you need not sing it in English. Because our common identity is Fijian, we sing it in the Fijian vernacular. On every announcement, you know, you can see government copying Australia, where they say, before I say this, I acknowledge the owners of the land you stand, but Australia only comes lately.

So, what we might do instead, for every official statement, we start with the Fijian language, because Fijian should be our common identity. So that is the simple point on that, and I will come back to the point where we will be urging the committee to recommend that instead of the Senate, you have the GCC there.

So, I will take that in detail later on. But the second point we want to make is that your amendment or the amendment that you recommend must restore all aspects of recognition and protection of Fijian cultural identity, institution, and group rights that were there in the 1970 and 1997 constitution, which the owners of the 2013 constitution decided to throw away. I think, you know, in the last parliament I always say this is like a social engineering.

But the last government where they tried to remove all your cultural identity to make everybody equal, but it's wrong, it's wrong because you have UNDRIP and ILO 169, those conventions, which says you must maintain the culture and recognize the ethnicity and their different identities. And the task for the government as the committee for human rights said is you balance this to see that none topples the other.

So, we looked at it and we see that altogether there are nine provisions in the 1970 and 1997 constitution that recognize and protect those rights. But there are two provisions in the 1970 which are repeated in the 1997, so you actually have seven. And the first of those is chapter 18, section 185.

This is of the 1997 constitution which they decided to throw away. This one is also a repeat of what was there in section 66 of the 1970 constitution and it concerns, relates to land rights or the law that governs the registration in the VKB for Itaukei. The law that governs their cultural autonomy, which is the Fijian Affairs Act.

The law that governs the administration of their land. And as I explained, they go right back to clause 4 and clause 7 of the deed of session. And they were domesticated to become the Native Land Trust Act, the Native Lands Act, the Fijian Act.

And the provisions of the 1997 constitution says government, whichever government, is not allowed to change or amend this law unless you have the consent of the Senate or the majority of all the GCC members there. And you see that is also consistent with ICC 169 and UNDP, which says you must have prior and informed consent, consultation of the indigenous people before you can change or amend any legislation affecting that. So those were entrenched in section 66, 1970, section 185 of 1997 and removed in 2013 in which we are asking the committee please restore them.

The second one is section 186, talking of the 1997 constitution, which deals with the customary law and customary rights. That is an express recognition in the 1997 constitution of customary law and customary rights. That was also removed and we are asking the committee please restore that.

The, third, chapter 8, which is, section 116 in the 1997 constitution, the constitutional recognition of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga. And fourth, section 90, which is the role of the Bose Levu Vakaturaga to choose the president, etc. Fifth, section 93 of the 1997 constitution, that gives the GCC the role in removing the president and vice president. Also, section 64 of the 1997 constitution, giving the role of the GCC to appoint members to the Senate.

And lastly, section 44. Section 44 deals with social justice and affirmative action. And the government, I think from about since 1987 onwards, have been using this to introduce policies to give

So, we are basically asking the committee to please restore the rights recognized under section 185, which is right to prior informed consent, those ones, 186, and 44. The thing about the GCC, we have a different, we are asking, forget about it, but just bring in the GCC to become the Senate and that will cure all those. So that is our second point.

Asking the committee to please restore everything that were constitutionally recognized for indigenous regions in the 1970 and 1907, but the authors of the 2018 decided to throw it. And how it may be carried out, we submit that if you can expressly recognize UNDRIP and ILOC 169, possibly in the chapter looking at fundamental rights, because fundamental rights deals with individuals, and you have group rights, and we are also asking if there can also be expressed recognition of the minority rights. So those are how the group rights should be reflected, we submit in the proposed amendment.

Now if I come back to the point on the need for the GCC to be brought at the center of governance and the constitution. If you look at the constitution making process, 1970, 1990, 1997, you will see that the authors were almost at pain of trying to bring in the GCC. In the 1970, they didn't even mention it, they only mentioned the appointment. But in the 1997, there's about four provisions dealing with the GCC. So, they were always at pains of trying to bring this into the center of national governance. We are submitting here that this is the time.

But having said that, you will have to consult with the GCC and ask them, because we are proposing here when you do that, you have 14 permanent members, with Rotuma 15 permanent members of the GCC, and with the liberty to invite representatives of other ethnicities, and very important, a representative of the council of churches. Because the role of the GCC or the role of the senate is only a house of review. Politics happens in the parliament.

But parliament, they pass laws only dependent on the numbers. They don't think about morality. They don't think about whether that will affect the right of an ethnic group.

And that's where you need the senate or GCC as we are saying now. But subject to consulting with the GCC, you ask them basically, do you want to have a national role? Do you want to be the chiefs of Fijians and the whole of Fiji? Or do you want to be in that little corner, only to be chiefs of Itaukei? I think if they are mature enough, they will say it's time for us to take on this national role, and we will invite other ethnicities. Because this is all our home, and the chiefs then will be chiefs of Itoki, and chiefs of everyone who lives in Fiji.

That's not the end. I'm not in government, but if I were in government, I would propose it that you already have your regional government, your provinces. Those provinces should look after all ethnicities there, Kaivijti, Kai india, Kai chaina. They should all come to the provincial council. So that is our request. And I know you need to consult with the GCC and tell them, do you think it's the time now for you to be chiefs of the whole of Fiji? Or do you want to sit in your own corner there, in your building there? To be chiefs only of a faction.

But I think they will be mature enough to say this is the time for us to take a national role. So that's on the need to bring the GCC, and I will just now go through another related matters. Amendment must completely replace the 2018 constitution. I hope when the amendment comes, I will not hear even the 2013. So, something like the 1997 constitutional amendment, it was actually amending the 1990, which was a racist constitution. So, I hope it will be called the 2026 constitutional amendment, and thereafter the 2026 constitution for Fiji.

On the immunity provision, we support the GCC's recommendation that the immunity provision must be removed. We know the Supreme Court opinion that the immunity provision cannot be amended. It's an opinion. It's not a coercive order. So, it should not stop you. Also, with the greatest respect, we feel that the Supreme Court opinion is wrong to uphold that a provision of the law that forbids the executive from doing its core role of making and amending laws should be accepted by the Supreme Court.

Sorry to say that you cannot review the decision, you cannot appeal it, but we are suggesting remove the commission and whoever wants to challenge it can take it to court. And also, the immunity provision contradicts the basic maxim that everyone should be equal under the law. What's the point of holding a constitution that says everybody is equal and then you're granting immunity? For one thing, if you want to take it out, take it out into another legislation.

Don't let it be part of this holy book which we call the constitution. We are contributing our very selves in holding up the constitution and swearing upon it. And the next, we are praying that there is a Section 30. It introduces the ownership of minerals by the state. I don't think it was there in the last constitution. You have to look into that, 1997, 1970.

Before that, it only existed at legislative level and it would be wrong to carry this on now especially when the very issue of mining, ownership of the minerals is being debated and discussed. And lastly, on the rights of the children, Section 41, we feel that it is important that a proviso should be there to say that the rights of the child is subject to the parents and the state's right and decision to decide what is in their best interest. And to note that the biggest country in the world, USA, does not ratify the Convention on the Rights of the Children because they feel that parents and the state should have that. So that is the end. And my colleagues might want to add, or might even now or later.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much, Mr. Nawaikula. Thank you for that very lucid and comprehensive explanation and presentation of your submission. Some of us have followed it literally word for word. Some of us have listened to you, enthralled by your knowledge and history of your submission and we thank you for that. I leave the floor open now first to your colleagues if either of them wish to add anything to your submission at this point in time.

Mr. Silatolu: Yes, thank you. I've got my submission, yes, which I will pass on to the... forward it to them. Just on the religious aspect, in 1835 Christianity, Jesus Christ, arrived in our shores and I've been reading papers that there are arguments over it. But if we look at history, we can tell that Christian religion came on our shores first and it brought everything that is now Fiji. That you may consider, talking about which religion to be the main or recognized as these countries, you may take that suggestion that Christianity arrived on our shores first. And war clubs and all that, which is the land on the sea. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much for that. We'll consider that as an additional submission, a private one, specifically in relation to Christianity as a topic. Any others? Okay, there aren't any. Thank you very, very much, gentlemen. I appreciate very much your submission. I leave the floor now to my colleagues who might wish to seek clarification. Let me say from the outset, our job is not to have an opinion on what you give, whether it's right or wrong.

Our job is to listen to what you want, look at the Constitution, see how we can accommodate it in the way of a review, amending it, revising it, altering it, entering extra things to it, withdrawing things from it. That's our role. And most of our comments will be related to maybe clarifying aspects of your submission that may need clarification. But please, we don't hold any opinions at this stage. I leave the floor open to my colleagues. Conway?

Mr. Beg: Thank you, Presiding Chair. Thank you, Mr. Nawaikula. Very comprehensive. Thank you for that. I replayed the wheel when you presented at the FNU as well, so it's nice to kind of go through that, and then it was a consolidated thing. I was interested in your points about 1.3 of your submission, where you made reference to the Kurd and the ILOC, when you said in 1969, because, you know, you're saying that these benchmarks are out there that advocates certain benchmarks that our Bill of Rights that align to that Fiji had signed up to, and what you're saying is in the ILOC, these are benchmarks that we also need to recognize these points that you brought forth. Yeah, fascinating architectural sort of dialogue there, which is great. I understand that. So, thank you. It clarified your point about recognizing that. As you're saying that this, if I hear you correctly, this is not evident in the 2013 Constitution. Thank you for that qualification.

Mr. Nawaikula: Yeah, I think if you look at what we're recommending, we're recommending that you expressly recognize UNDRIP and ILOC 169. You know there's a difference, eh? ILOC 169 has been ratified. Once you ratify it, you're legally obliged. But UNDRIP is still going through that process and has yet to become a convention, and we have suggested that when you recognize that, you also put in that, that in implementation, you must weigh group rights with fundamental rights and the rights and interests of the other, balancing it. Those were the things that were stated in the Human Rights Committee said, and that also I sincerely believe should be the way and policy for any government. And it's good if it can be entrenched in the constitution.

Mr. Beg: Just to qualify that, so that's saying that it's also racial? It's also racial in terms of what wasn't there before. You're saying it's discrimination to your rights?

Mr. Nawaikula: Yes. Thank you for that qualification.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for that, Conway. Just a shared reflection amongst my colleagues. There is an entire chapter in 1997 that is on group rights. That is absent in the 2013 constitution. Just for the information of my colleagues, there is a chapter. I'm sure that one of our colleagues has read it and will be able to refer us to it in future discussions.

Mr. Nawaikula: There is a chapter, and there, I think I referred to it here, but it's stated on top. It's a chapter, but there are only two provisions there. And I think there's one on affirmative action and recognition of customary rules. And just my point on that we were suggesting, on ILOC 169, a provision should expressly mention Fiji's obligation to implement them under its laws and policies subject to those rights being balanced with fundamental human rights and the rights and interests of other communities. Thank you very much, Mr. Nawaikula. And thank you for that magnanimous suggestion that it is a balancing act. And that's the hope, that we get the right balance in our deliberations going forward. Mere, would you like to make a comment?

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you, Presiding Chair, gentlemen. I thought I would simply reflect and express appreciation for the role in which bodies can also play a parallel or supplementary role to the reporting of our governments on international commitments that we have ratified, as you mentioned. And I understand this may have been part of a periodic review that governments are obligated to undertake, and that it comes with great personal and difficult costs in terms of being able to make those trips to be able to go and convey the concerns of your communities. I just wanted to say that that does not go unnoticed, and it adds to the context and the depth of what you are sharing today. I just wanted to express that appreciation as a reflection, if I may. Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Nawaikula: Just to add on that, there's a very, very important role for the NGOs to do that. And, you know, it's a fact, a lot of our NGOs are financed by overseas to push their issues. And that's not all. We have local issues that also need to be ventilated to the national and international communities. So, important role for NGOs to counterbalance. Every further year, every convention ever ratified, you have a review in Geneva, and it's important for these NGOs to come into there. And probably also to learn the process. The process is that you should know when to come in. They advertise it, and government is always given the right to put their review, and your reports are supplemented to clarify it. Because a lot of those made by the government are only on their behalf. For example, during the time of the last government, you know, they were doing this for equality. And that sounds very nicely when you talk about equality overseas. But you need these other NGOs, like the Vanuatu Group. They are also a community, and you should look at group rights. So, if you don't push that in, the international community might not know your issues.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. I look across to the left, and I'm going to ask Professor Nilesh Gounder, a colleague, please.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Mr. Nawaikula. I think your presentation is very clear, and you bring in the issues, and then you are also recommending the sections in particular that you are looking at. So, it's very clearly written, and I don't have any questions on any of those. But I was just looking at the 1997 constitution. I assume you are referring to chapter 13, the group rights that appears in chapter 13 of the 1997 constitution. Is that what you are referring to? Yes, that is correct. Okay. Thank you. Now, it's very clear what you are presenting, actually. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Dr. Nilesh. I may go back to Professor Unaisi Bobo.

Dr. Baba: A few comments, please. And with Dr. Nilesh, I think it's very clear what you've told us. I thank you for turning up today and doing your presentation, Mr. Nawaikula Naka.

Dr. Fatiaki: Mr. Ami, would you like to make a comment?

Mr. Kohli: Yes, Mr. Nawaikula, I think it's a very interesting presentation. Actually, what you are saying is also being taken into consideration in other countries. Back in New Zealand, the kanga Maori is recognized as a law in New Zealand. And what they have done is that, as recently as this morning, they are saying that if you want to pass a law that's going to affect the indigenous people, like the Maori, the Attorney General comes in and you must consult the Maori Tribunal or something. So here I'm just wondering, there should be a similar provision somewhere where if it affects the rights of the people, etc. etc.etc. How can we embrace that in the legislation?

Mr. Nawaikula: I think we have 185. It's very narrow. Those are relating to the legislations that had a beginning in the deductions. But it should be wider and I think how you can address that is to have it in the group rights. Because the group rights you mentioned, because Fiji has already ratified ILOC 169 and then lost their union. So, just an enabling provision there and leave it to the Parliament to work out how do you consult. There's a question. How do you obtain the prior informed consent that is to be legitimized? So, there are other legislations that need to be passed to support it. Thank you.

Mr. Kohli: My next query from you is this. If you look at page 5, 7, you are saying that chapter 5, section 44 recognizes social justice and affirmative action. This has been the section used by the government in 1997 to justify the grant of 50% scholastic freedom, 50% employment, civil servants and 50% commercial grant benefits. If you look at 1997, the population of Indian was 51%. It's 32% now. So, if it goes down, do you still want 50-50 or do you think it will be unfair on the people? I think to take an example from one of the legislations that have been passed, the anti-narcotics bill. Very interesting when I look at it. Talking about recruitment, it said it must reflect the ethnic makeup of the community broadly. Not 50-50 to tie you down, but maybe proceed in that way. Thank you very much. That's clear.

Dr. Fatiaki: Chair, would you like to make a comment or contribution? Mr. Nawaikula.

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Nawaikula, just looking at the GCC. In your submission, it was suggesting that the GCC replace the Senate.Correct me if I'm wrong.

Mr. Nawaikula: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: And then later on, you say that the GCC should comprise of 14 members. Correct?

Mr. Nawaikula: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Those 14 members will be permanent members. And then 10 appointed and elected members representing religious heads and ethnic representatives and people of good national standing. That brings it up to 24.

Mr. Nawaikula: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: So, the number of that group added by the GCC to replace the Senate is 24. Is that what you're looking at?

Mr. Nawaikula: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Back in 2006, before the change in the Constitution, there were 32 members of the Senate and 14 of those 32 members were ITaukei's, as we call them now, but Fijians in those days. Why is it, if we are going to establish the GCC, or if we propose to establish the GCC with 14 members plus 10, 24, to replace the Senate, why not just call it the Senate and bring in 14 members of the GCC plus 10 appointed from elected members, so that you still have the House of Parliament, lower house, and the upper house as the Senate? What is the necessity of changing from Senate to GCC when you still can have the same reflection or the same purpose?

Mr. Nawaikula: That does not make the GCC into a national role because it's the Senate. The way that we are proposing now, then the chiefs can see we are chiefs of itaukei and we are chiefs of everyone. That is the difference.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Mr. Nawaikula. I see exactly the point you're making there in terms of trying to bring that sense of ownership to the GCC, that in fact the chiefs are looking after all people. If I may suggest, I suspect that they already do. I suspect that there are chiefs in all provinces that probably look at the members in their provinces as all part of their mandate. Having said that, in terms of making a review to our constitution or the 2013 constitution, it may be easier for us to introduce a bicameral change and by extension have a Senate and obviously incorporate within that the GCC. Let me just say though, I think you alluded to this, we could never hope to define what the GCC should be because by definition it is what it is and I would presume that if anything were to be put forward from our body, it would not dictate to the GCC how they should be constituted. I think you alluded to the fact that this would need to go to the GCC for them to consent to it and that would be beyond our mandate as a review commission for the 2013 constitution for us to extend that far. Having said that, I think the thoughts are good. I thank you for your submission and I think my colleagues have nothing else. I return the mic to you should you wish to make any concluding comments.

Mr. Nawaikula: Just in relation to that, it is happening in practice but somehow the law is changing it. For example, in Rewa, they call the representatives of Luvedra Na Ratu. In Vanua Levu, even the Fijians are also part of the Vanua but the law meaning the Fijian Affairs Act in relation to the membership of the Provincial Council has to be changed to reflect the practice.

Dr. Fatiaki: Colleagues, if there is no more comments, I wish to again on behalf of the Chair and my colleagues on the Constitutional Review Commission, thank you Mr. Nawaikula and two gentlemen that have accompanied you. Thank you very, very much for your time and submission, acceptance of our invitation. We will deliberate upon these aspects of your submission and thank you very much again on behalf of the Commission. Thank you.

The Chairman & Members
Fiji Constitutional Review Committee
Suva

Dear Sir/ Madam,

Re: SWN ADVOCACY SUBMISSION ON THE PROPOSED 2026 CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT BILL

This is the SWN (Stand With Niko) Advocacy submission on the proposed amendment to the Constitution.

1. About SWN

1.1 SWN is a non-governmental organization (NGO) registered on 23.08.2021 (Reg No. 2021RB012308), operating as a charity and advocating for justice, human rights, and democracy.

1.2 SWN has undertaken advocacy work in collaboration with other organizations, including the Fiji Native Tribal Congress. This work has resulted in interventions and submissions at the United Nations in New York in 2011, 2015, and 2016. These submissions addressed concerns regarding discriminatory policies, including anti-iTaukei laws under the former Fiji First Party (FFP) Government. SWN also participated in proceedings before the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD) in Geneva in August 2012 for the same purpose.

1.3 Incidentally, the concluding remarks of CERD, after considering Fiji's anti itaukei laws was that they were racist because Fiji had ratified ILOC 169 in 1998 that recognized indigenous rights and their removal by those laws was an act of racism because they were done on the basis on race and ethnicity and nothing more.

1.4 Locally, SWN engages in a wide range of advocacy initiatives promoting justice, human rights, and democracy.

1.5 SWN had teamed up with the Unity Party and others to challenge the 2013 Constitution, which was later upheld by the decision of the Supreme Court last year, validating the 2013 Constitution.

1.6 Leading up to the Supreme Court decision in August last year, SWN had organized a peaceful march against the 2013 Constitution in July 2025; however, the government refused to grant a permit.

1.7 When the CRC committee was announced, SWN Advocacy organized a very successful Talanoa Session on 27 March 2026 at the FNU Nasinu Campus to raise awareness.

1.8 Currently, SWN is engaging in Talanoa sessions at the vanua level, with the most recent held at Rewasa (Ra) and Toga (Rewa), to educate indigenous Fijians about constitutional protections and the recognition of their culture, identity, institutions, and group rights. These rights were recognized and protected under the 1970 and 1997 Constitutions but were rejected by the authors of the 2013 Constitution. SWN is urging communities to present to this committee and advocate for the restoration of those constitutional protections through this amendment.

2. INTRODUCTION

2.1 SWN will address the committee on how the proposed amendment should incorporate the recognition and protection of the cultural identity, cultural institutions, and group rights of the iTaukei as Fiji's Indigenous and First Nations people, along with related matters.

3. CONSTITUTION MUST REFLECT CULTURE

3.1 We believe that iTaukei (Fijian) culture and identity, including its language and institutions, represent a foundational culture and identity of Fiji. This must be reflected in the Constitution.

3.2 New Zealand, for example, has adopted a bicultural policy that recognizes and incorporates Māori language and traditions into the core of government administration. This is reflected in various state practices, including the national anthem being sung in both Māori and English. Australia is also attempting to introduce bicultural recognition, although recent constitutional amendment efforts to recognize Aboriginal rights have been unsuccessful.

3.3 Both Australia and New Zealand continue to struggle to fully reflect biculturalism in their constitutions, although it exists at legislative and policy levels. For example, in New Zealand, the national anthem is sung in both Māori and English, while in Australia, official events often include acknowledgements of the traditional custodians of the land.

3.4 These challenges partly arise because both countries only ratified the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP) after 2007, and have since faced difficulties integrating Indigenous identity and culture into governance structures. Historically, Indigenous peoples in these countries were marginalized, and their cultures were suppressed.

3.5 Fiji presents a different case. Indigenous Fijian culture and identity have been recognized and protected since cession and continue to exist as a living culture. However, this has not been fully incorporated or reflected in governance structures or the Constitution.

3.6 One possible reason is historical demographic shifts, where Indigenous Fijians were once a minority while Indo-Fijians formed a significant portion of the population. This contributed to Fiji developing as a multi-ethnic and multicultural society without a clearly defined common cultural foundation.

3.7 Unlike these countries, Fiji should not be striving toward bicultural recognition. Indigenous Fijian language, institutions, and culture have always been present. The failure of government administration and the Constitution to fully embrace and reflect this culture may be attributed to political shortcomings. There is now a stronger case to address this issue, especially as Indigenous Fijians make up approximately.

3.8. Bringing the Fijian culture into the center of government administration and constitution maybe illustrated as follows;

i. Instead of the senate, have the Great Council of Chiefs.

ii. Instead of parliament, have the "vale ni bose lawa"

iii. Instead of the national anthem being sung in English, sing it in the vernacular Fijian only

iv. On every official announcement, government officials should speak Fijian at the introduction.

3.9. I will come back to my point on the need for the GCC to replace the senate.

4. THIS AMENDMENT MUST RESTORE ALL ASPECTS OF RECOGNITION AND PROTECTION OF FIJIAN CULTURAL IDENTITY, INSTITUTIONS & GROUP RIGHTS LEFT OUT BY AUTHORS OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION

4.1 Altogether there are nine (9) provisions in the 1970 and 1997 Constitution taken together that contain recognition and protection of Fijian cultural identity, institutions and group rights that the authors of the 2013 Constitution rejected and left out.

4.2 Two provisions however of the 1970 Constitution are repeated in the 1997 Constitution so that the total is actually 7.

4.3 These are;

i. First, Chapter 13, S185 dealing with group rights. S185 brings into the Constitution the form of protection now consistent with UNDRIP and ILOC 169 dealing with the need for consultation and prior and informed consent before a legislation is introduced or amended dealing with an indigenous itaukei people. S185 says, government cannot amend any legislation dealing itaukei land rights and cultural autonomy namely, Native Lands Act, Native Land Trust Act, Fijian Affairs Act and Fijian Development Fund Act unless approved by the majority members of the GCC in the senate. This was deliberately left on by the author of the 2013 Constitution.

ii. Second, S186 deal with Customary laws and customary rights. This provision say parliament must recognize and make provision for customary laws and customary dispute resolution. This was totally thrown out and left out of the 2013 Constitution by its authors.

iii. Third, Chapter 8, S116 gives Constitutional recognition of the Bose Vakaturaga or GCC and its Constitutional role of appointing the President and disciplining the President. This also was thrown out and did not find a place in the 2013 Constitution.

iv. Fourth, S90 the 1997 constitution recognize role of the GCC in appointing the president and vice president. This did not find a place in the 2013 constitution and was thrown out.

v. Fifth, S93 of the 1997 constitution recognize the role of the GCC in removing the president or vice president. This also did not find a place in the 2013 constitution and was thrown out.

vi. Sixth, S64 of the 1997 constitution recognize the role of the GCC in appointing over 43% of the Senate. This was also thrown out and did not find a place in the 2013 constitution.

vii. Seventh, Chapter 5, S44 recognize social justice and affirmative action. This has been the section used by government under the 1997 constitution to justify the grant of 50% scholarships to itaukei, 50% employment in the civil servant and 50% commercial grant benefit. This was also thrown out and did not find a place in the 2013 constitution.

4.4 SWN is begging the committee to restore the rights recognised and protected under S185, S186 and S44 of the 1997 Constitution because these provisions deal with Group Rights recognised under ILOC 169 that Fiji ratified in 1998 and UNDRIP that Fiji endorsed in September 2023.

4.5 Alternatively, and SWN recommend this, this amendment to expressly mention *ILOC 169 and UNDRIP and Fiji's obligation to implement them under its laws and policies subject to those rights being balanced with fundamental Human Rights and the rights and interests of other communities.

4.6 S116, S90, S93 and S64 of the 1997 Constitution deal with the GCC and SWN will make submissions on that later.

5. HOW ARE THE RESTORATION OF S185, S186 & S44 OF THE RIGHTS RECOGNISED UNDER THE 1997 CONSTITUTION TO BE ADDRESSED IN THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

5.1 Like the 1997 Constitution, SWN begs the committee to have the Constitutional recognition of ILOC 169 and UNDRIP under a chapter to look after group rights and minority rights.

5.2 On ILOC 169 and UNDRIP a provision should expressly mention Fiji's obligation to implement them under its laws and policies subject to those rights being balanced with fundamental Human Rights and the rights and interests of other communities

5.3 The restoration of the rights recognised under S185, S186 & S44 of the 1997 Constitution should be expressed under this chapter.

6. GCC TO BE BROUGHT TO THE CENTRE OF GOVERNANCE AND THE CONSTITUTION

6.1 If you look through Fijis Constitution making process starting with the 1970 Constitution you will see that its authors are almost at pains trying to bring into the Constitution the GCC as a unifying role and house to review the Laws passed by Parliament.

6.2 In part 3 of this Submission we argued the need, in accordance with contemporary thought, for the Nation to adopt & accept the Culture of the Indigenous peoples of that country as the common Cultural identity of the Nation to be reflected in its constitution and all aspects of governance.

6.3 For this and other reasons we beg and request that this Committee recommend to the Government that the Senate is to be replaced by the GCC but only if the current GCC members can agree to invite a representative of the Council of Churches and other ethnic community representatives to join them.

6.4 Another important justification is relevance and national interest. Placing the GCC at the very top and above parliament gives to it the important national and unifying role that they are the GCC not for itaukei but for all Fiji and the Fijians.

6.5 This new look GCC will have 14 permanent members comprising heads of the provinces plus 10 appointed and elected members representing religious heads, ethnic representatives and people of good national standing.

6.6 The role of the new look GCC will be as head of the nation and head of the cultural autonomy and as head of nation it will be a house of review to scrutinize the laws and policies of government to see that they are morally sound and does not abuse the interest of any ethnic community.

6.7 It means also that the composition of the provincial council must change to include elected representatives of all ethnicities in a province so that the provincial council is for all itaukei communities and individuals residing within a province but that will be upon the executive government to do so.

7. AMENDMENT MUST COMPLETELY REPLACE THE 2013 CONSTITUTION

7.1 SWN looks forward to the complete replacement of the 2013 Constitution by this amendment, something similar to the 1997 constitution amendment that totally replaced 1990 Constitution.

8. REMOVE IMMUNITY PROVISION

8.1 SWN wants to place on the record its support for the GCC recommendation that the immunity provision must also be removed by this amendment.

8.2 The Supreme Court opinion that the immunity provision cannot be amended is not a coercive order to be followed but it is a mere opinion.

Also with the greatest respect SWN is of the opinion that the Supreme Court is wrong to uphold a provision of a law that forbid the legislature from doing its independent and core role of making and amending laws. The problem we have is you cannot appeal the supreme court opinion but that does not forbid parliament from removing the immunity provision and leaving it to anyone that object to challenge it in the Courts.

8.3. The immunity provision contradicts the basic maxime that everyone is equal under the law, it is also unfair against those who committed the same offence and have already served and it also implies that the law is you can commit a coup, introduce a new constitution, entrench within a immunity provision, conduct 3 or 4 elections under it and that will legitimize everything.

9. REMOVE S30 ON OWNERSHP OF MINERALS BY THE STATE

9.1. SWN submit that the part of S30 of the Constitution that confer ownership of minerals to the state must be removed because this was never a part of any previous Constitution and the debate on whether landowners should own the mineral is still current.

10. AMEND RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

10.1. SWN submit that S41 on the rights of the children should be amended with a proviso that say that the rights of the child is subject to parents and state decision to decide what is in the best interest of the child.

Ministry of ITaukei Affairs

Leighton: Good morning, members of the Ministry of ITaukei Affairs. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I'll just be going through a few housekeeping matters with you. On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I'd like to take this time to thank you sincerely for accepting our invitation to make submissions before the Commission and taking the time to come today. I'd especially like to thank the APS, Mr. Tuione, Acting Director, Development Services, Ms. Venina Moce, and the Deputy Secretary of Policy, Mr. Joeli Ditoka, as well as the Chairman of the ITaukei Land and Fisheries Commission, Retired Colonel Meli Saubulinayau, and the Deputy CEO for ITaukei Land Transport, Mr. Josefa Toganivalu. Just with regards to making submissions, there are mics in front of you.

If you can just press on the right panel on the mic in front to turn the mic on to speak. And then once you've made your submission, you can press the same panel to turn the mics off. After this, Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they will be undertaking, as well as introducing the Commissioners, or he will ask the Commissioners to introduce themselves. We also request that after the introductions have been done, if the team can also introduce themselves. This is for the transcript and the record. Vinaka.

Mr. Valenitabua: To lady and gentlemen from the Ministry of ITaukei Affairs, Sevuloni Valenitabua, the Chairperson of the Constitution Review Commission. To members of the press, this morning we will have a slight change. I have been chairing all sessions of consultations from day one with the Great Council of Chiefs. From next Monday, this Commission will be divided into two teams. One team will travel to the Lau Group and the Lomaiviti Group, which I will head. And the second team will be traveling to Beqa, Kadavu, Ovalau, and Vatulele That team will be headed by Dr. John Fatiaki. So, this morning the change will be that Dr. John Fatiaki will be chairing the meeting in my place. I will be sitting here, so he will continue as Chairman when I hand the mic over to him.

Dr. Fatiaki: Madam Gentleman of the ITaukei Affairs Ministry, let me say on behalf of our Chair and reiterate our thank you to you for taking the time to come into this session to make a presentation in response to our invitation to you. This is an important task, and to have you on force this morning is an important reflection for us on the importance of this work. You're all aware that we were convened by a Presidential Commission under the Inquiries Commission Act, specifically to address what the President referred to as the democratic deficits that were identified in the 2013 Constitution under which we operate. We are also guided by the Supreme Court rulings that the government sought earlier on this year, and on that basis the Commission was instituted. We were appointed to undertake this task.

Let me emphasize that our job is to review the Commission in the context of, one, our terms of reference, and I will allude to that temporarily, but also in respect of the so-called democratic deficits. Very specifically, the identified democratic deficit that was most prominent was the lack of widespread consultation. So, our second term of reference asks us to seek input and basically extend to all the people of the Republic of Fiji meaningful consultations to ensure its provisions reflect the values, the needs, and the aspirations of all the people of Fiji. Widespread consultation, and we intend to undertake that. We've started that task, and we will continue to all the furthest corners of Fiji.

The second aspect of our task is obviously to assist in this process in terms of clarifying what the required amendments or revisions are. I should emphasize that the Supreme Court has only directed us to refrain from addressing Chapter 10, which is the chapter on immunity, but every line of every other chapter and section is open to debate, and therefore I welcome your submission and likewise to the extended public of Fiji as we head out. Specific to ITaukei Affairs, I will point out that there are three provisions in our terms of reference that address very specifically your area. Three out of 12.

We have been directed to ensure that we protect and guarantee under the Constitution the rights, interests, and concerns of indigenous Fijian and Rotuman people as well as ensuring the rights of other communities and groups. We have been directed, under our terms of reference, to look at protecting, guaranteeing, and securing under the Constitution land and fishing rights and resources of indigenous Fijians and Rotuman's and assuring that registered owners of native lands and customary fishing rights have an equitable share of the income derived from the exploitation of the resources beneath and above the surface of their land, their sea beds, rivers, etc. Number three, we have been directed and guided by the terms of reference to recognize the role of the great council of chiefs in the national affairs of the state under the Constitution.

Lady and gentlemen, I've only read that out because this pertains directly to you, the Ministry of ITaukei Affairs. We have been included in the terms, you have been included in the terms of reference. I want you to be aware of that as you make your presentation. You've heard from our chair, the next two weeks we head off. Maritime provinces will be covered by the two teams. We get together again in Vanua level and spend about three and a half weeks there and then the remaining five and a half weeks are spent in Viti level.

At every major center, meaning Savusavu, Labasa, Suva, Ba, Tavua, at every major center the entire commission will sit as a group of seven. When we go into the smaller areas from Sigatoka, we will divide into two groups after the Sigatoka meeting and they will be addressing it at a group of three or four. I head one of the teams.

We want to make it clear that we want representation and on each of these groups we have a lady, we have an ITaukei speaker, we have an Indo-Fijian speaker. That is representative, that will be going to all the areas that we intend to cover. And finally, we end up on my island of Rotuma, the first of the third of July.

I think for a week after that our chair will make decisions with the secretariat. We might accept some more submissions in-house and that will be the final wrap-up before we start deliberating and preparing the constitution review report proper. Let me emphasize our job is to collect these submissions, putting to a meaningful thing that reflects what we have collected and preparing it in a report.

Our job ends there once chair and our secretariat hand it to the president. The political decision-making as to what happens to that is not in our hands. I emphasize we are not part of the law-making. Our process is to do this. Lots of times I address this because people ask us in the media about the referendum, about the parliamentary process. That is entirely the prerogative of government. That is not ours and we try not to address it in this forum. I put this out so that people don't ask us questions about changing the laws and whether we've got enough time for the referendum. That does not come into our consideration.

What we are interested in is this book, our constitution, 2013, and the people's idea about what they want done with this in terms of the review. Those are just in the way of introductory comments. I'd like now to introduce my fellow commissioners. If I could start with Mere, please, could you introduce yourself, and then we'll move on to the other side. Thank you. Thank you, Chair.

Ms. Nailatikau: Vinaka to members of the ITaukei Affairs Delegation. Thank you for your presence here this morning. My name is Merewalesi Nailatikau. I am from Kadavu with maternal links to Kabara in Lau. I'm an independent consultant. My background is in public policy and public diplomacy.

Dr. Baba: Sa bula Vinaka mai na ITaukei Affairs. It's really nice to see you today. Welcome to our space. We look forward to listening to you today.

Mr. Beg: Vinaka, Ministry of ITaukei Affairs. Thank you for coming today. My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession, and I'm really delighted to be in this space and to listen to basically your presentations and be as interactive as possible. But thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: For the record, gentlemen and ladies, Sevuloni Valenitabua chairperson of the CMC. CRC, sorry. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: I'm Dr. John Fatiaki. I'm a medical practitioner by profession. I am presiding over this session on behalf of our chairman.

Mr. Tuione: Sa bula Vinaka to the chairperson, Mr. Paula Tuione. I am currently acting PS for the Ministry of ITaukei Affairs. Thank you for the invitation. I'm looking forward to the deliberation this morning.

Josefa Toganivalu: Bula Vinaka Josefa Toganivalu, Currently the deputy CEO. I just want to make a reference. I'm not the deputy CEO of the ITaukei Land Trust Board, of the ITaukei Affairs Board. Thank you.

Meli Saubulinayau: My name is Meli Saubulinayau. I'm a former military officer. Now, the chair of the NLC.

Joeli Ditoka: Bula Vinaka, commissioners, chair and presiding officer. My name is Joeli Ditoka, and I'm the deputy secretary of policy at the ministry.

Venina Mavi: Bula Vinaka. I am Venina Mavi, currently the acting director of the Development Services Division, and I'm from Nakorovou Dreketi Rewa. Vinaka.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much. Now I hand the mic over to you, PS, and your team to make your submission. Thank you.

Mr. Joeli Ditoka: Vinaka, the chair of the Constitutional Review and presiding chair. My name is Mr. Tuione. of the members of the Constitutional Review. Our presentation this morning will be delivered by Deputy Secretary of Policy, Mr. Ditoka. Now, however, before I hand over to him, I wish to acknowledge the invitation to this very, very important part of government reform in the sense that how we can best contribute into this delivering of the Constitution. Firstly, we acknowledge the brief introduction by the presiding chair, which really outlines the importance of this exercise. Second to that, we also acknowledge that the Itaukei Affairs are part of the CTOR as well.

We believe that our contribution this morning will be somehow contributed to trying to address the three main areas of trying to review the current Constitution that we have. We are here this morning with an understanding that we are able to deliver and also are ready to exchange a few collaborations and discussions in our presentation this morning. So, without further ado, I now hand over to DAS Policy, Mr. Ditoka, to take us through our presentation for our submission this morning in our level.

Mr. Joeli Ditoka: Respected Commissioners, thank you. Just to take us through a copy of the submission, I believe it was sent to the Secretary earlier this morning. We have six main points in our submission and also noting the presiding member's comment about the possibility of submissions, we take note of that also.

So, the purpose of the submission of the Ministry is to propose some targeted constitutional reforms to strengthen recognition of iTaukei rights, as already alluded to by the presiding member and our acting PS that is part of the TOR already, institutions and contributions within a unified national framework that upholds equal citizenry and also fundamental rights. Our first point is going to that recognition of indigenous rights and perhaps a step further, as was previously included in the 1997 Constitution, the possibility for recognition of customary law.

The Ministry submits that the Constitution should expressly recognize indigenous rights, including the status of customary law as a source of law, subject of course to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The current constitutional framework does affirm equal citizenry and human rights, but does not recognize customary law or indigenous group rights as a separate bundle of rights or as a general source of law. I just made allusion to the 1997 Constitution. Attached to our submission we have an excerpt from the 1997 Constitution, specifically Section 186 which gave recognition to customary laws and customary rights.

In fact, that the Parliament must make provision for the application of customary laws and for dispute resolution in accordance with traditional Fijian process, to quote that subsection one there. Unfortunately, under the previous constitutional arrangement, by the time the Constitution was finally abrogated in 2009, Parliament hadn't gone around to passing any laws, but if the Commission is looking at the wording that the Ministry is considering, it's not difficult. Don't have to reinvent the wheel because it was in the previous iteration of our Constitution.

This would provide for judicial development, application of customary law in appropriate contexts, including land, governance, and dispute resolution. And of course, there has to be a balance against the Bill of Rights maintaining equality, dignity, and non-discrimination. That's the first point of the submission.

The second point is the recognition of historical contributions of indigenous peoples and perhaps a sovereign wealth mechanism. It is the submission of the Ministry that the Constitution should acknowledge historical sacrifices and contributions of Itaukei chiefs, communities, and other indigenous groups in the country for things including but not limited to the provision of land, particularly the urban and peri-urban landowning units, the stewardship of natural resources including water sources, and the maintenance of societal order and governance structures, and beyond that the overall economic participation in the life of the state. Because while constitutional frameworks have traditionally recognized land ownership and tenure and the institutional roles in this in the past, there is limited recognition of the economic value of these contributions, which I think as a point of history is significant.

In fact, the Taukei Land Trust Board has done some work towards establishing a sovereign wealth fund, but that's from the landowner's own resources. There's never been any recognition by the state of these historical sacrifices and contributions. The commission would be aware that the Ministry of Local Government is bringing certain peri-urban and urban landowning units and villages into the municipal framework, which would require payment of town and city rates.

But traditionally there's been no recognition of the resources that have been surrendered and sacrificed by these very same institutions, landowning units, for the development of the economy. So, if there could be some constitutional recognition and perhaps enabling authority for establishment of a sovereign wealth or intergenerational equity mechanism which would give recognition to those. We have not located in our research over the last couple of weeks a contemporary example in another jurisdiction, but that shouldn't stop the commission from considering this point.

And also related to that, the second point of the TOR, which is related to fair share of royalties, it's the submission and recommendation that beyond royalty payments that actual ownership rights be recognized. It's not the norm in most states, but that does not stop us as a sovereign nation from transferring the actual ownership rights rather than just limiting it to fair share, especially with deep sea and mineral resources. Thank you.

The third point is the constitutional guarantee of consultation. The ministry proposes a constitutional requirement for meaningful consultation with ITaukei institutions before decisions affecting ITaukei interests are taken. To be clear, this is not replacing the consultation requirement that's already in the constitution.

Any laws that affect a particular group, that group has to be consulted. This is in addition to that requirement for consultation, mirroring what is already in law in the ITaukei Affairs Act, which requires legislation or major decisions impacting ITaukei to come first to the ITaukei Affairs Board and the Great Council of Chiefs before being tabled in Parliament. So, it's simply elevating that protection and guarantee into constitutional recognition.

And that would ensure certain customary land and resource decisions, traditional government structures, and cultural heritage and identity or any decisions impacting those things will have some consideration by the institutions that are meant to safeguard them. Also, just a final point in our recommendation, these consultations should be defined as timely, good-faith engagements with a genuine opportunity to influence outcomes and not merely box-ticking exercises on the part of the state. I think I already said this is in addition to not replacing the requirement for the impacted groups, including the specific LOU, the Vanua, or the general public as the case may be.

And of course, I should have mentioned at the onset of this point, the constitutional recognition of the GCC, which is the point three of the DOR in any event. The fourth point, Commissioners, is relating to official language. We understand that actually when we did our research into the previous constitutions, including 1970, 1990, and 1997, there's never been an official language actually in any of our constitutions, probably to do with resource limitations or whatever the case may be.

However, they did recognize parliamentary proceedings where the official language was English, with the right to use feature in this time. But it is the submission of the Ministry that it should be one of the official languages, or at least should be considered by the Commission in addition to English and whatever other languages. The fifth point touches on the President and the Commander-in-Chief.

The appointment of the President currently sits with Parliament. The Ministry submits that this could be reverted to the Great Council of Chiefs to preserve and remove the politicization of the office of the President, because currently the mechanism is a nominee from the Prime Minister, as well as a leader of opposition and a vote in Parliament. Moving it to the GCC would remove the political aspects of the appointment, and it would be a non-political body making the appointment.

Also, in the same vein, for the three-year term to be increased back to five years, we believe that would give the necessary gravity and importance which the office used to hold. Otherwise, you'll have a new head of state every six years, which seems a little counterintuitive. We also thought that the current Constitution seems to diminish the importance of the President's role as Commander-in-Chief, so the recommendation of the Ministry is the wording previously used in Sections 87, 90 and 91 of the 1997 Constitution be reverted to. Those provisions are annexed also to the submission of the Ministry.

The final point, Commissioners, is the Senate and the legislative process as a whole. The Senate, as you would appreciate, provided a secondary House of Review for legislation after it was passed by the House of Representatives under the three previous Constitutions, the 1917, 1990 and 1997. And in the 1997 Constitution, the nominees of the Great Council of Chiefs actually had a veto power over legislation that affected the indigenous people in particular. In fact, nine of the 14 GCC centers had to approve before it would pass, even if it had a majority. Without the nine, it would not pass, and that was the safeguard to ensure consultation and consideration.

This also impacts the use of Standing Order 51 because the legislative process under the previous Administration, without making this a political statement, out of the hundreds of legislations passed in the eight years, Standing Order 51 was used for almost every single bill that was able. And maybe you can count in a single hand how many went under the full legislative process. So, the recommendation is one, the reintroduction of the Senate, and the second one relating to bills passed under urgency is to put some guardrails on Section 47, Subsection 3 of the Constitution.

It currently only requires a majority of members to skip the full legislative process, which is the basis for Standing Order 51 and the parliamentary standing orders. So, there could be some guardrails to make sure that it is not too restrictive, so that the genuine emergencies and genuine urgency, they can pass laws faster, but for it not to be the norm. That's the sixth and final submission point.

And in conclusion, commissioners, we also note the prior submission. In fact, one of the first submissions of the Great Council of Chiefs, and in recognition of their position within the ITaukei governance framework, noting that they are the mouthpiece and the voice of the ITaukei, we support the prior submission of the Council. And these proposals from the Ministry are meant to augment and to frame the strengthening of constitutional recognition of ITaukei rights and institutions, maintaining Fiji's commitment to equality, unity, and the rule of law. Properly calibrated, we believe they will be enhancing the legitimacy, social cohesion, and long-term stability by aligning the constitutional order with the lived realities of Fiji's indigenous peoples. And thank you, commissioners. Thank you very much, gentlemen.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you for that very clear, lucid, presentation, taking us through the various aspects of the submission that you have presented to us. I might now open the floor to my colleagues on the review commission to see if they need any clarifications or they'd like to raise any issues that have been brought here as part of your submission. Colleagues? I don't see a mic on, so I might just lead the process.

Mr. Valenitabua: Gentlemen and lady, your point two, recognition of historical contributions, that is clear, and the sovereign wealth mechanism. How, could you please expand further on that, on the sovereign wealth mechanism to be established? Please?

Mr. Joeli Ditoka : Yes, commissioners, chair, and presiding member, it could be a trust fund, something like the iTaukei Trust Fund Board, which is legislated to provide for the Great Council of Chiefs specifically, but it would be a fund, perhaps, to be established to look after iTaukei interests more broadly. And depending on whether there'd be a separate fund for Rotuma or the same one, the mechanics would be left to the legislative drafters, but that's the idea, to have a trust fund with its own legislation.

Perhaps just a constitutional recognition and provision for the possibility of, similar to the customary rights and customary law recognition.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much for that. Conway?

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much, chair, and just in response, thank you for your illuminating presentation. You know, I looked at the areas and you made references to the various constitutions, which kind of had some of those instruments and some didn't have it, and what the ministry is now requesting for proposal. I mean, the one that I kind of liked at the moment was your point about the governance model, you know, at the moment. And it's kind of illuminating because it's coming through and the shift of power being centralized, you know, and you wanted a bit more structure in that sense.

And then the other point about your indigenous recognition, I think there's no, in the current constitution, if I hear you correct, there's no explicit indigenous constitutional status, is the proper right word, if that's what I'm hearing. And you're asking the ministry to, or your point of view is to the recognition of Itoki rights, more so in that. So, yeah, thank you. I just wanted some clarity on that. It was good. But, yeah, most of it is really illuminating.

The part about the Senate, you know, that's coming through quite clearly in a lot of other submissions, so it's good that you're bringing these points to the forefront. But, yeah, I'd like to discuss that more and further with the team, but I want to acknowledge your presentation. Thank you very much for that.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Commissioner Beg. Commissioner Nabobo? Thank you. Thank you, Todays chair, for point number one, Mr. Ditoka and team. I'm just wondering, because the chair of NLC is here, I would like to throw, if you can throw a bit more light. When we talk about indigenous rights, you're talking about, in particular, CRC, which international convention was that? Was that the 27th, 2007? Your international convention.

Mr. Joeli Ditoka: Oh, the UN DRIP.

Dr. Baba: Yeah, UN DRIP, right. So, we have UN DRIP to quote from. We also have, there's another one that I'm particularly interested in, and this is the 2003 Intangible Heritage Convention of the UN. Could you please tie those two together in your submission? Because when you argue this case further, particularly as it comes to involvement of institution to make sure they do this in the future, the two need to be tied together, in my view. Now, in customary law, could I just get a bit more, just a little more explicit comment from the NLC's point of view? Sometimes, in my mind, I can't distinguish between customary law and the legal fraternity that argue for land acquisition. For example, I refer to the case in Monasavu by Israeli FA. He won the case, but I'm just wondering in the cases of the rest of Fiji.

For my university, we are acquiring land all over Vanualevu because chiefs are gifting them for free. I like this clarified because I'm iTaukei, I understand the weight of land gifting. Because there's a lot that is done on the pretext that the receiver understands the weight of the wealth. So FNU will do it differently. It's not explicitly stated anywhere that when you are gifted land or when you lease land, that there is some assumption by ITaukei that we understand. Because land gifting is the epitome of chiefship. Minus the GCC, there's no more land gifting. You would have to just say it as that. But I'd like the NLC to just clarify a bit further because it's not written in your submission. I'm sure you'll detail that. But we assume as it's okay that people understand the weight of land gifting, the weight of gifting land through leases, particularly in 1999, as I'll be the mother of the generation. So, is NLC involved in this? Some clarity around your second paragraph, I'd appreciate just the detail of what you want. Is that in line? Thank you, Chair. I would like that just a bit more.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Commissioner Nabobo. I think those should be seen as reflections. It isn't a specific question. It's just more just clarification and reflections. Commissioner Merewalesi, please.

Ms. Nailatikau: I believe a member of the delegation wanted to respond. I'll give this time to you.

Ratu Meli: We're referring, if something is found on that land, like mineral or oil, that the ownership be referred back to the actual owner. Because below the six feet, they say it's government. But before government came into place in 1874, it was fully Fijian. Everything was Fijian. But after 1874, it changed. It's a source of income for government. And we have spent over 100 years giving to government, giving to government. It's time that it comes back. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Commissioner Meli. Let me just reaffirm again that some of these issues have already been brought up with us. We're very, very clear about it. They've already started discussions amongst ourselves. And I just want to reassure you that this is not the first time it's come up. It's come up because it's meaningful to a lot of people.

It's been very passionate in some of the presentations, particularly by individuals. And we recognize that. Our job is not to make distinctions on what government should have and what people should have. Our job is to listen to what the people say and incorporate it into the Constitution in a meaningful way that addresses those, if that is the majority view and the considered opinion of the commission, that that is in the best interests of the country. I think I just want to reassure you in terms of our consideration of that. People have spoken very passionately about it. And that passion comes across, and we will definitely consider that in making final deliberations. Thank you. Ma? Thank you, Presiding Chair.

Ms. Nailatikau: I really welcomed your point about the appointment of the President and the Vice President. As you framed it, this being able to be depoliticized, as you mentioned, by the GCC being involved in consultation with the Prime Minister, I believe, as you accepted with reference to the 1997 Constitution. I would welcome your expansion and a little bit about your thinking in terms of balancing what may be the depoliticization, but also ensuring that the voices of the people, for instance, are reflected in the selection of a very important representative, the President and Vice President. And I believe, if I'm not wrong, the current Constitution also includes the Leader of the Opposition in terms of making it a bipartisan process. And again, just welcome the expansion on the reflection and analysis that went into this. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: You could take that as a question or a reflection, if you want to answer. We appreciate that.

Ratu Meli: In the past 16 years, if you had noticed, the appointment of prominent people, it was done so that they support the government of that day, in the case of the Police Commissioner and the Commander. But we were lucky in 2022, when the appointment was made about Ratu Jone, that he stood his ground. Because he was put there in case of the election going wrong, he was supposed to take over the government. Because that has been going on for the last 16 years. Naupoto was put there for that case. That's the point that I'm trying to bring to the table, that it should be taken away from the political head and be given to someone who is actually the head of the nation, which is the President. If you see in the 2013 Constitution, the President is only wearing a ceremonial job. He's not actually the Commander-in-Chief. He's only doing ceremonial. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Thank you, Mr. Saubulinayau. I appreciate your in-depth reflection. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: If I may just add to that, just in the way of reflection, and because this alludes to point number five, the President and Commander-in-Chief, I think the message that has come through very clearly and is elucidated quite clearly by Ratu Meli is that we don't want a President, one, to be politicized, the appointment. And as soon as you give it to Parliament where people get elected, there's an opportunity for politicization. History over the operation of this Constitution over the last 13 to 14 years has indicated, for instance, that the President, as rightly pointed out, acts expressively on the advice of the Prime Minister.

So, what Ratu Meli alluded to as a figurehead, again, there's that part of it. And then the other area in terms of curtailing the issue and their request for an increase in the Commander-in-Chief's discretion as the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, that that power be, I guess, given to him, independent of the political process, so that it remains separate and independent of the government of the day. The example given in terms of how the ex-President reacted when the election outcome had been announced, we're all aware this is public knowledge, it was in the newspapers, it was a flick of the coin that could have landed on the point where the election process or the election outcome was not recognized and the President could, I guess, technically abrogate whatever was in place or the results of the elections.

I think the example given was that he chose not to go with the political sway despite his political appointment and despite the risk that he would be removed. That sentiment is coming through, and I think, because this alludes to the fifth point that you brought here, is the independence of the Presidency. Now, we are going to obviously deliberate the process of appointing a President that represents all people in Fiji, and that's where my fellow Commissioners come from, in trying to make it reconcile that he becomes representative of all peoples of Fiji.

And I think that's the question that was asked. And I think your reservations about how it's been operating is recognized. How we go about in terms of balancing the two, I think is an area that we are going to address in great detail, and we thank you for the clarifications and the examples that you give because it helps us recognize how things operate in the real world, not necessarily in what we think is the ideal world that it should operate in. Chair?

Mr. Valenitabua: Mr. Ditoka, gentlemen and ladies, your point two and recommendation number five, bullet point number five, it says, point two, recommendation bullet point number five, consider amending the constitutional provision relating to fair share of royalty to actual acknowledgment of ownership of natural resources, including mineral and deep sea. The constitution, the 2013 constitution has section 30, subsection one, and it says all minerals in or under any land or water are owned by the state, provided, however, that the owners of any particular land or of any particular registered customary fishing rights shall be entitled to receive a fair share, that is where that word comes from, that phrase, a fair share of royalties or other money paid to the state in respect of the grant by the state of rights to extract minerals for mining from that land or the seabed, deep sea mining, in the area of those fishing rights. Now, this is now in the constitution.

You are recommending that the constitutional provision, which is section 30, be amended in relation to the fair share of the royalty. The fair share of the royalty is provided in the subsection two. However, we don't need to go to that because the second limb of that bullet point says that actual acknowledgment of ownership of natural resources, including mineral and deep sea, should be in the constitution. So, are you suggesting section 30, subsection one, to be amended to say that all minerals in or under any land or water are owned by ITaukei land owners?

Mr. Tuione: Yes.

Mr. Valenitabua: Is that what you are getting at?

Mr. Tuione: That is the submission of the ministry. Thank you. And government can take the fair share for the public through taxation or whatever other...

Dr. Baba: Yes. Chair, can I contribute a part to that? Sure. Commissioner Nabobo. I think the reversal is what ITaukei is suggesting, is what... Internationally, I've done research around this, as I'm interested in land gifting and land blah, blah, blah, as an educator. None of my research in England and Scotland say that you give six below to the government. These are the people that came here to introduce this. It's colonialism again. So, yes, I totally agree with you, and I'm glad we've reached this point today. It's bothered me for the longest time.

Dr. Fatiaki: Commissioner Nabobo...

Dr. Baba: Just a reflection, eh? Just a reflection that I think that reversal you're suggesting to the chair is perhaps the way it should be. Because where the rule came from, they don't exercise that rule.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Commissioner Nabobo. Let me emphasize, and I speak on behalf of this commission, we don't agree or disagree with anything anybody brings. Let me just... On the record, these are reflections. We do not agree or disagree with anything that anyone brings.

Our job is to facilitate the process by which we can amend this constitution to address what it is you bring. It may have been just a slip, but I just want to reemphasize that. We're coming from a place of independence and a place of listening and consultation.

The actual process of arriving at the report will be subsequent, but we hear that very clearly. Again, I reiterate that paragraph I had marked in my constitution here because someone else has brought it to us, and his request was that we remove that passage. Which allows us a fair share, the indigenous owners, and actually remove it and replace it with ownership. And as rightly pointed out, you've added the other part, which is then where does government get its revenue from? Through taxation and other mechanisms that are then put in place. That's a fundamental request. Colleagues? Conway?

Mr. Beg: Thank you, presiding chair. I just want to respond to a clarity from Ratu Meli. Because it relates to the President's role in the military. Chapter 6 of the constitution defines our disciplined forces and militaries in that section. It's interesting, I just wondered your clarity in that. Again, it's not in your submission, but you brought it up. I just wanted you to clarify that you're saying the role of the military in relation to the connection with the President's point in here, since you brought it up.

Because I'm just saying it would be nice to hear your qualification in regard to Chapter 6, because there's a section there, 131, which covers the military forces. Since you brought it up, is that going to be part of your submission or not?

Ratu Meli: I'm just explaining what we meant by saying that it should be the Commander-in-Chief who appoints them. And the appointment of the President to be apolitical, to be away from government. And at the present moment, as you are well aware of, the President is appointed by the political party who is leading government. So, we don't want that to happen. And the appointment of the Commander also comes from government. The President does not actually have any say to that. He just endorses whatever government gives him. But we are trying to say the appointment of the Commander, he should be appointed by the Head of the State, which is the President, whom we want to be elected by the Great Council of Chiefs, or an independent body.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Ratu Meli. If I might just add to that, again in the form of clarification, I think the term Commander-in-Chief is used very loosely in the Fiji context. So, Commander-in-Chief in the United States of America means that actually Donald Trump can direct the forces of the state at any point in time as per his wishes as President of the country and Commander-in-Chief.

The current constitution, the term Commander-in-Chief actually does not reflect that role. He actually is a Commander-in-Chief in name, in practice. One, his appointment as Commander-in-Chief is a political decision. Number two, the appointment of the constitutional officers of Commander of the Army and Commander of the Police, Commissioner of the Police Force, again, a political appointment under the Prime Minister's office. And the President is therefore a rubber stamp for it. And I think that what's coming across is the need for one, the appointment of the President to be apolitical, not influenced by any political party.

And then number two, he is given the powers to be the Commander-in-Chief so that he does not have to act on the advice of the Prime Minister as per the current constitution. Did I summarize that correctly, Ratu Meli?

Ratu Meli: Thank you. Thank you, Dr. Thank you very much. VInaka, I hand over to our Chair. Chair, please.

Mr. Valenitabua: In relation to the appointment of the President, there has been a suggestion that the President be elected as in an election. You gentlemen and ladies would understand what that means. And candidates for the Presidency might have to be selected, and then there's an election for that. What is the Ministry of ITaukei's view in relation to the general election for the position of President?

Mr. Taione: Vinaka, if I may start with Mr. Chair. I think what we have alluded to in our submission, we are going back to the nominating from the GCC. However, for reflection on what you have stated, we believe if that is the case, that there should be clear guidelines or criteria followed in nominating those that has to be contested in that regard. However, the guidelines should be in a sense that the process is independent, transparent, and also highlighting the very important point of getting someone that is of high integrity, who can deliver this very, very important role as a President of the country. That is, if I may start off here, then maybe my colleagues can add into that. If it's elected like the usual election, then there should be clear guidelines or criteria followed in that regard. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Any more comments on that?

Ratu Meli: We fully support the submission by the Great Council of Chiefs that they be the appointing body. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you very much, Commissioner Meli, and that is noted.

Joeli Ditoka: If there are no other comments, I'm sorry, your mic is on. I'm sorry to tell the Presiding Member and Chair, Commissioners. I think Acting PS and the Chair, Victor Invernoy, have already alluded that we will stick with our submission as to the preferred methodology of the appointment of the Head of State and Commander-in-Chief. But just going back to our point, a general election would not further the depoliticization of the office. It would drive it in the exact opposite direction, because then you have the case like you hear often in America, not my President, which is the whole point our submission is trying to avoid.

Dr. Fatiaki: That point is taken. I didn't want to comment about it, but rightly so. Chair, did you want to...?

Mr. Valenitabua: Yes, just one more point, the official language. I note that in the 1997 Constitution, as you have stated, the official language was English, with a right for members to also use Fijian or Hindustani, as the languages were categorized then. Now, your recommendation is that the constitutional recognition of the ITaukei language in addition to English. Do you want that to be constitutionalized in the Constitution, or we'll just proceed with the practice that we now have?

Joeli Ditoka: In the current Constitution, there's no mention of official language, no mention of official language in Parliament either. It's just the requirement that conversational ITaukei and Fijian be taught in schools, and that the accused persons and the proceedings in the court system be in a language understandable by the accused. The Ministry's submission is that there be an official language, ITaukei English, and from our point of view, ITaukei at least in addition to English, and I'm sure other committees will include the other languages. The reason we're seeking constitutional recognition is because the Ministry has been trying to progress language policy, language commission and other things that we feel like if there was a constitutional recognition, the work would float down.

Dr. Fatiaki: Gentlemen, thank you very much. Any more contributions specifically from that side, from you, the sub-mittees?

Ratu Meli: The 1997 Constitution states that the language of Parliament be English, not national language. What we want is to be a declaration of a national language, which to include the ITaukei language. Now, will you?

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Ratu Meli. That is very clear, that request, and it will be certainly discussed at length and taken on board. If there are no more specific questions, I might just make a small correction. This refers to the recommendation and the acknowledgement of the historical contributions and sovereign wealth that was made by your presenter in respect of specifically, number one, the Constitutional Recognition Clause acknowledging these historical contributions.

Just in the way of explanation, I'm Special Administrator for Suva City Council. That's another role that I have. And as part of that, that recognition is why in these municipal elections that are about to happen in September, we have incorporated all the villages that are within the city boundary and all the informal settlements to take part in the actual election.

They're eligible to. Prior to that, they couldn't because they were not ratepayers. But in recognition of the fact that Suva sits on, you know, Tui Suva land, the idea that the Suva village could not vote in the municipal elections is a recognition of this. And because of that, they are actually included. I just want to point out they won't have to pay rates at this point in time. So, they've been allowed to vote in this first municipal elections, but they're not enforced ratepayers as per the current status right now.

What may subsequently happen in terms of municipalities, in terms of local government subsequent going forwards is something that will be discussed further. But to my knowledge as a Special Administrator, they are not being given city or town rates at this stage. Thank you.

Dr. Baba: Commissioner Bobo. I hope this is a reflection, not to influence you in any way, but it's to do with your commenting on languages. Now the last government had put together a team. We wrote the decades work for this country on languages because internationally, this is the decade of indigenous languages. So, I haven't seen anything like that launched by government. But in reflection to what you're pushing Ratu Saubulinayau, we have done the work for the next 10 years. We are supposed to be. Now, if you look at what I referred to earlier, which is the intangible heritages, indigenous languages in the world is 6,000, 1,500 sit here in the Pacific. Yesterday, the conversation on Creoles and languages was indigenous languages include Fijian language. It's not Ithaca, it's Fijian. So, I wonder, just in clarifying your pushing for languages, because this is the decade that we are supposed to do work around that.

One, we did that work for you, Ditoka, and it's not launched yet. Because when you launch it, you'll give it money. I'm just wanting your reflection because you really are hitting an important point, I think. But in reflection from where we sit, because this is going to go down, indigenous languages, this is the decade. So, it's not you are referring to what we are supposed to do. Is that what you're saying? Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Commissioner. Make it a reflection, sir, chair. Thank you. Again, I reiterate, we will actually have another presentation shortly. In respect of that specifically, let me reemphasize, our role is not to support or oppose any aspect. We're not going to show any tacit support or anti any submission.

We will remain neutral, we listen to what you want, and we will take that into consideration with what other people want. And we promise you we will apply ourselves for that task diligently. Thank you again very much, and please, PS.

Mr. Tuione: Thank you, Presiding Chair. I think before we end, on behalf of the Ministry, we wish to acknowledge the deliberation this morning. We have noted a few suggestions that are coming. We'll also be willing to, available if there is any further clarification from the team, we'll be around to assist in that regard. So once again, thank you so much for this opportunity, and we thank you so much for giving us the opportunity to share a few of our inputs in this very important exercise. Thank you.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you, Turaga PS. Madam, gentlemen, we thank you again for coming and making your presentation. We've enjoyed the session this morning, and we hope it's been helpful for you as well as for us. Thank you. Thank you.

Subject: Ministry of iTaukei Affairs Submission

1. Reference is made to above-mentioned subject your letter, received by the Ministry, in relation to the same.

2. Our Ministry has prepared a written submission, which is attached.

3. We hereby forward the same for your consideration and will continue to support the Public Awareness and Community Engagement activities to assist the Commission in this important work.

Vinaka Vakalevu

Paula Tuione (Mr.)
Acting Permanent Secretary for iTaukei Affairs

Ministry of iTaukei Affairs

Submission to the Constitution Review Commission

Purpose

To propose targeted constitutional reforms to strengthen recognition of iTaukei rights, institutions, and contributions within a unified national framework that upholds equal citizenry and fundamental rights.

1. Recognition of Indigenous Rights and Customary Law

The Ministry submits that the Constitution should expressly recognise iTaukei indigenous rights, including the status of customary law as a source of law, subject to the Constitution and fundamental rights.

- The current constitutional framework affirms equal citizenry and human rights but does not recognise customary law as a general source of law.
- By contrast, earlier constitutional arrangements in the 1997 Constitution provided potential space for customary law within the legal system, subject to consistency with the Constitution and general principles and provision for a written law which could have been passed (although had not eventuated even by 2006 overthrow and eventual abolition in 2009).

Recommendation:

- Insert an explicit provision recognising customary law as part of the laws of Fiji, applicable where not inconsistent with the Constitution or written law.
- Provide for judicial development and application of customary law in appropriate contexts (land, governance, dispute resolution).
- Ensure this recognition is balanced against the Bill of Rights, maintaining equality, dignity, and non-discrimination.

2. Recognition of Historical Contributions and Sovereign Wealth Mechanism

The Constitution should acknowledge the historical sacrifices and contributions of iTaukei chiefs and communities in nation-building, including:

- Provision of land for public purposes;
- Stewardship of natural resources;
- Maintenance of social order and governance structures.

While constitutional frameworks have recognised land ownership and institutional roles in the past, there is limited recognition of the economic value of these contributions.

Recommendation:

- Include a constitutional recognition clause acknowledging these historical contributions.
- Provide enabling authority for the establishment of a sovereign wealth or intergenerational equity mechanism to capture and redistribute value derived from natural resources and land-based development.
- Ensure such mechanisms operate transparently and for the benefit of both iTaukei communities and the broader national interest.
- Consider amending the constitutional provisions relating to "fair share" of royalty to actual acknowledgement of ownership of natural resources including mineral and deep sea.

3. Constitutional Guarantee of Consultation

The Ministry proposes a constitutional requirement for meaningful consultation with iTaukei institutions before decisions affecting iTaukei interests are taken.

- Existing statutory provisions (e.g., sections 3, 4, and 5 of the iTaukei Affairs Act, as amended in 2023) reflect a legislative intent to embed consultation in governance.
- However, these protections are not constitutionally entrenched.

Recommendation:

- Constitutional recognition of the Great Council of Chiefs;
- Insert a constitutional obligation requiring prior consultation with recognised iTaukei institutions on matters affecting:
    - customary land and resources;
    - traditional governance structures; and
    - cultural heritage and identity.
- Define consultation as timely, good-faith engagement with a genuine opportunity to influence outcomes, not mere notification. For the sake of clarity, this is in addition to (not replacing) the requirement for consultation with impacted groups including the specific Land-owning unit, Vanua or the general public, as the case may be.

4. Official Language

The current Constitution does not specify Official Language. However, the 1970, 1990 and 1997 Constitution only referenced parliamentary proceedings where the official language was English with a right for Members to also use "Fijian" or "Hindustani".

Recommendation:

- Constitutional recognition of the iTaukei Language in addition to English.

5. President and Commander-in-Chief

The appointment of the President currently sits with Parliament. Reverting this to the Great Council of Chiefs would preserve and remove the politicisation of the Office. The term of 3 years to be increased to 5 to give the office the necessary gravity and importance it used to have. The current Constitution also seems to diminish the importance of the President's role as Commander-in-Chief.

Recommendation:

- Revert to the wording used in sections 87, 90 and 91 of the 1997 Constitution for the position of Commander-in-Chief, appointment by the Great Council of Chiefs and length of term to 5 years.

6. Senate and Legislative Process

The Senate provided a second House of review for legislation passed by the House of Representatives. The nominees of the Great Council of Chiefs had a veto power as a minimum of 9 of their 14 nominees needed to agree to amendment of any legislation affecting iTaukei. The use of Standing Order 51 was also concerning as it was not limited to genuine urgent business.

Recommendation:

- Reintroduction of the Senate; and
- Some additional criteria in section 47(3) of the Constitution so that legislation would go through the full process as a matter of norm and only genuine urgency would allow use of process under Standing Order 51.

Conclusion

We note the prior submission by the Great Council of Chiefs.

These proposals from the Ministry are framed to strengthen constitutional recognition of iTaukei rights and institutions while maintaining Fiji's commitment to equality, unity, and the rule of law. Properly calibrated, they will enhance legitimacy, social cohesion, and long-term stability by aligning the constitutional order with the lived realities of Fiji's indigenous foundations.

EXCERPTS – 1997 CONSTITUTION

Customary laws and customary rights

Date: 30-4-2026

Leighton: Mr. Josua, on behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, I'd like to take this time to welcome you and thank you for making time to make submissions before the Commission. Just a few housekeeping matters. If you wish to speak, you'll have to press on the right panel of the mic in front of you to turn the mic on to speak, and then press the same panel to turn the mic on to make your submissions.

Following this, Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they'll be undertaking, and then he will either introduce the Commissioners or ask them to introduce themselves. We ask that after the introductions, if you could also introduce yourself, just for the transcript and the record, Vinaka Vakalevu.

Mr. Valenitabua: Bula Vinaka Mr. Josua. Will you be speaking English or iTaukei?

Mr. Gabrielle: I have written my submission in English.

Mr. Valenitabua: In English. Thank you. Now, good afternoon to you. Thank you very much for turning up this afternoon, late this afternoon. We have been receiving submissions from individuals before, so you're not the first. We would like to give you comfort on that.

The submissions you will have to present to us, and then later on, we might ask you questions or just give you some reflections on your submission. Before you this afternoon, the Commissioners, I will ask them to introduce themselves, and then from there, we'll proceed with the submissions. Thank you.

Mr. Beg: Thank you very much, Chair. Welcome, Mr. Josua. My name is Conway Begg. I'm an architect, and I'm looking forward to listening to you.

Ms. Nailatikau: Bula Vinaka, I'm Merewalesi Nailatikau. My background is in public policy and public diplomacy. Thank you for coming today.

Dr. Fatiaki: Good afternoon, Mr. Gabrielle. Thank you. Thank you very much for your presence this afternoon, accepting our invitation to present. My name is Dr. John Fatiaki. I'm a medical doctor by profession.

Mr. Kohili: Bula Vinaka. My name is Ami Koli. We are from Labasa.

Mr. Valenitabua: Bula Vinaka, Sevuloni Valenitabua. I'm the chairperson of the Commission, and we are fortunate that we have professionals sitting before you today who are going to listen to your submissions. Just note that whatever you say is being recorded, and they will be printed later on, and we will be looking at them, reading them, and analyzing them in the process of picking out thoughts and recommendations of matters that should be included in Fiji's constitution.

I believe you know that before you came in here. So, without further ado, I will now invite you to please give a short introduction of yourself and then move on to your submission. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Gabriele: Good afternoon, madam. Good afternoon, sirs. My name is Gabiriele Joshua. I hail from Qeleni, Wainikeli, in Taveuni. I am a farmer. I represent myself. I am here in Suva because my home was destroyed by fire, and I'm seeking help. I heard this constitution review commission through the media, and I want to give my two cents' worth of comments on it. Yeah, this is Fiji, the way the world should be, in what way one may ask.

In every way is the answer. This land was created for us. We were given this land by the Creator to uphold all its laws and everything concerning its traditions and customs.

We should build a government that would be for us, we the people. But everywhere one goes around in Fiji and listen to the 'Talanoa' around the Yaqona Bowl, or to friends going to the bush or women in their general discussions, it is obvious that dissatisfaction about life and livelihoods in Fiji is so far, far away from the Fiji that one dares to dream of attaining and owning and living in it, get married and bring up children to enjoy the fruits of one's labor. But what is stopping this from happening? The answer lies in the 2013 constitution.

The 2013 constitution was hijacked from somewhere around the world to be used as our constitution. It was not organic. It was not by us, we the people. It was thrust upon us. When Mr. Frank Bainimarama and Mr. Sayed Kayum took over the government in 2006, they threw away Professor Ghai's constitution and abrogated the 1997 constitution.

From 2006 to 2013, they were looking for a constitution that their government could run on. After eight long years, they found this constitution, which we now call the 2013 constitution. This was not our constitution, we the people. It was their constitution. When they lost the government in the general election of 2022, their constitution should have gone out with them.

Why are we keeping it and just amend some parts that we do not like? All should be thrown out with them. The three words, we the people, in the opening of the constitution are very important.

We should stop and ask ourselves, did we the people took part in forming that constitution? If not, then why are we still using it as a guideline to something that we hold dear to our hearts? Was it because we have used it in the past three general elections of 2014, 2018, and 2022? Was it because there were not any major protests against it?

To tell you the truth, people were afraid of the guns. Ordinary people were doing their business as usual every day. Well, that is Fiji, the way the world should be. We the people are friendly people. That is how we live our lives, no matter what difficulties we are facing each day. We do not show it publicly. We keep it to ourselves.

That is the Fijian way of living. But deep down, we are struggling. We are hurting. We need someone or somebody to come and save us from this evil constitution, which is holding us under ransom. If you look at it properly, meaning the 2013 constitution, I think that the two perpetrators should be behind bars because of the big lie that made all this to happen. There were no we the people forming that horrible constitution. As I have already mentioned, it was thrust upon us. People up in government now should understand that.

That is the way we live our lives here in Fiji, an independent sovereignty. Everyone and everybody should respect what we do here in Fiji, our country. We make our laws according to the way we live. The world should not dictate to us what we do here in our Fiji. This is our country. We live here, not them.

Any laws that we make for the people of this country should be done by the people. Only then that we can accept a constitution formed by the people, for the people. Only then that the first three words of our constitution, we the people, will have a meaningful connotation.

After saying all this, in my view, parliament should sit. The head of the Fiji military force should be called in and sit with the prime minister and all of government and discussions should be based on the abrogation of the 2013 constitution. All of what I am saying should be passed in parliament by the show of hands.

The head of the military, by the power of parliament, takes over the government for one month only, abrogates the 2013 constitution and gives the powers back to the government. This time we do it legally. This has never been done before, but it can be done.

The only thing that one needs is guts and I think that we have a lot of it abundance. All the legal minds should sit within this one-month period and come out with a new 2026 constitution. Problem solved.

One might say that it cannot be done. I say it could. This is Fiji, the way the world should be. We do not have to listen to foreign powers to dictate to us what we should and shouldn't do. We are an independent sovereignty and we dictate our laws and regulation and by the power of God Almighty, I say we can. That is all. Thank you for listening.

Mr. Valenitabua: We have heard your submission. We have listened attentively to what you have just said. We understand the sentiments coming from you and we note your words that the constitution, the 2013 constitution was thrust upon us and that the words, we the people of Fiji and so forth, is not correct because only two people, according to you, had prepared this 2013 constitution and that you are saying that we should abrogate the 2013 constitution through a process which you have suggested, getting the military in and discussions done in parliament and so forth, so that the 2013 constitution can be abrogated.

Now please understand our position which I am going to tell you now. We were appointed by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Fiji, Rotuma, and we were given terms of reference which were written on paper.

Nowhere in the terms of reference we have been told to abrogate the 2013 constitution. We were given the term of reference telling us how to go about amending the constitution. The 2013 constitution had some what had been termed democratic deficiencies.

In other words, the way the 2013 constitution was made or prepared was undemocratic and one of the basis of that claim that we have undemocratic deficiencies is that we did not know about the constitution. It was not brought to the people. The views of the people were not given.

So, His Excellency the President and the cabinet decided that we have to cure that deficiency, the first deficiency, and that is to get views of the people, get recommendations from the people, get ideas from the people and whatever else we can call it, so that the people can contribute into the making of a constitution.

We have been given the mandate to amend and the commissioners have been telling our people that we can change, we can amend line to line if the people want. So that is where we are. We have heard your submission, but our term of reference guides us. We understand your concern about the constitution being we are now doing the remedy for that.

It's like a person being sick. His constitution is sick and this is the first step towards giving it an injection or tablet so that the constitution can you know become alive again.

Mr. Gabrielle: I understand.

Mr. Valenitabua: We heard you and there might be some things we can consider after hearing the recording or after reading the recording, sorry, after reading the recording and then we'll take it from there.

Mr. Gabrielle: Thank you, sir.

Dr. Fatiaki: Thank you. First of all, I don't have much to say and that's saying something. I just want to say thank you.

Mr. Beg: Mr. Gabriel, thank you very much. As the chair said, very solemn points and obviously we've heard you, we felt you and we'll take on board the comments that you've raised and some enlightening ones for consideration, but thank you very much for making this presentation.

Ms. Nailatikau: Sorry, Mr. Josua, I also wanted to echo our gratitude to you for the efforts you've made to make your submission today. I think it's important to listen to the dreams and aspirations of Fijians of all backgrounds, all ages and all ethnicities. I appreciate the time and effort it took. I noted that your submission is fully handwritten, again not something that goes unnoticed, but I wanted to end with my expressing gratitude to you today.

Mr. Kohli: Yes, I think I would like to thank you too for carrying that flag of Vanualevu, Vinaka Valevu.

I HEARD OF THIS CONSTITUTION REVIEW COMMISSION THROUGH THE MEDIA, AND I WANT TO GIVE MY 2 CENTS WORTH OF COMMENT ON IT.

THIS IS FIJI. THE WAY THE WORLD SHOULD BE.
IN WHAT WAY? ONE MAY ASK.
IN EVERY WAY — IS THE ANSWER.

THIS LAND WAS CREATED FOR US. WE WERE GIVEN THIS LAND BY THE CREATOR TO UPHOLD ALL IT LAWS AND EVERYTHING CONCERNING ITS TRADITIONS AND CUSTOMS. WE SHOULD BUILD A GOVERNMENT THAT WOULD BE FOR US, "WE THE PEOPLE." BUT EVERY WHERE ONE GOES AROUN IN FIJI, AND LISTEN TO THE "TALANOA" AROUND THE YAQONA BOWL, OR TWO FRIENDS GOING THE BUSH, OR WOMEN IN THEIR GENERAL DISC IT IS OBVIOUS, THAT DISATISFACTION ABOUT LIFE AND LIVELIHOODS IN FIJI, IS SO FAR, FAR AWA FROM THE FIJI, THAT ONE DARES TO DREAM OF ATAINING, AND OWNING, AND LIVING IN IT. GE MARRIED, AND BRING UP CHILDREN, TO EN THE FRUITS OF ONES LABOUR.

BUT WHAT IS STOPING THESE FROM HAPPENI THE ANSWER LIES IN THE 2013 CONSTITUTIO THE 2013 CONSTITUTION WAS HIJACKED FR SOMEWHERE AROUND THE WORLD, TO BE USED AS OUR CONSTITUTION. IT WAS NOT ORGANIC. IT WAS NOT BY US. "WE THE PE IT WAS THRUST UPON US.

AFTER SAYING ALL THESE, IN MY VIEW PARLIMENT SHOULD SIT. THE HEAD OF THE FIJI MILITARY FORCE SHOULD BE CALLED IN, AND SIT WITH THE PRIME MINISTER, AND ALL OF GOVERNMENT, AND DISCUSSION SHOULD BE BASED ON THE ABROGATION OF THE 2013 CONSTITUTION.
ALL OF WHAT I AM SAYING SHOULD BE PASSED IN PARLIMENT BY THE SHOW OF HANDS.
THE HEAD OF THE MILITARY, BY THE POWER OF PARLIMENT, TAKES OVER THE GOVERNMEN FOR ONE MONTH ONLY. ABROGATE THE 2013 CONSTITUTION, AND GIVES THE POWER BACK TO THE GOVERNMENT.
THIS TIME, WE DO IT LEGALLY.

THIS HAS NEVER BEEN DONE BEFORE. BUT IT CAN BE DONE. THE ONLY THING THAT ONE NEEDS, IS GUTS, AND I THINK THAT WE HAVE A LOT OF IT IN ABUNDANCE.

ALL THE LEGAL MINDS SHOULD SIT WITHIN THIS ONE MONTH PERIOD, AND COME OUT WITH A NEW 2026 CONSTITUTION. PROBLEM SOLVE

ONE MIGHT SAY THAT IT CANNOT BE DONE. I SAY IT COULD. THIS IS FIJI. THE WAY THE WORL SHOULD BE. WE DO NOT HAVE TO LISTEN TO FOREIGN POWERS, TO DICTATE TO US WHAT W SHOULD AND SHOULDN'T DO. Dr. Mahendra Reddy
Date: [1-5-2026]

Leighton: Good afternoon, Dr Mahendra Reddy. On behalf of the Constitutional Review Commission, it is my honor to thank you for taking the time to make submissions this afternoon before the Commission. Just a few housekeeping matters with regards to making a submission. The mic in front of you, you'll need to press the right panel to turn the mic on. And once you've made your oral submission, you can press the same right panel to turn the mic off. Following this, the Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that the Commission will be undertaking. He will also introduce the Commissioners, or will ask them to introduce themselves. We kindly request after that, if you can also introduce yourselves. This is for the record and the transcript.

Mr. Valenitabua: Naka. Good afternoon, Dr Reddy. Sevuloni Valenitabua, the Chairperson of the Constitutional Review Committee. With me are the members, or some members of the Commission. I invite them to introduce themselves for the record, and for you too. You might know some of us, but we'll require introductions at the beginning of the session.

Ms. Nailatikau: I'll start from my right. Good afternoon, Mr Reddy. Thank you for availing yourself today. My background is in public policy and public diplomacy. I'm looking forward to your submission. Good afternoon, Mr Reddy.

Mr. Beg: My name is Conway Beg. I'm an architect by profession. Thank you for coming in, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you. Good afternoon, Dr Reddy. My name is Neelesh Gounder, and I look forward to your submission this afternoon.

Mr. Kohli: Thank you for taking your time to come over to make a presentation for this important cause. Good afternoon, Dr Reddy. I'm Ami Kohli from Labasa.

Mr. Valenitabua: Those are your Commissioners, Mr Reddy. Thank you very much again for coming in this morning. The Commission, as you would understand, is tasked with reviewing the 2013 Constitution. We are tasked to, first of all, collect information, thoughts, suggestions, and recommendations from the people of this country in relation to what is to be included in the Constitution. The 2013 Constitution will be amended later, and we are also tasked with preparing a draft. There will be a constitutional lawyer and a legal drafter who shall come in to carry out that task.

But as for us, we are to set up consultations and collect submissions, thoughts, and recommendations, as I have said, collect them, analyze them, and make recommendations in relation to which provisions should be included in the Constitution, whether some provisions need to be removed, and which provisions that just need amendments. So, your presence before us this morning is very welcome. We know your experience, both outside and inside Parliament, and in life too. So, we anticipate that you will give us a very good or excellent submission this morning. At the end of the submission, we might ask you questions, for clarification's sake. There might be comments coming from the table here by the Commissioners. We hope we can converse and clarify matters for the sake of the preparation of an amendment to the Constitution. With those few words, I now pass the mic to you for your introduction and for your submission. Thank you.

Mr. Reddy: Thank you, Chair, and members of the Commission. First of all, thank you very much for giving me this opportunity to make a submission in person. And of course, I will also provide the soft copy of the written submission. Before I start, I just want to make two caveats. One is that my appearance here with the Commission is not as a staff of the USP, but in my individual capacity as a former minister in my academic background. The second is that this submission, I will read out and explain, but it should be read with the citations and the references.

So, I will leave the full hard and soft copy with the admin staff. As an introduction about myself, I grew up and was born and bred in Nadi. I went to high school and primary school in Nadi. My first degree is in agriculture. I studied at USP's Aleppo campus, diploma and bachelor's degree. I wanted to become an economist, so after completion of my degree, I worked there one year at USP's Alafua campus.

But then I came to main campus at Laucala and did development studies program under scholarship. And then I took part-time courses in economics and was then appointed as teaching assistant in economics. And then I received the Spoolright Scholarship to undertake Masters in Agriculture and Resource Economics at the University of Hawaii and I left for the University of Hawaii in 1994-95.

And then I completed Masters and then I received another scholarship to do PhD at the East-West Center Hawaii. I did my PhD. And then since then, from 1998 to 2008, I was at USP from lecturer to associate professor of economics.

And then in 2008, I left to join MIT and then Puget National University as the dean of the business college. I was also, while having the full-time job, I spent a year probably as the director of Reserve Bank of Fiji, one of the directors, and spent close to four years as the chairman of the Fiji Consumer and Competition Commission. In 2014, I was invited to be a candidate in the Fiji First Party, then Fiji First Party, and I was asked to apply.

I applied and got the seat and I contested the election and I won a seat and I was appointed as Minister for Education, Heritage and Arts in 2014. Up till 2017, June, when I was charged by FICAC and then resigned from my position as Cabinet Minister. And I fought the case, I won the case, and then I was reappointed in Cabinet in 2017 December and continued as Minister for Waterways and Environment.

Then in 2018, I was asked to contest and I contested again and I won my seat. I was appointed Minister for Education, Heritage and Arts and I continued till 2022. I resigned after elections for several reasons and then I wanted to get into consultancy.

Then I got back to USP and I took up the role of Senior Fellow in the Graduate School of Business and I have been teaching there since 2023 late. But I resigned and for three months I was in the US to fulfill the requirement for permanent residency. Then I came back and I joined again USP as a full-time Senior Fellow, so I am a full-time staff there now.

I teach in the region as well and at the moment I am teaching in Samoa. So, I got the last week to complete my teaching slot in Samoa. So, I have been working on this submission for the last three weeks and I decided that I should make an oral as well as provide a written submission.

So, I contacted the office this morning and I am so happy to be here today and make this submission to the esteemed Commission members. Thank you. Thank you.

Mr. Valenitabua: We are ready to hear you.

Mr. Reddy: Thank you Chair, thank you members. Commissioners, Chair and Commissioners, as you know, Fiji is a plural multi-ethnic and multi-religious nation whose constitutional order must be carefully structured to preserve democratic stability, ensure equality amongst all citizens and foster long-term national cohesion.

The constitutional architecture of Fiji cannot be viewed merely as a legal framework for the allocation of state power, rather it must be understood as a principal institutional instrument through which Fiji manages ethnic diversity, political competition, state legitimacy and national development. Since independence in 1970, Fiji has operated under, except for the Legislative Council, four constitutional arrangements. The 1970 constitution, the 1990 constitution, the 1997 constitution and now the 2030 constitution.

The country has also experienced four military coups, many of which were directly or indirectly linked to constitutional or political power, ethnicity and institutional authority. Fiji's constitutional history demonstrates that constitutional design matters profoundly in determining whether institutions promote stability or facilitate conflict. Comparative constitutional scholarship demonstrates that constitutions endure not merely because of legal impossibility, but because they command legitimacy across political, ethnic and social divisions, and here I quote several references.

In deeply plural societies, constitutional durability depends particularly on whether the constitutional order is perceived as neutral, inclusive and protective of all communities. Fiji's past constitutional instability reflects the consequences of constitutional frameworks that failed to sustain such legitimacy over time, in particular the 1990 constitution. The present constitutional review must therefore be approached with caution, intellectual rigor and a long-term national perspective.

I will be very worried if this constitutional reform is driven by short-term political dissatisfaction, ideological preferences or attempts to revisit settled national building principles. Rather, and I quote in bold, reform should seek to preserve provisions that advance inclusion, equality and democratic stability, while amending provisions that undermine institutional independence, in particular, weaken democratic accountability or create structural imbalances in governance. So, this is precisely the foundation of my submission to this body.

So, this submission is informed not only by constitutional theory and comparative governance practice, which I have read recently, but also by my practical experience serving in senior public office as minister and cabinet member, where I observed firsthand how constitutional structures shape the functioning of government, public administration, development planning and political stability. The constitution is the overarching supreme legal and political covenant of the nation, and all of you understand that. It defines the structure of the state, allocates powers amongst institutions, limits the exercise of governmental authority, protects the rights of citizens, establishes the rules through which political power may be acquired or exercised, and it is also well cited in a number of publications which I have listed here.

More fundamentally, a constitution reflects the social contract between the people and their state. Now, I want the commission to note this particular statement that it is a social contract between the people and their state. So, the question would be then, how we define who are the people? We know the state, but who are the people? Are they a particular ethnic group, a particular community, or all who are citizens of this country? In deeply plural societies such as Fiji, the constitutional reform performs an additional, particularly critical role.

It serves as a principal framework through which diverse communities coexist under a shared national order. It must provide confidence to all groups that the state belongs equally to them, that no community will dominate another through constitutional privilege, and that political power will be exercised according to law rather than identity. Noting the issues raised by various commentators, political parties, analysts, I note that a good constitution must satisfy five essential tests.

So, these five essential tests, I was able to count the literature. So, in one paper you won't find this, so I counted it, and I found that these five would aptly describe what I think would be a good constitution. Legitimacy. It must command broad public acceptance across communities. They must have ownership. Now I emphasize on this point because if you look at the 2013 constitution, this is a major issue, is that ownership was not given.

Buying was not there. In the management terminology we say buying. That you take it to the people and let them say that we have the say in the constitution. We made a point then.

Number two is inclusivity. That it must provide equal constitutional recognition and belonging to all citizens, not just a particular group because they are in majority who are the first settlers. I again emphasize on this as well because I think I can see some of the submissions are talking about supremacy to one particular ethnic group or the other. Institutional balance. It must prevent excessive concentration of power in the hands of a few within the government or outside the government, particularly the oligarchs, etc., not trying to capture the decision-making apparatus of the government. In small societies, small countries, this tends to happen. The powerful, strong interest groups outside try to capture the decision-making process, particularly before the budget, etc. Rights protection.

It must safeguard liberties and minority protections, particularly in countries like Fiji where we have several minority communities. And the fifth one is adaptability and stability. It must provide continuity while allowing local reform. And this is precisely why we are sitting here. It's because, I mean, why we went to the court system. Because it did not provide continuity.

And I'm glad that the courts did look at it and said, look, I think we need to find a way out of this. So, Fiji's constitutional history confirms that constitutions which did not have widespread acceptance or was perceived as privileging one ethnic group a particular political fraction over others eventually lost legitimacy and became sources of instability rather than order. The objective of this review should therefore be principled refinement.

And what I mean by that is that make targeted improvements and correct weaknesses, ambiguities, or gaps guided by constitutional principles, evidence, and interest. That's one. And not political redesign.

Like we're not to rewrite the constitution merely to suit the preferences of some political actors or to for partition gain revenge or to meet short-term political objectives. So, Chair, members, having said that and setting the overarching framework of my submission, I now move to suggest explicit changes or amendments that I foresee that should come with this review. One, section 3.1 on secular state, section 4 of the constitution provides that religious liberty as recognized in the Bill of Rights is a founding principle of the state.

There have been calls from certain quarters of Fiji to be declared a Christian state. Such proposals should be firmly rejected. From both constitutional and governance perspectives, declaring Fiji a state aligned to a particular religion would be a serious, tragic, and social error.

Fiji is home to Christians, Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, and persons of other faiths who have lived together for generations in relative harmony. The circular nature of the state has been central to preserving this coexistence. Comparative constitutional practice strongly favors secular constitutional frameworks in plural societies in India, Singapore, Mauritius, South Africa.

All diverse multi-religious democracies maintain secular constitution or order, not because religion lacks importance, but because state neutrality is essential to preserving equal citizenship in religiously diverse nations. Constitutional alignment with one religion, even symbolically, risks transforming faith from a personal conviction into an instrument of political identity and state preference. It may produce legal, political, and symbolic hierarchies of belonging that undermine national cohesion.

So as a former public office holder, I observe that one of Fiji's most distinctive strengths is the extent of interfaith coexistence, mutual participation in religious observations, be it Diwali, Eid, Easter, Christmas, Ram Naumi, etc. So constitutional departure from secularism would unnecessarily endanger this social asset. Recommendation for that is we retain Section 4 in its current form.

Next, role of military forces. Section 131, subsection 2 provides it shall be the overall responsibility of the Republic of Fiji military forces to ensure at all times the security, defense, and well-being of Fiji and all Fijians. Chair and Commissioners, no modern democratic constitution should provide military with an autonomous constitutional mandate to ensure the well-being of the nation.

Such language is excessively broad, vague, and open to subjective interpretation. Semmel-Ungtingson's theory of democratic-civic military relations emphasizes that constitutional democracy depends upon objective civilian control, whereby military remains professionally competent but institutionally subordinate to the elected civilian authority. In democratic constitutional system, the military exists to defend the state, not to serve as an independent constitutional guardian or avatar of national welfare.

Given Fiji's history of military intervention, constitutional ambiguity regarding the military's political role is particularly dangerous. This provision may be interpreted in future as conferring constitutional legitimacy upon military intervention in civilian governance. In every mature democracy, including Australia, New Zealand, India, and the United States, the armed forces remain unequivocally subordinate to elected civilian government.

As former Cabinet Minister, I can attest that constitutional ambiguity regarding military authority can distort effective decision-making and create uncertainty in the chain of democratic contribution. So, my recommendation is we replace Section 131 subsection 2 with the wording stating, and I quote, The Republic of Fiji Military Force should at all times remain subordinate to the elected civilian government and self-perform only such functions as provided by the law. Next one, with regard to constitutional immunity and accountability.

Future constitutional arrangements should not shield individuals from legal accountability for unconstitutional conduct. The rule of law requires that no person be permanently above the law. So, while transitional immunity provisions may occasionally be politically expedient in extraordinary post-conflict circumstances, and I do understand they should remain exceptional and time-bound rather than entrenched constitutional norms.

So, permanent immunity weakens deterrence, undermines public trust, and signals that unconstitutional conduct may ultimately evade accountability. So, my recommendation is that future constitutional reform should avoid broad and perpetual immunity clauses. Next, suspension of members of the Commission.

Section 132.13 requires consultation with the Attorney General in matters concerning suspension of members of the Constitutional Officers' Commission. This requirement undermines institutional independence. An independent Constitutional Commission must not be subject, directly or indirectly, to executive influence in any decision relating to membership or disciplinary.

Because the Attorney General is a political officeholder, this requirement creates both actual and perceived risk of executive interference. So, my recommendation is delete the consultation requirement with the Attorney General from Section 132.13. Next, citizenship and common national identity. Section 5 establishes equal citizenship and common national identity for all Fijians.

Modern constitutional democracies increasingly adopt civic rather than ethnic conceptions of nationality. A civic national identity promotes allegiance to the state rather than communal subgroups and strengthens social cohesion in diverse societies. The recognition of all citizens with a common name that identifies them to the country is one of the most progressive nation-building reforms in Fiji's constitutional history.

So, my recommendation is that the provision of a common name for all Fijians, be that name whatever be, that the provision of a common name, and I'm not saying what the common name should be. I don't think we should waste our important time in chasing after one particular common name. Whatever be it, that we should maintain a common name for all Fijians.

Next, Bill of Rights. Chapter 2 contains a comprehensive and modern Bill of Rights. It aligns Fiji with contemporary constitutional best practice and should be retained substantially unchanged. Weakening this protection would represent democratic regression. So, my recommendation is that we retain Chapter 2 as is. My next is on the Fiji Independent Commission against Corruption.

Section 15, Subsection 9 requires Fiji to provide regular updates to the Attorney General. No anti-corruption institution can be fully independent while constitutionally obligated to report to a political officeholder. Even where no actual interference occurs or seems to have occurred, such arrangements compromise public confidence in institutional neutrality. Best practice requires anti-corruption institutions to be operational and structurally independent of the executive. I don't want to go in detail, but I want to say it here and we'll see what happens in the question and answer session. But I'm saying that look, it's not only about managing the perception.

I mean, provision itself undermines the provision of independence. So I suggest, my recommendation is that delete Section 115, Subsection 9 in its entirety. 3. Proposal Representation Electoral System.

Section 53 establishes a single national open list proposal representation system. Now, as someone who has fought three elections, this system should be retained. Political science literature consistently demonstrates that electoral systems shape political incentives.

Constituency-based and majoritarian systems in divided societies often encourage ethnic bloc mobilization, whereas proportional systems incentivize broader coalition building and reduce disproportionality in representation. Historically, constituency-based electoral arrangements in Fiji contributed to communal political mobilization and reinforced ethnic voting patterns. Chair, you and some of you are much older than me and you've witnessed elections since 1970 and you would have noted how the communal seats, all this, were creating division between ethnic groups.

So the current proportional representation system has helped reduce communal constituency politics, encouraged national rather than localized ethnic campaigning, improved proportionality between votes cast and seats won, promote issue-based election competition. Very important that it's about issue, national issue, rather than me campaigning from a constituency in India where I was born and saying that I will build a bridge here when I get elected. I need to talk about what I'm going to do for the country because my vote could come from, you know, So my recommendation is that we retain Section 53 unchanged.

Next, term of parliament. The current four-year parliamentary term should be extended to five years. From practical cabinet experience, a four-year term is insufficient for meaningful strategic governance.

In operational reality, in what I saw, year one is spent establishing government and strategic plans. Year two and three focus on program design, implementation, and getting development partners on board. Year four is then politically constrained by elections.

When do we work, to be honest? Any additional year would be great, particularly even if you look at development plans. By the time you get your development plan ready, half the term is gone. And the major projects are ten-year projects, you know, fifteen-year projects.

And whenever governments change, they bring their own development plan and rightfully so because they campaign on a particular manifesto. They want that manifesto to be dovetailed into the development plan. So this coalition government came in, they threw you the other development plan, and they came up with their own plan, rightfully so.

Term limits for Prime Minister. Section 93 should be amended to impose a two-term consecutive limit on the Prime Minister. Comparative constitutional design increasingly recognizes that prolonged incumbency can contribute to executive entrenchment, party capture, weakened accountability institutions, and diminished democratic renewal.

Unchecked prolonged incumbency may lead to over-centralization of executive power, institutional weakening, leadership stagnation, and reduced democratic renewal. I've seen it first-hand, Chair. Two-term limit preserves democratic choice while safeguarding institutional resilience.

Partition control over Parliament along with appointment of the Speaker of the Parliament is appointed by the government side by tabling a motion. It is unlikely that a vote of no confidence will ever get carried forward. So, the recommendations of Section 93 to limit any Prime Minister to two consecutive terms.

After one term, the President can contest. In conclusion, the 2013 Constitution contains several progressive provisions that have strengthened national unity, equality, and democratic governance. These include the circular state provision, equal citizenship framework, Bill of Rights, and proportional representation electoral system.

However, targeted reforms are necessary to clarify civilian supremacy of the military, strengthen institutional independence, improve democratic accountability, enhance governance effectiveness, and prevent over-centralization of executive power. Constitutional reform must not become an exercise in political revisionism. It must be guided by the enduring interest of the Republic of Fiji and future generations.

Fiji requires a constitution that is inclusive, democratic, balanced, and capable of commanding legitimacy across all communities. The task of this Commission is not merely to revise the Constitutional text, but to strengthen the Constitutional foundations of Fiji's democracy for generations to come. I do hope my submission is accepted and interrogated, and I wish the Commission the very best in revising the 2013 Constitution for the best interest of Fiji and its future generations. Thank you, Chair, and I am happy to take any questions.

Dr. Gounder: Thank you very much, Dr. Reddy. The submissions have been clear upon your reading, and we would welcome to have a copy of your written submissions, please. The girls on your right would be able to prepare copies if you need a copy to be prepared. No, they can take it. Like I said at the outset, questions might be asked, and comments might be made by the Commissioners who are sitting here with me this afternoon.

Commissioners, please. Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Dr. Reddy.I think your submission is very clear, and I have no clarification or further questions, Chair, but I look forward to your written submission, which we will go over in detail during our discussion with the Commission. Thank you. Dr. Reddy, do you have a question? I think you might raise some very, very good questions.

I am particularly interested to know, because of your wide experience in government, as an academic, you see, we have been commissioned basically to review this Constitution because of people's perception that they were not consulted. In your experience, will you be able to tell us, was there any consultation done, and to what extent it was done, if you know? So, there was this Cai Constitution, which was extensively, you know, we had consultation done. But then the Cai Constitution was shelved and burnt, to the extent that there was, I think there was a decree, now probably an act, that no one should have a copy of that, if I am right.

I think lawyers should. So then the 2020 Constitution was not subject to consultation. So if anyone is saying that they want to say there was massive consultation, then they are saying this is Cai Constitution.

They need to come up and clearly say whether this is Cai Constitution or not. But no, that was burnt and that was shelved, and so they came up, whoever was the architect of it and whoever was behind it, they came up with this and it was enacted, you know, that's it. So where is the ownership? I mean, you know, the whole purpose, you all know the function of a legislature, apart from a moment's bill, is legislation.

Legislation, you've got a sector committee, sector committee is supposed to go and consult the rank and file. At that time there was no parliament, then why was there any other way of getting this consultation out in public, a draft? No. So ownership was not given.

Mr. Reddy: Thank you for that. Doctor, the provisions which you have referred to, I followed closely in relation to the variance provisions, and we are grateful to you for stating whether they should be removed completely or they should be amended and so forth. Your assistance, that gives us your assistance, and we're going to be considering that. The common name, that was interesting. Yeah, to be honest, that was interesting. The military, we have heard that the military has to come under civil government.

I believe that was one of your recommendations. And the future reform of the constitution to avoid perpetual immunity, that has also been added to us. In other words, we leave the chapter 10, which is now the immunity chapter, and then just add a provision.

Correct me if I'm wrong, give me a correct name. Add a provision to prevent any further immunity provision being included in the constitution. Is that right? Chair, that's my intention, but how to write that is the drafter's law. But that's the intention I have when I said that. Yes. Yes. We got that. So, that is about all. Your submission has been very clear. I have no further questions to ask at this point in time. Unless there's any other questions from you. Yeah, Mr. Mayor.

Dr. Fatiaki: Through you, Chair. Thank you, Mr. Reddy. Very compelling arguments that you're making. Yeah, it's very, you know. I thank you for bringing up that point about the constitution consultation. Thank you for that question. The only question I have is your point about the fight against dependencies. You make reference to the Attorney General, the obligation position that we've heard from submissions previously. In your submissions, you are saying that FICAC is to be amended, that that section amended? I'm saying FICAC is not independent at the moment.

Not independent during our time. Not independent. I'm saying that there is interference and FICAC is being used as a political tool to target people who are not liked by existing governments.

The other problem with FICAC is that in a small country like Fiji, and it is going to be the same for the other countries, people are connected through, you know, their relatives, or their village, or Mataqali, etc. It's a small country. You know, to have such an extensive, give extensive prosecution of power to FICAC, you, if I, if I terminate some staff, the staff is connected and FICAC will go and get a case.

The thing is this, they may not win because, you know, I didn't do anything wrong, but the problem is that it is very taxing. It is, it drains you, it breaks you. And then you can't take FICAC, or any prosecutional body, because, based on malicious prosecution, because I did extensive reading on that, where I was subjected to it, I was subject to malicious prosecution.

Because then you, and you'll never, 99% that you'll not get through in court, because you'll be discouraging a precoitional body to pick up any case in future, because they will be subjected to suing. So, so you cannot take them, you cannot sue them. So they have the money, they have the government grant, they can be used by anyone to target anyone, even though they know that they will lose, nothing will happen to them, because they won't be sued or they won't be subject to, you know, removal or cutting of grants, etc.

But that's a separate matter in terms of whether we should have FICAC or not. No, I really wouldn't want to go to the extent of suggesting that, you know, we should, you know, remove FICAC. I think that is something we really need to have a broader discussion.

But at least, you know, get this off, get this monkey off FICAC's back, you know. They should totally be removed. There should not be any connection between the Attorney General and FICAC.

Thank you, sir, for your clarification. I just, hearing you, you know, I just lived the experience. Sure.

The way it was presented, I just wanted a qualification. Thank you. The other one was the point about the military in Section 1312, you know, back into the civilian authority.

That's what you're suggesting, it comes back in that control. Because as you're saying, is it, in the way it's written, it's very vague according to your presentation in Section 1312? The statement I made, Commissioner, I have some past experience. I have, I was present in some discussions where, you know, so I want to say that we are, they could have used that clause.

So what I'm saying is that let's get that out so that, you know, that clause cannot be used in any time to take over a democratically elected government or, you know, get the boots on the ground. I don't, I think they should always be subject to, they can come through the police and be called in to assist the police. But you give that power as the last bastion of, you know, welfare for the people, you are inviting them constitutionally. And given Fiji's history, that should be the last thing that any constitution should allow. I appreciate that. Thank you.

Mr. Reddy: Chair, if I may.

Mr. Valenitabua: Thank you, Mr Reddy. My question relates to the section that you wanted to remain in terms of the 2013 constitution. I believe it's in Chapter 3, under Part B, relating to proportionality representation versus constituency-based representation. I appreciate that you've also included literature in terms of, you know, in terms of understanding the various experiences of different contexts. I'd be interested to know if you found that this proportionality-based representation has lasted and has been stable in places with similar context to Fiji, but potentially post-conflict, small island nation, et cetera, but broadly just interested to hear your experience in terms of the single constituency-based representation. We've certainly heard a wide spectrum of views on that front.

Mr. Reddy: No, I didn't go into detail about researching in other countries where you have this. So, yeah, I won't be able to make much comment on that.

Mr. Valenitabua: Well, Dr. Reddy, we have come to the end of this session of consultation. We thank you very much indeed for your submissions. We will take the points you have raised into consideration. At the end of the consultations, which will be on the 30th of June, or the first week after the first week of July 2026, we will then have a look at all the submissions. The submissions will be collated and then analyzed, and then we will have to write a report. In that report, we'll have recommendations, and then our legal drafter and the constitutional lawyer will be preparing a draft constitution, and then we'll hand those up to His Excellency the President. That is where we will end, or that will be where we'll end. Any other process after that, as you know, will be political. So, that is not within our terms and conditions.

Mr. Reddy: Thank you very much, and we wish you well. Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Commissioners, for allowing me this time to make my presentation. I wish you all the best. I do understand that your report could be amended, because it's a political process, but I would pray to God that what you submit there will be taken. Thank you. God bless. God bless, Viti. You're welcome. Thank you.I would appreciate it if I could have a photo with you.

Review of Fiji's 2013 Constitution
Submission to the Constitution Review Commission

By

Dr. Mahendra Reddy
Former Minister for Education, Heritage and Arts
Former Minister for Agriculture, Waterways and Environment,

1/5/26

1. Introduction

Fiji is a plural, multi-ethnic, and multi-religious nation whose constitutional order must be carefully structured to preserve democratic stability, ensure equality among citizens, and foster long-term national cohesion. The constitutional architecture of Fiji cannot be viewed merely as a legal framework for the allocation of state power; rather, it must be understood as the principal institutional instrument through which Fiji manages ethnic diversity, political competition, state legitimacy, and national development.

Since independence in 1970, Fiji has operated under four constitutional arrangements, the 1970 Constitution, the 1990 Constitution, the 1997 Constitution, and the 2013 Constitution. The country has also experienced four military coups, many of which were directly or indirectly linked to contestation over political power, ethnicity, and institutional authority. Fiji's constitutional history demonstrates that constitutional design matters profoundly in determining whether institutions promote stability or facilitate conflict.

Comparative constitutional scholarship demonstrates that constitutions endure not merely because of legal enforceability, but because they command legitimacy across political, ethnic, and social divisions (Elkins, Ginsburg & Melton, 2009). In deeply plural societies, constitutional durability depends particularly on whether the constitutional order is perceived as neutral, inclusive, and protective of all communities. Fiji's past constitutional instability reflects the consequences of constitutional frameworks that failed to sustain such legitimacy over time, in particular, the 1990 constitution.

The present constitutional review must therefore be approached with caution, intellectual rigour, and a long-term national perspective. I will be very worried if this constitutional reform is driven by short-term political dissatisfaction, ideological preferences, or attempts to revisit settled nation-building principles. Rather, reform should seek to preserve provisions that have advanced inclusion, equality, and democratic stability, while amending provisions that undermine institutional independence, weaken democratic accountability, or create structural imbalances in governance. This is precisely the foundation of my submission to this Commission.

This submission is informed not only by constitutional theory and comparative governance practice, but also by my practical experience serving in senior public office, as Minister and Cabinet member, where I observed firsthand how constitutional structures shape the functioning of government, public administration, development planning, and political stability.

2. The Constitution: Purpose and National Significance

A constitution is the overarching supreme legal and political covenant of a nation. It defines the structure of the state, allocates powers among institutions, limits the exercise of governmental authority, protects the rights of citizens, and establishes the rules through which political power may be acquired and exercised (Albert, et. al., 2024). More fundamentally, a constitution reflects the social contract between the people and their state.

In deeply plural societies such as Fiji, the constitution performs an additional and particularly critical role: it serves as the principal framework through which diverse communities coexist under a shared national order. It must provide confidence to all groups that the state belongs equally to them, that no community will dominate another through constitutional privilege, and that political power will be exercised according to law rather than identity.

Noting the issues raised by various commentators, political parties and analysts, I note that a good constitution must satisfy five essential tests:

(i) Legitimacy: It must command broad public acceptance across communities. They must have ownership of it.;

(ii) Inclusivity: It must provide equal constitutional recognition and belonging to all citizens and not just a particular group because they in the majority or are the first settlers;

(iii) Institutional Balance: It must prevent excessive concentration of power in the hands of a few within the government or outside the government.

(iv) Rights Protection: It must safeguard liberties and minority protections, particularly in countries like Fiji, where we have several minority communities; and,

(v) Adaptability and Stability: It must provide continuity while allowing lawful reform. Excessive rigidity can create frustration if lawful reform becomes nearly impossible.

Fiji's constitutional history confirms that constitutions which did not have widespread acceptance or was perceived as privileging one ethnic group or a particular political faction over others eventually lose legitimacy and become sources of instability rather than order. The objective of this review should therefore be principled refinement (make targeted improvements and correct weaknesses, ambiguities or gaps, guided by constitutional principles, evidence and national interest) and not political redesign (not rewrite the constitution merely to suit the preferences of some political actors or to for partisan gain, revenge, or to meet short-term political objectives.

3. Suggestions for Principled Refinement of the 2013 Constitution

3.1 Secular State

Section 4 of the Constitution provides that:
"Religious liberty, as recognised in the Bill of Rights, is a founding principle of the State."

There have been calls from certain quarters for Fiji to be declared a Christian state. Such proposals should be firmly rejected.

From both constitutional and governance perspectives, declaring Fiji a state aligned to a particular religion would be a serious strategic and social error. Fiji is home to Christians, Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, and persons of other faiths who have lived together for generations in relative harmony. The secular nature of the state has been central to preserving this coexistence. Comparative constitutional practice strongly favours secular constitutional frameworks in plural societies. India, Singapore, Mauritius, and South Africa, all diverse multi-religious democracies, maintain secular constitutional orders not because religion lacks importance, but because state neutrality is essential to preserving equal citizenship in religiously diverse nations.

Constitutional alignment with one religion, even symbolically, risks transforming faith from a personal conviction into an instrument of political identity and state preference. It may produce legal, political, and symbolic hierarchies of belonging that undermine national cohesion.

As a former public office holder, I observed that one of Fiji's most distinctive strengths is the extent of interfaith coexistence and mutual participation in religious observances, be it Diwali, Eid, Easter, Christmas, Ram Naumi, etc.. Constitutional departure from secularism would unnecessarily endanger this social asset.

Recommendation:
Retain Section 4 in its current form.

3.2. Role of Military Forces

Section 131(2) provides:
"It shall be the overall responsibility of the Republic of Fiji Military Forces to ensure at all times the security, defence and well-being of Fiji and all Fijians."

No modern democratic constitution should provide the military with an autonomous constitutional mandate to ensure the "well-being" of the nation. Such language is excessively broad, vague, and open to subjective interpretation.

Samuel Huntington's theory of democratic civil-military relations emphasises that constitutional democracy depends upon objective civilian control, whereby the military remains professionally competent but institutionally subordinate to elected civilian authority (Huntington, 1957).

In democratic constitutional systems, the military exists to defend the state, not to serve as an independent constitutional guardian or arbiter of national welfare. Given Fiji's history of military intervention, constitutional ambiguity regarding the military's political role is particularly dangerous. This provision may be interpreted in future as conferring constitutional legitimacy upon military intervention in civilian governance.

In every mature democracy, including Australia, New Zealand, India, and the United Kingdom, the armed forces remain unequivocally subordinate to elected civilian government.

As a former Cabinet Minister, I can attest that constitutional ambiguity regarding military authority can distort executive decision-making and create uncertainty in the chain of democratic accountability.

Recommendation:
Replace Section 131(2) with wording stating:
"The Republic of Fiji Military Forces shall at all times remain subordinate to the elected civilian government and shall perform only such functions as provided by law."

3.3. Constitutional Immunity and Accountability

Future constitutional arrangements should not shield individuals from legal accountability for unconstitutional conduct.

The rule of law requires that no person be permanently above the law. As Dicey's foundational constitutional doctrine establishes, constitutional government depends upon equality before the law and the subjection of all public actors to ordinary legal accountability.

While transitional immunity provisions may occasionally be politically expedient in extraordinary post-conflict circumstances, they should remain exceptional and time-bound rather than entrenched constitutional norms.

Permanent immunity weakens deterrence, undermines public trust, and signals that unconstitutional conduct may ultimately evade accountability.

Recommendation:

Future constitutional reforms should avoid broad or perpetual immunity clauses.

3.4. Suspension of Members of the Constitutional Offices Commission

Section 132(13) requires consultation with the Attorney-General in matters concerning suspension of members of the Constitutional Offices Commission.

This requirement undermines institutional independence. An independent constitutional commission must not be subject, directly or indirectly, to executive influence in decisions relating to its membership or discipline. Because the Attorney-General is a political officeholder, this requirement creates both actual and perceived risks of executive interference.

Recommendation:
Delete the consultation requirement with the Attorney-General from Section 132(13).

3.5. Citizenship and Common National Identity

Section 5 establishes equal citizenship and common national identity for all citizens.

Modern constitutional democracies increasingly adopt civic rather than ethnic conceptions of nationality. A civic national identity promotes allegiance to the state rather than communal sub-groups and strengthens social cohesion in diverse societies.

The recognition of all citizens with a common name that identifies them to the country is one of the most progressive nation-building reforms in Fiji's constitutional history.

Recommendation:
That the provision of a common name for all Fijians be maintained.

3.6. Bill of Rights

Chapter 2 contains a comprehensive and modern Bill of Rights. It aligns Fiji with contemporary constitutional best practice and should be retained substantially unchanged. Weakening these protections would represent democratic regression.

Recommendation:
Retain Chapter 2 as presently drafted.

3.7. Fiji Independent Commission Against Corruption (FICAC)

Section 115(9) requires FICAC to provide regular updates to the Attorney-General.
This provision should be removed.

No anti-corruption institution can be fully independent while constitutionally obligated to report to a political officeholder. Even where no actual interference occurs, such arrangements compromise public confidence in institutional neutrality. Best practice requires anti-corruption institutions to be operationally and structurally independent of the executive.

Recommendation:
Delete Section 115(9) in its entirety.

3.8. Proportional Representation Electoral System

Section 53 establishes a single national open-list proportional representation system.
This system should be retained. Political science literature consistently demonstrates that electoral systems shape political incentives. Constituency-based and majoritarian systems in divided societies often encourage ethnic bloc mobilisation, whereas proportional systems incentivise broader coalition-building and reduce disproportionality in representation (Lijphart, 1977; Horowitz, 1985).

Historically, constituency-based electoral arrangements in Fiji contributed to communal political mobilisation and reinforced ethnic voting patterns.

The current proportional representation system has helped:
(i) Reduce communal constituency politics;
(ii) Encourage national rather than localised ethnic campaigning;

(iii) Improve proportionality between votes cast and seats won;
(iv) Promote issue-based electoral competition.

Recommendation:
Retain Section 53 unchanged.

3.9. Term of Parliament

The current four-year parliamentary term should be extended to five years.
From practical Cabinet experience, a four-year term is insufficient for meaningful strategic governance.

In operational reality:
Year 1 is spent establishing government and strategic plans;
Years 2–3 focus on programme design and implementation;
Year 4 is politically constrained by election preparations.

Thus, effective governing time is materially reduced. Developmental states require institutional time horizons aligned with planning cycles. A parliamentary term shorter than the practical policy cycle creates structural misalignment between democratic mandates and implementation capability.

A five-year term would improve:
(i) Development planning continuity;
(ii) Investor confidence;
(iii) Development partner engagement;
(iv) Policy implementation effectiveness.

Recommendation:
Amend Section 58(1) to provide for a five-year parliamentary term.

3.10. Term Limits for Prime Minister

Section 93 should be amended to impose a two-term consecutive limit on the Prime Minister.

Comparative constitutional design increasingly recognises that prolonged incumbency can contribute to executive entrenchment, party capture, weakened accountability institutions, and diminished democratic renewal.

Unchecked prolonged incumbency may lead to:
(i) Over-centralisation of executive power;
(ii) Institutional weakening;
(iii) Leadership stagnation;
(iv) Reduced democratic renewal.

A two-term limit preserves democratic choice while safeguarding institutional resilience.
Partisan control over parliament, along with the appointment of the Speaker of the Parliament is appointed by the government side by tabling a motion, It is unlikely that a vote of non confidence will ever get carried forward.

Recommendation:
Amend Section 93 to limit any Prime Minister to two consecutive terms.

13. Conclusion

The 2013 Constitution contains several progressive provisions that have strengthened national unity, equality, and democratic governance. These include the secular state provision, equal citizenship framework, Bill of Rights, and proportional representation electoral system. However, targeted reforms are necessary to clarify civilian supremacy over the military; strengthen institutional independence; improve democratic accountability; enhance governance effectiveness and prevent over-concentration of executive power.

Constitutional reform must not become an exercise in political revisionism. It must be guided by the enduring interests of the Republic of Fiji and future generations. Fiji requires a constitution that is inclusive, democratic, balanced, and capable of commanding legitimacy across all communities. The task of this Commission is not merely to revise the constitutional text, but to strengthen the constitutional foundations of Fiji's democracy for generations to come.

I do hope my submissions are accepted and I wish the Commission the very best in revising the 2013 Constitution of Fiji for the best interest of Fiji and its future generations.

Eremasi Matanatabu
Date: 1-05-2026

Mr. Leighton Fatiaki — Good afternoon, Mr. Matanatabu. My name is Leighton Fatiaki. I'll be going through a few housekeeping matters with you this afternoon.

First of all, I'd like to convey our great appreciation for reaching out to make submissions before the Constitutional Review Commission and taking the time to come here today to make those submissions. On behalf of the Chair and the Commissioners, we thank you. Following this stuff, we have a few matters with regards to making a submission.

The mic in front of you, if you can press the right panel in front of you to turn the mic on in order to make your submission. And once you've spoken, you can press the same panel to turn the mic off. Following this, the Chair will introduce the Commission and the work that they'll be undertaking.

He will then proceed to introduce the Commissioners or will request the Commissioners to introduce themselves. After that, we also request if you can introduce yourself. This is for the record and the transcript.

Mr. Valenitabua — Mr. Matanatabu, good afternoon to you. We thank you very much for your attendance before this Commission today. This is the Constitutional Review Committee.

We have been tasked to review the 2013 Constitution, as you would have known by now. Before I proceed further, on my far right is Ms Nailatikau. Next to me on my right is Mr Conway Day.

My immediate right and left is Mr. Ami Kohli. And on the further left is Dr Nilesh Goundar. Dr Nilesh is with USP as a lecturer and academic.

Mr Kohli is a lawyer in Labasa, a very senior lawyer. Mr Berg is an architect. And Ms. Nailatikau is a consultant.

So, I am Sevuloni Valenitabua, also a lawyer. So that is your Commission to which you will be presenting your submission today. We welcome you.

I believe you would have read our Term of Reference, have you? The Term of Reference is clear. We are tasked by His Excellency the President of the Government of Fiji, or of the Republic of Fiji, I should say. We are tasked with the duty to review the 2013 Constitution.

It's a review and it will eventually end up with an amendment. So, provisions can be removed, provisions can be added, provisions can just be changed within the Constitution itself. And having said that, we've had a number of consultations, more than 20 consultations already here in this room.

And from associations, from the ministries of government, and from individuals like you. The submissions have been received. Hand-signed is here.

We have recorded word-by-word. And also, we have received written submissions. Some have come in with their written submissions and then they just speak to the submissions.

At the end we will then, or we, ask questions and maybe make comments on a few of whatever has been submitted to us. That is what we have been doing and what we will be doing. On Monday we leave Suva and we go out to the maritime parts of the country.

Having said that, I now leave or pass you the mic so that you can introduce yourself and present us your submission. Thank you. Hello.

Mr. Matanatabu Just by introduction, my name is Eremasi Matanatabu. I am a 59-year-old I taukei, Fijian. I was educated in Suva and moved to Lautoka in 1995, which is where I currently reside.

My background is ICT. I have been in the industry for the last 25 years of the first part of my career. The last 15 years I have been more in project management and currently I am a general manager for the PMH group in Lautoka.

I am married with five children. They are all adults and have their own families. I have 12 grandchildren, which I will be representing today in my submission.

Mr. Matanatabu I am the Honorable Chairperson, Mr. Sevuloni Valenitabua, distinguished members of the Constitution Review Commission, ladies and gentlemen. It is a great honor and privilege to stand before this commission today. I am deeply grateful for the opportunity to present my submission in person and to contribute my voice to this important national process.

This review represents a moment of genuine hope for Fiji, and I do not take it lightly. I trust the commission is placed in every citizen who comes before it. My submission is grounded in three pillars that every I taukei elder taught when we were young, the Vanua, the Lotu, and the Matanitu.

I speak not as a lawyer or a scholar, but as a Fijian citizen who has lived under every constitution, every code that this commission is now tasked to examine. I speak as a son, as a husband, a father, and a grandfather. And I speak for the Fiji I wish to leave for my grandchildren.

I am here for my grandchildren. There are 12 of them. When I look at their faces, I ask myself one question.

Am I leaving them a better Fiji than the one my parents left me? I am not certain that I am. Growing up, my world was shaped by three pillars that every I taukei elder taught. The Vanua, my home, my village, my elders, my tradition, my culture, my ancestors.

Who are we? The Lotu, the church, Sunday school, the Christian faith, the moral compass of our community, and how we should live. The Matanitu, the school, education, government services, how we organize ourselves together. These are three pillars that stood in my childhood.

They complemented each other. I saw it and I lived it. I also lived to see each one broken.

Three questions I'd like to ask and discuss, and the three spheres of each pillar. Each pillar answers a different human question. They are not in competition by nature.

The Vanua asks, who are we? The Lotu asks, how should we live? The Matanitu asks, how do we make decisions together? How do they strengthen us? The Vanua grounds the Matanitu. Power comes from the people and the land, not from those who hold office. The Lotu guides the Matanitu, holds government to a moral standard higher than any political convenience.

The Vanua and Lotu protect each other. The church in Fiji is not foreign. It's a genuine Fijian.

Where do things go wrong? Problem lies when one pillar tries to occupy the space of another. When Matanitu abolishes the GCC, it reaches to the domain of the Vanua. That's not his right.

When the Matanitu silences citizens for writing letters, it crushes both the Vanua and the Lotu. The Constitution's work is to define the boundaries between these three pillars, not rank them. I would like to show you now six ways the 2013 Constitution failed all three pillars.

My first argument is a constitution that is written for its authors, not its people. In 2013, the Constitution was written by and for the people of Fiji. It was written by the military regime without free public consultation.

A Constitution commission consulted the people in 2012. The regime rejected what was found and the Constitution was never put to the people for approval. What does this mean for the three pillars? For Vanua, the people's voice was heard and then ignored.

For Lotu, a document imposed by force has no moral legitimacy. For Matanitu, a government that begins with seizing power cannot honestly claim legitimate governance. I was working and raising a family in 2006 when the coup happened.

I watched the same people sit down and write the rules by which they would govern. I watched the 2012 commission consult the people and be discarded when the regime did not like the answers. I think we all know that there are some international examples that have followed the same problems.

In land mine in 2008, the military wrote Constitutions for themselves and then the coup happened in 2021. In Chile in 1980, Pinochet's commission wrote it in secret and Chile spent the next 30 years trying to undo it. The patterns are always the same.

When those who seize power write the rules, the rules serve the seizure. I ask the commission to please, any revised constitution in the future must be put to the people for ratification by referendum or by elected constitutional assembly before it becomes law. My second point is the Prime Minister's powers are inconsistent with democracy.

The PM is referenced 111 times in the 2013 constitution, 111 times. Through the constitutional office commission which the PM chairs, one person controls, and let me list, the commission of police, the commander of the military, the electoral commission and supervisor of elections, the auditor general, the governor of the reserve bank, the public service commission, and the judicial appointments. This is not separation of power; this is concentration of power.

Bainimarama, the architect of the constitution, was convicted of perverting justice and that's proof. He used his controls of the police commissioner to interfere with an investigation. The constitution made it easy for him.

We had Richard Naidu convicted for pointing out a judge's spelling error on Facebook. Conviction was dismissed after a government change. We had FICAC used for opposition leaders, nine politicians detained for opposing a land bill in parliament.

From experience in the private sector, when government controls anti-corruption, police, courts and elections, it reaches into every corner of life, including businesses, families and communities, who are just there to get on with building their families. I ask the commission to please, we must be restructured as a genuinely independent body, the constitutional office commission, appointments confirmed by parliamentary supermajority, not by PM. The PM should govern, not control.

May I add that again? The PM should govern and not control. My third point is the immunity clause. What chapter 10 does? Section 155 to 158 grant absolute unconditional immunity to court perpetrators.

Section 158 places this beyond parliament, beyond the courts and beyond future amendments. Victims have no right to compensation, no recourse, none. This is self-pardon written into supreme law of the land.

Prior to 2006, I used to write letters to the editor. I was working in Nadi as a project manager for the ATS changes to the ERP systems. And I was writing letters after the regime took over the government in 2006.

While working one day, a twin cab with five Military officers arrived at the ATS compound and called the then CEO, Alifereti Malo, to ask where I was. So, he said, yes, he's here at the moment working on a project. And they said, we are here to pick him up and take him to the camp.

So, I was picked up in the twin cab and taken to the military camp in Namaka, where they held me for half the day. I was threatened and I was told that I can no longer write any letters to the editor. So, the constitution that that same regime later wrote for itself protects the people who issued the threat.

I had no legal recourse under the chapter 10, and I never will. What does the law teach us? The faith I was raised in taught me we are all answer for what we do, not just to the law, to God, and to each other. A constitutional clause that places some people above accountability contradicts this directly.

The law cannot endorse it. And Matanitu cannot legitimate it while it contains it. Again, the international lessons in Myanmar Article 445, blanket immunity, atrocities committed knowing no justice would follow.

In Chile, a dismantled Pinochet immunity provisions eventually prosecuted him. Impunity is a constitution, does not prevent future abuses. It licenses them.

I ask the commission to please. Chapter 10 must be repealed in its entirety. Address traditions through the Truth and Reconciliation Commission process, not a constitutional shield.

No one should be above the law that all Fijians must live under. My fourth point, 50 years of coups. We have one missing rule.

How can we fix it forever? Since independence in 1970, Fiji has had four coups. 1987, twice, 2000, and 2006. Every single coup removed an elected government by force.

Every single coup was followed by immunity for the people who did it. And not one Fijian constitution from 1997 to 2013 has contained a rule saying you cannot give legal protection to someone who seized power by force. That missing rule is why coups kept happening.

This is a structural gap. 1987 coup, Decree 9 of 1990, gave immunity to the participants. 2000 coup, the Muanikau Accord, granted limited immunity to Spade and his group.

2006 coup, Chapter 10 of the 2013 constitution, gave the most complete immunity ever written, permanent, placed beyond all courts, placed beyond all parliaments, beyond any future amendment. No court, no parliament, no future government can make it valid. Fiji courts have the power and duty to strike it down.

Fiji's commitment to the ICC cannot be removed if domestic law. So, every coup was rewarded with immunity. Until those changes, nothing else changes.

In 1999, Fiji became one of the first seven countries in the world to ratify the Rome Statute of International Criminal Court. The ICC is a permanent international court for crimes committed by those in power. By signing, Fiji made formal commitment nobody in Fiji is above the law.

The other six countries, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, San Marino, Italy, Ghana, and Norway. The 2006 coup makers tore up the 1997 constitution, but they could not tear up Fiji's international obligation. This obligation remains in force today.

Fiji is still bound by the Rome Statute. This review has an opportunity to make that commitment real inside Fiji's own law for the first time. The proposed solution, an anti-impunity clause.

In plain language, the clause says, any law or constitutional provision that gives immunity for a coup is void from the moment it is written. No court, no parliament, no future government can make it valid. Fiji courts have the power and duty to strike it down.

Fiji's commitment to the ICC cannot be removed by any domestic law. This is not a new idea from outside Fiji. Kenya's 2010 constitution already has this.

South Africa's constitution has this. It is enforceable legal rule, not just a statement of values. A companion Rome Statute crimes act would bring Fiji's international commitments into domestic law, so Fiji's own courts can act.

I ask the commission an anti-impunity clause in the new constitution, and Rome Statute crimes act in parliament. Together they close the structural gap that has been exposed four times in 50 years. Fijis already committed to participate in principle in 1999.

The consultation now honors that commitment at home. My fifth point. The electoral system must reflect the will of the people.

A single national constituency removes a geographic link between voters and their representatives, concentrates power in urban centers like Suva, Nausori, and Lautoka. A voter in Kadavu or Rotuma, or the Lau group has no local MP to identify or hold accountable. From the Vanua perspective, the Vanua is rooted in place.

A specific piece of land, a specific community, and a specific accountability. The elders who taught me were accountable to the people around them. They could be found and they could be spoken to.

An electoral system that erases geography erases something that the Vanua holds sacred. In 2025, the Rabuka government tried to reform the constitution with a clear democratic mandate. They fell one vote short of three quarters majority required.

This is an example of a government that is elected by the people, could not reform the system that the people voted to change. What works elsewhere? Samoa has a geographic constituency plus proportional representation. It's been stable democratic transition for decades.

We also have New Zealand with a mixed member proportional system. After citizens' referendum in 1996, local seats are kept. My ask to the commission, an electoral model that restores geographic representation across Fiji Islands and provinces, maintains equal citizenships, and ensures that every community, including a small asylum, has a direct voice in parliament.

My final point is the rights of the I taukei and Rotuman people must be secured. The 2013 constitution abolished the Great Council of Chiefs. Whatever its limitations, the GCC was a constitutionally recognized sphere of indigenous governance.

The government does not have the right to abolish an institution of the Vanua. The Vanua predates the state. And I repeat it, the Vanua predates the state.

Its authority comes from its ancestors and the land. The elders who taught me were not appointed by the government. Their authority came from their community, recognition of them.

No government gave it, and no government should be able to take it away. A reconstitution body must drive its authority from the Vanua, not from government appointment. Native land, customary fishing rights, and resource revenues must be protected and enforceable, not just stated.

Growing up, the church was not separate from the community. It is an expression of it. The pastor's moral authority came from his independence from the state.

The constitution must be protected from freedom of faith communities and independence from the matanitu. The voices that matter most of these questions of the vanua are not in Suva's boardrooms. They are in the villages of Kadavu, in Rotuma, and the outer islands in Lau.

If this review does not reach these communities, it will produce a constitution as disconnected from the vanua, as the one it is replacing. I ask the commission to please. A constitutionally recognized, independent, mandated body for Itaukei communities.

Enforceable protection of land and fishing rights. A genuine constitutional independence for faith communities. And a consultation process that goes deep into rural and outer Fiji.

Not as formality, but as a primary purpose. In closing, for the 12 faces of my grandchildren, and what I have seen in my lifetime. A prime minister convicted of obstructing justice.

Opposition leaders criminally charged before elections. Citizens detained for wearing T-shirts. An anti-corruption body used as a political weapon.

Courts that punish critics instead of protecting citizens. A democratic government unable to reform the constitution it is reluctant to change.

An educational pathway destroyed because schools collapsed international confidence.

And a citizen, me, taken to the military camp and told to be silent for writing letters. My parents left me a better Fiji than the one I'm leaving my grandparents now. My parents knew and strongly respected their vanua, their lotu, and their matanitu.

I want my grandchildren to be able to say the same about me. I end by asking, a constitution that honors the vanua. Protecting identity, land, and voice of every community.

A constitution that honors the lotu. Protecting conscience and moral independence. A constitution that honors the matanitu.

With genuine separation of powers and genuine accountability. And then, put to its people, let them choose it. So that the first time in my lifetime, Fiji has a constitution the people truly choose.

Honorable Chairman, members of the commission, I want to close by expressing my sincere and heartfelt gratitude for the privilege of standing before you today. This process, the opportunity for an ordinary Fiji citizen like me to come before the commission such as we speak freely. It in itself expresses the democratic values I've spoken about today.

And I do not take it for granted. I've lived through years when speaking freely was not safe. That I'm able to stand here in this room and say these things without fear is something I deeply value and for which I'm profoundly thankful.

I trust that the commission to carry voices of all Fijians from the cities and the outer islands, from the elders and the young, from every community and every pillar of our national life, and the care and the respect they deserve. The people of Fiji are watching. My children, grandchildren are watching. Fiji is in good hands. We now value.

Mr. Valenitabua — Thank you very much, Mr. Matanatabu, for your submission.

Clear submission. You have raised important pertinent points and something that the commission has to think about. Like I said at the outset, commissioners might want to ask questions or to make comments in relation to your submission.

I now open the floor for the commissioners if they wish to ask questions.

Mr. Goundar — Thank you, Chair. Vinaka, Mr. Matanatabu, I want to thank you for your submission this afternoon.

And you have spent your time, taken time out of your schedule, perhaps more commitments, to come and present to us here today. That is a testament in itself of your concerns regarding the current provisions in the Constitution and your point about leaving a better Fiji for your children and your grandchildren. Your presentation was very clear, and as commission members we have taken note of the submission.

Once again, I don't have any questions, but I want to thank you for your submission and your keen interest in the current process.

Mr Kohli

All I want to say is I share the same sentiments as our Chair and Mr. Governor. Very well presented.

I listen to every word, try to absorb. And I think we have very nicely summed up what the thoughts of people feel. I have only one question.

Because you are a lawyer, I am posing this to you. In light of Supreme Court ruling, how do we deal with immunity codes? Because Supreme Court basically, if I am right, says we can't touch that. Arguable.

Arguable, yes. Because you are a lawyer, I am posing it to you. Is there any way of going around that? I am sorry to say I am not a lawyer, no.

Mr. Matanatabu

I am sorry. I am an IT professional. My humble apologies.

Mr. Kohli

May I take that question back? Thank you. Thank you very much for your presentation. I take it back.

Mr. Begg

Isa, thank you very much. I really enjoyed listening to your testimony. I do have the same conviction.

You have your grandkids, your kids, and so on. But I understand all that. And I listened to you passionately.

Thank you for your presentation. I just share the same sentiments with my fellow commissioners. I just have one point for clarification.

When you use the word lawful, what are you referring to there? Can you qualify that for me, please?

Mr. Matanatabu

Thank you. I think in every community in Fiji, though I use the Itaukei terms, I am not strictly referring to one particular denomination. Every community has its vanua, has its lotu, and has its matanitu, and how they relate to them.

So, for me, it is a general term. But being an Itaukei, I just use the Fijian terminology that I was brought up in as a young child. Thank you for that.

It's a good point. I also want to ask the question, because that word is used in your presentation, how does that relate with other faiths? Sorry. Other faiths, you know, other religions that are in the country.

The lotu to me is, if I interpret it in English, it's just faith. The lotu doesn't necessarily mean it has to be Christian, or Islam, or Hinduism. Lotu is lotu.

It depends on how you interpret your lotu. Fiji had a different lotu before the lotu came, before Christianity came. That was lotu to Fijians then.

Lotu to Fijians now is, well, the majority of this is Christianity. So lotu can't be just tied down to Christianity. Lotu was here before Christianity came.

Mr. Begg — Thank you very much. I just wanted a qualification on that word, but I appreciate it. Thank you.

Ms. Nailatikau — Thank you, Chair. Mr. Matanatabu, thank you very much for making the time to be here with us today to represent your family, and particularly your grandchildren. Like my fellow commissioners, I listened with great interest and great reflection from the words that you shared with us today.

I think, if I may add to what has already been said, an important aspect that you spoke about was about the separation versus concentration of powers. And I think, in reflection, you've given us much to think about in terms of how these things exist on the page and how they transpire in real life in terms of affecting everyday citizens. I think that's an important part of understanding that whatever the origins of constitutions like this, you alluded to the experiences of different countries who have similar experiences to Fiji.

It's that people don't necessarily have to be legal practitioners to understand how power is concentrated in such documents. And I appreciate your emphasis on being able to share it as an ordinary citizen, as someone who has lived through various experiences, and appreciate you making that link to the specific sections in the Constitution. No questions from me, but just ensuring that that does not go unacknowledged and is received with appreciation. Vinaka

Mr. Valenitabua — Vinaka. Yes, Mr. Matanatabu your submissions, the areas that you had addressed us on, the seven areas, they have been put before us. And that shows how common issues, common worries, common factors are there in the communities, all communities that are here in Fiji, which we need to address.

These concerns, these worries, they need to be addressed. So, we thank you very much. What we will do is this.

Your submission, do you have a written copy with you? Please hand over the written copy to one of the girls, and then we will put that together, collate with the other submissions which we have received. We have received mostly written submissions, some oral, and then we'll collate all the submissions, and then we'll go out to the islands, to the maritime parts of the country, starting from Monday. There will be two teams going, team one and team two.

And what we'll do is gather more submissions from our people. One of the democratic deficiencies which we have been tasked to remedy is the participation of the general public. 2013 Constitution has that deficiency.

We received some submissions at the latest this morning where that was raised. So, we're going to be remedying that by providing the widest purview, the widest extent of coverage in relation to participation by members of our nation. That starts on Monday.

Now, once we have completed that, within the next two months, then we'll collate and analyze and then write a report with recommendations to His Excellency the President on what is to be included in the draft Constitution together with the draft Constitution. We are getting an expert, constitutional law expert, and an expert who is to draft the Constitution. After we present our report, that is the end of this commission as far as we are concerned at this point in time.

All the rest will be political. We'll leave it to the President, and then he'll give it to Cabinet, and then Cabinet will take it to Parliament, and so forth, and so forth. All right? I'm sure you understand what I'm talking about.

So, thank you very much. We wish you the best. Have a safe trip back to Lautoka.

Is it Lautoka or Nadi?

Mr. Matanatabu — Lautoka. Back to Lautoka, right. Yes, sir.

Sa Vinaka.

SUBMISSION TO THE

Constitution Review Commission of Fiji

Grounded in Vanua, Lotu and Matanitu

Eremasi Tova Matanatabu
15 Thomson Crescent, Simla, Lautoka, Fiji
April 2026

PERSONAL PREFACE

My Story, My Submission

My name is Eremasi Tova Matanatabu. I was born in 1967. I am an iTaukei Fijian — that means I am an indigenous Fijian whose roots go deep into this land. I am a husband, a father of five adult children, and a grandfather of twelve. I have spent more than twenty-five years working in information and communications technology, and I am currently in senior management. I write this submission not as a lawyer, but as a Fijian man who has lived his entire life under the constitutions, governments, and coups that this Commission is now asked to examine.

I write it because of my grandchildren. There are twelve of them. When I look at their faces, I ask myself one question: am I leaving them a better Fiji than the one my parents left me? I am not certain that I am.

> My parents left me with a better Fiji than the one I am leaving my grandchildren now. My parents knew and strongly respected their Vanua, their Lotu, and their Matanitu.

My parents lived by three pillars that every iTaukei elder taught. These were not political ideas. They were the structure of everyday life.

VANUA	LOTU	MATANITU
Home, village, elders. Our culture and traditions. Looking back to our ancestors for guidance on how to live today.	Church on Sundays. The Christian faith and all its teachings. The moral compass of our community.	School, education, and government services. The structures by which society organised itself and provided for its people.

Living Through the Coups

I have lived through four coups. Each one caused real damage to real people — including me and my family.

In 1987, I was in my second year of a Diploma in Applied Computing and Data Processing, funded by the United States Government. This was a real opportunity — a chance for young Fijians to build skills that would otherwise have been out of reach. When the first coup happened, schools closed. Our lecturers left. When we eventually graduated, the American Government withdrew its funding. A door that had been opened for us was shut — not because we failed, but because a coup destroyed the trust that made the programme possible.

EREMASI 1987	I was twenty years old, studying computing on an American Government scholarship. The coup happened. Schools closed. Lecturers left. The programme survived, but the funding was cut once we graduated. An opportunity built for our generation was taken away by events we had no part in causing.

In 2000, I was working in Lautoka for Fiji Pine Limited when another coup struck. In 2006, I was at Datec Fiji Limited. This time, what happened was personal in a way the others had not been.

Taken to the Camp

I had been writing letters to the editor. Not threats. Not incitement. Simply letters, published in the newspaper, saying that the military regime that had seized power from the elected government was wrong, and that Fiji deserved democracy. For that, I was taken to the Military Camp in Namaka, Nadi. I was held for half a day. I was threatened. I was told not to write any more letters.

EREMASI 2006	I was not a politician. I was a citizen who believed that writing to a newspaper was the right of every person in a democracy. For that, I was taken to a military camp and told to be silent. The Constitution that the same regime later wrote for itself protects the people who gave that order from any legal consequences. I have no recourse. Under Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution, I never will.

What I Am Leaving My Grandchildren

I have twelve grandchildren. When I look at them, I think about what my parents gave me: a country where the three pillars still stood with some dignity. The Vanua was respected. The Lotu guided communities. The government — however imperfect — was still answerable to the people. I am not sure I am handing my grandchildren the same.

That is why I am here. That is what this submission is about.

THE FRAMEWORK

Vanua, Lotu and Matanitu: Three Pillars, One Nation

Everything in this submission is built on a simple idea that my elders taught me long before I understood anything about constitutions or politics. Fiji's society rests on three pillars, and all three must be healthy for the country to work properly.

Think of it like a three-legged stool. Each leg answers a different question about how people live together:

VANUA	LOTU	MATANITU
Who are we? Our identity, our land, our ancestors, our culture. No government created it. No government can take it away.	How should we live? Our values, our conscience, our faith. It keeps us accountable to something beyond the law.	How do we decide together? Our laws, our elections, our public services. It must be answerable to the people.

How They Support Each Other

Vanua reminds Matanitu where its power comes from. A government that forgets it serves the people eventually starts serving itself. The Vanua — the rooted identity of the people — keeps the government honest about who it belongs to.

Lotu holds Matanitu to a higher standard. Laws can be changed by those in power. Moral values are harder to corrupt. When a community holds its leaders to a moral standard beyond what the law requires, leaders behave differently.

When one pillar crushes the others, everything fails. This is exactly what happened in Fiji. A government used the law to silence citizens, abolish indigenous institutions, and write permanent protection for itself. That is what a collapsed Matanitu looks like when it overruns the Vanua and the Lotu.

What this submission asks for is simple: a constitution that gives each pillar its proper space and stops any one of them from crushing the others.

ARGUMENT 1

A Constitution Written for Its Authors, Not Its People

Pillars engaged: Vanua • Lotu • Matanitu

The most basic problem with the 2013 Constitution is not any particular section of it. The problem is how it was made. It was written by a small group of people who had seized power by force, without asking the Fijian people what they wanted, and without ever putting the result to a vote.

To understand why this matters, think of it this way: if a group of people break into your house and rewrite your house rules while you are locked outside, those rules are not yours — no matter what they say on paper.

In 2012, the military government set up a Constitution Commission led by respected law professor Yash Ghai. The Commission travelled around Fiji, listened to thousands of citizens, and produced a draft. The government rejected it and replaced it with a document of their own.

FIJI 2012–2013	The Yash Ghai Commission consulted more than 7,000 Fijians across the country. Its draft constitution was publicly released. The military government rejected the draft, burned copies of it publicly, and produced its own text. The 2013 Constitution was never put to the people for approval. [Source: Yash Ghai Commission Report, 2012]

Citizens who tried to speak out were silenced. I am one of them. I was taken to a military camp and told not to write letters. The constitution that followed ensures the people who gave that order can never be held legally responsible for it.

The Terms of Reference for this Commission use the phrase 'democratic deficit.' That phrase means a gap between what democracy requires and what the law actually delivers. The democratic deficit in Fiji's 2013 Constitution starts before you even open the document — it starts with how it was made.

Recommendation: Any new or revised Constitution must be put to the people of Fiji for approval — either by a referendum (a national vote) or by a specially elected group chosen for this purpose — before it becomes law. A constitution that was never offered to the people cannot fully claim to speak for them.

ARGUMENT 2

Too Much Power in One Person's Hands

Pillars engaged: Matanitu

In a healthy democracy, power is shared. Different parts of the government check on each other. The courts can overrule the government. An independent police force investigates everyone equally. A free electoral commission runs elections without interference. These checks exist because history has taught us that any person or group given unchecked power will eventually abuse it.

The 2013 Constitution does not share power. It concentrates it. The Prime Minister is mentioned more than 111 times in the document.

Imagine one person choosing the referee, the line judges, and the match officials for their own team's games. That is what this constitutional structure does.

Frank Bainimarama, who designed the 2013 Constitution, was convicted in 2024 of perverting the course of justice. He had used his office to interfere in a police investigation into corruption at the University of the South Pacific. His Police Commissioner was also convicted. The system he designed made this straightforward: he controlled the Commissioner, and used that control to protect himself. [Source: Fiji High Court, 2024]

Recommendation: The body that appoints independent officials (the police commissioner, judges, the auditor-general, and others) must be restructured so the Prime Minister does not control it. Appointments should require approval from a broad cross-section of Parliament — not just the governing party. A Prime Minister should govern the country, not appoint the people responsible for keeping the Prime Minister accountable.

ARGUMENT 3

The Immunity Clauses Must Go

Pillars engaged: Lotu • Matanitu

Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution — sections 155 to 158 — does something that no court, no parliament, and no future government can undo under the current rules: it gives permanent legal protection to the people who carried out the 2006 coup and to all acts done in the name of that coup.

Section 158 goes even further. It says these protections cannot be removed by Parliament, cannot be overturned by the courts, and cannot be changed by any future amendment to the constitution. It also says that nobody harmed by the coup or by anything done in its name has any right to go to court or claim compensation.

In plain terms: the people who took power by force wrote a law saying they can never be held responsible for doing so, and they made that law impossible to change. I was one of the people those acts were done to. I was taken to a military camp and told to be silent. I have no legal recourse. The constitution the same people wrote ensures that.

EREMASI 2006	The people who ordered my detention are protected by Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution. They wrote that protection into the supreme law of the land after they had already used the power they seized. That is not the rule of law. That is the rule of those who wrote the law for themselves.

The Lotu I was raised in taught me something clear: all of us answer for what we do. Not just to the courts, but to God and to each other. A constitutional clause that says some people are permanently beyond accountability is a direct contradiction of this. You cannot build a moral community on permanent impunity.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL 2016	Amnesty International's report 'Beating Justice' documented widespread allegations of torture, beatings, and brutal treatment of detainees by Fiji's security forces, with perpetrators facing no consequences. The report found the behaviour was condoned at senior levels. [Source: Amnesty International, Beating Justice, 2016]

Recommendation: Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution must be removed entirely. The next argument sets out what should replace it. Nobody — regardless of what office they held — should be above the law that every other Fijian must live under.

ARGUMENT 4

Fifty Years of Coups, One Structural Gap — and How to Close It

Pillars engaged: Vanua • Lotu • Matanitu

The Pattern No One Has Fixed

Since Fiji became independent from Britain in 1970, it has suffered four coups: twice in 1987, once in 2000, and once in 2006. Every single time, an elected government was removed by force. Every single time, either the constitution was torn up or suspended. And every single time, the people who took power made sure they were protected from being held responsible for doing so.

This is not a run of bad luck. It is a pattern — and it has a cause. No Fijian constitution, from the 1970 Independence Constitution to the 2013 Constitution, has ever contained a clear, enforceable rule saying: 'You cannot give legal protection to someone who seized power by force.' That gap — that missing rule — has been exploited four times. It will be exploited again unless it is closed.

Year	What happened	Constitution affected	Immunity granted?
1987 (x2)	Lt Col Sitiveni Rabuka seizes power twice. First coup in May, second in September.	1970 Westminster Constitution abrogated. 1990 Constitution imposed.	Yes — Decree No. 9 of 1990 granted immunity to coup participants.
2000	George Speight leads civilian coup, takes PM hostage. Military intervenes and takes control.	1997 Constitution suspended by the Military Commander.	Yes — Muanikau Accord granted limited immunity to Speight's group.
2006	Commodore Bainimarama seizes power from elected PM Laisenia Qarase.	1997 Constitution abrogated by military decree in 2009. 2013 Constitution imposed.	Yes — Chapter 10 of 2013 Constitution grants blanket, permanent immunity.

Look at the final column of that table. Every single coup was followed by immunity. The 1987 coup produced Decree No. 9 of 1990. The 2000 coup produced the Muanikau Accord. The 2006 coup produced Chapter 10 of the 2013 Constitution — the most complete immunity ever written, placed beyond the reach of any court or future parliament.

The 1970 Constitution that Fiji inherited from Britain assumed democratic norms would be respected. It was a document built for a world where the military accepted election results. It made no provision for what would happen if they did not. That assumption was wrong, and Fiji has paid the price for it four times.

What Fiji Already Chose in 1999

Here is something that does not often come up in discussions about Fiji's coups, but it is one of the most important facts about who Fijians are and what they believe.

In 1999 — seven years before the 2006 coup — Fiji became one of the first seven countries in the world to ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC).

UN TREATY 1999	Fiji ratified the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court on 29 November 1999, becoming one of the first seven states in the world to do so. The first seven ratifying states were Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, San Marino, Italy, Fiji, Ghana, and Norway. [Source: United Nations Treaty Collection, Treaty No. 38544]

The coup-makers who followed tried to erase that commitment inside Fiji — through military decrees, the abrogation of the 1997 Constitution, and finally through the immunity provisions of the 2013 Constitution. But they could not erase Fiji's international legal obligations. Those remain in force today.

What this means in plain terms is this: Fiji already belongs to an international system that says power must answer to law. The constitutional reform process now underway is the opportunity to make that commitment real inside Fiji's own borders — not just on an international treaty that few people can see or enforce.

The Proposed Solution: An Anti-Impunity Clause

This submission proposes that the new constitution contain an explicit Anti-Impunity Clause. This is not a new idea from a foreign country. It is the logical completion of what Fiji's democratic governments have always believed — and what Fiji already committed to in 1999 when it ratified the Rome Statute.

In plain language, the clause would say:

What an Anti-Impunity Clause means in plain language

Any law, decree, or constitutional provision that tries to give legal protection to someone who seized power by force is void from the moment it is made. It has no legal effect. No future parliament, no future government, and no future constitutional amendment can make it valid. Fiji's courts have the power and the duty to strike it down. And Fiji's commitment to the International Criminal Court remains in force regardless of any domestic law that tries to override it.

This kind of clause already exists in other constitutions. Kenya's 2010 Constitution, Article 3(2), states explicitly that any attempt to remove or suspend the constitution by force is void, and that any person who assists such an attempt is guilty of treason.

KENYA 2010	Article 3(2) of Kenya's Constitution states: 'Any attempt to establish a government otherwise than in compliance with this Constitution is unlawful.' This clause is enforceable in Kenya's courts and has been used to challenge acts that seek to bypass constitutional authority. [Source: Constitution of Kenya, 2010]

Together with a companion law — a Rome Statute Crimes Act that incorporates Fiji's international commitments into domestic law — the Anti-Impunity Clause would do five specific things:

- Make any future attempt to write immunity for a coup into the constitution legally void from the moment it is written.
- Give Fiji's own courts the tools to act against such attempts without waiting for the international community to intervene.
- Make clear that Fiji's commitment to the International Criminal Court cannot be removed by any domestic law or constitutional change.
- Allow for a conditional, court-supervised path to limited immunity where appropriate — such as through a Truth and Reconciliation process — but prevent anyone from granting themselves immunity.
- Send a clear signal to Fiji's military, to the region, and to the world that Fiji's constitutional order is founded on the permanent principle that power must answer to law.

Recommendation: The new constitution must contain an explicit Anti-Impunity Clause stating that any law or provision granting immunity for an unconstitutional seizure of power is void and unenforceable. Parliament should also pass a Rome Statute Crimes Act bringing Fiji's international legal commitments into domestic law. This would close, for the first time in Fiji's fifty-six-year history, the structural gap that has allowed every coup to repeat itself.

ARGUMENT 5

The Electoral System Must Reflect the Will of the People

Pillars engaged: Vanua • Matanitu

The current voting system — a single national constituency — was designed by the Bainimarama regime. In simple terms, it means that all 50 members of parliament are elected from one single national list, rather than from geographic areas. While the abolition of ethnic-based voting (called communal rolls) was a genuine positive step that should be kept, the single national system created a new problem: it cut the link between voters and their local representatives.

If you live in Kadavu, Rotuma, or the outer islands of Lau, you have no MP who specifically represents your community. Every MP represents the whole country in theory, which means in practice they represent wherever the most votes are — the cities. Rural and outer island communities lose their voice.

For the Vanua, this is a deep problem. The Vanua is about belonging to a specific place — specific land, a specific community, specific people you are accountable to. An electoral system that erases place erases something the Vanua holds sacred.

FIJI 2025

When the Rabuka government attempted to amend the constitution in 2025 with a clear electoral mandate from the people, it fell one vote short of the three-quarters majority required. A democratically elected government could not reform the electoral system the people had voted to change. The constitution had been designed to prevent exactly this kind of democratic reform. Other Pacific nations show there is a better way. Samoa uses geographic areas alongside proportional representation, so that local communities have a direct representative while national fairness is maintained. New Zealand held a public referendum in 1996 and moved to a system that keeps local seats while adding proportional national seats.

Recommendation: The Commission should recommend a voting system that brings back geographic representation — so that every island, province, and community in Fiji has a representative directly answerable to them — while keeping the principle that all citizens vote equally, regardless of ethnicity.

ARGUMENT 6

The Rights and Voice of iTaukei and Rotuman Peoples Must Be Protected

Pillars engaged: Vanua • Lotu • Matanitu

The Commission's Terms of Reference specifically ask it to look at the rights of indigenous Fijian and Rotuman people, the protection of native land and customary fishing rights, and the recognition of the Great Council of Chiefs. As an iTaukei man who grew up learning the three pillars from his elders, I regard this as the area where everything I have described in this submission comes together most directly.

The Great Council of Chiefs

The Great Council of Chiefs (GCC) was the constitutional body that gave the chiefly system of the Vanua a recognised voice in the governance of Fiji. It was not a perfect institution — no institution is. But it represented an important principle: that the iTaukei people's own system of authority deserves a place in the national framework.

The 2013 Constitution abolished it.

This submission calls for a reconstituted body — designed with input from iTaukei communities themselves — to be given constitutional recognition. Its authority should come from the Vanua, not from government appointment.

Native Land and Fishing Rights

The Terms of Reference call for protection of native land and customary fishing rights, and for iTaukei landowners to receive a fair share of income from resources on or under their land.

The Consultation Must Reach Everyone

If this review process only hears from people in cities, it will produce a constitution shaped by city voices. The Commission's guide says it will travel across the country and sit with communities. I am asking the Commission to honour that commitment fully — to go to Rotuma, to Lau, to Kadavu, to the villages. The voices that matter most on questions of Vanua are not in boardrooms. They are in the places the Vanua is actually lived.

Recommendation: The Commission should recommend: a constitutionally recognised, independently mandated body for the iTaukei people's voice in national affairs, with authority from the Vanua rather than government appointment; enforceable protections for native land and customary fishing rights; genuine constitutional protection for the independence of faith communities; and a consultation process that reaches the outer islands and rural communities as a primary commitment, not an afterthought.

CLOSING STATEMENT

For the Twelve Faces

I have made six arguments in this submission. Let me say what each one means in plain terms.
